

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

GoogleTM books

<https://books.google.com>

Stanford University Libraries

3

36105005640755

052

1867

LELAND STANFORD JUNIOR UNIVERSITY

THE
A T H E N Æ U M
JOURNAL
OF
LITERATURE, SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS, MUSIC,
AND THE DRAMA.

JULY TO DECEMBER,

1880.

LONDON.

PRINTED BY E. J. FRANCIS, 20, WELLINGTON STREET, CHANCERY LANE.

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 20, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.,
BY JOHN FRANCIS.

SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS AND NEWSMEN IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

AGENTS: FOR SCOTLAND, MESSRS. BELL & BRADFUTE, AND MR. JOHN MENZIES, EDINBURGH;—FOR IRELAND,
MR. JOHN ROBERTSON, DUBLIN.

MDCCCLXXX.

052
A867

LELAND STANFORD JUNIOR UNIVERSITY

THE
A T H E N Æ U M
JOURNAL
OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS, MUSIC,
AND THE DRAMA.

JULY TO DECEMBER,

1880.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY E. J. FRANCIS, TROTTER'S COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 20, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.,
BY JOHN FRANCIS.

SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS AND NEWSMEN IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

AGENTS: FOR SCOTLAND, MESSRS. HELL & BRADFUTE, AND MR. JOHN MENZIES, EDINBURGH;—FOR IRELAND,
MR. JOHN ROBERTSON, DUBLIN.

MDCCCLXXX.

125384

EP

YBAGU
XOHU, CROBATE CHA.LU
YT293VHU

INDEX OF CONTENTS

JULY TO DECEMBER

1880.

LITERATURE.

Reviews.

Abbott's (B. A.) Via Latina, 706
 Abbott's (T. K.) Par Palimpsestorum Dublinensium, 463
 Abreu's (D. G. de V.) Fragmentos d'uma Tentativa de Estudo Scolastico da Epopeia Portuguesa, 47
 Adair's Whom did She Love? 862
 Adams's (W. H. D.) Eminent Soldiers, 815; Heroes of the Cross, 438; Wrecked Lives, 566
 Adelaide's Jemima, 14
 Adma's Mildred Forrester, 638
 Alberg's (A.) Fabled Stories from the Zoo, 706
 Alcott's (L. M.) Jack and Jill, 566
 Aldrich's (T. B.) The Stillwater Tragedy, 529
 Alford's (Miss E. M.) Honor, 565
 Almanach de Gotha, 814
 Almanacs, 864
 Among the Tombs of Colchester, 143
 Anderson's (Sir C. H. J.) Lincoln Pocket Guide, 363, 401
 Annual Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Museum, 567
 Antiquary, The, 47
 Appleton's (G. W.) Jack Allin's Friends, 11
 Arber's (E.) English Garner—English Scholar's Library, 366
 Arriens's (P.) Vocabulary in Dutch, Malay, and Achinese, 174
 Ascoli's (Prof.) Iscrizioni inedite o mal note, Greche, Latine, Ebraiche, 112
 Ashby's (J. T.) Choice Poems and Lyrics for Study and Delight, 80
 Asiatic Society, Report, 336
 Atcherley's (C.) Corda and Discords, 529
 Atti del IV. Congresso Internazionale degli Orientalisti, 336
 Audeval's (H.) Les Amours d'un Pianiste, 11
 Auerbach's (B.) Brigitte, translated by Miss Bell, 400
 Aunt Judy's Annual Volume, edited by Gatty, 566
 Austin's (Stella) Our Next-Door Neighbours, 862
 Bacchus of Euripides, with Notes, &c., by Sandys, 772
 Baldwin's (H. B.) The Spirit of Nature, 85
 Balfour's (Mrs. C. L.) Family Honour, 705
 Banished Monarch, A, and other Stories, 745
 Bar Hebraeus's Scholion to the Psalms, edited by Lagarde, 112
 Barker's (Lady) The White Rat, 562
 Barrett's (P.) Folly Morrison, 812
 Beaconsfield's (The Earl of) Endymion, 701
 Beauty's Daughters, 172
 Becker's (A. L.) First German Book, 464
 Beeton's (C.) In Fair Bruges, 529
 Bell's (A. J. M.) Second Greek Reader—Prose, 209
 Bell's (Canon) Biography of Henry Martyn, 778
 Bellver's (Surgeon-Major H. W.) Races of Afghanistan, 171
 Beltrame's (G.) Grammar of the Denka Language—Scientific Sketch of the Language of the Akka Tribe, 174
 Bemrose's Daily Calendar—Scripture Calendar—Monthly Diary, 707
 Benedetti's (S. de) Vita e Morte di Mosè, 238
 Benn's (G.) History of the Town of Belfast, 580
 Bennett's (G. L.) Selections from Camar: The Gallic War, 706
 Berens's (Mrs.) Steadfast unto Death, 834
 Berners's (Dame J.) Treatyse of Fysshynge wyth an Anglo, with an Introduction by Watkins, 353
 Berthet's (E.) The Sergeant's Legacy, translated by Venables, 172
 Betham-Edwards's (Miss M.) Forestalled, 206; Six Life Studies of Famous Women, 808
 Biagi's (Dr. G.) Fonti del Novellino, 84
 Bigelow's (M. M.) History of Procedure in England from the Norman Conquest, 563
 Biography of the late Rev. B. W. Sibthorp, by Rev. J. R. Fowler, 14
 Bird's (L. L.) Unbeaten Tracks in Japan, 527
 Birmingham Free Libraries, Report, 464
 Black's (W.) White Wings, 269
 Blackburne's (H. O.) The Glen of Silver Birchies, 741
 Blackie's Comprehensive School Series, 805
 Blackie's (W.) Enemies of Books, 567
 Blackie's (W. G.) The Personal History of David Livingstone, 810
 Blanc's (L.) Letters from England, 336
 Blanqui's (J. A.) History of Political Economy in Europe, translated by Miss Leonard, 283
 Blount's (L. F.) Class-Book of French Composition, 79

Bombay Gazetteer: Catch, Cambay, and other Bombay Districts, 364
 Book of Leinster, lithographed by O'Longan, 173
 Bourne's (C. E.) Fisherman of Rhava, 743
 Bourne's (S.) Trade, Population, and Food, 864
 Bowen's (H. C.) Simple English Poems, 80
 Bowra's (H.) Wait a Year, 269
 Boy's Freemant, The, edited by Lerner, 174
 Boy's Own Annual, 433
 Brabourne's (Lord) The Mountain Sprite's Kingdom, 813
 Braddon's (Miss M. E.) Just as I Am, 496
 Bradford's (C.) Ethel's Adventures in Doll Country, 862
 British Almanac and Companion, 778
 British School Series: Sixth Reader, edited by Morrison, 464
 Brothers Wifen, The: Memoirs and Miscellanies, edited by Pattison, 708
 Brown's (R.) Notes on the Northern Atlantic, 271
 Browne's (J. C.) Detling in Days Gone By, 581
 Browne's (P.) A Year's Cookery, 47; What Girls can Do, 748
 Browning's (O.) Modern France, 142
 Browning's (R.) Dramatic Idylls, 39
 Bruns (W. G.) and Sachan's (E.) Syrisch-Römische Rechtbuch aus dem fünften Jahrhundert, 112
 Buckley's (R. B.) Irrigation Works of India, 863
 Budge's (E. A.) Aegyrian Texts, 111
 Budé's (H.) Hachette's French Primer, 209
 Burgeon's (J.) Cave Temples of India, 396, 434
 Burnett (G.) and Stuart's (Dr. J.) Exchequer Rolls of Scotland, 73
 Butler's (S.) Unconscious Memory, 810
 Butler's (W. F.) Far Out, 673
 Buxton's (B. H.) From the Wings, 638
 Buxton's (S. C.) Handbook to Political Questions of the Day, 144
 Caird's (J.) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion, 170
 Caius's (J.) Of English Dogges, 333
 Calendars and Diaries, 707, 744
 Calendars of the University of St. Andrews, University College of Wales, and University of Tokio, 61
 Capes's (Rev. W. W.) Stoicism, 810
 Carmela, by the Princess Olga Cantacuzene, translated by Madame Klaus, 303
 Caro's (J.) Das Bündnis von Canterbury, 238
 Carrington's (Mrs.) Prince Fortune and Prince Fatal, 672
 Cartmell's (M. E.) Mistress of Coon Hall, 11
 Cassell's Modern School Readers, 304
 Catalogue of the Printed Books in the Library of the Middle Temple, 47
 Caulfield's (R.) Council Book of the Corporation of Kinsale, 492
 Chambers's Short History of England, 304
 Chambers's (Dr. W.) Youth's Companion, 239
 Chandos Classics: Gibbon's Autobiography and Letters, 778
 Charmes's (G.) Cinq Mois au Caire et dans la Basse Egypte, 109
 Cheetham's (S.) Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, 41
 Children's Journey, The, and other Stories, 174
 Choice Poems and Lyrics for Study and Delight, edited by Ashby, 80
 Christie's (M. E.) Lady Laura, 11
 Christie's (R. C.) Etienne Dolet, 494
 Christmas Cards, 673, 707, 744, 778, 814
 Church's (F. J.) Trial and Death of Socrates, 305
 Church's (Rev. A. J.) Stories of the East from Herodotus, 639
 Clear's (A. R.) Xenophontis Memorabilia Socratis, 706
 Coape's (H. C.) What will Society Say? 431
 Colbeck's (C.) Scribe: Le Verre d'Eau, 209
 Collier's (W. F.) History of Scotland for Schools, 705
 Collingridge's City Diary, 864
 Collins's (M.) Attio Salt, edited by Kerslake, 707; Thoughts in my Garden, edited by Yates, 234
 Collins's (T.) "Unseen Papers" in Latin Prose and Verse, 706
 Common Prayer, Book of, in the Ojibbeway Language, 536
 Continental Literature: Belgium, 841; Bohemia, 842; Denmark, 844; France, 845; Germany, 847; Holland, 852; Hungary, 853; Italy, 854; Norway, 855; Poland, 856; Portugal, 857; Spain, 858; Sweden, 859
 Cooper's (C. H.) Le Keux's Memorials of Cambridge, 814
 Cooper's (C. W. F.) Horace's Odes, 740
 Cooper's (H. S.) Comedies, 809
 Cory's (W.) Guide to Modern English History, 45
 Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar and Diary, 744

Council Book of the Corporation of Kinsale, edited by Caulfield, 492
 Craik's (G. M.) Hilary's Love Story, 741
 Crommelin's (M.) Black Abbey, 462
 Crosby Records, edited by the Rev. T. R. Gibson, 528
 Curiosities of the Search-Room, 365, 435
 Curtius's (G.) Das Verbum der Griechischen Sprache seinem Baue nach dargestellt, translated by Wilkins and England, 201
 Cust's (R. N.) Linguistic and Oriental Essays, 776
 Cutch, Cambay, and other Bombay Districts, 364
 D'Albanes's (G.) Portraits de Rabelais, 329
 D'Albert's (L. M.) New Guinea, 634
 Darmesteter's (J.) Cabires, Bené Elchim et Diosmures, 112
 Das Wirthshaus im Speesart von W. Hauff, edited by Schlotmann, 79
 Daudet's (A.) Fromont the Younger and Riel the Elder, 172
 Davies's (R.) Walks through the City of York, 602
 Davy's (Mrs. H.) Under the Rose, 109
 D'Azeleglio's (M.) Challenges of Barletta, translated by Lady Lo Magenia, 11
 De Kay's (C.) Hesperus, and other Poems, 257
 De La Rue's Christmas Cards, 707; Pocket-Books and Diaries, 778; Wall Calendars, 814
 Della Rocca's (Principe) Ricordi della Vita Intima di Enrico Heine, 427
 De Morgan's (M.) The Necklace of Princess Florimonde, 639
 Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, Journal, 144
 Derenbourg's (J. and H.) Opusculs et Traité d'Abou'l-Walid Merwan ibn Djanah de Cordoue, 266
 Dering's (E. H.) Freville Chase, 565
 De Rougé's (Le Vie. J.) Inscriptions et Notices recueillies à Edfou, 14
 Desru's (L.) French Pronunciation, 433
 Dexter's (H. M.) Congregationalism of the Last Three Hundred Years, 639
 Dickens's (C.) Mudfog Papers, 303
 Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, edited by Smith and Cheetham, 41
 Dictionary of Daily Blunders, 368
 Dillwyn's (E. A.) The Rebecca Riots, 431
 Dimplethorpe, 672
 Dixie's (Lady F.) Across Patagonia, 774
 Dobson's (W. T.) Literary Privileges, Fancies, Follies, and Frolics, 457 Documents illustrating the History of St. Paul's Cathedral, edited by Dr. Simpson, 106
 Dogged Jack, 566
 Dona Perfecta, by Galdos, translated by D. P. W., 235
 Dorset Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club, Proceedings, 47
 Doudney's (S.) Stepping Stones, 566; Strangers Yet, 77
 Douglas's (Mrs. M.) Two Rose Trees, 566
 Dowling's (R.) The Sport of Fate, 235; Under St. Paul's, 775
 Dragomanoff's (M.) Gromada, and Four Pamphlets, 336
 Drane's (A. T.) History of St. Catherine of Sienna, 238
 Driver's (S. R.) Commentary on the Book of Proverbs attributed to Abraham ibn Ezra, 777
 Du Boys's (A.) Catherine d'Aragon et les Origines du Schisme Anglican, 461
 Du Cane's (Sir C.) Odyssey of Homer, 396
 Duckett's (Sir G.) Penal Laws and the Test Act in 1688, &c., 46; Test and Penal Statutes in 1688 relating to Sumner, 531
 Duffield's (Mrs.) Floral Cards, 707
 Duffy's (Sir C. G.) Young Ireland, 667
 Dumas's (A. fils) Les Femmes qui Tuent et les Femmes qui Tentent, 438
 Dutt's (Shoochoo Chunder) India Past and Present, 326
 Dyce's (Rev. A.) Shakespeare, 673
 Earle's (J.) English Plant Names from the Tenth to the Fifteenth Century, 323, 435, 634
 Eason's Almanac for Ireland, 778
 Eastlake's (Lady) Mrs. Grote, 633
 Eblana's Last Monarch of Tara, 334
 Economical Housewife, The, 778
 Edgar Allan Poe, by Ingram, 107, 146, 175
 Edkins's (Rev. J.) Chinese Buddhism, 7
 Edwards's (Amelia B.) Lord Brackenbury, 399
 Edwards's (Miss M. B.) Six Life Studies of Famous Women, 80
 Elliott's (Mrs.) The Dean's Wife, 496
 Elmer's (J.) Easy Reading and Writing Lessons in German, 306; German Declensions, 464

LITERATURE.

Reviews—continued.

- Elizabeth; or, the Exiles of Siberia, 145
 Ellis's (A. R.) Sylvestra, 672
 Encyclopædia Britannica, Vols. X. and XI., 301, 337
 Engelmann's Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca, edited by Preuss, 814
 English Men of Letters: Alexander Pope, by Stephen, 42; Byron, by Nichol, 206
 Erman's (A.) Neuenegyptische Grammatik, 336
 Eros: Four Tales, 45
 Essex Archaeological Society, Transactions, 143
 Every Boy's Annual, edited by Routledge, 705
 Every Girl's Annual, edited by Leith, 813
 Erchequer Rolls of Scotland, edited by Barnett and Stuart, 73
 Extracts from Greek Elegiac Poets, edited by Kynaston, 707
 Eyre & Spottiswoode's Variorum Teacher's Bible, 145
 Fac-simile of the Codex Alexandrinus: New Testament and Clementine Epistles, 207
 Fac-similes of Ancient Charters in the British Museum, 207
 Fagan's (L.) Lettere ad Antonio Panizzi di Uomini Illustri e di Amici Italiani, 84; Life of Sir Anthony Panizzi, 491
 Farmers' and Country Gentlemen's Almanack, 864
 Fellowes's (E. J.) The Red Cross, 45
 Fenn's (G. M.) Adventures of Working Men, 862; The Clerk of Portwick, 496
 Fenn's (W. W.) After Sundown, 743
 Ferguson's (J.) and Burgess's (J.) Cave Temples of India, 395, 434
 Findlay's (C.) Cross Purposes, 11
 Fitzgibbon's (M.) Trip to Manitoba, 230
 Fitzpatrick's (W. J.) Essay on Education and the State of Ireland—Life of Bishop Doyle, 356
 Fleming's (G.) The Head of Medusa, 565
 Fleming's (W.) Index to our Railway System, 587
 Foley's (H.) Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 430
 Fonblanque's (A. de) Pious Frauds, 172
 Fonblanque's (Miss C. A. de) Five Weeks in Iceland, 771
 Forbes's (A.) Glimpses through the Cannon Smoke, 47
 Forde's (Miss G.) A Lady's Tour in Corsica, 640
 Foreign Classics for English Readers: Cervantes, by Mrs. Oliphant, 636
 Formby's (Rev. H.) Ancient Rome and its Connexion with the Christian Religion, 594
 Forrester's (Mrs.) Roy and Viola, 462
 Fortunes of Hassan, The, 705
 Fothergill's (J.) The Wellfields, 366
 Four Centuries of English Letters, edited and arranged by Scoones, 231
 Fowler's (Rev. J.) Biography of the late Rev. E. W. Gibborth, 14
 Francis's (M. J.) Beatrice Melton's Discipline, 705
 Francis's (S.) The Minister's Daughters, 862
 Fraser's (Rev. W. R.) History of the Parish and Burgh of Laureokirk, 269
 Fraser-Tyler's (M. E.) Grisel Romney, 11
 Freeman's (E. A.) Short History of the Norman Conquest, 805
 French Provincial Congress at Lyons, Report, 400
 Friederick's (C.) Bibliotheca Orientalis for 1879, 111
 Friedmann's (Herr) Postquam Rabbathi, 640
 Frost's (T.) Forty Years' Recollections, 369
 Fry's (H.) Guide to the London Charities, 567
 Fulcher's Ladies' Memorandum Book, 864
 Fuller's (T.) Good Thoughts in Bad Times, 605
 Furness's (H.) New Variorum Edition of Shakespeare, 71
 Pyffe's (C. A.) History of Modern Europe, 360
 Gaidos's (B. P.) Dofa Perfecta, translated by D. P. W., 235
 Gallaga's South America, 739
 Garden Oracle, 864
 Gardeners' Year-Book, 864
 Gardthausen's (V.) Griechische Palæographie, 207
 Gepp's (C. G.) Virgil: Georgics, 208
 Gibbon's Autobiography and Letters, 778
 Gibbon's (C.) In Pastures Green, 172
 Gibbon's (Rev. T. E.) Crosby Records, 523
 Gill's (W. W.) Historical Sketches of Savage Life in Polynesia, 809
 Ginsburg's (Dr. C. D.) Massorah, 777
 Girl with the Golden Locks, and other Stories, 743
 Girl's Own Annual, 400
 Girling's (G.) Outlines of the History of England, 209
 Glouvet's (Jules de) Le Forestier, 77
 Godefroy's (F.) Dictionnaire de l'Ancienne Langue Française, 498
 Goethe's Account of the Slave about 965 A.D., according to al-Bekri, 47
 Goethe's Faust, by Dr. A. M. Selso—Translated by Birds, 605
 Goirand's (L.) French Code of Commerce, 174
 Golden Childhood, 778
 Goldamid's (Major-General Sir F. J.) Biography of Outram, 103
 Gomme's (G. L.) Primitive Folk-Moots, 600
 Gonsenbach's (Dr. A.) Lebensbeschreibung des Generals Ludwig von Erlach—Urkunden, 270
 Gomp's (R.) History of Russia, 304
 Gough's (H.) Story of Heritage, 11
 Granddiers, The, from the German of Rosenberg by Saville, 775
 Grandison's (J. de) Legenda Sanctorum, edited by Reynolds, 238
 Graves's (A. P.) Irish Songs and Ballads, 75
 Green's (J. R.) History of the English People, 167
 Greene's (F. V.) Sketches of Army Life in Russia, 669
 Greg's (P.) Errant, 775
 Greville's (Lady Violet) Faiths and Fashions, 673
 Groome's (F. H.) In Gipsy Tents, 460
 Grover's (A.) My First French Phrase-Book, 305
 Guthrie's (J.) The River Tyne, 332
 Hachette's French Primer, by Bué, 209
 Halévy's (Léon) Cyrus et le Retour de l'Exil, 639
 Halévy's (Ludovic) Les Petites Cardinal, 141
 Hall's (T. D.) Manual of English Composition, 79
 Hall's (W. E.) International Law, 264
 Hamilton's (C. G.) Clear Shining after Rain, 77; After a Dark Night—the Sun, 399
 Hamilton's (H. L.) Holiday Times, 743
 Hamilton Papers, The, edited by Gardiner, 234
 Hardy's (T.) The Trumpet-Major, 672
 Harrington's (Sir J.) Short View of the State of Ireland, edited by Macray, 232
 Harwood's (J. B.) The Tenth Earl, 235
 Hawthorne's (J.) Ellice Quentin, 431; Yellow Cap, 813
 Heimburg's (W.) Lizzie of the Mill, translated by Tyrell, 303
 Heine, Enrico, Ricordi della Vita Intima di, by the Principessa Della Rocca, 427
 Henslow's (J. R.) Dorothy Compton, 812
 Hibbert Lectures, 1879: On the Growth and Origin of Religion, by Renouf, 79
 Hibbert-Ware's (Mrs.) Life's Seven Ages, 603
 Hibernica Ignatiana seu Ibernorum Societatis Jesu Patrum Monumenta, collected by Hogan, 300
 Hill's (Sir R. and G. B.) Life of Sir Rowland Hill, 771
 Hington's (J.) Australia Abroad, 498
 Historical Course for Schools: France, by Yonge, 142
 History Primers: France, by Yonge, 142
 History of Political Economy in Europe, by Blanqui, translated by Miss Leonard, 238
 Hogan's (A. P. E.) Hibernica Ignatiana seu Ibernorum Societatis Jesu Patrum Monumenta, 300
 Holdich's (C.) Wetherby-by-Stamford, 174
 Hollingshead's (J.) Plain English, 305
 Holmes's (O. W.) The Iron Gate, and other Poems, 599
 Holt's (E. S.) Earl Hubert's Daughter, 813
 Hope's (A. B.) Seven Stories, 14
 Hope's (B.) The Shadow of a Life, 334
 Hope's (K.) A Plot of the Present Day, 496
 Hoppin's (B.) Greek Hero Stories, 813
 Horace's Odes, Selected and Arranged by Cooper, 740
 Houdin's (R.) Secrets of Stage Conjuring, 813
 How to Pass Examinations, 400
 Howells's (W. D.) The Undiscovered Country, 235, 400
 Howorth's (H. H.) History of the Mongols, 425
 Hubbard's (J. M.) Catalogue of Works relating to W. Shakespeare in the Barton Collection, 175
 Hugo's (V.) L'Ane, 670
 Hunt's (Mrs. A. W.) The Leadon Casket, 812
 Hunt's (M. B.) Aunt Tabitha's Waifs, 743
 Hunter's (W. A.) Introduction to Roman Law, 10
 In Mischief Again, 743
 Index Catalogue of the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office, United States Army, 743
 Indian Fairy Tales, Collected and Translated by Stokes, 166
 Ingelwou's (Jean) Sarah de Berenger, 603
 Ingram's (J. H.) Edgar Allan Poe, 107, 146, 175
 Irish Calendar ascribed to Oengus, with an English Version by Dr. Stokes, 173
 J. L.'s Doty, and other Poems, 237
 Jackson's (G. F.) Shropshire Word-Book, 13
 Jahresberichte der Geschichtswissenschaft, edited by Dr. Abraham, Hermann, and Meyer, 27
 Jamieson's (R.) Political Economy for Business People, 111
 Jebb's (R. C.) Antiphon, Andokides, Lysias, Isokrates, Isæos, 268
 Jeff and Left, and other Stories, 743
 Jefferies's (R.) Round About a Great Estate, 202
 Jenkins's (G.) Lisa Lena, 529
 Jennings's (G. H.) Anecdotal History of the British Parliament, 498
 Jephson's (R. M.) The Red Rag, 603
 Jerome's (W. B.) Studies in Deductive Logic, 636
 Jirecek's (Dr. H.) Svod Zakonuv Slovaneky, 47
 Joel's (Dr. M.) Blicke in die Religionsgeschichte zu Anfang des zweiten Christlichen Jahrhunderts, 233
 Joel's (L.) Conson's Manual, 105
 John Ingelman, 665
 Jones's (W.) Creditable Past and Present, 605
 Jocelyn's (J.) Marvellous Little Housekeepers, 47
 Journal Asiatique, by Renan, 336, 533
 Journal of the Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, 144
 Juste's (T.) Le Congrès National de Belgique, 1830-31, with an Introduction by Laveleye, 271
 Kandahar in 1879, 199
 Karr's (A.) Grains de Bon Sens, 112
 Keith's (L.) Nobody's Lad, 862
 Kemp's (Thomas à) Imitation of Christ, 78, 113
 Kenny's (C. B.) Principles of Legislation with regard to Property for Charitable and other Public Uses, 175
 Kent & Co.'s Pocket Editions of English Classics, 744
 Kerlake's (F.) Attic Salt, 707
 King's (A.) Our Sons: how to Start them in Life, 67
 King's (T. W.) War-Ships and Navies of the World, 673
 Kinglake's (A. W.) Invasion of the Crimea, 625
 Kingston's (W. H. G.) The Heir of Kilbannan—The Lily of Leyden, 566; The Wilds of Florida—Roger Willoughby—Voyages and Travels of Count Funnibus and Baron Stalkin, 705; Adventures in the Far West, 862
 Kinner's (J. B.) Principles of Property in Land, 498
 Kunz's (J.) French Grammar, 305
 Kynaston's (H.) Extracts from Greek Elegiac Poets, 707
 Lamb's (Lady) Versacious History of a Black-and-Tea Terrier, 566
 Lambros's (S. P.) Collection de Romans Grecs, 601
 Lang's (A.) Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus, 138
 Langbridge's (Rev. F.) Peacock Alley, 705
 Langford's (Dr. J. A.) The Praise of Books as Sold and Sung by English Authors, 640
 Landownes Classics: Gray—Beattie—Collins—Percy's Reliques—Gems of National Poetry, 673
 Lapointe's (A.) The Rival Doctors, translated by Van Laun, 45
 Lerner's (S.) The Boy's Froisart, 174
 Laveleye's (E. de) Italie Actuelle, 306
 Lavigne's (E.) Female Nihilist, translated by G. Sutherland Edwards, 206
 Lay of the Himyarites, translated and edited by Capt. W. F. Prideaux, 13
 Lazarus and Philo-Israel's Proofs for the Welsh that the British are the Lost Tribes of Israel, 498
 Leathes's (E.) The Actor's Wife, 11
 Legenda Sanctorum of John de Grandison, edited by Reynolds, 238
 Legge's (Dr. J.) Religions of China, 7; Texts of Confucianism, 360
 Leisure Hour, 778
 Leith's (A. A.) Every Girl's Annual, 813
 Leitner's (G. W.) Language of the Bashgali Kafirs, 336
 Le Keux's Memorials of Cambridge, by Cooper, 814
 Lepormant's (F.) Origines de l'Histoire d'après la Bible, 137
 Leopardi's (G.) Appuntamento della Morte, pubblicata dall' Avvocato Volta, 200
 Lepsius's (Prof.) Nubian Grammar, 112
 Leslie's (A.) Silver Key to a Golden Palace, 813
 Lessons in Gaelic, 497
 Letters from Sainte-Beuve, 209
 Lewis's (E. D.) Draft Code of Criminal Law and Procedure, 174
 Lewis's (L.) Peal of Merry Belis, 603
 Liesching's (L. F.) Through Peril to Fortune, 743
 Life of Sir Rowland Hill, by Sir R. and G. B. Hill, 771
 Ligier's (H.) Politique de Rabelais, 329
 Linton's (E. L.) The Rebel of the Family, 741
 Liske's (J.) Vinjas de Extranjeros por España y Portugal, 367
 Little Folks, 145, 778
 Little Wide Awake, 778
 Litre, Le, 15
 Lizzie of the Mill, from the German of Heimburg by Tyrell, 303
 Lloyd's (Mrs. D.) Arnold Leigh, 399
 Lolo's A Cruel Secret, 45
 Longfellow's (H. W.) Ultima Thule, 599
 Lots's (Dr. W.) Die Inschriften Tiglath Pilesem's I., 777
 Low's (C. R.) Soldiers of the Victorian Age, 8
 Lychinaka's (M. J.) The Kindergarten Principle, 432
 Lyster's (A.) My Lovely Lassie, 639
 M. C.'s Le Pasteur d'Herman, 79
 Macalpin's (D. R.) Law relating to Money-Lenders and Borrowers, 335
 McCarthy's (J.) History of Our Own Times, 393
 McCorquodale's Railway Diary, 814
 Mahaffy's (Rev. J. F.) History of Classical Greek Literature, 72
 Main's (D. M.) Treasury of English Sonnets, 140
 Maendie's (Lady M.) Fascination, 172
 Malleson's (Col. G. B.) History of the Indian Mutiny, 327
 Manley's (J. J.) Notes on Game and Game Shooting, 267
 Mansell & Co.'s Christmas Cards, 673
 Mansfield's (E. D.) Primer of Greek Grammar: Syntax, 706
 Maples's (Rev. C.) Collections for a Handbook of the Maltese Language, 174
 Marjory, 775
 Marshall's (E.) Heather and Harebell, 743; Memories of Troublesome Times, 77
 Marshall's (W.) Monsell Digby, 366
 Martyn, Henry, Biography of, by Canon Bell, 778
 Marvin's (C.) Col. Grodekoff's Ride from Samarcand to Herat, 299
 Mason's (G.) History of France, 142
 Mehlah, 603
 Mehren's (Prof. A. F.) Den Arabiske Filosef Ibn-Sabins Sendebrev til Keiser Frederik II. af Hohenstaufen, 47
 Mémoires du Général Count Van der Meere, 306
 Meredith's (L. A.) Tasmanian Friends and Foes, Feathered, Furred, and Fined, 704, 745
 Metcalfe's (A.) The Englishman and the Scandinavian, 173

- Meyer's (C. F.) Der Heilige, 603
 Middlemass's (J.) Innocence at Play, 141
 Miller's (H. D.) Pugilistica, 76
 Miller's (O. T.) Nimpo's Troubles, 705; Queer Pets and their Doings, 813
 Milnes's (A.) Elementary Notions of Logic, 80
 Modern Greek Heroine, A, 77
 Moleworth's (Mrs.) A Christmas Child, 862; Hermes, 813; The Tapestry Room, 14
 Molmenti's (P. G.) Storia di Venezia nella Vita Privata, 270
 Monck's (W. H. S.) Introduction to Logic, 707
 Monsieur Guisot in Private Life, by Madame de Witt, translated by Simpson, 135
 Montague's (Capt. W. E.) Campaigning in South Africa, 165
 Morris's (H. S.) Eminent Israelites of the Nineteenth Century, 239
 Morgan's (D. T.) Hymns and other Poetry of the Latin Church, 47
 Morrison's Sixth Reader, 464
 Mudge and her Chicks, by a Brother and Sister, 639
 Muir's (J.) Metrical Translations from Sanskrit Writers, 771
 Müller's (Prof. F. Max) Della Libertà Individuale, 707; The Upanishads, 203
 Myers's (E.) Defence of Rome, 237
 Narrative of the Second Arctic Expedition made by Charles F. Hall, edited by Nourse, 330
 Nevinson's (Rev. C.) History of Stamford, 48
 New Variorum Edition of Shakespeare, edited by Furness, 71
 Newberry's (T.) Englishman's Bible, 368
 Newton's (T.) Bomrose's Standard Grammar, 304
 Nichol's (J.) Byron, 265
 Norbury's (Fleet-Surgeon H. F.) Naval Brigade in South Africa during the Years 1877-78-79, 702
 Norris's (W. B.) Matrimony, 862
 O'Brien's (R. B.) Parliamentary History of the Irish Land Question, 863
 Octavia's Lovers, 399
 Odyssey of Homer, The, translated into English Verse by Sir C. D. Cane, 396
 O'Hagan's (J.) Song of Roland, 7
 Oldcastle's (J.) Journals and Journalism, 209
 Old Maid's (An) People She Knew, 109
 Oliphant's (Mrs.) Cervantes, 636; He that Will Not when He May, 431
 Oppert's (Dr. G.) Weapons, Army Organization, and Political Maxims of the Ancient Hindus, 777
 O'Bailey's (Mrs. E.) Reed Farm, 172
 Oriental Congress at Florence, Report, 400
 Otter's Story, The, 14
 Outram, James, Biography of, by Goldsmid, 103
 Oxford Bible for Teachers, 145
 Page's (H.) The Lady Resident, 565
 Panizzi, Sir A., Life of, by Fagan, 491
 Pansie's Flour-Bin, 705
 Parker's (Grandmother) Grandmother's Recollections, 743
 Parr's (Mrs.) Adam and Eve, 603
 Parr's (Capt. H. H.) Sketch of the Zulu and Kaffir Wars, 805
 Partridge & Cooper's Diaries, 744
 Passages from the Prose Writings of Matthew Arnold, 112
 Patmore's (G.) Our Pets and Playfellows, 705
 Pattison's (S. R.) The Brothers Wifien, 703
 Payn's (J.) A Confidential Agent, 775
 Peacock's (E.) Churchwardens' Accounts of the Parish of Stratton, in the County of Cornwall, 46; Notes from the Court Rolls of the Manor of Scotter, Lincolnshire, 531
 Pearce's (J.) The Merchant's Clerk, 814
 Peard's (F. M.) Mother Molly, 638
 Peisbold's (J.) Bibliographia Dantea, 368
 Pepper's Playbook of Science, revised by Hepworth, 813
 Peckett's (A. G.) Gai Juli Caesaris De Bello Gallico, 209
 Peter Parley's Annual, 862
 Peyron's (B.) Latin Catalogue of Hebrew MSS. in the University Library of Turin, 112
 Flugk-Hartung's (Dr. J.) Diplomatisch-historische Forschungen—Acta Pontificum Romanorum Inedita, 464
 Phillips's (E. C.) Tropical Reading-Books, 304
 Pinkerton's (T. A.) Amy Wynter, 235
 Pirke's (C. L.) A Very Opal, 363
 Piry's (A. T.) Le Saint Edite, 238
 Piré's (Dr. G.) Proverbi Siciliani, 605
 Pocket-Books and Diaries, 778
 Poems from Shelley, selected by Stopford A. Brooke, 110
 Poetical Works of James Russell Lowell, with a Critical Preface by Rossetti, 136
 Pollock's (W.) Epitaphs, 668
 Posenby's Examination Papers set at the Irish Intermediate Examinations, 145
 Poole's (C. H.) Attempt towards a Glossary of the Archaic and Provincial Words of the County of Stafford, 497
 Poole's (R. L.) History of the Huguenots of the Dispersion, 428
 Poor Nelly, 743
 Post Office London Directory, 814
 Potter's (F. S.) Elfin Hollow, 705
 Prang's American Christmas Cards, 778
 Précis of Official Papers, 640
 Pretor's (A.) Anabasis of Xenophon, 208
 Pridoux's (Capt. W. F.) Lay of the Himyarites, 13
 Printers' International Specimen Exchange, 707
 Proceedings of the Dorset Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club, 47
 Prose Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley, edited by Forman, 297
 Quaritch's (B.) General Catalogue of Books, 336
 R. G. K. W.'s French Pronunciation, 433
 Rae's (Mrs. M.) Hartleigh Towers, 206
 Raverty's (Major H. G.) Tabakat-i-Nasiri, 270
 Recueil de Fac-simile Héliographiques de Documents tirés des Archives des Préfectures, Mairies, et Hospices, 207
 Red Cross, The, translated from the German by Fellowes, 45
 Redhouse's Turkish Dictionary, revised by Dr. Wells, 362
 Reed's (Rev. A.) Ida Vane, 813
 Reed's (Sir E. J.) Japan, 493
 Reenaud's (P.) Le Dix-septième Chapitre du Bhāratiya-Nityaśāstra, intitulé Vāg-abhinaya, 111
 Reid's (J. S.) Academies of Cicero, 305
 Rejected Addresses, 369
 Renouf's (P. L. Page) Lectures on the Growth and Origin of Religion, 79
 Report of the Birmingham Free Libraries, 464
 Report of the Fourth Oriental Congress at Florence, 400
 Report of the French Provincial Congress at Lyons, 400
 Report of the Royal Asiatic Society, 336
 Revue de l'École d'Alger, 368
 Revue Egyptologique, 14
 Richey's (A. G.) Irish Land Laws, 863
 Riddell's (A.) Grammar of the Chinyanja Language as spoken at Lake Nyassa, 18
 Riddell's (Mrs. J. H.) The Mystery in Palace Gardens, 741
 Ridley's (A. E.) Better than Gold, 705
 Riess's (F.) Das Geburtsjahr Christi, 463
 Riquet of the Tuft, 361
 Rival Doctors, The, translated from the French of Lapointe by Van Laun, 45
 Rivière's (Henri) Souvenirs de la Nouvelle Calédonie, 81
 Robinson's (C.) The Golden Hind, 237
 Robinson's (W.) God's Acre Beautiful, 305
 Robson's (Rev. J. H.) Elementary Treatises on Geometrical Drawing, 707
 Rocher's (E.) La Province Chinoise du Yün-nan, 331
 Roe's (Rev. E. P.) A Day of Fate, 741
 Rose's (G.) Modesta, 529
 Rose's (Rev. J.) The Manchus, 430
 Rothe's (Herr) Christmas Cards, 744
 Routledge's Cruden's Concordance, edited by Carey, 567
 Routledge's (E.) Every Boy's Annual, 705
 Rowan's (A. M.) Bendish-lime, 141
 Rowe's (R.) Diary of an Early Methodist, 47
 Roy's (K. C.) Phrases and Idioms, 111
 Royal Navy List, compiled by Warren and Lean, 176
 Royal Society of Literature, Transactions, 814
 Ruskin's (J.) Arrows of the Chase, edited by an Oxford Pupil—The Lord's Prayer and the Church, edited by Malleson, 807
 Russell's (D.) Quite True, 496
 Russell's (W. C.) A Sailor's Sweetheart, 741
 Sachau's (R.) Syrisch-Römisches Rechtbuch aus dem funften Jahrhundert, 112
 Sacred Books of China: The Texts of Confucianism, translated by Legge, 360
 Sacred Books of the East: The Upanishads, by Max Müller, 203
 Sainte-Beuve's (C. A.) Le Clou d'Or, 812
 St. Paul's Cathedral, Documents illustrating the History of, edited by Dr. Simpson, 106
 Salisbury's (E. G.) Border Counties Worthies, 532
 Sands's (J.) Frank Powderhorn, 705
 Sandys's (J. E.) Bacchæ of Euripides, with Notes, &c., 772
 Sathas's (S. N.) Documents inédits relatifs à l'Histoire de la Grèce, 271
 Sator's Not Quite a Peck of P—s, 705
 Saunders's (J.) The Two Drummers, 638
 Saville's (W.) The Grandchildren, 775
 Sayce's (A. H.) Introduction to the Science of Language, 558
 Schlottmann's (A.) Das Wirthshaus im Spessart von W. Hauff, 79
 Schmidt's (H.) Modern Cambist, 306
 Schmitz's (L.) Introductory Grammar of the Latin Language, 305
 Scoones's (W. B.) Four Centuries of English Letters, 231
 Scriba's My Boys, 269
 Segesser's (Dr. A. P.) Ludwig Pfiffer und seine Zeit, 270
 Selection from the Poetry of Elizabeth Barrett Browning—Selection from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning, 110
 Selections from the Attic Orators, by Jebb, 268
 Sergeant's (L.) Greece, 601
 Shelley, Percy Bysshe, Prose Works of, edited by Forman, 297
 Sherer's (J. W.) The Conjuror's Daughter, 399
 Shipley's (M. A.) Bernard Hamilton, 639
 Short's Breakfasts and Lunches at Home, 47
 Short Notices, 49, 81, 112, 145, 175, 209, 239, 271, 336, 369, 400, 433, 464, 499, 567, 605, 673, 707, 778
 Short View of the State of Ireland, written by Sir J. Harrington, and edited by Rev. W. D. Macray, 232
 Sidgwick's (A.) Homer's Iliad, 209; Homer's Iliad, Book XXVI—A First Greek Writer, 706
 Simple English Poems, edited by Bowen, 80
 Simpson's (M. C. M.) Geraldine and her Suitors, 862
 Siouffi's (M.) Études sur la Religion des Soubbas ou Sabéens, 777
 Skelton's (J.) The Crookit Meg, 638
 Skrine's (Rev. J. H.) P. Vergili Maronis Georgicon, Liber Secundus, 706
 Smart's (Hawley) Belles and Ringers, 603
 Smiles's (Dr. B.) Duty, 773
 Smith's (H.) Treatise on the Law of Negligence, 335
 Smith's (B.) St. Martin's Summer, 399
 Smith (W.) and Cheetham's (S.) Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, 41
 Social Sinner, 638
 Song of Roland, The, translated by O'Hagan, 7
 Specimens of English Dialects: Devonshire and Westmoreland, 302
 Spicer's (H.) Winged Words, 206
 Spinoza, by Pollock, 663
 Standard Home Lesson Books: Fifth Standard, 209
 Stephen's (L.) Alexander Pope, 42
 Stephenson's (Rev. H. M.) Selected Poems of Martial, 304
 Stewart's (C. J.) General Catalogue, 175
 Stokes's (M.) Indian Fairy Tales, 168
 Stoughton's (Dr.) William Wulferforce, 499
 Strictly Tied Up, 629
 Stuart's (Dr. J.) Exchequer Rolls of Scotland, 73
 Stubble Farm, 629
 Sunday at Home, 778
 Sunday Scholar's Companion, 778
 Sussex Archaeological Collections, 144
 Swansea, British Association, 229
 Symington's (M.) A Red Rose Chain, 109; Marion Scat-terthwaite, 862
 Symonds's (J. A.) New and Old, 429
 Tarver's (P.) Molure: Le Malade Imaginaire, 209
 Tawney's (Prof.) Ocean of the Streams of Story, 144
 Teherken, The, and his Victim, 366
 Tennyson's (A.) Ballads and other Poems, 737; Princess, 132
 Texts of Confucianism, translated by Legge, 360
 Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus, rendered into English Prose by Lang, 138
 Theodora, 496
 Theuriot's (A.) Mangara, Junior, 172
 Thomas's (B.) The Violin Player, 45
 Thompson's (Sir H.) Food and Feeding, 47
 Thomson's (Miss) Fairland Cards, 778
 Thorn's (L.) A Six Years' Darling, 862
 Thoughts in my Garden, by Collins, edited by Yates, 234
 Through Flood, Through Fire, and other Stories, 743
 Tiphaine, avec une Préface par A. Dumas fils, 399
 Tobias ben Eliezer's (R.) Leqah Tub on Genesis and Exodus, 640
 Tom Morris's Error, and other Stories, 743
 Transactions of the Essex Archaeological Society, 143
 Treasury of English Sonnets, A, edited by Main, 140
 Treatise on the Authorship of Ecclesiastes, 237
 Treatise of Fysshynge wyth an Angle, by Beryus, 333
 Trencker's (V.) Pull Mice-lany, 111
 Trevelyan's (G. O.) Early History of Charles James Fox, 561
 Trotter's (Capt. L. J.) Lord Lawrence, 464
 Turner's (C. Tennyson) Collected Sonnets, 635
 Twelfth Report of the Deputy-Keeper of Public Records in Ireland, 143
 Tytler's (S.) Jane Austen and her Works, 566; Oliver Constable, 303
 Uchard's (M.) Ints Parker, 77
 Union Jack, The, 145
 Van der Moore's (Général Count) Mémoires, 306
 Van Laun's (H.) Short History of the late Mr. Peter Anthony Motteux, 204
 Vapereau's Dictionnaire Universel des Contemporains, 464
 Verdenorp's (B.) The Verdenorps, 399
 Verne's (J.) Demon of Cawnpoor, 813
 Vollgraff's (Dr.) Greek Writers of Roman History, 270
 Wackerbarth's (M. A.) Twixt Friend and Foe, 775
 Wale's (H. J.) Sword and Burpee, 864
 Walford's (E.) Holidays in Home Counties, 175; Tales of our Great Families, 43
 Walford's (L. B.) Troublesome Daughters, 109
 Walks through the City of York, by Davies, edited by his Widow, 602
 Wallace's (W.) Epicureanism, 810
 Walpole's (S.) History of England, 138
 Wandering Will, 11
 Ward (Marcus) & Co.'s Christmas Cards, 778; Calendars, 814
 Ward & Lock's Cruden's Concordance, 567; Tracts for the People, 304; Universal Instructor, 605
 Watson's (Dr.) The Prince's Quest, 237
 Wells's (W. C.) Practical Grammar of the Turkish Language, 362
 Wesche's (H.) Bound by the Law, 863
 Wheatley's (H. B.) Samuel Pepys and the World he Lived in, 605

LITERATURE.

Reviews—Continued.

- Whitaker's Almanac, 364
White's (J. T.) Xenophon's Anabasis, Book IV.—
Homer's Odyssey, Book I., 706
Whitney's (W. D.) Sanskrit Grammar, 18
Whympsey's (F.) The Sea, 174
Wiel's De Christo et suo Adversario Antichristo, edited by Buddensieg, 238
Wigley's (Mrs. W. H.) Workers at Home, 743
Wilde's (Sir W.) Memoir of Gabriel Berauer, 504
Willem's (A.) Les Elzevier, 9
Wiltshire Archaeological and Natural History Magazine, 270
Winchester's (M. E.) A Nest of Sparrows, 743
Wither's (G.) Vox Vulgi, edited by Rev. W. D. Macray, 10
Witt's (Madame de) Monsieur Guizot in Private Life, translated by Simpson, 135
Wood's (Mrs. H.) Johnny Ludlow, Second Series, 462
Woodward's (Mrs.) Charlie, 366
Works of Father Prout, edited by Kent, 804
Xenophon's Memorabilia Socratis, edited by Ciner, 706
Year-Book of Photography, 864
Yonge's (C. M.) France, 142; Love and Life, 366
Zahn's (T.) Acta Joannis, 463
Zimmern's (Misses H. and A.) Half-Hours with Foreign Novelists, 777

Poetry.

- Grand Chorus of Birds from Aristophanes attempted in English after the Original Metre, by Swinburne, 598
In a Cottage Garden, by Allingham, 145
Lover's Silence, by Miss Robinson, 337
Sonnets, by Watts—by Gosse, 744
Voice of the Hills, The, by Watts, 674

Original Papers.

- Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, 465
Another Imaginary Edition, 435
Antichus the Great, 16
Authors and Printers' Readers, 779, 815, 866
British Museum Reading Room, 175, 209
"Bush," 435, 534
Cambridge, Notes from, 676
"Cave Temples of India," 484
Caxton Memorial, A, 814
Coleridge Books in Prof. Green's Library, 273
Danish Passional, 642, 708
Date of Shakespeare's Fifty-fifth Sonnet, 337
Diary of Thomas Cartwright, Bishop of Chester, 606
Dublin, Notes from, 570
English Dialect Society, 709
Fielding, Sir John, and the Wilkes Riots, 48
First Two Editions of 'Romeo and Juliet,' 272
Fowler's (Prof.) 'Locke,' 533, 568, 606, 641, 675, 708
Gipsies in Northern Europe, 499, 532, 569
Grandfather of Caxton, The, and the Father of Chaucer, 868
"Greece" in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' 337
Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 608
Hittite Notes, 210
Hittite Syllabary, 815
Hunt, Leigh, on Himself, 815
International Literary Congress, 388, 370
Italian Ghost Story, An, 175
James, Mr. Henry, senior, 113
Khita, On "in, 467
King Tarkodemos and his Coinage, 533
Library Association at Edinburgh, 434, 467, 500
Lisbon, Notes from, 271
Locke, Biographers of, 533, 568, 606, 641, 675, 708
Longevity of Editors, 674, 709
"Melancholy Jacques, The," 115, 146, 209, 240, 306
Milton Notes, 15
Mommson's (Prof.) Library, 115
Mount Athos, 779
Naples, Notes from, 370
Newcastle Free Library, 369
New Shakespeare Society, 16
Newton, Sir Isaac, Unpublished Letters of, 81
Origin of Zoroastrianism, 533
Oxford, Notes from, 606, 778
Paris, Notes from, 16
Personalities of Criticism, 642
Phœnician Inscription, Newly Discovered, 333
Poe, Edgar Allan, 146, 175
Progress of Etruscan Discovery, 709
Provincial Press, The, 745
"Quarterly Review" on the Newspaper Press, 674, 745
"Queen Mab," 675, 745
Rich, Jeremiah, 306, 369, 709
Sales, 16, 82, 675
Sanskrit as a Living Language, 532
Sanskrit Manuscripts in Japan, 177
Shakespeare Notes, 708, 815
So-called Will of the Earl of Pembroke, 436
Spinosa, MS. Letters of, in the Royal Society's Library, 569
Subscription Issues, 532
"Tasmanian Friends and Foes," 745
"The Imitation of Christ," 113
Trial of Charles I., 146
University College, Gower Street, 49

Unpublished Letter from Paris during the Reformation.

- Unpublished Letters of Sir Isaac Newton, 81
Wellington College, 278
Winterton in Lincolnshire, 401
Wordsworth, New Edition of, 465

Criticisms.

- Blackett, F., 50. Bruun, Dr. P. J., 308. Bompas, J., 118. Charlesworth, Miss M. L., 635. Chessar, Miss
J. A., 370. Cookesley, Rev. W. G., 240. Crawford and Balcarres, Earl of, 816, 865. Daniell, Mr., 677.
Dixon, T., 116. Egas, Pierce, 49. Elliot, George, 868. Fenton, Capt. E. D., 178. Fisher, J., 339.
Flaubert, G., 17. Fournier, E., 17. Guest, Dr. E., 710, 744. Hodgson, Dr., 274. Imlach, J., 147.
Innes, Miss, 867. Jewsbury, Miss G., 401, 434.
Kingston, W. H. G., 211. Koch, P. C., 643. Los Rios, Don A. Fernandez de, 81. Marshall, Rev. Dr.
W., 274. Musset, Paul de, 17. Poole, B., 116.
Ripley, Dr. G., 116. Schmidt, H. von, 535. Sherring, Rev. M. A., 501. Smith, L., 571. "Stella"
(B. A. Lewis), 744. Stewart, Rev. Dr., 50. Stoddart,
T. T., 710. Taylor, Tom, 82. Turner, W. H., 18.
Watson, J., 338. Wells, H. W., 307. Yapp, G. W., 710

Gossip.

- Appointment of Mr. Mathews to the Bodleian, 17
Club for "Old Boys" of University College School, 18
New Aristotelian Society, 49
Westminster School, 56
Sale of the Bunderland Library, 82
Folklore Society—The late Mr. Wright, 83
Notes from Florence, 84
New Association to diffuse Trustworthy Information on the Eastern Question, 115
MS. "Discipline" of the Walloon Church of Norwich of 1559—London University Examinations, 116
Mr. Buxton Forman's Edition of Shelley's Prose Works
—Birmingham Historical Society, 147
"The Famous" Valdarfer Boccaccio, 148
The Roxburgh Club, 177
Royal Irish Academy, "Professor of Celtic Languages," 178
Relic of Burns—New Royal University of Ireland, 212
Society of Antiquaries' Index to the 'Archæologia,' 240
Retiring Pension to Mr. W. J. Thoms, 241
Success of Ladies at the London University, 274
Edition de Luxe of George Eliot's 'Romola,' 307
Free Library for Oldham, 308
Monument to Mr. W. Jenkyns at Aberdeen, 338
Mr. Herbert Spencer's Works and the French Minister of Education, 339
Pension to Madame Llanos, 370
New Series of the Philobiblon, 371
Resignation of Dr. Bühler, 401
Bullen's Plays of John Day, 402
Cardiff Free Library, 403
Removal of the Natural History Collections from the British Museum to South Kensington, 435
Unpublished Letters of Heine, 437
Political Ode by Byron, 467
Folklore Society, 468
Refreshment Room at the British Museum, 601
Lectures at Newnham College, Cambridge, 502
Spelling Reform Association, 534
Mr. Harris's Bequest to Preston, 535
Lord Braybrooke's Presentation to the Public Record
Office, 570
Monthly List of Parliamentary Papers, 571
Study of Sanscrit in India, 608
Memorial for granting the Cambridge B.A. Degree to Women, 609
Decipherment of the Armenian Inscriptions by Prof.
Sayce, 643
Meredith's 'Tragic Comedians,' 676
Illustrated Spanish Books, 677
Shelley's 'Queen Mab,' 709
Monthly List of Parliamentary Papers, 710
Lord Bosconfield's 'Endymion,' 745
Additions to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, 780
Removal of Bones at Stratford-on-Avon, 816
Memorials in favour of granting the Cambridge B.A.
Degree to Women, 817
Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies, 867

SCIENCE.

Reviews.

- Abhandlungen der Royal Academy of Sciences, Berlin, for 1879, 820
Ablett's (W. H.) English Trees and Tree Planting—
Arboriculture for Amateurs, &c., 340
Allan's (W.) Shipowners' and Engineers' Guide to the Marine Engine, 340
Annales of the Observatory of Paris, 438
Ansted's (D. T.) In Search of Minerals, 179
Astronomische Nachrichten, 20
Daddeley's (M. J. B.) Thorough Guide to the English
Lake District, 243
Bale's (M. P.) Wood-working Machinery, 149
Balfour's (F. M.) Studies from the Morphological
Laboratory in the University of Cambridge, 677;
Treatise on Comparative Embryology, 868

- Bell's (B. B.) Elements of Astronomy, 573
Bartholomew's (J.) Reduced Ordnance Map of Oman and Loch Awe District, 86
Bastian's (Dr. H. C.) The Brain as an Organ of Mind, 18
Behnke's (E.) Mechanism of the Human Voice, 372
Bergama's (Dr.) Meteorological Observations at Batavia, 1878 to 1878, 574
Berlioz's (Prof.) Le Jura, 243
Biddulph's (Major) Tribes of the Hindu Kush, 438
Birds of Cornwall and the Scilly Islands, by Rodd, edited by Harting, 408
Blackie's Comprehensive School Series: Animal Physiology, 677
Blakiston's (J. E.) Glimpses of the Globe, 243
Boletín de la Comisión del Mapa Geológico de España, 677
Bradhwaite's (R.) British Moss Flora, 572
Briggs's (T. B. A.) Flora of Plymouth, 502
Buckley's (A. B.) Life and her Children, 780
Bulletin de l'Académie Impériale des Sciences de St.
Petersbourg, 370
Bulletin of the Philosophical Society of Washington, 311
Burdett's (H. C.) Pay Hospitals, 241
Catalogue of Books and Papers relating to Electricity,
&c., by Sir F. Ronalds, edited by Frost, 51
Collins's Comprehensive Atlas of Modern, Historical,
Classical, and Physical Geography, 677
Condition of Nations, Social and Political, by Kolb, translated by Mrs. Brewer, 208
Darwin's (C. and F.) Power of Movement in Plants, 317
Dawson's (J. W.) Chain of Life in Geological Time, 536
Dodel-Port's (Dr. A. and C.) Anatomical and Physiological Atlas of Botany, 502
Dutton's (Capt. C. E.) Report on the Geology of the High Plateaus of Utah, 118
Eden's (C. H.) The West Indies, 243
Forrest's (A.) Journal of Expedition from De Grey to Port Darwin, 677
Geological Survey of India, Records, 870
Gordon's (J. E. H.) Physical Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism, 644
Greenhouse Favourites, 572
Gutmann's (E.) Watering-Places and Mineral Springs of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland, 276
Handatlas für die Geschichte des Mittelalters und der neueren Zeit, edited by Dr. Menke, 243 Hardwicke's (H. J.) Medical Education and Practice in all Parts of the World, 371
Harvey's (Rev. F. B.) Euclid for Beginners, 242
Hayter's (H. H.) Victorian Year-Book for 1878, 85
Heath's (F. G.) Sylvan Spring, 213
Henslow's (Rev. G.) Botany for Children, 117
Hineke's (T.) History of the British Marine Polyzoa, 536
Hoffmeyer's Tempêtes de l'Atlantique Septentrional, 439
Holmes's (G.) Science of Voice Production, 372
Hulme's (P. E.) Familiar Wild Flowers, 502
Indian Geological Survey, Memoirs, 869
Italian Spectroscopical Society, Memoirs, 341, 819
James's (A. G. F. E.) Indian Industries, 148
Jenns's (J. S.) Steel, 84
Johnston's First Steps in Geography, 36; Half Crown National Atlas, 51; Historical Atlas, 243; Map of South Africa, 340; Physical, Historical, Political, and Descriptive Geography, 50
Kato's (H.) Memoirs of the Science Department, University of Tokio, Japan, 119
Kenshead's (Dr. W. B.) Inorganic Chemistry, 818
Kingszett's (G. T.) Nature's Hygiene, 85
Kolb's (G. F.) Condition of Nations, Social and Political, translated by Mrs. Brewer, 308
Larsson's (J. M.) Karta öfver Sverige-Norge, Danmark
och Finland, 677
Lawson's (J. A.) Wandering Naturalists, 51
Lawson's (W.) Outlines of Physiography, 536
Lloyd's (R.) Birds, Fishes, and Cetacea commonly fre-quenting Belfast Lough, 339
Lunge's (G.) Theoretical and Practical Treatise on the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid and Alkali, 84 M'Lachlan's (R.) Monographic Revision and Synopsis of the Trichoptera of the European Fauna, 711
Mason's (J.) Holiday Companion, 243
Memoirs of the Paris Observatory, 438
Memoirs of the Italian Spectroscopical Society, 341
Messer's (F. A.) British Wild Flowers, 502
Milburn's (R. M.) Mathematical Formulae, 213
Mitchell's (A.) The Past in the Present, 274
Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, 644
Morse's (Prof. E. S.) Shell Mounds of Omori, 572
Mouches's (Admiral) Report of the Condition of the Paris Observatory, 20
Mulhall's (M. G.) Progress of the World in Arts, &c., since the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century, 178
Natural History of Northumberland, &c., 371 Natural History Rambles: In Search of Minerals, by Ansted, 179
Nautical Almanac for 1880, 819
Newberry's (Prof.) Origin of Ore Deposits, 118
Nicholson's (H. A.) Manual of Palaeontology, 437
Peschel's (O.) Europäische Staatenkunde, 243
Preservation of the Scenery of Niagara Falls, Report, 85
Ravenstein's (L.) Map of the West Tyrol and Engadine
Alps, 372
Records of the Geological Survey of India, 21
Report on the Paris Observatory, by Admiral Mouches, 20

Report on the Scenery of Niagara Falls, 85
 Richardson's (J.) Smaller Manual of Modern Geography, 780
 Rodd's (E. H.) Birds of Cornwall and the Scilly Islands, edited by Harting, 403
 Ronald's (Sir F.) Catalogue of Books and Papers relating to Electricity, &c., edited by Frost, 51
 Routledge's (E.) Popular History of Science, 746
 St. George's Hospital Reports, 85
 Science for All, edited by Brown, 572
 Sleeman's (G. W.) Torpedoes and Torpedo Warfare, 341
 Stanford's (E.) London Guide, 86; New Maps of the Seat of War in Afghanistan, 572
 Stieler's Hand-Atlas, 51
 Stone's Results of Astronomical Observations at the Radcliffe Observatory, 574
 Studies from the Morphological Laboratory in the University of Cambridge, edited by Balfour, 677
 Swinton's (A. H.) Insect Variety, 468
 Taylor's (A. D.) Annual Report on the Marine Surveys of the Indian Coast, 573
 Taylor's (J. E.) Nature's Byways, 243
 Teachers' Manual of Mental Arithmetic, 243
 Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society of Victoria, 439
 Verne's (J.) Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century, 80
 Vines's (S. H.) Elementary Text-Book of Botany, 117
 Wallace's (A. R.) Island Life, 609
 Ward & Lock's Illustrated Guides to Edinburgh and the Channel Islands, 86; "Long Life" Series, 276
 Watson's (J. H.) Figs, 276
 Wilson's (A.) Introduction to the Study of Flowers, 117
 Wilson's (O.) Healthy Life and Healthy Dwellings, 276
 Wood's (B.) Tree Planter and Tree Propagator—Tree Primer, 346
 Worth's (R. N.) Guides to North and South Devon, 243
 Wyld's Map of the Gold-fields of Southern India, 819
 Zoological Record for 1878, edited by Eys, 677, 747

Original Papers.

Anthropological Notes, 85, 117, 179, 573
 Astronomical Notes, 20, 180, 244, 276, 310, 341, 573, 405, 437, 536, 573, 611, 644, 711, 813, 869
 Decipherment of Khlita, 341
 Etruscan Astronomical Instrument, 214
 Geographical Notes, 51, 85, 118, 340, 372, 433, 469, 537, 573, 610, 677, 711, 747, 781, 813, 869
 Lisbon, Notes from, 341
 Naples, Notes from, 117
 Quarrels of Chemists, 19
 Royal Society, 214
 Sale, 179
 Saturn's Rings, 409
 Site of Gath, 179
 Tokio, Notes from, 678
 Zoological Record for 1878, 747

British Associations.

President's Address, 263; Sectional Proceedings, 309; Swansea, 229

Societies.

Anthropological Institute—Prof. W. H. Flower on a Collection of Crania from the Fiji Islands, 21. Mr. E. Lewis on Antiquities in the Museum at Palermo, 51. Dr. P. Topinard's Observations upon the Methods and Processes of Anthropometry, 782. Also 678
 Archaeological Institute—645, 781
 Aristotelian—Elections, 611. President's Address, 563. Also 679, 743, 821
 Asiatic—Elections, 21, 86, 678, 869. Brandreth on the Georgian and the Romance Languages, 86
 Astronomical—Elections, 678. Ranyard on the Velocity of Gaseous Matter projected from the Sun, 819
 British Archaeological Association—712, 781
 Chemical—645, 713, 781, 870
 Entomological—Elections, 712. Also 118, 244, 373, 574, 819
 Folk-lore Society—679, 820
 Geographical—Elections, 645, 712
 Geological—Elections, 20, 645, 712, 781, 869
 Index Society—Annual Meeting, 86
 Institution of Civil Engineers—Elections, 645, 782. Annual General Meeting, 870. Also 713
 Institution of Surveyors—678
 Library Association—62
 Linnean—Elections, 678, 712
 Mathematical—Elections, 678, 819
 Meteorological—Elections, 713, 870
 Microscopical—713, 819
 New Shakespeare—678
 Numismatic—Elections, 712, 870
 Philological—Mr. Sweet's Notes on the Partial Correction of English Spellings, 86, 118. Spelling Reform, 645, 713. Also 781, 870
 Photographic—782
 Physical—21, 678, 748
 Quibell Microscopical—52. Anniversary Meeting, 180. Also 311, 438, 574, 748
 Royal—Anniversary Meeting, 747. Also 712, 819, 869
 Royal Institution—Elections, 62, 782. Also 611
 Royal Society of Literature—Elections, 743. Sir P. de Coluboun on the Pelagii and Albanians, 86
 Society of Antiquaries—Mr. E. Freshfield on Christian Antiquities at Constantinople, 781. Also 21, 748

Society of Arts—Annual Meeting, C. T. Also 713, 748, 782, 819
 Society of Biblical Archaeology—52, 645, 782
 Spelling Reform Association—62, 645, 830
 Statistical—Anniversary Meeting, 86
 Zoological—21, 713, 781, 870

Obituarium.

Andrews, Prof. M. B., 405. Borchardt, Prof. C. W., 118. Broca, Dr. P., 85. Brodie, Sir B. C., 746. Buckland, Frank, 870. Charles, M., 870. Chiarini, Signor, 118. D'Almeida, M., 713. Erhard, M., 610. Gauguin, J. M., 22, 87. Godron, M., 374. Haldeman, Prof. S. B., 438. Hauser, K. B. von, 438. Johnson, C., 469. Jones, Prof. T. R., 830. Laswell, W., 469. Lissajous, Prof., 130. Lloyd, W. A., 118. Lord, Prof. P. W., 87. Motay, C. T. de, 21. Muhlant, H., 782. Myer, General A. J., 405. Peiros, Prof. B., 611. Petersen, C., 19. Pontus, M., 214. Wagner, H. von, 537. Ward, Rev. J. C., 215. Watson, Prof. J. C., 818. Wood, B. V., 611

Gossip.

Bequest of Mr. Ludlam's Collection of Minerals to the Geological Museum—Paris Academy of Sciences, 21
 Substances possessing the Power of developing the Latent Photographic Image, 52
 Memorial to the late Prof. Garrod, 86
 Meteorological Station in Staffordshire, 87
 Appointment of Dr. Woodward as Keeper of the Geological Department in the British Museum, 118
 Prizes of the Midland Union of Natural History Societies—Monument to Karl Koch, 151
 Faye's and Winnecke's Periodical Comets, 180
 Handbook of Jamaica, 214
 Exhibition of the Glasgow Philosophical Society, 215
 Fifty-first Birthday of the British Association, 244
 Science Teaching to Working Men in Wales, 276
 Testimonial to Prof. von Cotta, 277
 Statue of Denis Papin at Blois, 311
 Paris Academy of Sciences, 341
 The Aristotelian Society, 373
 American Association for Advancement of Science, 405
 Dr. Siemens's Electrical Locomotive Engine, 438
 Special Scholarships at Girlington College, 469
 Diamonds in India—New Comet, 470
 Resignation of Mr. Major—New Planet, 508
 Manufacture of Portland Cement in India, 537
 Edison's Domestic Electric Lighting, 574
 Meteorological Station on Ben Nevis, 611
 Growing French Grapes in Cashmere, 612
 Influence of Light on Germination, 646
 Royal Society's Medals—New Comets, 679
 The Safety Lamp as a Means of revealing Fire-damp, 713
 City and Guilds of London Institute, 743
 Yorkshire College of Science at Leeds, 782
 Deceased Fellows of the Royal Society, 820
 Irvine's New Safety Lamp—Status to Bequerel, 870

FINE ARTS.

Reviews.

Adler's (F.) Excavations at Olympia, 311
 Atkinson's (J. B.) Schools of Modern Art in Germany, 646
 Audley (G. A.) and Bowes's (J. L.) Ceramic Art of Japan, 87
 Aunt Louisa's Magic Modeller, 630
 Barker's (Mrs. S.) Little Wide Awake Picture Book, 750
 Baye's (Baron J. de) L'Archéologie Préhistorique, 871
 Beerestraeten, P. de Hooch, P. Godde, by Havard, 215
 Bartolotti's (Cav. A.) Artisti Belgi ed Olandesi a Roma nel Secolo XVI. e XVII., 219
 Bloomfield's (R.) Bird's and Insect's Post Office, 680
 Bower's (J.) Leaves from a Hunting Journal, 821
 Bowes's (J. L.) Ceramic Art of Japan, 87
 British Painters of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries, 714
 Burn's (R.) Old Rome, 151
 Caldecott's (E.) The Three Jovial Huntsmen and Sing a Song of Sixpence, 680
 Champier's (V.) L'Année Artistique, 1879, 278
 Children's Singing Lancers, with Music by Parker, 750
 Clement's (C.) Michael Angelo, Leonardo da Vinci, and Raphael, 53; Michael Angelo, 89
 Clermont Ganneau's (C.) L'imagerie Phénicienne—La Coupe Phénicienne de Paléstrina, 277
 Compte-Rendu de la Commission Impériale Archéologique pour l'Année 1877, 244
 Cunningham's (A.) Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, revised, &c., by Mrs. Heaton, 277
 Curtius's (E.) Excavations at Olympia, 311
 Dalziel's Bible Gallery: Illustrations from the Old Testament, 646
 Day's (L. F.) Instances of Accusatory Art, 80
 Delamardello's (Madame la Baronne) Fan Painting, 54
 Demay's (G.) Costume au Moyen Age d'après les Sceaux, 62
 Dictionnaire Véron, Section des Beaux-Arts, 407
 Dumas's (F. G.) Illustrated Catalogue of the Paris Salon, 1880, 54
 Egerton's (Hon. W.) Illustrated Handbook of Indian Arms, 342
 Egypt, Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque, 538
 Eliot's (G.) Romola, 782
 Emerson's (H. H.) Afternoon Tea, 680
 Farrer's (R.) The Granta and the Cam, from Byron's Pool to Ely, 646
 Favorite Album of Fun and Fancy, 749
 Frances's (A.) Œuvres de Bernard Palissy, 23
 Gardner's (P.) Coins of Elia, 576
 Gower's (Lord E.) Great Historic Galleries of England, 119
 Great Artists, The: Michael Angelo, by Clément—Horace Vernet and Paul Delaroche, 89; Giotto, by Quilter, 162; Leonardo, by Richter, 181; Sir Joshua Reynolds, by Pulling, 216
 Great Historic Galleries of England, edited by Lord E. Gower, 119
 Grago's (J.) Rowlandson the Caricaturist, 119
 Havard's (H.) L'Art et les Artistes Hollandais: Les Palamédes, Govaert Flinck, 22; Beerestraeten, P. de Hooch, P. Godde, 215
 Head's (B. V.) Guide to Select Greek and Roman Coins in Electrotypes in the British Museum, 576
 Head's (P. R.) Classic and Italian Painting, 713
 Hooe's (W.) Sculptors of the Present Day, 120
 Horace Vernet and Paul Delaroche, 89
 Howitt's (M.) With the Birds, Songs of Animal Life, 680
 Ilios, by Schliemann, 748, 820
 Irving's (J.) Little Britain, The Spectre Bridegroom, and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow, 680
 Jahrbuch der königlich Preussischen Kunstsammlungen, 612
 Kaine-Jackson's (C. P.) Our Ancient Monuments, 186
 Keats's (J.) Eve of St. Agnes, illustrated by Murray, 783
 L'Art et les Artistes Hollandais, by Havard: Les Palamédes, Govaert Flinck, 22; Beerestraeten, P. de Hooch, P. Godde, 215
 Lays of Ancient Rome, illustrated by Wagnall, 714
 Leland's (J.) Views of Ancient Buildings illustrative of the Domestic Architecture of Halifax, 182
 Lillie's (G. and J.) Splashes of Ink, 630
 Little Buttercup's Picture Book, 750
 Little Lottie's Picture Gallery, 680
 Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, by Cunningham, revised, &c., by Mrs. Heaton, 277
 Locker's (Mrs. F.) What the Blackbird Said, 750
 Lydon's (A. F.) English Lake Scenery, 714
 Magazine of Art, 714
 Men of Mark, 714
 Merry Ballads of the Olden Time, 680
 Muckley's (W. J.) Handbook for Painters, 216
 Musterbuch Altdeutscher Leinen Stickerei, 576
 Natural History Series, 749
 Northern Fairy Tales, 749
 Norwegian Antiquities, arranged by Prof. O. Rygh, 341
 Notes by Mr. Ruskin on Samuel Proust and William Hunt, 54
 Notices of Deceased Members of the Institute of Architects, 506
 Olympia, Excavations at, 311
 Our Ancient Monuments, by Kaine-Jackson, 186
 Our Boys' Little Library—Our Girls' Little Library, 680
 Our Little World of Child-Life, 680
 Our Own Country, 54
 Overbeck's (J.) Geschichte der Griechischen Plastik, 470
 Papa's Picture Album, 680
 Patch's (O.) Familiar Friends, 750
 Petrie's (W. M. F.) Stonehenge, 374
 Pictures to Paint for Little Folks, 749
 Poynter (B. J.) and Head's (P. R.) Classic and Italian Painting, 713
 Pretty Parley, and other Ballads, 630
 Prince Darling's Story Book, 750
 Pulling's (P. S.) Sir Joshua Reynolds, 216
 Pudding's (T. B.) Drifting, 783
 Richter's (J. P.) Leonardo, 181
 Richter's (J. P.) and Sparkes's (J. C. L.) Catalogue of Pictures in the Dulwich College Gallery, 439
 Rowlandson the Caricaturist, by Grago, 119
 Ruskin's Notes on Samuel Proust and William Hunt, 54
 Rygh's (O.) Norwegian Antiquities, 341
 St. Paul's (A.) L'Année Archéologique, 216
 Schliemann's (Dr. H.) Ilios, 748, 820
 Schulze's (E.) Mykenai, 244
 Sculptors of the Present Day, edited by Hooe, 120
 Seccombe's (Major T. S.) Military Miscellany of Shakespeare, 821, Story of Prince Hildebrand and the Princess Ida, 749
 Smith's (J. M.) The Wooing of the Water-Witch, 714
 Sould's (M. E.) L'Art Égyptien d'après les Dernières Découvertes, 89
 Sowerby (J. G.) and Emerson's (H. H.) Afternoon Tea, 680
 Sparkes's (J. C. L.) Catalogue of Pictures in the Dulwich College Gallery, 439
 Stevenson's (J. J.) House Architecture, 574
 Sumner's (H.) The Itchen Valley from Tichborne to Southampton, 821
 Switzerland, its Scenery and its People, 714
 Thomas's (E.) The Indian Swastika and its Western Counterparts, 576
 Tilley's (M. J.) Ups and Downs, All Smiles, No Frowns, 679
 Tim Trumble's Little Mother, 749
 Tren's (G.) Excavations at Olympia, 311
 Two Bears, The, 680

FINE ARTS.

Reviews—continued.

Vanity Fair Album, 821
Ward & Lock's Pussie Cat's A B C—Punch and Judy Alphabet, 576
Weekes's (H.) Lectures on Art delivered at the Royal Academy, 182

Original Papers.

Ancient Pharos at Alexandria, 472, 631
Ancient Sculptured Monuments, 283
Athens, Notes from, 54, 814, 822
Binck, Jakob, 577
British Archaeological Association, 248, 278
Cologne Cathedral, 578, 614
'Jacob's Dream,' 537, 614
'La Vierge aux Rochers,' 783
Midianite and Hittite Inscriptions, 750
Mycenae, 376
Naples, Notes from, 614, 630
National Collection of Coins at Athens, 472
National Portrait Gallery, 23
New Etchings, Photographs, &c., 872
New Prints, 22, 55, 630, 783
Private Collections of England: Wentworth Castle, Barnsley, 153; Wortley Hall, Sheffield, 216; Wentworth Woodhouse, Rotherham, 247, 280; Duncombe Park, Helmsley, 313, 343; Nostel Priory, Wakefield, 374, 405, 438, 603; Grantley Hall, Ripon, 503
Proposed Society of Painter-Etchers, 184
Roman Remains at Sandown, 471
Roman Spain, 822
Rome, Notes from, 24, 715
Royal Archaeological Institute, 152, 182
St. Hugh of Lincoln, 184
Sales, 25, 55, 89, 121, 718, 750, 823
'Sir Thomas More and his Family,' 472
Society of Painter-Etchers, 872
'The Bearded Archer,' 282
Torlonia Museum at Rome, 120
Underground Cities in Syria, 872
Volterra Casket, The, 646

Exhibitions.

Dudley Gallery, 714
Fine-Art Society, 614
French Gallery, 613
Institute of Painters in Water Colours, 821
Society of Painters in Water Colours, 783

Obituaries.

Anschütz, Prof. H., 345. Asias, Don M., 233. Bale, C. S., 785. Boklund, J. K., 823. Campana, Marchese G. P., 538. Cogniet, L., 715. Compté-Calix, F. C., 219. D'Egville, J. F. H., 318. De Sauley, L. F. J. C., 631. Ferry, B., 315. Guillemin, A. M., 578. Haas, W. F. de, 441. Harrison, W. F., 823. Herpin, L., 615. Jacquemart, J. F., 472, 615. Lubarte, C. J., 407. L'Allemand, Herr, 578. Landseer, Miss J., 345. Lemaire, M., 219. Moore, J. C., 121. Pidgeon, H. C., 248. Piesse, M., 538. Robins, T. S., 248. Schopin, H., 578. Timbal, C., 751. Tison, G. E., 717. Visconti, Baron P. E., 578. Walton, E., 314. Wyatt, T. H., 219

Notes.

British Museum, Additions to the Print Room, 25
Dundee Fine-Art Exhibition, 55
Alterations at the British Museum, 89
Prof. Sayce on the Objects discovered at Mycenae, 90
Election of Mr. G. B. Brown to the Watson-Gordon Professorship in the University of Edinburgh, 122
'Limited Liability' Company for the Manufacture of Pure Pigments, 154
Acquisitions by the Louvre, 165
Dr. Schliemann's Excavations, 185
British Museum, Antiquities from Konyanjik, 218
Annual Report of the National Portrait Gallery, 219
Completion of the Great Dom at Cologne, 249
New York International Exhibition, 293
New Edition of Gilchrist's 'Life of Blake,' 314
Increased Facilities for Viewing the Tower, 315
Restoration of St. Gregory's Church, Kirkdale, 345
Restoration of the Bargate at Southampton, 377
Sir F. Leighton's 'Arab Hall' at Kensington, 407
The Semper Museum in Zurich, 442
Sir B. Ker Porter's 'Battle of Agincourt,' 472
Temple Bar Memorial, 473
Art Exhibition at Leek, 505
British Museum, Additions to the Print Room, 537
Fine-Art Exhibition at Simla, 538
Exhibition of Thomas Bewick's Original Drawings, 577
Water-Colour Society at Madrid, 578
Tomb of Mahmud of Ghazni, 615
Winter Exhibition of the Royal Academy, 647
Preservation of St. Mark's, Venice—Constable's Picture in Nayland Church, 681
British Museum, Antiquities from Babylon, 717
Additions to the Musée de Cluny, 718
The 'Sir Paul Pinder' in Bishopgate Street, 751
Admissions to National Gallery on Students' Days, 785
Sir F. Leighton's Pictures for next Academy—Mr. E. B. Jones's Contributions to the Grosvenor Gallery, 823
Pictures for the next Salon—Constable's Altar-piece at Nayland Church, 873

MUSIC.

Reviews.

Beethoven, by Wagner, translated by Dannreuther, 406
Chorley's (H. F.) National Music of the World, edited by Hewlett, 249
Hueffer's (F.) Musical Studies, 249
National Music of the World, by Chorley, edited by Hewlett, 249
Rudall, Carte & Co.'s Professional Pocket-Book, 825
Smart's (Henry) Compositions for the Organ, analyzed by Broadhouse, 249 Wagner's (R.) Beethoves, translated by Dannreuther, 406

Original Papers and Notes.

Berlioz's 'Faust,' 718
Gardner Legacy, The, 57, 122
Gloucester Musical Festival, 346, 377
Her Majesty's Opera: Bolto's 'Meistofele,' 55; Madame Gerster, 90; 'Faust,' 'La Favorita,' and 'La Sonnambula,' 538; 'Lucia,' 'Norma,' and 'Faust,' 578; 'Rigoletto,' 615; 'Les Huguenots' and 'La Favorita,' 647; 'Lucrezia Borgia' and 'Il Barbiere,' 682, 718
'Maria di Gand,' 751; 'Maritana,' 823
Italian Opera Season, 122
Leeds Triennial Musical Festival, 605, 538, 753
Miscellaneous Musical Publications, 315
New Musical Publications, 156, 185
New Sheet Music, 219
New Vocal Publications, 57
Pianoforte Music, by Xavier Scharwenka, 283
Religious Verses printed in the 'Spectator' for 1712, 186
Royal Italian Opera: 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' 25; Cohen's 'Estella,' 55; Benefit Night, 90
Vienna, Notes from, 752, 786
'When all thy mercies,' 58, 186

Concerts.

Bache's (W.) Recital, 615
Boosey's Ballad Concerts, 753
Borough of Hackney Choral Association, 719
Brinsmead Pianoforte Recital, The, 185
Brixton Choral Society, 873
Cowan's (Mr.) Concerts, 682, 751, 785, 873
Crystal Palace Concerts, 505, 538, 578, 615, 647, 682, 718, 751, 785, 823, 873
Ganz's (Mr.) Orchestral Concerts, 25
Hall's (C.) Recital, 27
Handel Festival, 25
Highbury Athenæum, 823
Hopkirk's (Miss H.) Pianoforte Recital, 579
Janotha's (Mdlle.) Pianoforte Recitals, 718, 825
Lawrence's (Miss E.) Concert, 753
Leslie's (Mr.) Choir, 90
Monday Popular Concerts, 647, 753
Musical Union, 25
North London Philharmonic Society, 825
Philharmonic Society, 25
Promenade Concerts, 185
Pupils' Concert of the College for the Blind, 90
Raeley's (G.) Orchestral Concerts, 507, 578, 648, 753
Royal Academy of Music, 579, 873
Sacred Harmonic Society, 785, 874
Saturday Popular Concerts, 682, 718, 753, 823, 873
Stratton's (S. S.) Concerts, 507, 825
Trio Concerts at St. George's Hall, 753
Wynne's (Miss G.) (Mrs. Dallas) Matinée Musicale, 27

Obituaries.

Bull, Ole B., 234. Capponi, Signor, 541. Forberg, Herr R., 541. Girod, E., 719. Guymard, L., 91. Hallberger, E., 347. Ivanoz, Mr., 156. Offenbach, J., 473. Pascal, F., 578. Reber, H., 753. Rémusat, J., 683. Saint-Etienne, S., 617. Weitzmann, C. F., 683. Wenzel, E. F., 347. Wisprecht, F., 474. Wolf, E., 579.

Gossip.

The Grand Prix of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, 27
Benefit Concerts, 58
Concert of Students of the Royal Normal College, 59
Mr. Macfarren's Resignation of the Conductorship at the Royal Academy of Music, 91
'International Singing Competition' at Cologne, 122
Gardner Legacy to the Blind, 123
Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre, 185
Musical Examinations at Trinity College, London, 156
Madame Patti's American Engagement, 186
Proceedings of the Musical Association, 187
Promenade Concerts—New French Operas, 220
Prize Competitions for Symphonies at Turin, 250
Welsh National Eisteddfod, 284
Prizes at Welsh National Eisteddfod, 316
Report of the Birmingham Musical Association, 347
'Meistofele' in America, 378
Close of the Season of the Promenade Concerts, 409
Triennial Musical Festival at Wolverhampton, 441
Autumn Season of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's, 473
Vanloo and Letarrier's 'Le Beau Nicolas,' 507
Herr Brahms's New Overtures, 541
Schumann's 'Genoveva'—Mr. Buck's 'Deseret,' 579
'Les Mousquetaires au Convent' at the Globe, 616
Religious Service of the London Church Choir Association in St. Paul's, 648
Mr. E. Aguilar's New Cantata, 683
Cambridge University Musical Society, 718
Saturday Concerts at the Brighton Aquarium, 719

Result of the Leeds Festival, 753

Madame Norman-Néruda at the Popular Concerts, 787
Léon Caron's Cantata 'Victoria,' 825
Madame Sainton-Dolby's Students' Concert, 875

DRAMA.

Reviews.

Boyes's (R.) Le Théâtre des Jénites, 250
Comédie-Française à Londres, par G. d'Heylli, 378
Ginerva and The Duke of Guise, 347
Halliwell-Phillips's (J. O.) Shakespeare Memoranda, 284
Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, traduite par Reinach, 441
Heylli's (G. d') La Comédie-Française à Londres, 378
Lucas's (D. B.) Maid of Northumberland, 347
Matthews's (J. B.) Theatres of Paris, 508
Monatschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, 252
Reinach's (T.) Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, 441

Original Papers and Notes.

'Agamemnon,' The, at St. George's Hall, 875
Greek Drama in English Dram, 123

Theatres.

Adelphi—Boucicault's 'Forbidden Fruit,' 59. Boucicault's 'The O'Dowd,' 579. 'The Green Bushes,' 753
Court—Hon. L. Wingfield's 'Mary Stuart,' 507. Mortimer's 'Two Old Boys,' 787. Scribe and Legouvé's 'Adrienne Lecouvreur,' 825
Criterion—Albery's 'Where's the Cat?' 719
Drury Lane—Meritt, Pettitt, and Harris's 'The World,' 187
Folly—Revival of Boucicault's 'Dot,' 442. Byron's 'The Light Fantastic,' 719
Gaiety—Representations of the Palais Royal Company, 59. 'La Revue,' 91. Mark Twain's 'Colonel Sellers,' 123. Woolf's 'The Mighty Dollar,' 316. Burnand and Stephens's 'The Corsican Brothers & Co., Limited,' 579. 'Captain Cuttle,' 719. Revivals of Burnand's 'The Musical Box,' Boucicault's 'Kerry' and 'Andy Blake,' 753. Archer's 'Quickstands,' 875
Haymarket—Boucicault's 'A Bridal Tour'—Rae's 'A Fair Encounter,' 187. Buckstone's 'Leap Year' and Stirling Coyne's 'A Widow Hunt,' 409. 'The Rivals' and 'Toodles,' 617. 'The Vicarage' and 'School,' 753
Lyceum—Mr. Irving's Benefit, 187. Revival of Boucicault's 'Corsican Brothers'—Finero's 'Bygone,' 409
Olympic—Hay's 'Mabel,' 541
Prince of Wales's—'Forget-Me-Not' and Grundy's 'In Honour Bound,' 442. English Version of 'Anne-Mie,' 617. 'A New Trial,' from the Italian of Giacometti, 875
Princess's—Mr. Booth as Hamlet, 648. Mr. Booth in 'Richelieu,' 719
Royalty—Reece's 'Parlours,' 156. Byron's 'Bow Bells'—Rose's 'Wild Flowers'—Grundy and Solomon's 'Poppy Wopsy,' 474
Sadler's Wells—'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 27. Mr. Marsden's 'Otto,' 91. 'Othello,' 409. Sheridan Knowles's 'William Tell,' 507. 'Romeo and Juliet,' 541. 'The Son of the Wilderness,' 767
St. James's—Wills's 'William and Susan,' 507. Coghlan's 'Good Fortune,' 787
Surrey—Sheridan Knowles's 'Virginus,' 474
Vaudeville—Lankaster's 'The Gun'or,' 27, 442. Dilly's 'Auld Acquaintance,' 442

Obituaries.

Charly, M., 720. Choler, Saint-Agnan, 683. Hartsenbusch, J. U., 220. Kean, Mrs. C., 254. Neilson, Miss, 252. Palleke, E., 649. Roemer, B., 580.

Gossip.

'The Danites' at the Globe, 60
Prohibition by the Censure of Raymond and Boucheron's 'Le Ménage Popincourt,' 92
Close of the Season at the Lyceum, 124
Revival of 'Good for Nothing' at the Gaiety, 156
Revival of 'She Stoops to Conquer' at Sadler's Wells, 188
Granville's 'Falsely Judged' at the Connaught, 220
'Les Femmes Savantes' at the Théâtre Français, 252
Revival of 'The Maid of Croissey' at the Adelphi, 284
Revival of 'Jo' at Sadler's Wells, 316
Revival of 'Mad' at the Imperial, 348
Début of M. Leloir at the Comédie Française, 380
Gaiety Matinées, 410
'Britannicus' and 'Tartuffe' at the Odéon, 442
Reece's 'The Half-Crown Diamonds' at the Imperial, 474
Calmour's 'Trust and Trial' at the Gaiety, 508
Revival of 'Which is Which?' at the Olympic, 541
Gondinet and Margallier's 'Les Grands Enfants,' 542
Revival of 'The Lady of Lyons' at Sadler's Wells, 580
'Don Juan, Junior,' at the Royalty, 617
'Delilah' at the Olympic, 618
The New Princess's Theatre, 649
Ponsard's 'Charlotte Corday' at the Odéon, 650
Holcroft's 'Road to Ruin' at Sadler's Wells, 683
Revival of 'The Honey-moon' at the Gaiety, 720
Performance for Harcourt Testimonial Fund, 788
Ellis's 'Our Relatives' at the Olympic, 826

MISCELLANEA

Abuse of Language, III
Pound of Flesh, The, 360, 410

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1880.

THE CARISBROOKE MAGAZINE.—PORTRAIT of Mrs. J. H. RUSSELL, Author of 'George Geth of Fen Court,' See JULY Number.

MODERN THOUGHT.

Threepence Monthly

Contents, No. 7, Vol. II, July 1, 1880.

LEADERS OF MODERN THOUGHT.—WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.
FOOD THIEF. By Dr. B. W. Richardson, F.R.S.
The WHITEWASHING OF BRYLOCK. By J. Leister.
RELIGION without THIRISM. By Edward C. Gosner.
The LATE ELECTIONS and PARLIAMENTARY REFORM. By G. Harris, LL.D. F.S.A.
CONTINENTAL TOURS.—CORRESPONDENCE
Richardson & Best, 4, Queen's Head-passage, Paternoster-row, of all Book-sellers, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS in the BUILDER (4d.) or by post, 4d.) include Views of an Abode for the Aged, Lelpate, Interior of St. Mildred's, Broad-street, Tedington Vicarage, with Plan, Chelsea Hospital for Women, and Lodge at Denzell—Improvements in London—Ironwork at South Kensington—Excavations, Asia Minor—
Three Bridges—Illustrative Gas—Art Text-Books, with Illustrations,
See—4d, Catherine-street, and all Newsagents.

THE DRESDEN GALLERY.—The publication of a Series of elaborate Reproductions, on a large scale of the celebrated Paintings in the Dresden Gallery will be commenced in the ARCHITECT of THIS DAY, July 3rd, when Two Engravings of
'The Adoration of the Magi' and 'The Marriage of Cana,' by Paul Verone-se will be given. Each will measure 25 in. by 13 in.—Price 6d. or by post, 7d.—Publishing Offices, 175, Strand, London, W.C.; and of all Newsagents.

Fourth Edition, cloth, free by post, 1s. 2d.

WILLS of their OWN. Curious, Eccentric, and Benevolent. With a Chapter on Doctors' Commodes.

"Let's choose executors and talk of wills."—Shakespeare.

"This book must not be mistaken for a work lately published under the title of 'Curiosities of the Bench-Room,' the above book being published long before.

London: William Tegg & Co. Paternoster-lane, Cheapside, E.C.

AMERICA and WEST INDIES, 1691-1699.

Now ready, in Imperial 8vo. pp. 822, price 15s. cloth.

CALENDAR of STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL
SERIES, Series and West Indies, 1691-1699, preserved in H.M.
Public Record Office. Vol. V of the Colonial Series. Edited by W.
MOEL SAINSHURY, and published under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls, with the sanction of H.M. Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

"Vol. I of this Series (the three intermediate Volumes relate to the East Indies, China, and Japan) comprises State Papers concerning America and the West Indies between the years 1675 and 1689. The present Volume, in continuation, begins with the year 1691, and in nearly 2,000
Abstracts of Documents summarises our Colonial History for the next eight years to the end of the Year 1699.

London: Longmans & Co. and Trübner & Co. Oxford Parker & Co.
Cambridge Macmillan & Co. Edinburgh A. & C. Black and Douglas & Foulis. Dublin A. Thom & Co.

BAEDEKER'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE-BOOKS.

Norway and Sweden. With 15 Maps and 3
Plans. 5s.

Belgium and Holland. With 6 Maps and 16 Plans. Fifth Edition. 5s.

The Rhine from Rotterdam to Con-STANCE (the Seven Mountains, Valley of the Ahr, Niederrhein, Moselle, Volcanic Rhine, and Moselle, Palatinate, Black Forest, etc.). With 23 Maps and 19 Plans. Seventh Edition. 6s.

Northern Germany. With 15 Maps and 27
Plans. Sixth Edition. 6s.

Southern Germany, Austria, Hungary, and TRANSYLVANIA. With 13 Maps and 24 Plans. Seventh Edition. 6s.

Southern Germany: The Eastern Alps, including the Bavarian Highlands, the Tyrol, the Salzkammergut, Styria, and Carinthia. With 20 Maps, 10 Plans, and 5 Panoramas.
Fourth Edition. 6s.

London and its Environs. With 4 Maps and 13 Plans. 6s.

Switzerland, and the adjacent Portions of Italy,
Savoy, and the Tyrol. With 24 Maps, 10 Plans, and 5 Panoramas.
Eighth Edition. 7s.

Paris and its Environs. With 11 Maps and 16 Plans. Sixth Edition. 6s.

Northern Italy, including Leghorn, Florence,
Ravenna, and the Island of Corsica, and Routes through France, Switzerland, and Austria. With 8 Maps and 22 Plans. Fifth Edition. 6s.

Central Italy and Rome. With 7 Maps, 27
Plans, and a Panorama of Rome. Fifth Edition. 4s.

Southern Italy and Sicily. With Excursions to the Lipari Islands, Malta, Gardiccia, Tunis, and Gortia. With 8 Maps and 12 Plans. Seventh Edition. 7s.

Lower Egypt, with the Fayûm and the Peninsula of Sinus. With 16 Maps, 20 Plans, 7 Views, and 75 Vignettes.
15s.

Palestine and Syria. Handbook for Travellers. With 18 Maps, 63 Plans, a Panorama of Jerusalem, and 10 Views. 11s.

The Traveller's Manual of Conversa-TION in English, German, French, and Italian. Twenty-third Edition. 3s.

DULAU & Co. 37, Soho-square.

TINSLEY BROTHERS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

TINSLEYS' MAGAZINE for JULY, containing Instalments of the New Serial Stories, 'FROM the WINGS,' by B. H. Buxton, and 'UNDER ST. PAULS,' by Richard Dowling, is now ready.

BERLIN under the NEW EMPIRE: its Institutions, Inhabitants, Industry, Monuments, Museums, Social Life, Manners, and Amusements. By HENRY VIZE-TULLY, Author of 'The Story of the Diamond Necklace,' &c. 2 vols. Illustrated with upwards of 400 Engravings.

DAYS and NIGHTS in LONDON: In KENT with CHARLES DICKENS.
Studies in Black and Gray. By J. EWING RITCHIE, Author of 'The Night Side of London,' &c. 1 vol. By THOMAS FROST, Author of 'The Life of Lord
Lyttelton,' 'Secret Societies,' &c. 1 vol.

LONDON TOWN. By Marcus Fall. With Illustrations by Harry Furniss. 2 vols. crown 8vo.

RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS by an OLD ACTOR. By F. BELTON. 1 vol. 8vo. TYPICAL WORKING MEN and WOMEN. By a WORKING MAN. 1 vol.

MEMOIRS of a CYNIC. By William Gilbert,
Author of 'Shirley Hall Asylum,' &c. 3 vols.

MANY LOVES. By B. H. Buxton, Author of 'Jennie of the Prince's,' 'Nell—On and Off the Stage,' &c. 3 vols.

FASHION'S GAY MART. By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. FENDER CUDLIP), Author of 'Denis Donne,' 'County People,' &c. 3 vols. POOR WISDOM'S CHANCE. By Mrs. H. LOVETT CAMERON, Author of 'Juliet's
Guardian,' &c. 3 vols.

INNOCENCE at PLAY. By Jean Middlemass,
Author of 'Sealed by a Kiss,' 'Wild George,' &c. 3 vols.

A CRUEL SECRET: a New Novel MY LAND of BEULAH. By Mrs.
by a New Author. 3 vols. LEITH ADAMS, Author of 'Madeira Lemoine,' &c.
3 vols.

WINGED WORDS. By Henry Spicer, Author of
'Brought to Book,' &c. 3 vols. crown 8vo.

A FIRESIDE KING. By G. M. Stistid. BETTY: a Sketch. 3 vols.

A PEAL of MERRY BELLS. By Leopold Lewis,
Author of the Drama of 'The Bells.' 3 vols. [Immediately.]

WHAT WILL SOCIETY SAY? An ARTFUL WIDOW. By Vernon
By MERVYN MERRITON, Author of 'The Ringwoods' ST. CLARE, Author of 'Rough, but True.' 3 vols. of Ringwood,' &c. 3 vols.

NOTICE.—This Month will be published a New Work of Fiction, in 3 vols., entitled 'The SPORT of FATE,' by Richard Dowling, Author of 'The Mystery of Killard,' 'The Weird Sisters,' 'Under St. Paul's,' &c.

On the 20th July will be published, price One Shilling.

SEASIDE MAIDENS.

By G. A. HENTY, Author of 'March to Magdala,' &c.

Being the SUMMER NUMBER of TINSLEYS' MAGAZINE.

THE NUMBER WILL BE BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY FURNISS.

TINSLEY BROTHERS, 5, CATHERINE-STREET, STRAND.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842 in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries.

From its commencement the original purpose of the Library has been kept steadily in view. The best Books of every shade of opinion, on all subjects of general interest, have been taken in large numbers,—Hundreds, and in some instances Thousands, of Copies of the Leading Works of every Season having been placed in circulation.

Great care has always been taken in the selection of Books to study the wishes of Subscribers, and to make the Library not only "Select," but comprehensive.

THE WHOLE COLLECTION NOW EXCEEDS ONE MILLION VOLUMES.

Additional Copies of all the Best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all Forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION,

ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM.

This Subscription allows of a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION,

TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM.

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION,

TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM, AND UPWARDS,

According to the Number of Volumes required.

BOOK SOCIETIES AND LITERARY INSTITUTIONS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

THE NAMES OF NEW SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENTERED DAILY.

Revised Lists of Works recently added, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly Reduced Prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded postage free on application.

* * All the Books in Circulation and on Sale at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY may also be obtained, with the least possible delay, by all Subscribers to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
And (by order) from all Booksellers in connexion with the Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET, LONDON.
CITY OFFICE—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

CHRESTOS; a Religious Epithet: its Import and its Influence. By J. R. MITCHELL, M.D. 8vo cloth, 1s. Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Ready, in 2 handsome vols. (1 2nd pp.) 12s. 6d.

THE LIFE, TIMES, AND CORRESPONDENCE of BISHOP DOYLE (J. K. L.), long out of print, but now greatly enlarged and enriched with striking revelations. By W. J. FITZPATRICK, M.R.I.A. See Advertiser of Jan. 31, 1880, on the "Interest and Importance."

2 Baffly & Son, 1, Paternoster-row; and Dublin.

4to. cloth, 12s. morocco, gilt edges, 2s.

THE GREEK SEPTUAGINT. With an English Translation, and with various Readings and Critical Notes. A New Edition, specially prepared for Students.

This is the only edition of the Greek Septuagint Version with an English translation side by side. An historical account of the Version is given in the Introduction and this, with the various readings and notes, makes the work one of surpassing value to those who are studying the Greek text.

Samuel Bagster & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, London.

Just ready, 1s. cloth, 1s. 6d. half bound, red edges.

A DICTIONARY OF DAILY BLUNDERS, containing Mistakes often made in Speaking and Writing, Corrected according to the best Authorities and arranged Alphabetically. By the Author of 'A Handy Book of Synonyms, &c.'

Same size and price.

The SECRETARY'S ASSISTANT and CORRESPONDENT'S GUIDE showing the correct Modes of addressing Persons of Rank and Station.

London: Whitaker & Co.

NEW BOOKS.

Large crown 8vo. cloth, price 8s.

FOUR CENTURIES OF ENGLISH LETTERS a Selection of 250 Letters by 150 Writers, from the Period of the Paston Letters to the Present Time. Edited and Arranged by W. BAPTISTE SCOTTON.

"No one who takes the slightest interest in English history, in English literature or in human nature can fail to receive increase of delight from the perusal of this volume." "Mr. Scotton's editorial apparatus is excellently calculated to assist the enjoyment of a singularly enjoyable book—a book that Chesterfield would, we think, have included among his ideal books for open shelves."—Fort. New Gazette.

"Mr. Scotton has in truth given the world a rich store of English epistolary treasures, culled from all epochs, the Lancastrian to the Victorian age, and he has done the work of selection with rare patience and exquisitely good taste. Those who read Mr. Scotton's work will rise from its perusal full of agreeable reminiscences, for the author as one who is not only a thorough worker but who is also in his work the tact, taste, sympathy, and culture necessary for the fulfilment of the task he set himself to perform."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 7s.

A STUDY OF SHELLEY. By John TODD HUNTER, Author of 'Laureola, and other Poems,' 'Alceste,' &c.

THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY.

TENNYSON'S THE PRINCESS; a Medley. Choicely printed on hand-made paper, limp parchment antique, price 6s.; vellum, 1s. 6d. With a Miniature Frontispiece by H. M. Paget, and a Tailpiece in Outline by Gordon Browne.

Large post 8vo. parchment antique, 10s. 6d.

The SONG OF ROLAND. Translated into English Verse by JOHN O'HAGAN, Q.C.

Small crown 8vo. cloth, price 3s. 6d.

ECHOES FROM THE ORIENT. With Miscellaneous Poems by EDWARD KING, Author of 'The Southern States of North America, &c.'

Large crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

ANTIOPE: a Tragedy.

New and Cheaper Edition.

The EGOIST: a Comedy in Narrative. By GEORGE MEREDITH, Author of 'The Order of Richard Feverel,' &c. With Frontispiece, crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

New and Cheaper Edition.

THROUGH A NEEDLE'S EYE. By HENNA STATION. With Frontispiece, crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 3s. 6d.

SPEECHES OF LORD HARTINGTON at the TIME OF THE GENERAL ELECTION OF 1880.

Small crown, cloth.

A SKETCH OF THE KAFFIR and ZULU WARS, GUADANA to ISANDHLWANA. By Captain HENRY HALLAM PARR, Military Secretary to H.E. Sir Bartle Frere.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Contents for JULY, 1880.

1. ADAM and EVE. (Continued.)
2. The ROMANCE of CHINESE SOCIAL LIFE.
3. In TOWN.
4. BRANTOME.
5. The STRANGE STORY of KITTY CANHAM.
6. The CONNEXION BETWEEN POETRY and PAINT-ING.
7. The PORTRAIT of a PAINTER by HIMSELF. Part II.
8. The UNIVERSAL SOCIETY of DUNDLESDOWN.
9. FURED.
10. ACTING, NATURAL and ACQUIRED.
11. The REBEL of the FAMILY. By Mrs. Lynn Linton.
(Continued.)

SIX NEW NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY MISS BROUGHTON.
SECOND THOUGHTS.

By EMMA BROUGHTON, Author of 'Red as a Rose is She,'
'Nancy,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

III.
MISS THOMAS NEW NOVEL.

The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha
THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'ROBIN ADAIR.'
ALAN DERING. By the Hon. Mrs.
PETHERSTONHAUGH, Author of 'Kilcorran,' 'Robin
Adair,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY GRIZEL.'
IN HER MAJESTY'S KEEPING.
By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD, Author of 'My
Lord of Segre,' 'Lady Grizel,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.
"Mr. Wingfield has given us a novel that surpasses any of his former efforts, and that is saying a great deal."—Graphic.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'UNCLE SILAS.'
THE PURCELL PAPERS. By the late J. SHERIDAN LE FANU, Author of 'Uncle Silas,'
'The House by the Churchyard,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.
"They display great literary vigour, and dramatic powers of a high class."—Graphic.
"They are told with a raciness and nerve that should ensure their success."—Whitehall Review.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.
FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret
MAJENDIE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. [Just ready.]

Just ready,
NEW ADDITION TO "FENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

In crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s. with an illustration.

PROBATION.

Also, by the same Author,

THE FIRST VIOLIN. Crown 8vo.
cloth, price 6s.

London:

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

15, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. WALFORD'S NEW WORK

Now ready, in 1 vol. 8vo.

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES.

By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A.

Contents: The Old Countess of Desmond—The Edgcumbe of Edgumbe and Cothel—The Lynches of Galway
—A Cadet of the Plantagenets—The Proud Duke of Somerset—Lady Eileyth—The Daisies of Carnwath—The Ladies of Llangollen—The Flores—The Stuarts of Traquair—Bellet
Will Howard—An Episode in the House of Dundonald—The Ducal House of Hamilton—The Chief of Dundas—The Duke of Chandos and Princely Canons—The Spencers and Com-pans—All the Howards—The Lockharts of Lee—A Ghost Story in the Noble House of Boreford—A Tragedy in Pall Mall—An Eccentric Russell—The Lady of Lathom House—
Two Royal Marriages in the Last Century—The Boyles—The Merry Duke of Montagu—The Romance of the Earldom of Huntingdon—Lady Hester Stanhope—The Countess of Nithsdale—The Romance of the Earldom of Mar—Margaret Duchess of Newcastle—Lord Northampton—The Cutlers of Wentworth—The Earldom of Bridgewater—The Carew of Beddington—A Chapter on the Peerage—The Kirkpatriks of Closeburn—The Chiffords, Earls of Cumberland—The Homes of Polwarth—The Ducal House of Bedford—Tragedies of the House of Innes—The Ducal House of Leinster—
The Royal House of Stuart—The Great Douglas Case—The Radcliffe of Derwentwater—The Rise of the House of Hardwicke—Field-Marshal Keith.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE

LIFE (1797-1872). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. [Just ready.]

THE VILLAGE of PALACES; OR, CHRONICLES of ORLEANS.

By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE.
Translated from French.

"The work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting period of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit."—
"Mr. L'Estrange tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."—Graphic.

ROYAL WINDSOR. By W. Hep-

WORTHINGTON. Vols. III. and IV. 2 vols. 8vo. 2s. COMPLETING the Work. SECOND EDITION.

CONVERSATIONS with DISTIN-

GUISHED PERSONS during the SECOND EMPIRE, from 1840 to 1860. By the late MARGARET W. BENTON. Edited by his Daughter,
M. C. M. SIMPSON. 2 vols. 8vo. 2s.

THE NEW NOVELS.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.

G. LINDSEY BARKES, Author of 'The Manchester Man,' &c.
3 vols.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

3 vols.
"A very interesting novel. The characters are admirably drawn, the incident drive attention, and the whole book is replete with dramatic intensity. New novels will be read with more interest than the old and adventures of this 'Modern Greek Heroine.'—Daily Journal.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl

of DESART, Author of 'Kilverdale,' &c. 3 vols.
"Lord Desart shows his accustomed liveliness in description, which is always distinct and never prolonged to us to become wearisome."— Athenæum.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.

MOLLESMORTH, Author of 'Hammercourt Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.
"Miss Bouverie is a pure and pretty story."—Athenæum.
"Miss Bouverie is one of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one who takes it up will lay it down unsatisfied."—
"A very charming story. In these delightful volumes Mrs. Mollesmorth has produced a capital book."—Graphic.

POOR ZEPH. By F. W. Robinson,

Author of 'Grandmother's Money,' &c. 3 vols.
"The author has written many good stories and has long since established his reputation. He has done well to reproduce these charming tales."—Graphic.

POET and PEER. By Hamilton

ATD, Author of 'Peasblossoms,' &c. 3 vols. Dedicated to Lord Lyton.
"A novel of unusual merit, the work of a cultivated man of the world who describes what he has seen. It is the best of Mr. Atter's novels, and will interest and amuse every reader who takes it up."—Athenæum.
"A thoroughly readable and attractive novel."—Morning Post.

THREE RECRUITS, and the GIRLS

THEY LEFT BEHIND THEM. By JOSEPH MATTON. 3 vols.
"Mr. Matton's novel hurries us along in unflagging excitement. The scenes of the good old times when Father George was king are excellent."—Times.

FOR HER DEAR SAKE. By Mary

CICIL MAY. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols.

FORESTALLED. By M.

BETHAN-EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Birds,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITION of SIR GIBBIE.

By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 6s. bound and 10s. unbound.

"Sir Gibbie" is a book of genius."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

FRANCIS DEAK: Hungarian Statesman. A Memoir, with Preface by the Right Hon. M. E.

GRANT-DUFF, M.P. 8vo. with Portrait, 12s. 6d.

"As a contribution to the history of contemporaneous politics it is a useful work, and should be consulted by those interested in the complications of the Eastern question."—Athenæum.

"Containing a perfectly fair, and at the same time warmly sympathetic, account of one of the most instructive chapters in the political history of the nineteenth century."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A valuable contribution to the literature of the Eastern question."—Academy.

"This well-executed memoir, the reading public will resort to in search of more detailed information concerning the great Hungarian patriot, who knew how to combine, with unexampled success, a perfect respect for legality with resistance to arbitrary authority. The author has done his work well."—Observer.

CONCLUSION of GREENE'S 'HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE.'

HISTORY of the ENGLISH

PEOPLE. By JOHN RICHARD GREENE, Vol. IV.
THE REVOLUTION, 1642-1700; MODERN ENGLAND,
1700-1815. 8vo. with 3 Maps and Index, 14s.

(Vol. I to III, 12s. each.)

"A work that most students of history may turn to with advantage, and that will be almost sure to take rank among the great classics of our literature."—Globe.

To be published immediately, in demy 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The IRISH CRISIS; being a Narrative of the Measures for Believing the Distress caused by the Great Irish Famine of 1845-6. By Sir CHARLES TREVELYAN, Bart., K.C.B. Reprinted from the Edinburgh Review, January, 1868.

MODERN GREECE. Two Lectures delivered before the Philosophical Institution of Edinburgh, with Papers on the 'Progress of Greece' and

'Byron in Greece.' By R. C. JEBB, M.A. LL.D. Edin., Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow. Crown
8vo. 2s.

"It conveys in a small compass a surprising amount of interesting and vivid knowledge in the plainest way conceivable. It is at once a book of history, a book of travels, and a book of contemporary social study as applied to Greece. It is needless to say that the historical portion is executed with the mastery to be expected from such a scholar as Professor Jebb. The narrative of the tour is charming, for its genial brightness of treatment, its happy skill in landscape-painting never overdoes, no less than for its unobtrusive but deep sympathy with the people and the country visited."— Pall Mall Gazette.

THEOCRITUS, BION, and

MOSCHUS. Done into English, with an Essay on Theocritus and his Age. By ANDREW LANG, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 6s. [This day.]

The TRIAL and DEATH of

SOCRATES; being the Euthyphron, Apology, Crito, and Phædo of Plato. Translated into English by F. J.
CHURCH. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

MARTIAL—SELECT EPIGRAMS.

Edited by Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON, M.A., Head
Master of St. Peter's School, York. Fcap. 8vo. 6s.
"Macmillan's Classical Series." [Now ready.]

On ANEURISM; especially of the

Thorax and the Root of the Neck. By R. BARWELL,
F.R.C.S., Surgeon to Charing Cross Hospital. Crown
8vo. 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MORLEY. New Volume:

POPE. By LESLIE STEPHEN. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"The writer's eminent qualities as a critic, his judgment, his wit, his abundant knowledge of eighteenth-century literature, and his keen enjoyment of literary form, have equipped him handsomely for the task he has undertaken. Readers who have made Pope a study and found his poetry a delight are not likely to accept all the terse and incisive criticisms scattered through these pages. Every reader, however, will acknowledge that an extremely difficult task has been well accomplished."—St. James's Gazette.

NEW NOVEL.—ENGA. By the Author of 'The Harbour Bar.' 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"This tale is one of Scottish life and character, and its charm of nationality is maintained with genuine feeling and an unaffected homeliness of diction full of heart and purity. That detestable tone of deliberately assumed vulgarity which enters into the modern love-making of the novel of artificial society does not taint a sentence of this graceful tale."—Daily Telegraph.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1880.

CONTENTS.

O'HAGAN'S TRANSLATION OF THE CHANSON DE ROLAND	7
CHINESE RELIGIONS	7
LOW'S VICTORIAN GENERALS	8
THE ELKS' EDITIONS	9
WITTEN'S VOX VOLU	10
HUTTEN'S INTRODUCTION TO ROMAN LAW	10
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	11
PHILOSOPHICAL BOOKS	13
BOOKS FOR CHILDREN	14
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	14-15
MILTON NOTES; ANTOCHUS THE GREAT; THE NEW SEAPERS SOCIETY; SALE; NOTES FROM PARIS	15-16
INTERESTING Gossip	17
SCIENCE—RAPID ON THE BRAIN AS AN ORGAN OF MIND; THE QUARRIES OF CREMINS; CARL PATER- SON; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS; Gossip	18-31
NEW ARTS—FRENCH BOOKS ON ART; NEW PRINTS; THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY; NOTES FROM ROME; SALES; Gossip	32-35
MUSIC—THE WEEK; Gossip	36-37
DRAMA—THE WEEK	37

LITERATURE

The Song of Roland. Translated into English Verse by John O'Hagan, M.A. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is natural that French critics should be inclined to place the 'Chanson de Roland' on the same level as the Homeric poems. But, as we said last week, one need not attempt to dispute the claims of the 'Chanson,' as Mr. Arnold does, by quoting passages that are essentially dissimilar. It is better to take such poems as a whole, and place the vast, the universal range of Homer, his humour, his pathos, his fascinating touches, his unequalled sympathy with human life, his "strong-winged music," on the one side, and on the other the narrow range, the monotonous tune of that poem of an iron age, the 'Chanson.' Some such process of comparison, though generally odious enough, is necessary if we are to have a clear, steady view of the precise position in literature which the 'Chanson' holds. A view of this sort is necessary for readers who would appreciate Mr. O'Hagan's careful and unaffected translation. Mr. O'Hagan's task has certainly difficulties like those which are encountered by the translator of Homer. People who know the 'Chanson' in the original, like those who make Homer their companion, are generally enthusiasts and hard to satisfy. Again, our language has no measure which answers to the prolonged assonances of the laisse, any more than it has a measure which corresponds to the Homeric hexameter. Mr. O'Hagan has chosen "the mixed iambic and anapaestic metre," which we find to have a not very agreeable jig in it. Let us print Mr. O'Hagan's version of the most pathetic incident in the 'Chanson' and the original laisse :—

See Roland there on his charger swooned,
Olivier smitten with his death wound.
His eyes from bleeding are dimmed and dark,
Nor mortal, near or far, can mark;
And when his comrade beside him pressed,
Fiercely he smote on his golden crest;
Down to the nasal the helm he shred,
But passed no further, nor pierced his head.
Roland marvelled at such a blow,
And thus bespake him soft and low:
"Hast thou done it, my comrade, wittingly?
Roland who loves thee so dear, am I,
Thou hast no quarrel with me to seek?"
Olivier answered, "I hear thee speak,
But I see thee not. God seeth thee.
Have I struck thee, brother? Forgive it me."

"I am not hurt, O Olivier;
And in sight of God, I forgive thee here."
Then each to other his head bath laid,
And in love like this was their parting made.

As vus Rollant sur son cheval païstet,
E Olivier ki est à mort naïstet,
Tant ad seinet li oil li sunt trublet,
Ne loins ne pres ne poet veider ai cler
Que reconoistre poïset nul hom mortel;
Son compaignun, cume li l'at enountret,
Si l'iert amunt sur l'elme à or gemet,
Tut li detrenchet d'ici que al nasel,
Mais en la teste ne l'ad mie adeset.
A loel colp l'ad Rollans reguardet,
Si li demadest d'inclement e suet:
"Sire compain, faites le vos de gred?
Ja c'est Rollans, ki tant vos souk amar;
Par nule guise ne m'aves desiet."
Dist Olivier: "Or vos de jo parler;
Jo ne vos vei veïd rus damne Deu!
Ferut vos ai: car le me pardunes."
Rollans respunt: "Jo n'ai nient de mal;
Jo l'vos parduns ici e devant Deu."
A loel mot l'un al altre ad clinet;
Par tel amour as les vus deserved.

The prolonged assonances of the long laisse are here but poorly represented by the shorter lines and tinkling rhymes of Mr. O'Hagan's system. The laisse was meant to be chanted, probably in a high monotone, and was well adapted to that purpose. Mr. O'Hagan's verse is on a far lower level as an instrument of song. Closely comparing the version with the original, we might object to the rendering of lines five and six, which turn two long into one short verse. Again,

Roland marvelled at such a blow does not give the sense of the action indicated in

A loel colp l'ad Rollans reguardet.
Once more, the stately courtesy of A loel mot l'un al autre ad clinet disappears in

Then each to other his head bath laid,
which might represent the action of two friendly ponies.

These, and such as these, are the blemishes which any critic can find in any translation. That thankless task of translating is never so well done but that it might be bettered—a fact best known to all who have themselves attempted to render the saïtes masterpieces of an early age and a sonorous tongue into our battered modern English. Thus we might find fault with Mr. O'Hagan's use of the word "consult"—

So was the fatal consult begun; and we may hint that history does not justify him in saying

Turpin of Rheims rose from the ranks.

We have indicated the typical shortcomings of this translation. But how does it strike the English reader? We have no hesitation in saying that the version offers him an adequate rendering of the 'Chanson'; that it sets before him in a perfectly lucid way the characters of the old poem, the fierce temper, the courage, the courtesy, the loyalty and the treason, the strange heroic readiness to weep, the delight in the joy of battle, the weariness of laborious life, the imperial stateliness, which mark Roland, Oliver, Ganelon, and Charles.

As an example we may choose the famous passage where Roland strikes his last blow :—

He saw the Saracen seize his sword;
His eyes he oped, and he spake one word—
"Thou art not one of our band, I trow,"
And he clutched the horn he would ne'er forego;

On the golden crest he smote him full,
Shattering steel and bone and skull,
Forth from his head his eyes he beat,
And cast him lifeless before his feet.
"Miserable, makest thou then so free,
As, right or wrong, to lay hand on me?
Who hears it will deem thee a madman born;
Behold the mouth of mine ivory horn
Broken for thee, and the gems and gold
Around its rim to earth are rolled."

Roland feebleth his eyesight raft,
Yet he stands erect with what strength is left;
From his bloodless cheek is the hue dispelled,
But his Durindana all bare he held.
In front a dark brown rock arose—
He smote upon it ten grievous blows.
Grated the steel as it struck the flint;
Yet it brake not, nor bore its edge one dint.
"Marry, Mother, be thou mine aid!
Ah, Durindana, my ill-starred blade,
I may no longer thy guardian be!
What fields of battle I won with thee!
What realms and regions 'twas ours to gain,
Now the lordship of Carlemaine!
Never shalt thou possessor know
Who would turn from face of mortal foe;
A gallant vassal so long thee bore,
Such as France the free shall know no more."

Even here we cannot but note that

From his bloodless cheek is the hue dispelled seems artificial. Indeed, one must read the English translation rapidly, and get into the swing of passions and events, otherwise the critical fiend will spoil our pleasure by whispering censure of details. In this respect the translator has the same chances and the same excuses as the translator of Homer. Perhaps any one who could write Malory's prose would render the 'Chanson' in the fittest manner; in the mean time Mr. O'Hagan supplies nearly the best substitute that we can expect to obtain. The metre, whatever its defects, is that of the old English imitation of the fourteenth century :—

Durendall his sword gird hym about,
With a schyning shield on his shoulder stout;
He took with him his spear and went to hoon,
But lep on lightly without any boon.

Did they call horse "hoon" in the fourteenth century?

The translator's preface is a sufficient introduction to the study of the English version. It is written in a plain, unpretentious style, and Mr. O'Hagan has escaped the temptation to excessive enthusiasm, and has not wandered, as one might so easily be induced to wander, into a long dissertation on the nature of national epics. The book is beautifully printed on hand-made paper. The parchment cover is too easily soiled, and is not improved by a mechanical imitation of the illumination of old manuscripts.

The Religions of China: Confucianism and Taoism described and compared with Christianity. By James Legge, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Chinese Buddhism: a Volume of Sketches, Historical, Descriptive, and Critical. By the Rev. Joseph Edkins, D.D. (Trübner & Co.)

THE Chinese are not naturally a religious people. They are matter-of-fact, pains-taking, and ingenious, but, as Capt. Gill has lately pointed out, they are utterly devoid of imagination. Their minds are richly stored by study and strengthened by exercise, but they are devoid of that higher quality which inspires as well as illumines. The dull routine of daily life and the mechanical acquisition of knowledge in vogue among them, unrelieved by a single aspiration after spiritual things, weigh on them like heavy and permanent clouds. They have many estimable qualities. They are filial to their parents, and are the most easily governed people in the world, but these very virtues are partly the result of the absence of enthusiasm and imagination. They have none of that "fierce impulse unto crime" which occasionally torments the men of the Aryan and Semitic races, but then neither can they point to the efforts of genius nor to higher lives which are the heritage and glories of those peoples.

To this constitutional frame of mind must be attributed the hold which the teachings of Confucius have over the people. Confucius was a typical Chinaman, and his utterances were exactly attuned to the national ear. The early classical literature put him in possession of the primitive religious beliefs which belonged to the first immigrants into China, but though he adopted these generally, he never inculcated them among his disciples. Instead he taught them that man was master of his own destiny, and that it was within the power of every one, except the irreclaimably vicious, to reach the perfection of Being by the completion of knowledge and the rectification of the heart. He avoided committing himself to any distinct avowal of belief on the subject of a future state or in regard to the nature of Shang-te, the god of his ancestors, and was content to confine his aspirations and to limit his reflections to the world he saw around him. Including in the term Confucianism all traces of a religious monotheistic system found in the pre-Confucian 'Book of History' and the 'Book of Odes,' together with the later developments of religious worship based on those works, Dr. Legge finds much that is admirable in it, and many points which it is possible to compare with Christianity. In Taoism, either in its primitive form or its present degraded condition, Dr. Legge, as might be expected, finds fewer points of resemblance. As enunciated by its founder, Lao-tze, Taoism was a species of mysticism which, though unrelieved by any glimmerings of spirituality, was instinct with a sound and lofty morality. Of the two men, Lao-tze and Confucius, there can be no doubt as to which had the higher sense of duty. The saying of Lao-tze, "Recompense evil with good," was incomprehensible to Confucius, who asked, "With what, then, will you recompense kindness?" And if the two systems had begun and ended with the teachings of the two sages, Taoism might fairly claim the pre-eminence as a moral system. But that purity of worship which has distinguished Confucianism, apart from the doctrines of Confucius, is wanting in Taoism. Gross superstitions, the combined offspring of a bastard Buddhism and of Shamanism, have in later ages reduced practical Taoism to a system of idolatrous jugglery. So curiously interwoven, however, are the theoretical doctrines of the three sects, Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism, that in the literature even of modern Taoism are to be found works, such as 'The Book of Rewards and Retribution,' which, from a moral point of view, will bear comparison with anything to be found in the other systems.

Taking, then, the more exalted forms of the two religions, Dr. Legge is able to establish certain preliminary points of agreement between them and Christianity. In all three systems "the existence of God," "the possibility and the fact of revelation," and "the idea of the supernatural" are to be found. But the existence of these points of agreement only makes the actual contrast in these and all other vital matters the more conspicuous. The belief in the existence of God has led to idolatry; the acknowledgment of the possibility and fact of revelation has produced spiritualistic jugglery; and the acceptance of the idea of the supernatural has ended in the wholesale adoption of the wildest superstitions.

Dr. Edkins's work deals with Buddhism, the last of the "three religions" of China. The success which Buddhism met with on its first introduction to China is remarkable, and proves beyond question that neither Confucianism nor Taoism was able to gratify the spiritual instincts—such as they are—of the people. It was in the latter half of the first century of our era that the Emperor Ming-ti sent messengers to India in search of Buddhist books and teachers, and in the fourth century, so rapid had been the spread of the new religion, "nine-tenths of the common people followed the faith of the great Indian sage." Great activity was displayed in translating Buddhist works from the Sanscrit into Chinese, and Indian missionaries were welcomed as honoured guests, and in some instances received official posts of rank and emolument. Religious toleration has, until the last two centuries, formed a prominent feature in Chinese political life. Though there was much in Buddhism which was antagonistic to both Confucianism and Taoism, and though from time to time ardent devotees of these two faiths urged that "the foreign religion," as they called Buddhism, should be suppressed, no effectual steps were taken to check its growth, and its followers were allowed to enjoy the same privileges as were possessed by those of the native faiths. The same emperor who welcomed the pilgrim Hsuen-tsang on his return from India, laden with Sanscrit manuscripts, in 645, "received with equal favour the Syrian Christians, Alopen and his companions, who had arrived in A.D. 639."

The translation of the Sanscrit texts into Chinese served an important linguistic as well as religious purpose. For the transcription of Indian names it was necessary to adopt a syllabic system of writing, and to this end

"the Hindoos who had come to China assisted in forming, according to the model of the Sanscrit alphabet, a system of thirty-six initial letters, and described the vocal organs by which they are formed. They also constructed tables, in which, by means of two sets of representative characters, one for the initials and one for the finals, a mode of spelling words was exhibited."

By means of this system they have handed down the pronunciation current in the sixth and later centuries of a large number of Chinese characters, thus lending the scholar material aid in his search into the old sounds of Chinese. Unfortunately the study of Sanscrit has never been actively pursued in China, though attempts have been made, as under the Emperor Jen-tsung (A.D. 1035), to preserve a knowledge of the literature. The fact that youths were appointed by this emperor to study the language implies that they had texts at hand for the purpose, and as, in all probability, some of these manuscripts still exist in China, it may reasonably be hoped that they will eventually be brought to light. Dr. Edkins has as yet only met with one palm-leaf MS., which is deposited at a monastery at T'ien-t'ai shan in Southern China.

As Dr. Edkins says in his preface, the work before us is made up of papers written by him during the last twenty-five years. This explains its somewhat unconnected style. It contains, however, a vast deal of important information on the whole subject of Chinese Buddhism, such as is only to be gained by long continued study on the spot. By no other means would it be possible to acquire so intimate and accurate a knowledge of the religious literature and of the various developments which Buddhism has undergone in China as is here exhibited.

Soldiers of the Victorian Age. By Charles Rathbone Low, I.N., F.R.G.S. 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

NOTWITHSTANDING the comprehensiveness of the title which he has selected, Mr. Low states in the preface that he does not pretend to completeness. He only claims to have given a fairly representative collection of British military biographies, limited to those officers who have gained or increased their fame during the life of Her Majesty. The explanation he affords of the omission of many eminent names is that these have already found biographers. The explanation might be accepted as, at all events, plausible, were it not for the fact that, of the biographies in the collection now offered to the public, some have already appeared in magazines, and that in scarcely any of them is there much new matter. Mr. Low may urge that in these days it is almost impossible to give any fresh facts of importance in the biography of a distinguished soldier. This excuse, however, if made, would only apply to the public part of a general's career, and not to a biography, the very object of which is to give details which, though not in themselves of historical importance, yet help to throw light on historical characters. Of these details of early life, and of purely personal anecdotes, there is a remarkable lack in the book before us. The bulk of the two volumes is, moreover, taken up with a chronicle of commanders of the third order, whose very names are in one or two instances almost forgotten by the present generation. For example, the book opens with a life, occupying almost a third of the first volume, of the late Sir Thomas Willshire, Bart., G.C.B. This respectable officer saw in his youth a good deal of service in the Peninsula, and as a brigadier in his mature age captured Khelat, an exploit for which he was created a baronet. He was celebrated as an excellent disciplinarian, and affords a good example to young officers who have only their own merits to rely upon; but to devote one-third of a volume to him is to ignore all rules of proportion. One of the most curious facts connected with his career is that, being, born on the 24th of August, 1789, he obtained a commission on the 24th of June, 1795.

"Capt. John Willshire, being desirous that his sons should follow the profession of arms, procured commissions for them in his own regiment when they were children—a custom which was abrogated by the Duke of York—and we find the name of Thomas Willshire enrolled as an officer in the 38th Regiment at the early age of five years and ten months, his commission as an ensign bearing date the 24th of June, 1795, and as a lieutenant the 5th of September following. To meet the question of efficiency—as the time for the annual inspections drew near, when the names of officers were called over by the inspecting officer—the youthful aspirants for military honours were sent away from home, and the answer given at the roll-call was that they were 'absent on leave' or 'recruiting.' The fiction was a transparent one, and when the abuse was animadverted upon in the House of Commons, O'Connell, we believe, gave utterance to some pleasantries at the expense of the young gentlemen in the nursery who were enjoying the contents of the pap-boat. In January, 1798, Lieut. Willshire, though only a child in his ninth year, appears to have joined the regiment, then stationed at Saintes, in the West Indies, and his name does not again appear in the list of absent officers."

At the age of fifteen years and four days he became a captain.

The life of Sir George Whitlock, which follows, is chiefly valuable for a succinct account of the shameful manner in which the army was treated with regard to the Banda and Kirwee prize money. The brief sketch of Sir Charles Pearson's career is dry, as is also that of Major-General the Hon. Sir Henry Clifford, the feat which won the latter the Victoria Cross being told in the bald official words of the gazette. The life of Sir George Macgregor is little more than a dry abridgment from Sir John Kaye. Kaye and Malleison's accounts of the Indian Mutiny have told us more, and in a pleasanter style, than Mr. Low narrates concerning the succour of Arrah. Lord Gough's life is heavy and commonplace, with little in it that every well-read soldier did not know before; but it may be regarded as a useful compilation. Vol. ii. contains biographies of Sir Herbert Edwardes, Sir Henry Durand, Lord Chelmsford, Sir James Outram, Lord Strathnairn, Sir Neville Chamberlain, Sir Hope Grant, Lord Napier, and Lord Clyde.

Sir Herbert Edwardes's own account of his achievements in 1847-49 is much more interesting and full than the narrative in the book before us, which, moreover, tells little about Sir Herbert's career after the second Sikh war. The biography of Sir Henry Durand passes over with but scant notice the two most important events of his life, the blowing in of the gates of Ghuznee and the mutiny at Indore. Those who wish to know about this accomplished soldier and political will do better to read his life by his son than the bald narrative of Mr. Low. The biography of Sir James Outram is one of the best parts of the book, for however well known are Sir James's exploits during the Persian war and the Mutiny, such is not the case with his earlier career. We could have wished, however, that we had been told in more detail the history of Sir James's rise, his wonderful feats as a tiger-slayer, and his history when Commissioner of the Bheel country. This, however, Sir F. Goldsmid will probably tell the world in a few days. Few British officers have ever enjoyed a greater or better earned reputation as a sabreur than Sir Neville Chamberlain. A splendid horseman and swordsman, he has had scores of hand-to-hand fights in the course of his soldiering, and has been wounded times out of number. There is, therefore, much to be said of his personal adventures, but Mr. Low has told next to nothing. Neither do we get more than a brief abstract of Sir Neville's stirring life on the Punjab frontier and at the siege of Delhi. Still, in the absence of a better biography, this one has its value. Sir Hope Grant's life has been told by Capt. Knollys, and told well. Mr. Low merely supplies an abridgment of Capt. Knollys's work. Of the four remaining biographies the best is that of Lord Clyde, for it gives some interesting particulars regarding his little known life as a regimental officer. Here again, however, Mr. Low will be presently superseded, and in fact his book is in general a mere collection of articles taken from a biographical dictionary and expanded. Such work is book-making, not book-writing. Still, for purposes of convenient reference the volumes might be useful were they provided with an index.

Les Elzevier. Par Alphonse Willems. (Brussels, Van Trigt.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY, or, as its enemies are pleased to call it, bibliomania—though the two things are different enough—is one of those subjects which have, one does not quite know why, been surrendered to cheap wit for a prey. To anybody whose wit is of this kind it will be sufficient to say that M. Willems has written some nine hundred closely printed royal octavo pages, many of which are filled by such records as that one copy of a certain edition of a certain book is a hundred and thirty-two thousandths of a metre in length, while no other copy is known to exceed a hundred and thirty-one. Having thus disposed of this class of possible readers, we can assure the remainder that they will find here a remarkably interesting and well-written account of one of the greatest families of book producers that the world has seen; a considerable mass of interesting detail about many men of the first importance in literature during the century when literature was, perhaps more than at any other epoch, pursued for itself; and a catalogue raisonné of some of the most convenient and beautiful editions of the chief works of the same time as well as of classical antiquity. There is no need to enter into an argument as to the absolute or relative merits of the little volumes on which, to the almost entire exclusion of their more portly productions, the fame of the Elzevirs rests. Perhaps M. Willems, though usually a sober man in expressing his admiration, goes a little too far when he says that "les in-douze Elzeviriens sont en leur genre ce que l'art typographique a produit du plus parfait." Some of the pocket classics of Plantin, some of the exquisite italic volumes in which the French poets of the later sixteenth century had the luck to get printed, must, we think, be allowed equality, if not superiority. But in such case comparison is equally odious and unnecessary. As we write there is a row of Elzevirs before us, including one—the Pliny of 1635—of the four generally acknowledged masterpieces of the Elzevir press, and we are not at all disposed to undervalue their beauty. The production of these things went on for the best part of a century, and M. Willems, after ruthlessly casting out doubtful items, has succeeded in drawing up an Elzevirian catalogue of 1,600 articles, besides a considerable list of what, in the language of another art, might be called school copies. The extent of the subject, therefore, gives it additional importance, and deserves that it should have patient and exhaustive handling.

M. Willems, as all lovers of books know, is by no means the first to attempt the task of a history of the Elzevirs and their works, many sketches and essays in the same direction having been made before, and having resulted in the work of Pieters twenty years ago. But all these works put together would by no means furnish the information given in this volume, while, on the other hand, they would contain a good deal of information of a decidedly untrustworthy character. The mere fact that "there was many a man of the Elzevir clan," and that they had three or four principal places of business, is the least part of the difficulty. In the first place, as they were booksellers as well as printers, and frequented the great fairs of Germany, a very large number of works got attributed to them which were not even, as we should say, published, and still less printed, by themselves; in the second place, as their fame rose and spread direct imitations became common; in the third, they themselves had in some cases a habit of issuing books under pseudonyms or in the names of other printers and publishers. The task of exclusion and admission is therefore decidedly delicate as well as very complicated. M. Willems seems to have proceeded with a commendable mingling of scepticism and of openness to conviction, and though it would be impossible to endorse his conclusions as a whole without a long process of minute verification, they appear to be generally sound.

The book consists of two parts. The first, some two hundred and fifty pages long, contains a general account of the Elzevir press and its characteristics; a history of the different establishments at Leyden, Amsterdam, the Hague, and elsewhere; and, lastly, a detailed biography of each member of the family who took an active part in the business, from Louis the founder, who settled at Leyden five years before the Spanish Armada sailed, to the degenerate Abraham, his great-great-grandson, who died at the same place just before the Peace of Utrecht, after thirty years of "pot-boiling" printing for the University, in which he allowed the famous press to sink to such a condition that not a single reader was employed, and that the work (University theses and such like things) which his privilege secured to him was turned out with the utmost delay and in the worst of conditions. Nothing, indeed, but the said privilege and his position as décharge of the town kept the business going.

The second or larger part of the book contains, first, a catalogue raisonné of undoubted Elzevir work, the palmy days of which were in the reigns of Bonaventure and the first Abraham at Leyden, from 1621 to 1652, and of Daniel at Amsterdam, from 1655 to 1680; then an appendix of what may be called sub-Elzevirian and pseudo-Elzevirian books; and last, but not least—what is too rare in books written in the French language—an excellent index. Thus the first part is rather suited for continuous reading, the second for reference on the part of the bibliographer and collector. The former is enriched with not a few illustrations, including a full folio page copy of the sample alphabets of the Elzevirs, which M. Willems discovered in the Plantin Museum at Antwerp, and which enabled him to settle the long vexed question as to the designer of the famous types. French bibliographers (with the same cool assumption which has made them claim 'Amadis of Gaul' as a French book, because no one but a Frenchman could have written anything so good) had usually argued that the Elzevir type designs were too good for any one but a Frenchman to have devised. M. Willems's discovery, however, assigns them in a manner not to be questioned to Cornelius Van Dyck. In the biographical part, perhaps the most interesting among many interesting details is the indication, so early as the reign of Bonaventure and Abraham, of the beginning of the quarrel between publishers and authors. As everybody knows, actual pecuniary relations in the way of sale of copyright were not common so early as this, the second quarter of the seventeenth century. The Elzevirs rarely paid their authors, and pirated without the least scruple, and often without any indignation on the authors' part. Balzac, indeed, sent a most polite letter of thanks to the already famous printers for their elegant counterfeit of him. But then Balzac was a person of quality who amused himself by writing for the sake of writing, much as it turned out to the benefit of his country and her language. The serenities of the Low Countries were not usually in this magnificent position, and their complaints of the natural enemy were frequent and bitter. Some of the unpopularity of the Elzevirs with their authors arose from the fact that their confidential literary adviser, Heinsius the elder, was himself bitterly disliked by his brethren. But Heinsius is not a universal scapegoat, and any one who chooses may read in M. Willems's pages how the avaricious publishers allowed Cluverius's widow and children to starve in London, though the geographer had worked for them for years; how they made Gronovius pay for the presentation copies of his Seneca; how they were astutissimi mortales, and so forth. Fortunately all these things are long past, and the Pliny and the Cæsar sen sen at this distance of time, though it may be doubted whether this reflection of a selfish nineteenth century possessor would have consoled Gronovius. Meanwhile we can recommend M. Willems's volume as likely to be of considerable use to collectors and of great interest to lovers of literature.

Vox Vulgi: a Poem in Censure of the Parliament of 1661. By George Wither. Now first edited by the Rev. W. Dunn Macray, M.A. (Parker & Co.)

OF George Wither's many verses, one song only, 'The Manly Heart,' has escaped oblivion, and, considering his slender claim to remembrance, he retains an almost disproportionate celebrity. Hallam enshrines him amidst 'The Literature of Europe,' and deplores his fall into "a grovelling Puritanism"; and successive critics have in turn distinguished the poet as "poor Wither," the "wretched Wither," and "melodious Wither."

"Observant Wither" is our contribution to the list of epithets by which the poet has been distinguished, and it is based upon his 'Censure of the Parliament of 1661.' The new House of Commons met in May, and before the 1st of August Wither perceived that it was a congregation of "brutes," of "giddy rattlebrains," "quick-witted things," who "without a reason, Reason overthrow," and were, in fact, running "headlong to the devil." This discovery was too much for his prudence. In the fulness of his vanity Wither at once directed against them 732 verses, intended to act as a "chymnick pill" for their purgation, dedicated the MS. to the Lord Chancellor, and received by way of return two years' seclusion in Newgate and the Tower.

Is Wither's 'Vox Vulgi' worth a place among Mr. Macray's "Gleanings from Bodleian MSS."? This question, upon the first impression, must be answered in the negative. It is a poem only in name, and hardly even a satire; the verses, to use the language of Carlyle, do not rise above "splay-footed doggerel," and the sarcasm is blunted by pedantic absurdity. Nor does Wither attempt to grapple with the political action of 1661. He approves the law which vested the military power in the Crown; he does not disapprove, if our interpretation be correct, the ecclesiastical legislation of the session; nor does he condemn the restrictions placed by Parliament upon the ancient right of petitioning.

Wither almost wholly confines his satire to the moral aspect of the House of Commons; he puts into rhyme the gossip with which the member for Cambridge amused Pepys during a Sunday in the country:—

"4th August, 1661.—To church again, and after supper to talk about publique matters, wherein Roger Pepys told me how basely things have been carried in Parliament by the young men, that did labour to oppose all things that were moved by serious men"; and who were "the most profane, swearing fellows that he ever heard in his life."

Here lies the value of the 'Vox Vulgi.' No evidence could be more convincing than Wither's clumsy verse of the sudden change which came over England during 1661, and of the moral and social gulf by which it was separated from the England of 1660. During 1660 the military oppressor was still almost an actual presence in society; the "red spectre" was not wholly exorcised. In 1661, on the contrary, the terror of the Revolution had utterly passed away. That year was the true date of the Restoration; then began the wild revolt against the Puritan past, and that social crisis occurred, so ably described by Mr. J. R. Green, when, for the first time for twenty years,

"the young squires [in the House of Commons] felt that now their time had come. The Puritan, the Presbyterian, the Commons-wealth-man, all were at their feet."

But that the Parliament of 1661 was one of evil augury was by no means generally apparent to Wither's contemporaries. He may justly claim to be observant in so soon perceiving what stuff the new House of Commons was made of. "The impudence" which "in them appeareth," to him so visible, was wholly invisible to Evelyn during August, 1661, and he was of public morality a censor as sensitive as any. To another chronicler of that era, even of the Puritanic school, the first session of the Pensionary Parliament seemed to promise well. It certainly showed few symptoms, during the first three months of its existence, of the intolerance and venality which it so quickly displayed. And though from that Parliament soon sprang "taxes, impositions, and Court expenses," and consequent "domestic and political unquietness and discontent," yet the session of 1661 was marked, according to Ralph, that most unlaudatory of historians, by an "economy which justly reproached the profusion of later times."

The author of the 'Vox Vulgi' had correctly appreciated the Parliament of the Restoration. Barely readable as is his poem, it thus possesses even more historic importance than the editor assigns to it. Nor does he notice how eminently the fate that befell the poet was characteristic of 1661. This last attempt to "strip and whip abuses" was precisely that kind of offence against which Clarendon's policy was directed; for the speech from the throne, after warning Parliament not to touch "the happy act of indemnity and oblivion," contained the gracious suggestion that "you may be as severe as you will against new offenders," especially if they were, like Wither, offenders "upon the old principles" of Puritanism.

In conclusion, it may be noticed that marked as is the family likeness which exists between the House of Commons under the Stuarts and the House of Commons of the present century, still surprise may be felt at finding, among Wither's comments upon the Earl of Clarendon's Long Parliament, the following appropriate epitaph upon the Long Parliament of the Earl of Beaconsfield:—

This Parliament hath doubtlesly effected
What could from such a meilly be expected,
And their Obstruckers we will not condemn
In all things wherewith some have charged them.
An acting by or beyond Precedent
To blame them for, it is not our intent,
Though Precedent is no Law nor Warranty
Nor Rule at all times to be guided by,
And though the things that have been done, we own
When done.....Deeds are made good or ill,
Better or worse, according to the Will.

An Introduction to Roman Law. By William A. Hunter. (Maxwell & Son.)

THE concentration of so large a proportion of the national intellect as the Romans devoted to the production of a legal literature raises one of the most interesting problems in the history of human thought, and whoever solves it will throw light on many other questions. He will account, among other things, for the production of the excellent text-book before us. The Greeks produced no systematic jurisprudence written or unwritten. Justinian's commissioners, on the other hand, extracted the Digest from nearly two thousand Roman law books, according to Mr. Hunter's computation, and these were selected from a larger number. We cannot regard Mr. Hunter's explanation of the great productiveness of the Romans in this field as adequate or satisfactory. Augustus, as he says, gave a higher authority to the opinions of the juriconsults, and admitted to the exercise of the profession only those who had obtained imperial sanction, so that the jus respondendi was thenceforward confined to a privileged class of authorized jurists.

"The authority given to the opinions naturally extended to the writings of the juriconsults. Hence an extraordinary impetus was given to the production of legal literature, and to the activity that followed we owe the rich store of juridical reasoning that constitutes the permanent value of the mature Roman law."

Privilege and monopoly are not wont to foster mental activity. A limitation of the general right of authorship to men of letters licensed by the Government would surely neither augment the quantity nor improve the quality of English literature. The rate of production of law books in the United Kingdom during the last hundred years was probably not exceeded during the most fertile age of Roman jurisprudence. If the quality of Roman jurisprudence was higher—a point which we are not called upon to determine—we must look deeper for the cause, that is to say, to fundamental differences in polity and society, such as the different position of the wife in the two systems, and the English distinction between real and personal property, resulting chiefly from feudalism. It did not fall within the plan of Mr. Hunter's treatise to compare the broad features of the two systems of law, but his incidental comparisons on particular points might easily have been fuller and have gone a little further below the surface.

As an example of exposition at once clear and concise we may refer to Mr. Hunter's account of the changes in the law of intestate succession during the period beginning with the XII. Tables and ending with Justinian's Corpus Juris, although we think it would have been desirable to enlarge the statement so as to show the exact place of the father and mother in the line of inheritance before and after Justinian's reforms. The account of the changes with respect to testamentary succession is still more instructive. Positive law is a dry study except in so far as it possesses the attraction of logical symmetry and scientific arrangement, but the philosophy of the history of law is not dry, as Sir Henry Maine's works have abundantly shown. We have an example of the interest surrounding it in Mr. Hunter's account of the Roman will. The primary purpose of the Roman will was to appoint an heir or a universal successor. The reason, as he points out, was that the heir was the person bound to perform the duties of filial piety to the deceased, including originally the performance of the proper funeral rites. Ancient law shows many traces of the horror with which the forefathers of our race contemplated dying without an heir. The first remedy in the case of childlessness was adoption. The testamentary appointment of an heir was the next step. This theory of the origin of the will differs from Sir Henry Maine's, but the latter is not irreconcilable with it. Mr. Hunter's account of the original absence of agency from Roman law and its subsequent limited development is likewise of interest. The actual person who intervened in a legal act and no other could originally benefit from it. This is connected with the strict formalism of the old law. Every legal act involved elaborate ceremonies, and possessed in the eye of the Roman law a sort of sacramental efficacy. The benefit could not be given to a person who had not gone through the regular forms. The patris potestas and slavery, however, supplied a partial substitute for agency. Slaves and some under power could acquire for the paterfamilias, though not for themselves. In later times the necessities of commerce introduced agency in two other cases, namely, the contracts of the captain of a ship and of the manager of a shop. In another work Mr. Hunter has disputed Savigny's doctrine that the later Roman law admitted agency in the case of all non-formal contracts, and he may be excused for not repeating his arguments in the present introductory treatise. But he would have done well to explain in it how the contract of mandate differed from agency. A person might, he says, under the head of "Mandate," give you a mandate to manage his business or to buy a farm for him. It will not be at once obvious to students how the person empowered to do these things differed in that respect from an agent. The writer of a text-book should always proceed on the assumption that the reader knows nothing, and that his ideas on the subject, if he has any, are wrong. He should above all things avoid Gibbon's unpleasant trick of telling a story by allusion.

Mr. Hunter is justified in speaking of the interest attaching to the Roman law of procedure as in the main historical; but it is a little wide and vague to say that "the history of procedure is, in one word, the history of the efforts of the State to control the transactions of men." While procedure is growing, and the jurisdiction of the State extending itself in that respect, its control may be relaxed over some other departments of human affairs. It may be withdrawing from the sphere of religion; or, again, it may cease to regulate prices at the very time that it assumes jurisdiction to enforce contracts in respect of them.

Mr. Hunter has, we think, done well in this treatise to follow in the main the order of the Institutes of Gaius and Justinian, instead of distributing the Law of Persons under jura in rem and jura in personam, as in his larger work on Roman Law.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Lady Laura. By Mary E. Christie. 3 vols. (Strahan & Co.)

The Actor's Wife. By Edmund Leathes. 3 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

Jack Allyn's Friends. By G. Webb Appleton. 3 vols. (Same publishers.)

Griest Romney. By M. E. Fraser-Tytler. 2 vols. (Marcus Ward & Co.)

The Mistress of Coen Hall. By Margaret R. Cartmell. (Walter Smith.)

Wandering Will. (Remington & Co.)

Cross Purposes. By Cecilia Findlay. (Marcus Ward & Co.)

The Story of Heritage. By Herbert Gough. (Remington & Co.)

The Challenge of Berletta. By Massimo d'Azeglio. Translated by Lady Louise Magenis. 2 vols. (Allen & Co.)

Les Amours d'un Pianiste. Par Hippolyte Audeval. (Paris, Calmann Lévy.)

RHAPSODICAL yearnings after the religion of the future woven into a romance of modern life do not offer a tempting feast to ordinary novel-readers. 'Lady Laura' proves that proselytes cannot prudently embrace the new faith so long as most people recognise distinctions of manners and status in matrimony as well as property. On the other hand, the creed is free from dogmatic difficulties, and is adapted by its vagueness to the wants of progressive societies. It is nowhere precisely formulated, but we are told that "love is God," and that "somewhere in some one soul the highest is revealed to each of us. And that soul becomes to us a temple for evermore, a shrine at which we kneel, a holy of holies where we meet the Eternal face to face." The three principal characters in the story—Maurice Herve, his wife, Lady Laura, and Cassandra Gwynne—have all drifted from orthodoxy into the haven of this new religion. Complications arise when Lady Laura discovers that her husband is Cassandra's divinity, and that he returns the flattering worship. The struggle in Cassandra's mind between love for Maurice and loyalty to his wife is depicted with considerable force and power of expression. But it is difficult to regard the chief characters except as fictions created to exemplify the propositions of the author, and the prominence of the purpose degrades her art into artifice. Still, in spite of this defect, Cassandra Gwynne is a powerful, and Lady Laura an attractive, study, and some of the smaller figures are lightly and effectively sketched. The English is good throughout, and flashes of something like eloquence counterbalance the occasional lapses into incoherency.

Mr. Leathes tells his story freshly, buoyantly, not to say boyishly, without pretences of wisdom or affectation of fine writing, and thus he has quite as much chance of being read and approved as if his art and his style had been five times better than they are. No doubt his language is a little turgid and artificial, his fun a little forced, and his machinery somewhat clumsy, but these are precisely the faults which might be expected in a young author and in his first attempt. There is all the more hope that time and practice may bring Mr. Leathes greater success if he has the heart to repeat his experiment; and the critic may forgive himself for offering what would otherwise be a cruel encouragement in view of the hopeful indications, and in view also of the fact that an actor could not more naturally and legitimately occupy the intervals of his histrionic work than in creating out of his own mind a stage, a plot, a company, in which he can constitute himself his own prompter, his own manager, and his own deus ex machina.

Jack Allyn has a friend called Sandford, and when they were at Oxford the latter was familiarly known as "Sandford and Merton"—a sobriquet which, as Mr. Appleton informs us on his first page, gave rise among feeble-minded undergraduates to "more or less badinage about the immortal Barlow." Why it should have done so, or why Mr. Sandford should be called himself and somebody else at the same time, the casual reader may be able to determine from the statement as it stands above; and if not, there is nothing else in the story to indicate a solution of the difficulty. In point of fact, "Sandford and Merton" and "the immortal Barlow" seem to constitute the elements of what Mr. Appleton desires us to understand as a humorous sally. Another sally occurs six pages later (with many intervening), which runs in the following terms:—

"If Swift didn't get his idea of Lilliput from Conway, then he must have travelled out of his way for a model and an idea, that is all." These are fair samples of the wit that sparkles throughout the three volumes which record the story of Jack Allyn and his friends, and no one who does not appreciate it sufficiently to relish it for some seven hundred pages can hope to unravel the mystery which is here woven together for him. The result, however, will be thought worthy the effort by all who like a good string of sensations and lively incidents, without greatly troubling themselves about what is probable and what is the reverse. Sandford (and Merton), who is the chief of Mr. Allyn's pleiad of friends, falls in love with Ethel Leighton, concerning whose parentage a great deal of unnecessary mystery is kept up until we are well into the third volume. "The heart of him" is completely captivated by "the face of her"; but, in accordance with the most approved rules of fiction, the course of their mutual affection is disturbed by the intervention of a young (and needless to say a mysterious) French "compie." The supposed rival is promptly murdered. Sandford (and Merton) is suspected of the crime, and in order to release him from the embarrassment it is found necessary to have another murder attempted in the same house, and thus to discover the mysterious culprit. Mr. Appleton cannot be highly complimented on the ingenuity or verisimilitude of his plot, nor even on the general tone of his narrative. Both might have been refined by the devotion of another six months to the task of revision; and it is surely better to spend two or three years over the production of a careful work of art than to multiply the number of one's deliverances at the expense of their literary value.

It is a pity Miss Fraser-Tytler does not amend a few slipshod expressions, for she is not without ease and fluency of style.

"A letter, which when it came only brought the news of the engagement being at an end, but giving no reason how such had come to pass. Reggie wished to start for home at once; but such could not be."

The little pronoun "it" might have served her turn better in the above passage. The story is harmless; and if it contain no moral, except that Jack Hunt is rightly punished for his fickleness or self-confidence in thinking he could supply the void left by Lenore's desertion within ten days of that misfortune, it is sometimes well to take one's fiction thoughtlessly. The incidents which support the plot are a commonplace piece of mistaken self-sacrifice—one of the heroines marrying an ancient peer for her father's sake—and a commonplace piece of self-deception—a girl getting so accustomed to sisterly nonsense with a youth that she does not find out she is in love with him till he is on the point of being lost to her. The kindly author brings all things right: the filial duty of Lenore is rewarded, and the old lord made happy; Grisel jilts Jack Hunt, and marries her boy; and the wretched Jack, who is at the bottom of all the mischief, is taken in hand for the third time by a lady of some spirit and a spice of temper.

Miss Cartmell has a strange taste in nomenclature. Coon Hall, the Wybeers, Cumnston, and Burkley are among her ideal names. The Wybeers are an old family, represented by a lady, the last of the line. The mistress of Coon Hall, as "last of the Wybeers," travels about the country at mysterious times and in strange guises, speaks in a weird and stilted fashion, and is generally accompanied by a black cat. She adopts this line of conduct in order to protect her nephew, on whose union with one Miss Berriton the fulfilment of certain prophecies depends, from his culpable weakness with regard to one Alice Montague. As that very weak and second-rate young person abandons him when wounded by the too zealous agents of his aunt, and leaves Miss Berriton to the brunt of what she supposes to be danger, Max, the nephew, has no difficulty in the end in meeting Miss Wybeer's wishes. It is discovered, too, that Alice and he are the grandchildren of twins, which is thought a great obstacle to their union. Isabella Berriton, having got over the sulky dignity which was the consequence of being the victim of prophecy, makes him an excellent wife. This is partly a sublime book, but often touches the ridiculous.

The author of 'Wandering Will' acknowledges that his tale is foolish, so criticism is perhaps superfluous. It is the narrative, "founded on fact," of a runaway journey to America of a lad of sixteen, who is somewhat weary of a too decorous home. Leaving the shelter of a cathedral close and the unrequited attentions of a rather fussy aunt, he embarks in an emigrant ship for the States. It is wonderful how little he sees in his travels. Having exhausted his funds he is walking into Canada, when a mysterious voice tells him to go back. The narrative is relieved with poetry, of which the following may suffice as a specimen:—

Flow'r-sweets shall thy bed
Visit vagrantly,
Breeces blossom-fed
Woo thee fragrantly.

From another passage it appears that the accent of these adverbs is placed on the last syllable.

A very young-lady-like story is 'Cross Purposes.' Elsie Bertram and Alice Heathcote are two damsels who share the same home (Elsie being Alice's "companion" from stress of circumstances), and are carrying on a sort of triangular duel with the same lover. Frank Heathcote, Alice's first cousin, has been unjustly disinherited, and in order to make restitution and carry out what she believes to be her dying father's wishes, Alice proposes to marry Frank, although she is consumed by an attachment to the parish clergyman. Frank, for his part, is ardently in love with Elsie, a state of mind which has been produced in him by a combination of irresistible circumstances very deftly put together, but for Alice's sake endeavours to subdue his feelings. Elsie, in love with Frank, magnanimously endeavours to promote his marriage with her friend. Of course all these self-denying schemes break down, and every one is made happy. There is nothing remarkable in the book, except perhaps an abnormal amount of blushing by the ingenuous youth of both sexes.

Heritage is the name of a girl who describes in a short and rather feeble volume her emotions on encountering a gentleman who seemed to her to be a very Apollo in looks and a Hercules in strength, and the consequences of the meeting. Mr. Eedale is a man of family and wealth, and the motto of alibi cole has been acted on conscientiously in matrimonial matters by his family. When Heritage discovers, on the death of Colonel Dare, that she is only his adopted daughter, and really the orphan child of his servant, she is so overwhelmed with shame as to desert the too magnificent Mr. Eedale, to whom she is by this time engaged to be married. Like most heroines of modern times, she becomes a governess, but her probation is not dwelt upon at great length, for the Hercules-Apollo soon comes upon the scene, and behaves (strange to say) like any other gentleman. It is difficult to say whether the supreme awe felt by the lady for the gentleman's social standing or the extremely impressionable heart concealed beneath his formidable exterior be the more edifying part of the story.

Of the novels to which the influence of Scott, and more immediately the success of the 'Promessi Sposi,' gave birth in Italy, one of the best known in this country is probably that written by D'Aeglio as a dutiful disciple of his father-in-law. The period of Spanish power in Italy seems to have attracted them both; but while Manzoni's story has, as all the world knows, its scene in Lombardy, 'Ettore Fieramosca,' as the original title of the book before us runs, 'La Difesa di Barletta' being its second only, takes us far down the Adriatic coast. The structure of the younger story is lighter and more conventional, but the inspiration is obviously the same, and a translator should "train" for his work on a course of Scott. Lady Louisa Mageniz seems to have attacked her work with little aid beyond a dictionary; hence, though we do not find many faults of translation (and those chiefly in proper names, as where Roma and Puglia are left in their Italian form, in which the English reader would hardly recognize Aragon and Apulia), there is a lack of style about the book which makes it rather heavy reading. Slang phrases also, such as "low form," "a tip," and slipshod expressions, such as "while these events were transpiring," "attractive female relatives," "bataille d'entrance," are particularly out of place in the romantic-historical novel. Perhaps the most serious fault is that in chapter iv. of the second volume, where a letter of Alexander VI. to his son, instead of being translated in full, is, for reasons at which we can only guess, reduced to a bald abstract, whereby the remarks of the author which follow are rendered perfectly unintelligible. As the substance of the letter is given there is nothing particularly "horrible" about it, and there is nothing to show that any treachery against "the cardinal of Corneto" is proposed in it. Not only a translator's duty to the original, but her author's own reasons for giving the letter in full, might have saved Lady Louisa Magenis from what may be almost called a breach of faith with her readers.

M. Audeval is a novelist of some talent, but we wish he had not read 'Fanny' and 'La Comtesse de Chalis.' 'Les Amours d'un Pianiste' is an attempt to beat those masterpieces on their own ground, and in a way, perhaps, it succeeds. The hero is a more amiable and more childish, though a less petulant, person than the hero of the work which recommended the late M. Feydeau to some people, and the heroine is very much more detestable than the heroine of the book which (if we may be allowed the phrase) unrecommended him to a good many others. Cordelia Wittmore (we must admit that the precise form of the surname has not come under our notice in this country) is an Englishwoman, and a very amiable specimen of our race, being simply a model of cold-blooded vice. Her lover is a young artist, we fear it must be added also a young fool, and his autobiographic relation of his folly is neither edifying nor pleasant. The inevitable husband, however, is a study not wanting in power, and shows that M. Audeval can do better things than this if he chose. The "common form" of the eccentric Briton is taken as a foundation, but upon this unpromising basis a really finished study is elaborated. M. Audeval saves his man from being contemptible while avowedly making him ridiculous, and exhibits him as possessing just enough of manly feeling and spirit to preserve the reader's respect while endowing him with weaknesses and faults sufficient to excuse to a certain extent the crime of his companions, to take the story out of the class of the wholly preposterous, and to satisfy in some measure the purposes of fictitious justice. The study is of a kind not common in French novels, and has very decided merits. Nor are we prepared to say that there is nothing to be said for the musical hero. The failure lies in the heroine, who is one of those monstrosities which only the highest genius can render possible or tolerable. This genius M. Audeval can hardly be said to possess.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Shropshire Word-book: a Glossary of Archaic and Provincial Words, &c., used in the County. By Georgina F. Jackson. Part II. (Trübner & Co.)—We noticed the first part of Miss Jackson's glossary soon after its appearance, and have little to add to what we then said. In compilations of this kind it is not uncommon to find the earlier letters of the alphabet have received much more careful treatment than those nearer the end. This is not the case here. The part before us extends from "E" to the middle of "N," and it seems to be in many ways an improvement on that which went before it. The specimens of the local speech are, we think, more numerous, and are certainly selected with equal care; there is also a greater body of examples taken from printed books and manuscripts. It might be objected that some of the former, the quotations from Burns, for example, are out of place, inasmuch as Burns was by no means a Shropshire man. In the majority of cases, however, Miss Jackson has exercised a wise discretion in this particular. The first duty of the compiler of a local glossary is to give all the information that is to be had as to the special uses of each word in the district to which the glossary relates, but it is also important, though in a far less degree, that the reader should be informed how widely its use extends—whether, like gie, to give, and galloes, mischievous, it is to be heard throughout the whole of the English-speaking parts of the island, or, like many agricultural and mining terms, is restricted to one narrow locality. Copiousness may be carried too far. All words that vary in sound or meaning, however slightly, from the current forms should undoubtedly find a place in such a book as this, but we can see no use in inserting good book-English words, such as lag, to fall behind, and lap, to fold up, both of which occur in Shakespeare and Sir Walter Scott and scores of authors between them. Under "Humber," a Shropshire name for the cockchafer, Miss Jackson gives additional currency to the old notion that the river Humber took its name from the humming noise made by its waters. This is certainly wrong. The Humber does not hum more than other rivers, nor nearly so much as the Parret, the Ouse, the Trent, and other rivers on which the high tidal wave known as the bore or seagre manifests itself. The origin of the name is at present an unsolved enigma, but we are certain that the guess quoted by Miss Jackson has no more to be said for it than Geoffrey of Monmouth's fancy that the Severn was so called because Sabrina was drowned therein.

A Sanskrit Grammar, including both the Classical Language and the Older Dialects of Veda and Brāhmana. By W. D. Whitney. (Leipzig, Breitkopf & Härtel; London, Trübner & Co.)—Whereas heretofore all Sanskrit grammars written for Europeans in European languages—from that of Carey down to those of Bopp, Wilson, Benfey, Williams, Kielhorn, and Müller—have been more or less closely based on their Hindu predecessors, Prof. Whitney's work entirely breaks with the traditional method. His attempt is as novel as it is bold, but he has successfully grappled with the difficulties of his problem. With good practical sense he has given a digest of the main facts of the language, treating them historically and on the principles of modern linguistic science. For this purpose he has included in his scheme the forms and constructions exhibited in the older language, and has, as far as practicable, given full and elaborate details as to the changes of accent in combinations and inflection. Since much of this additional matter might appear cumbersome and deterrent to a beginner, and be reserved by most teachers for a higher course of grammar, the author has made provision for the requirements of the various stages of progress by the use of different sizes of type. His remarks on the use of the cases and tenses are very valuable, and far better than what we have met with on the subject in other Sanskrit grammars. We think, however, that he has allowed himself to be carried too far by his reformatory spirit in omitting to add, in brackets, under their respective heads, the native technical terms and anubandhas, a knowledge of which is indispensable for a correct understanding of the native commentaries. As a philosophical exposition of the Sanskrit language in its various stages, and a trustworthy guide to its forms as exhibited throughout the wide range of Sanskrit literature, Prof. Whitney's work deserves unqualified praise, and may be said to mark an epoch in the history of Sanskrit philology.

A Grammar of the Chinyanja Language as spoken at Lake Nyassa, with Chinyanja-English and English-Chinyanja Vocabulary. By Alexander Riddell. (Edinburgh, MacLaren & Son.)—This excellent little book is an illustration of the rapid way in which the interior of Africa is being opened up. Lake Nyassa was an almost unknown region but a few years ago; it is now a centre of missionary work, for the sake of which Mr. Riddell's 'Grammar' has been published at the expense of the Free Church of Scotland. Chinyanja is the language spoken throughout the greater part of the country in the neighbourhood of Lake Nyassa, and belongs to a Kafir tribe which a short time ago occupied an area of no less than 40,000 square miles. It belongs to the family of speech termed Ba-ntu by Dr. Bleek, of which Zulu is the best known example, and, like its allied dialects, marks the concord between substantives, adjectives, pronouns, and verbs by means of prefixes. Unlike the southern and western dialects, however, it does not seem to possess any clicks. This may be regarded as confirming the view that wherever clicks are found in a Ba-ntu language they have been borrowed from the Hottentots. According to Rebman, Chinyanja takes a middle place between the southern or Zulu branches of the Ba-ntu family and the middle or Zangian branch, and it is considered by Mr. Riddell to be a typical example of a special group radiating from Lake Nyassa.

The Lay of the Himyarites. Translated and Edited by Capt. W. F. Prideaux. (Sehora.)—The history of the wild and barren country of the Hijaz and of its holy city Mecca has become familiar to the whole civilized world, thanks to the wide-spread influence of the Mohammedan religion, which had its origin there. Of the ancient and powerful kingdoms of the south of Arabia, on the other hand, scarcely a trace remains, and their very existence is remembered only as a vague tradition. At the present day, however, scientific investigation and exploration are rapidly supplying the missing links in the chain of the history of civilization. Egyptian, Phœnician, and Assyrian monuments have yielded up information almost as precise as the archives of a modern European state; the so-called Hamath inscriptions, which are being brought to light in great numbers, will, when deciphered, as they soon must be, tell us the story of the once mighty empire of the Hittites; and Orientalists have for some time past turned their serious attention to the Himyaritic inscriptions which record the deeds of the successors of that Queen of Sheba who came from Yemen, in the south of Arabia, to pay her tribute of admiration to the glory of King Solomon. But although we look to the inscriptions themselves for precise data, the interpretation of these is greatly aided by the vaguer notices found in the literature, poetry, and folk-lore of the various countries where the inscriptions occur. Scattered fragments of Himyaritic poetry, and incidental notices of Himyaritic history and genealogy, occur throughout Arabic literature, but the great sources of information are some ancient manuscripts which have within the last twenty years been rescued from the neglect in which they had for centuries remained in the mosques and private libraries of the chief cities of South Arabia. These works are for the most part based on those of Arab authors compiled within a few years of the conquest of the Himyaritic kingdom by the Muslims, when Himyaritic was yet a spoken language and the Himyaritic writing was still in use. They not only give valuable historical details, but furnish a complete key to the language and characters of the inscriptions. Amongst these manuscripts is one containing a poem by a certain Cadhi Neshwan ibn Sa'id, himself the descendant of a long line of Himyaritic princes, who died about the end of the twelfth century of our era. It is called 'Al Qasidat al Himyarīyah,' and has for its subject the transitory nature of earthly happiness and glory. As this theme is, however, illustrated by the enumeration of the sovereigns of Yemen in chronological order, and the list further explained by a commentary, apparently written by the poet himself, it will be easily seen that we have in this production materials for most valuable research. Amongst the princes mentioned it is interesting to notice El Harith, a name that, like Pharaoh and Caesar, became a dynastic title, and under the form Aretas appears in the New Testament; Balkis, the traditional name of the Queen of Sheba spoken of in the Bible, and whose visit to Solomon is recounted in this poem; Ifriks, the founder of a city in West Africa, and from whom the very name of Africa is derived, as those of America and Columbia are from the early discoverers, Amerigo and Columbus; and Shammar, who pushed his conquests into Asia and founded the city of Samarcand, also named after him. The Himyaritic princes, indeed, seem to have carried their victorious arms at different periods into remote parts of the East, even establishing colonies in China and Thibet. Here, too, is commemorated the bursting of the dyke at Maareb, which suddenly put an end to the prosperity of the south of the peninsula, and the stirring story of which is mentioned in the Koran and is a favourite theme with Arab historians. Dhu Nawwas, another king, who professed the Jewish religion and persecuted the Christians, throwing numbers of them into pits of fire in Nejran, is another character familiar to students of Arab history who reappears in the bardic register. Of course, this list of kings and the epitomes of their deeds which the poet gives have yet to be checked by the collateral evidence of history and inscriptions; but, although much of it is mere legend, there is a sufficient residue of undoubted fact to make it well worth more careful study. The poem has been edited by Capt. Pridoux, of the University of Bombay, with an excellent translation, and is furnished with a commentary and genealogical tables explanatory of the text. It is published at Sehore, and the impression, which is limited to twenty-five numbered copies, though the work of a comparative amateur in the school press of an Indian village, is quite an édition de luxe. The work is a most valuable contribution to the studies which M. Halévy, by his large "corpus" of Himyaritic inscriptions, and Dr. H. S. Müller in his 'Südarabische Studien,' have already brought within the realm of accurate scientific investigation. A popular account of the results of these explorations in the hitherto untrodden fields of Himyaritic history could not fail to be both interesting and profitable.

M. Leroux sends us the first number of the Revue Egyptologique, and also Inscriptions et Notices recueillies à Edfou, par le Vte. Jacques de Rouge. The first of these publications is a French Egyptological journal, resembling in its scope the Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache und Alterthumskunde, and, it may be added, by the same writers, the two contributors to both being Brugsch Bey and M. Eugène Revillout. Eminent as these two Egyptologists are, it is to be hoped that in some of the future numbers other Egyptologists will appear as co-operators in the undertaking. M. Chabas, whose name appears on the title-page, has not written anything in this number, nor has M. Maspero, le Vte. J. de Rouge, M. Pierret, nor M. Naville. As the interest of such a journal is that it should have numerous writers, it is to be hoped that they will be forthcoming to support the enterprise. There is always a great difficulty in supporting journals of this class, and the German journal already mentioned seems hardly to leave room for another of the same kind, except for the French school of Egyptology. The subjects treated in the Revue are not altogether new, but given in a more extended form. M. Revillout's 'Chronological Notes on the History of the Ptolemies' will interest those who study that difficult subject, especially as his unrivalled knowledge of the Coptic and demotic will throw considerable light from sources hitherto only imperfectly touched. Brugsch Bey's memoir on the word "Adôn" is philologically interesting, although he does not in it press the analogy of "adôn" or "aten" to "Adonai" as formerly, but considers it equivalent to "wakeol" or "vakil." His geographical study of Lake Moeris is also important, although some of the ideas there put forth have been already given in his geographical dictionary. The mythological part of the article is most attractive, and his account of the god Socharis a good study of the Memphite deity.

M. de Rouge's inscriptions from Edfou are not accompanied by any text, but are useful to Egyptologists, especially in relation to the geography of the Nomes and the study of the later texts, which begin to be analyzed, and are useful as scholia on the older mythology. Several of these have been published, but those that are here given have been carefully compared and improved. M. de Rouge has already rendered the greatest service to Egyptology by the numerous inscriptions he has published in the Studes Egyptologiques, and this last publication is invaluable for the inscriptions of Edfou, those of Denderah and Abydos having been published by Mariette Pascha. The quantity of inscriptions available for the study of the Egyptian monuments is now so great that it has become almost impossible to go through the whole in detail. The later texts are also particularly difficult to translate, from the numerous and unusual hieroglyphs used for ordinary words. The texts of Edfou, although not so interesting as the historical inscriptions, yet contain most important information about the products of the Nomes of Egypt and their arrangement under the Ptolemies, with a few mythological notices of the period. M. de Rouge has not only published inscriptions, but his labours have been formerly directed to the explanation of the geographical texts of the later temples.

BOOKS FOR EXAMINATION

Seven Stories. By Ascott R. Hope. (Griffith & Farran.)

The Otter's Story, and other Stories. By the Author of 'Friends in Fur and Feathers.' (Walter Smith.)

Jemima: a Story of English Family Life. By Adelaide. (Whittingham & Co.)

The Tapestry Room: a Child's Romance. By Mrs. Moleworth. (Macmillan & Co.)

Mr. Hope understands and writes about boys so well that every one who has been a boy must like and value his work. Of these seven stories of his at least five are thoroughly good reading. The best is, perhaps, "The Amateur Dominic," a confession in which the struggles of a proud young theorist in education with a restive and sniggering class are narrated with ever so much of liveliness and point. Very good in its way, too, is "Calf Love," which is enriched with some incomparable specimens of schoolroom amatory verse; and far too meritorious to be passed over in silence are "The Watch," "Dark Doings," and "The Great Unknown," the last as moving a record of the horrible dangers of youthful impertinence as can well be imagined. Mr. Hope's boys, it may be noted, are not prigs all sentiment, nor apes all mischief, nor athletes all muscle and wholesome ideas; they are boys, and there are few or none but will be glad to make their acquaintance.

The stories by the author of 'Friends in Fur and Feathers,' some of which have already seen the light in periodicals, make a charming volume now that they are gathered together and ornamented with illustrations fit for the drawing-room table. In 'The Otter's Story' there is a most spirited description of an otter hunt, and one's sympathies are with the otter. The story of the tame cockatoo Jacob will be a favourite. Jacob was a perfectly bewitching bird of his species, and his naughty mischievous tricks only endear him the more. There is something pathetic in Jacob's attempts, invariably defeated, to make holes in trees to receive imaginary nests, and when at last Jacob achieves the laying of an egg, and thus reveals the fact that all along Jacob has been a hen-bird whose maternal instincts had been baffled, the reader will feel a pang of sympathy. The story of the tame chinchilla is very charming also; in fact, the book itself will be a welcome gift to all who receive it.

'Jemima' is a most delightful book, and it is hard to say which of the characters one likes the most. Boy readers will certainly fall deeply in love with the heroine Jemima, who, as the elder sister and as leader of the revels, comes first in everything—books, work, play, and especially mischief.

Mrs. Moleworth is the queen of children's fairyland. She knows how to make use of the vague, fresh, wondering instincts of childhood, and to invest familiar things with fairy glamour. This is a companion story to 'The Cuckoo Clock,' and Dudd, the old raven, may take his place beside the cuckoo. Elder people will read the book with as much interest as children, or perhaps even more, for children will want to handle the fine gossamer threads, the "fancies strange and sweet," out of which the story is spun, and which will not abide handling or close questioning.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

A BIOGRAPHY of the late Rev. R. W. Sibthorp, by the Rev. J. Fowler, has been published by Messrs. Skeffington. Some unusual circumstances in his life made Mr. Sibthorp's conduct discussed and disputed about on more than one occasion. Ordained in 1815, he began as an Evangelical of an extremity. Five-and-twenty years afterwards he joined the Church of Rome; in that communion he remained two or three years, and then returned to the Protestant Establishment. Another interval of twenty years passes away, and in 1865 Mr. Sibthorp is again reconciled to Rome. He died in 1879 at the great age of eighty-seven, having received the last sacraments of the Roman Church. But as if determined to exhibit his inconsistency to the very end, he was, by his own desire, buried in the Protestant cemetery and with the funeral service of the Common Prayer Book. Of the honesty of purpose, the genuine piety, and thorough conscientiousness of Mr. Sibthorp's character, there has never been the slightest doubt. But a biography of the man, spun out to 400 pages, is quite uncalled for, nor is it easy to understand what possible good can be expected to result from this publication. Let admiration of Mr. Sibthorp's sincerity be carried ever so high, few will agree with the opinion of Mr. Fowler that he is to be regarded as a saint. Judging from what we read in this "Life," Mr. Sibthorp seems never to have been able quite to make up his mind when he was an Anglican that the Reformation was to be justified, or when he happened to be a Catholic whether the Pope is or is not Antichrist. The book is hardly a record, therefore, of the life of a man whose life is worth the reading. Its literary merits scarcely deserve criticism. The author, writing in a loose and confused kind of way, whilst certainly there is little to tell about Mr. Sibthorp, yet manages to put that little as obscurely as well may be. He seems to be himself what Mr. Sibthorp was in his early years, a Calvinist of the Evangelical school. As to dates or any clear narrative of facts the reader will be constantly disappointed. No index of any kind is given, except a list of the headings of the different chapters. A short chapter of four or five leaves contains all that Mr. Fowler thinks it necessary to devote to the most important part of Mr. Sibthorp's life, his first reception into the Roman Church, and a large part even of this brief space is taken up with an account of a couple of pamphlets. The book may very safely be recommended to anybody who finds it difficult to go to sleep, but we cannot discover of what other use or benefit it is likely to be.

THE French bibliographical journal Le Livre, of which a description was given in the Athenæum for the 24th of January, published by M. Quantin and edited by M. Octave Uzanne, has completed its first stage. The parts modernes, separated from the other portions of each number already issued, now form an entire volume, the cover and index of which will be supplied in the next number. The several sections of each livraison, having distinct pagination, are intended to be bound up separately; and the first part, devoted to the bibliography of ancient or rare books, and printed with ornamentation on special paper, will form at the end of the year a sumptuous volume, containing from sixteen to twenty plates, besides illustrations in the text. A new prospectus accompanies the present number, and the proprietors chronicle very considerable success as the immediate result of their arduous and costly undertaking. We trust this may continue, as the work richly deserves support. Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy writes in the journal every month. His letter this time is occupied almost entirely with Mr. Swinburne's new volume of poems, and gives an account of a recent reading of them by the poet himself to a select circle of friends. M. Jules Claretie also contributes a pleasant article on the love of books, entitled 'Mes Livres.'

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Wood's (W. B.) An Eastern Afterglow, or Personal Aspects of Sacred History, 8vo. 14s. cl.

Law.

Quinn (H. J. W.) and Forbes's (U. A.) Law relating to Waters, Sea, Tidal, and Inland, 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Klein's (Dr. J.) Student's Manual of the History, Laws, and Constitution of England, 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Macphail's (D. R.) Law relating to Money Lenders and Borrowers, 8vo. 9s. cl.

Fry's (H. J.) Notes on the Conflicting Claims to the Property of a Debtor, 8vo. 3s. 6d. cl.

Poetry.

Browning's (R.) Dramatic Idylls, Second Series, 12mo. 4s. cl.

Fanny, Sonnets and Poems by Claude Duval, 12mo. 3s. 6d. cl.

Macdill's (Rev. M. J.) Songs for Freedom, and other Poems, 12mo. 4s. 6d. cl.

Philosophy.

Mensch's (W. H. S.) Introduction to Logic, 8vo. 4s. cl.

History and Biography.

Gent's (R.) History of Russia, 12mo. 2s. cl.

Montague's (Capt. W. E.) Campaigning in South Africa, 12mo. 1s. 6d. cl.

Geography and Travel.

Welford's (H.) Holidays in Home Counties, 8vo. 4s. cl.

Science.

Dal (L. S.) On Slight Affluents, their Nature and Treatment, 8vo. 5s. cl.

Ellis's (J.) Advanced Algebra for the Use of Schools and Colleges, 8vo. 5s. cl.

General Literature.

Arnold (Matthew). Poems from the Poems Writings of, 178 Doudney's, 8vo. 5s. cl.

Emerson's (W. P.) Analysis of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, Part 2, Books 3, 4, and 5, 8vo. 5s. cl.

Maclean's (Mrs.) Cottage Gardens, and How to Cultivate them, with Eight large Diagrams, 3s. 6d. cl.

Murphy's (Rev. A.) Addresses to the Working People of Birmingham, 8vo. 2s. 6d. cl.

Wool's (Lady A.) From Generation to Generation, 4s. cl.

Taylor's (J. E.) Nature's Synthesis, a Series of Descriptive Papers in Natural History, 8vo. 7s. 6d. cl.

Tuer's (A. W.) Luxurious Bathing, a Sketch, Eight Etchings by Tristram Ellis, cheap edition 8vo. 5s. cl.

Wood's (S.) Tree Planter and Plant Propagator; Tree Pruner, being a Practical Manual on the Pruning of Fruit Trees, 12mo. 2s. 6d. cl.

Romances.

Theology.

Lehardt (H.) Die Moderne Weltanschauungen u. ihre praktischen Konsequenzen, 8m.

Philosophy.

Janet (F.) Précis d'Économie de Philosophie et l'Éloge des Chances, 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Philosophy.

Brugsch Bey (H.) Hieroglyphisch-deutsches Wörterbuch, Vol. 8, 11s. 6d.

Thompson's Archæologia Constant. Opuscula Historica, ed. Cur. de Boer, 8m. 5s.

Pomponii Mela de Chorographia, Libri Tres, recogn. C. Frick, 1m. 50.

History and Biography.

Körting (G.) Geschichte der Literatur Italiens im Zeitalter der Renaissance, Vol. 3 (Boccaccio's Leben), 16m.

Mauver (Kon.) Zur Politischen Geschichte Islands, 6m.

Monuments Medii Aevi res Gestas Polonice Illustrantis, Vol. 3, Codices diplomatici Civitatis Cracoviensis, Pa. 1, 16m.

Roschke (H.) Recueil Clairambault-Maurepas, Vol. 4, 10 fr.

Geography.

Paulinche (F.) Die Geographische Erforschung d. Afrikanischen Continents von d. ältesten Zeiten bis auf unsere Tage, 6m.

Science.

Adolph (G. E.) Über Insektenfügel, 8m.

Fischer (H.) Nephrit u. Jadeit n. ihren Mineralogischen Eigenschaften so wie nach ihrer Ethnograph. Bedeutung, 1m. 40.

Gruet (R.) Die Echluren (Gephyren Armata), 16m.

Ranvier (A.) Die Quebracho-Rinde, 3m.

Unger (C.) Description Géologique et Paléontologique du Limbourg, 8m.

General Literature.

Belongue (F. de) La Main Coupée, 3 Vols., 7 fr.

Uzanne (O.) Contes de Charles Pinot-Duclos, publiés avec une Notice Bio-bibliographique, 10 fr.

MILTON NOTES.

Edinburgh, June 26, 1880.

It is about twenty years since one heard first of the existence of records relating to an action in the Westminster Court of Requests, in 1637, by Sir Thomas Cotton, baronet, against Milton's father, the retired scrivener, and his partner or servant, Thomas Bower, charging them with having, some years before, fraudulently persuaded the complainant's uncle, John Cotton, then an old and infirm man, to accept a sum of 2,000l. for money to the amount of 3,000l., which he had put in their hands to be let out for him at interest. There was further attention to the case in 1874, when details were brought to light from preserved documents of the Court in the Public Record Office. In an article by Mr. T. C. Noble in the Sun newspaper of Nov. 12th, 1874, and in other articles elsewhere about the same time, the substance of the documents was given very clearly, and especially the substance of the most interesting of them, viz., the scrivener's own answer to the complaint. This answer explained his old business connexions with the deceased John Cotton, repudiated utterly and with touching indignation the charge of fraudulent dealing in his profession, and, though intimating that there had been some private arrangement between Bower and old Cotton, of which the respondent knew nothing save by report, left a distinct impression that the ex-scrivener had thoroughly cleared himself, and that his son's well-known posthumous character of him as "a man of the utmost integrity" could receive no stain from this disinterred accusation.

As the story connects itself with the last year of Milton's life at Horton, and with the very week of the death of Milton's mother there, I have recently, for the purposes of a revised edition of a former volume of mine, examined the documents in the Record Office for myself. The search was facilitated by very exact references kindly furnished me by Mr. Noble, and by courteous official assistance in the reading-room. With the results, in the shape of the tissue of new incidents to be inserted into Milton's life at Horton between 1636 and 1638, I need not trouble you; but two matters are of a kind to be made public at once.

One of these is not a direct result of the inspection of the Record Office documents, but is an addition for which I am indebted to Mr. Noble in a communication to me since that inspection. The reading of the documents amply confirmed the impression that the scrivener had cleared himself perfectly by his answer. It even conveyed the idea that this was the opinion of the Court, and that the case was deserted in its first form of Cotton v. Milton and Bower, and was continued, so far as it was continued at all, only in the form of Cotton v. Bower. Still, from defect of positive paper evidence, there was a haze over the conclusion of the case in court as it respected Milton. Mr. Noble's communication sets that matter at rest. He has just found, in the Cottonian collection of charters in the British Museum, "five documents carefully placed under one cover," all appertaining to Sir Thomas Cotton's suit. These are: (1) the original draft of Sir Thomas's complaint; (2) Bower's answer; (3) Bower's further answer; (4) a letter from Henry Perry, Sir Thomas's agent in the case, to Sir Thomas, dated April 3rd, 1637, giving an account of what had been done in the case up to that date; (5) final order of the Court so far as Milton was concerned, dated February 1st, 1637/8. It seems to me likely that these papers have been looked at before, and, indeed, that the first public knowledge of the case about twenty years ago came from this source. But Mr. Noble, I believe, has been the first to perceive the importance of those of the papers that supply information additional to that yielded by the Record Office documents. These are Nos. 4 and 5, of both of which he has obligingly sent me copies. Much of what is contained in No. 4 was ascertainable from the Record Office documents or might have been inferred from them; but No. 5 is a real discovery. With Mr. Noble's permission I here transcribe it: "Primo die februarii Anno R. Caroli decimo tertio.—Whereas Sir Thomas Cotton, Kt., long since exhibited his bill of Compt' unto the Kings Ma^{ty} before his highnes Councell in his h^{on} Court of Whitehall att Westmst ag^t John Milton, defend^t, unto w^{ch} bill the s^d def^t the same tearmes answered; with w^{ch}, as it seemeth, the s^d compt^t resteth satisfied, for that he hath by the space of two whole tearmes last past and upwardes fayled to replye or otherwise to p^{ro}ceede in the said cause, whereby to bring the same to hearinge, as by the ordinary course of this Court he ought to have done: Therefore it is, by his Ma^{ty} said Councell of this Court, Ordered that the same matter shalbe from henceforth out of this Court clearely and absolutely dismissed for ever (for want of p^{ro}secucion); and the said defend^t, as concerninge the same, is discharged of any further attendance in this behalfe, and lycensed to depart att his lib^{tie} (sine die); and that the said compt^t Sir Thomas Cotton shall p^{ro}sentie, uppon sight or knowledge hereof, content and pay unto the said defend^t Milton, or to his assignes demandinge the same, the full some of Twentie Shillings of current english money, for his costs herein wrongfully susteyned."

The other matter that may interest your readers at present concerns the age of Milton's father. The well-known tradition from Aubrey makes him to have been at least eighty-four years of age at his death in March, 1646/7, and so would make him at least seventy-four at the time of Sir Thomas Cotton's suit. Although the concurring evidences to the truth of this tradition are all but irresistible, it has been perseveringly called in question of late, on the ground that, if it is correct, Milton's father must have been thirty-six or thirty-seven years of age when he was admitted of the Scriveners' Company in February, 1599, whereas such admission was possible at the age of twenty-one, and customary at little over that age. True, the difficulty is met by the accompanying tradition, from Aubrey and also from Phillips, that the poet's father had entered the profession in special circumstances and in a somewhat irregular manner; but incredulity has extended to that tradition too. Henceforth, however, all mere speculation on the subject must cease, and Aubrey's tradition as to the age of the scrivener has to stand to the very letter. The scrivener was allowed, in the spring of 1637, to give his answer in the Cotton suit at Horton, instead of coming up personally to Westminster, and the reasons for this indulgence are expressed in the following affidavit in his behalf, dated April 1st, 1637, which I found in the preserved Affidavit Book of the Court in the Record Office:—

"Whereas John Milton, gen., hath been served with his Majesty's process of Privy Seal issuing forth of this honourable Court to answer to a bill of complaint against him exhibited by Sir Thomas Cotton, baronet, plaintiff, Christopher Milton, son of the said defendant, maketh oath that his said father, being aged about seventy-four years, is not, by reason of his said age and infirmity, able to travel to the city of Westminster, to make his perfect answer to the said bill, without much prejudice to his health, he living at Horton in the county of Bucks, about seventeen miles distant from the city of Westminster."

This settles the question. The poet's father was born not later than 1563, and was, therefore, almost exactly Shakespeare's coeval. He was about thirty-six or thirty-seven years of age when he became a London scrivener and married Milton's mother, whose age was then not less than about twenty-eight; he retired from the active business of scribbership in or about 1631, when he was about sixty-eight; he became a widower in April, 1637, when he was about seventy-four; and he lived ten years beyond that, and died in his son's house in Barbican, when, as Aubrey tells us, he was eighty-four years of age at least. DAVID MASSON.

ANTIOCHUS THE GREAT.

21, Charles Street, Berkeley Square, June 29, 1880.

It will be interesting to Assyrian scholars to learn that among the antiquities recently received at the British Museum from the excavations at Babylon is a fine clay cylinder of Antiochus the Great, containing sixty lines of cuneiform writing in a perfect state of preservation. The royal titles recorded on the cylinder are, with the exception of the ethnic distinction of Makluddunat, "Macedonian," the same as were borne by the old kings of Babylon, and furnish no special evidence as to which of the Antiochi may be designated; but as the king's father and son both bear on the cylinder the name of Seleucus—the orthography, however, being throughout employed of Sikukku, as if the Babylonians, like the Armenians, substituted a guttural for the Greek liquid—there can be no hesitation in identifying the monarch with Antiochus the Great, whose father was Seleucus Ceraunus, and whose son and successor was Seleucus IV. or Philopator. A date is also given on the cylinder—"the 20th day of the month Adar, in the 43rd year"—for the execution of certain works at Babylon, which would seem to show that the so-called Parthian epoch of a.c. 248 had been already adopted at Babylon as the national era, and in supersession of the better known Syrian "era of the Seleucids," the year indicated on the cylinder being thus equal to a.c. 205, when Antiochus the Great is known to have been wintering at Babylon after his return from his famous Indian expedition.

The inscription is written in the ornate cuneiform character, which we have been hitherto accustomed, on perhaps insufficient evidence, to term hieratic, and presents a good deal of variety from the alphabet of the same type which was used in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, but the language is to all intents and purposes the same that is found in Babylonian documents dating three centuries earlier; and the legend itself, recording the repairs by the king of the two great temples of Babylon, together with prayers for the royal protection to the tutelary divinities Nebo and Merodach, exhibits the stereotyped phrases with which all Assyriologists are familiar. The chief interest, therefore, of the document consists, not in any direct historical discovery, but in the evidence which is afforded that official records, of the same type as the early cylinders of Nimrod and Chaldeas, were deposited in the temples of Babylon long after the date of the Macedonian conquest, and in the hope which we are thus authorized to entertain that contemporary accounts of the campaigns of Alexander and his successors will be brought to light as excavations are continued in the mounds of Amran and Jamjūmah, from whence, it is understood, all the recent relics, including the cylinders and tablet of Cyrus the Great, have been exhumed. I am further glad to be able to announce that, at the personal solicitation of Sir Henry Layard before he left Constantinople, H.M. the Sultan was pleased to extend for another two years, dating from next spring, the period during which the employees of the British Museum are to be permitted to continue their excavation of the mounds of Assyria and Babylonia.

H. C. RAWLINSON.

THE NEW SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.

London Hospital, June 29, 1880.

WITH reference to a paragraph in last week's Athenæum, I shall be glad of your permission to mention that Dr. Nicholson has allowed me to consider his contemplated resignation as withdrawn, and that he will remain upon the Committee, at any rate for the present.

A. G. SNELOBOVE, Hon. Sec.

SALE.

THE sale of Mr. Cecil Dunn-Gardner's choice library was brought to a conclusion on Saturday last, at the rooms of Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge. Amongst the lots were Le Sage's Gil Blas, 8 vols., illustrated with 600 engravings, which sold for 30*l.*; Lodge's Portraits, 4 vols., large paper, 52*l.* 10*s.*; Manning and Bray's Surrey, 3 vols., large paper, 31*l.* 10*s.*; Nash's Mansions, 4 vols., 30*l.*; Ovide, Metamorphoses, par Banier, 4 vols., 25*l.* 10*s.*; Purchas's Pilgrimes, 5 vols., 74*l.*; Quintilian's Opera curante Spalding, 6 vols., 28*l.* 10*s.*; Shakespeare's Plays, first edition, with title-page in fac-simile, and wanting Ben Jonson's verses, &c., 75*l.*; second edition, 37*l.*; and fourth edition, 32*l.*; Shakespeare's Henry V., the 1608 edition, 30*l.* 10*s.*, or thrice the sum it sold for in Sir W. Tite's sale; King John, 1622, 10*l.* 10*s.*; King Lear, 1655, 7*l.* 5*s.*; Love's Labour Lost, 1631, 3*l.* 3*s.*; Othello, 1630, 15*l.* 10*s.*; Taming the Shrew, 1631, 14*l.* 10*s.*; Sir John Oldcastle, 1600, 6*l.* 15*s.*; Yorkshire Tragedies, 1619, 11*l.*; Two Noble Kinsmen, by Fletcher and Shakespeare, 1634, 13*l.*; Voltaire, Cævres, 70 vols., large paper, 41*l.*; Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting and Engraving, 5 vols., 31*l.* 10*s.* The six days' sale brought 4,734*l.* 4*s.*

MYSTER TRIST VAIHRI

I ADORE my country and I sincerely like yours. I am, therefore, truly glad to witness the rapprochement between England and France. Perhaps it would be an exaggeration to say that the two nations are throwing themselves into one another's arms. The movement is not so brusque; it is measured, continuous, uninterrupted; it proceeds with the wise slowness that presides over logical matters.

Do you remember that last year at this season there was still a black spot between the two countries? It was the question of the Hellenic frontiers. Our actors had gone to London, and you had applauded them. Our men of letters had paid you a visit, and you had received them with the most graceful and liberal hospitality. One felt that an invisible current of sympathy was passing the Channel. But our Governments were not of the same mind regarding the little kingdom of Greece. You thought as we did that it was necessary to give breathing space to an unlucky people confined within too narrow limits. Only the Beaconsfield Cabinet considered that we were over liberal. On no consideration would it extend Greece to Janina. On this question the disagreement was so decided that I could not refrain from mentioning and regretting it. In a letter to the Times I offered my farewell thanks to all those among you who had received us so cordially, and I was led on in spite of myself, so to say, to plead the cause of Greece, which in our eyes was mixed up with the cause of the Anglo-French alliance. Was I so very wrong? Is it not evident to-day that the Cabinet headed by the illustrious Mr. Gladstone has, by ensuring the triumph of the Philhellenic cause, brought the two countries nearer?

I am not suspected of a blind tenderness for the Greek people. When I made its acquaintance I was very young and it too, for we were about the same age, and youth is not exactly the indulgent age. But men, and peoples too, resemble fruits that, as they ripen, get rid of their acidity. A sincere observer, who had followed them step by step for fifty years, would certainly recognize that their little faults are almost all the effects of several centuries of slavery and of the too narrow limits assigned to them by Europe on their emancipation. On the other hand, the grand qualities which distinguish them from all contemporary peoples are their own. The Greeks, in truth, are a noble race, worthy of a better lot, and I am happy to see that England and France are agreed to do them justice.

The French diplomatist who has the honour of aiding Mr. Goschen in this work of redress is one of my friends and schoolfellows. He came to us late, about sixteen, at the Collège Charlemagne, and he at once took his place in the first ranks. His father, Professor of Philosophy in the Faculty of Dijon and author of a learned translation of Kant, had preferred to teach him himself. This worthy man had taught his son not only Greek and Latin, but also German and English. Charles Tissot, thus equipped, fell into the middle of us like an aërolite: he had great advantages over all his companions. Besides, he drew as other people wrote, as easily, as quickly, throwing off with a few touches clear and spirited sketches. It was on seeing him that I came to understand that drawing is the writing of objects, as writing is the drawing of ideas. 1848 separated us. Charles Tissot entered the École d'Administration with Charles Floquet and many other distinguished young fellows, who have made their way in the world in different manners. I know one of them who manages La Belle Jardinière, a well-known establishment: it competes with the great English clothiers in disguising the Japanese.

The École d'Administration was suppressed by Bonaparte in 1849, and the young men whom it had assembled shifted for themselves as they best could. Charles Tissot entered, not without difficulty, the Commercial Department of the Foreign Office; he came out as an élève consul in 1852, and set off for Tunis when I was leaving the École Normale for Athens. I should like to have still in my desk the brilliant letters he used to write to me from Africa in that happy time. Alas! they were stolen from me—stolen for the delightful drawings which illustrated every page.

M. Challemeil Lacour, who takes possession to-day of the Embassy house at Albert Gate, is one of my friends of the École Normale. Permit me to recommend him to the lettered public of England, as Mr. O'Donnell has performed his task but imperfectly.

In our dear old school in the Rue d'Ulm, Challemeil Lacour was the companion of Beulé, Mézières, Taine, Assollant, Prévost Paradol, and many other budding writers, who all of them had a high esteem for his character and talents, and with one accord prophesied a brilliant career for him. I must confess that none of us took the trouble to inquire if this profound thinker, correct speaker, lively and concise writer, had had a grocer or a marquis for his great-grandfather. We used to judge one another without going so far back, and we were not often deceived. England will not be slow to confirm our verdict, more equitable and less prejudiced than that of certain magistrates and sundry unscrupulous politicians. We his old schoolfellows only laughed when it was asserted that Challemeil Lacour had written,

"Fusillez-moi tout ça." The accusation was as comic as if they had said, "M. Challemeil Lacour is as bloodthirsty as a pupil of the Ecole Normale." But we did not laugh when we saw that a civil court had condemned our friend to pay exorbitant damages to a house of the Jesuits, which he had not been able to attack or defend, as at the time of the plundering he was himself a prisoner in the Prefecture at Lyons. Luckily the Cour de Cassation has not yet said its last word in this strange affair, and the judges who have stewed our friend will before long be judged in their turn.

It is a very great event in our eyes, the début of this ambassador of the nouvelles couches in a capital so proud, so aristocratic, but also so just and so thoroughly honest, as London. I am not uneasy about the upshot, for we have sent you as the representative of New France one of the most upright men who have been living for the last fifty years under the full light of the sun. But the nations do not know one another sufficiently. One could find in London thousands of rich traders who deem Gambetta a species of wild beast. They will soon change their opinion, for the wild beast told me this morning, June 29th, at breakfast that he hoped to pay you a visit immediately after the signing of the new treaty of commerce.

Since I last wrote to you we have lost a scholar, a connoisseur, and a fine critic, whose reputation was French rather than European, M. Edouard Fournier. Paul de Musset has gone to rejoin his brother, the French Byron—a less powerful Byron than yours, yet a poet to the tips of his fingers. Paul, who was not destitute of ability, was sacrificed all his life through to the glory of Alfred, yet he never complained. His house, respectable and modest, was full of relics piously preserved, a true temple of brotherly love.

Gustave Flaubert, who wrote a masterpiece, 'Madame Bovary,' and made a mistake in not stopping there, has died suddenly on his property in Normandy, where he often shut himself, to hide even from his friends the convulsions of a terrible malady, the morbus sacer of the Romans. He was a big man, with a face covered with pimples; his character was all of a piece, and his heart tender. The son of a surgeon, the brother of a noted surgeon, having inherited wealth, and with all his connexions by birth among the middle classes, he used to profess a horror of the middle classes, and took a sly pleasure in shocking their sense of propriety. He nevertheless showed himself as good and as generous as the best specimens of the middle classes in France and England, for he did not hesitate to sacrifice his whole fortune to save the honour of one of his relations, an unlucky speculator. He has left the inheritance of a fair portion of his ability to a young writer, his nephew or cousin, M. Guy de Maupassant. A volume of beautiful verses and a strange novel that has strayed into a naturalist miscellany, 'Les Soirées de Médan,' prove M. Guy de Maupassant to have a brilliant future before him.

I am much obliged for the kind way in which the Athenæum has spoken of 'Le Roman d'un Brave Homme.' All the reviewer's remarks are just, and I accept them with humility, except one. My dear sir, I am not guilty of injustice towards the Germans. Put yourself for a moment in my place. Suppose that the battle of Dorking had actually been fought; that the Germans had seized, by the right of the stronger, the tomb of your fathers and the cradle of your children; that, having returned for a day to your house to settle your affairs, you had been seized by the gendarmes, haled to prison, locked up in the same cell with a murderer, and finally acquitted because the conqueror could detect no other crime in you than patriotism, and say if you could speak of the Germans without a touch of anger. EDMOND ABOUT.

Literary Gossip.

THE 'Life of Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde,' which has been announced by Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons, has been long expected by his lordship's old friends and companions in arms. The work has been entrusted to General Lawrence Shadwell, C.B., who was Sir Colin Campbell's aide-de-camp throughout the Punjab campaign of 1849, and also in the Crimea and at the action of the Alma. General Shadwell has had the full command of all the materials left by Lord Clyde, and the volumes ought to prove a very complete biography.

A MEMOIR of Mr. Bradlaugh, which will contain particulars furnished by himself of his early struggles, is now in the press, and will be published in the course of a few weeks.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately a small volume entitled 'The Irish Crisis,' being a narrative of the measures for relieving the distress caused by the great Irish famine of 1845-6, by Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.O.B. This narrative originally appeared in the Edinburgh Review of January, 1848, when it excited such attention that it became necessary to reprint it separately. The author brings it forward again now in the idea that it may be of suggestive value in the present crisis.

MR. HILARY SKINNER, the veteran special correspondent, is now investigating, on behalf of the Daily News, the condition of the Albanians who object to be subjected to the dominion of Montenegro, and of the Greeks in Turkey who are about to be transferred to Greece.

THE annual meeting of the members of the Index Society will take place next week, Mr. Lowell, the American ambassador, in the chair. The Report of the Council speaks cheerfully of the work done and of the work in hand, but is rather desponding on the subject of subscriptions as being inadequate to the most important objects of the Society. Among the gifts received by the Council is a MS. index to the European Magazine, containing the following note by the unknown compiler: "Laus Deo! Commenced taking out 3rd March, 1824. Finished, after taking two copies, 26th January, 1833, generally devoting three months thereto."

MR. HENRY J. MATHEWS, M.A., Exeter College, Oxford, has been appointed by the Rev. H. O. Cox, Head Librarian of the Bodleian Library, as hbr locum tenens. This nomination will allow Mr. Cox to take a rest from time to time, rest well deserved after forty-two years' service in the library, but which was up to the present time out of his reach, owing to the comparatively small staff of librarians in this great library.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press and will shortly publish 'The Rebecca Riots,' a tale by Miss E. A. Dillwyn, daughter of the member for Swansea. The story is founded on what actually happened at the time of the so-called "Rebecca" riots in Wales in 1843.

THE Syndics of the Cambridge University Library printed 14,047 titles for their general catalogue in 1879, the titles of English new books being 3,771, foreign 2,078, and additions from donations and purchases 1,252; the remaining 6,946 are titles printed from the old manuscript, carefully revised. Special attention is called to the Rev. E. W. Blore's present of 'Collectanea Bloreana,' relating almost exclusively to the history of Derbyshire, the greater part in the handwriting of Mr. Thomas Blore, but also containing some earlier collections and a few original documents: twenty volumes folio and fifteen volumes quarto, besides three boxes of papers sorted according to parishes and hundreds.

THE library of Brasenose College, Oxford, has just acquired a copy of Dean Nowell's 'Middle Catechism' bearing date 1586, no edition having been previously known as published between 1581 and 1595. The book contains the Latin only, and the signatures run from A to H in eights. We hear that a complete bibliography of Dean Nowell's three catechisms, with their various translations, will shortly appear in Notes and Queries.

A COMMITTEE has been formed for the erection of a monument to the late Karl Gutzkow. Justizrath Karl Braun, of Leipzig, is the president, and a number of literary men, university professors and journalists, with the principal theatre managers of Vienna, Berlin, Stuttgart, Frankfurt, and Karlsruhe, have consented to act as local secretaries and receive subscriptions. As Gutzkow was one of the most prominent intellectual leaders of "young Germany" in criticism, the drama, and romance, there can be little doubt of a wide answer to the appeal of the Committee.

ON Saturday, June 26th, a monument to Adalbert von Chamisso, in the form of a bronze medallion portrait of the poet (after David's relief), was placed on the house in which he lived and died, 235, Friedrichstrasse, Berlin.

'I AND my King: Quill-sallies by Charles J. Dunphie and Albert King,' is the title of a book which will shortly be published by Messrs. Tinsley Brothers.

MR. W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN is now engaged upon two Danish stories which he is adapting to English readers. Both were published quite recently and have met with success in Denmark.

THE following anecdote of General Garfield, the Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States, has a special literary interest. Once he was visited at Washington, and found surrounded with a huge pile of books. He explained his occupation by saying, "I find I am overworked and need recreation. Now, my theory is that the best way to rest the mind is not to let it be idle, but to put it to something quite outside of the ordinary line of its employment. So I am resting by learning all the Congressional Library can show about Horace and the various editions and translations of his poems."

PROF. FORSTER, of the University of Rostock, has been entrusted by the German Government with a mission to collate the MSS. of Libanius for a definite critical edition. For that purpose he will spend the summer vacation in the libraries of England.

IN bringing out a fifth edition of his useful and interesting 'Lehrgang der Russischen Sprache,' Dr. August Bolts defends with much spirit the Russian language from the charge sometimes brought against it of being "a rude, uncultured form of speech, which the Russians themselves despise." To show the enormities to which a tongue which specially prides itself on being cultured may give rise, he quotes from Ausland what he justly designates the word-monster, "Zürchersalsverbrauchsbuchhaltungsverordnung"!

THE forthcoming part of the Journal of the British Archaeological Association will contain, among other articles, papers on 'Walsingham Priory,' by the late T. J. Pettigrew; 'Place-Names in Norfolk,' by J. A. Picton; 'Note on a Cist with Axe-head Sculptures near Kilmartin, Argyshire,' by J. Romilly Allen; 'Description of an Ancient Crypt at Aldgate,' by E. P. L. Brock; and 'The Forest Laws of England,' by O. H. Compton. Among the illustrations are a plate of two inscribed leaden tablets, of the period of the Republic, from Roman sepulchral cists in the Citta Vecchia, Malta, and a plan of recent discoveries by excavation at Wolvesey Castle, Winchester.

DR. A. HAMANN, Hon. M.A., the Taylorian teacher of German at Oxford, is engaged upon a German reader, which will contain specimens from the earliest time to the beginning of the eighteenth century. Dr. Buchheim is preparing a similar work, beginning with the eighteenth century down to the present time. Both will be published by the Delegates of the Clarendon Press.

THE volume of sermons with the title of 'Naphtuley Elohim' ('Wrestlings of God'), Gen. xxx. 8—an allusion to Naphtali, the author's name—by the Rev. Dr. H. Adler, has just appeared in a Marathi translation by Mr. Elijah Shaldam, of Bombay.

PROF. F. A. LEO, of Berlin, the well-known Shakespearean scholar and editor of the Jahrbuch der deutschen Shakespeare-Gesellschaft, is now in England. He has been examining the Ovid of 1502 in the Bodleian Library, which is said to have been used by Shakespeare, of which he intends to give a detailed description with fac-similes in the forthcoming Jahrbuch.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. William Henry Turner, at the age of fifty-two. He was employed for many years in the Bodleian Library, and, although self-taught, had acquired a considerable knowledge of Latin and English palaeography as well as of English history, as may be seen from the following publications of his: 1. 'The Visitation of the County of Oxford taken in the Year 1566 by William Harvey,' &c., London, 1871; 2. 'A Chronological List of all that has borne Office in the City of Oxford, 1781 to 1876' (in single sheets); 3. 'Calendar of Charters and Rolls preserved in the Bodleian Library,' 1878; 4. 'Selections from the Records of the City of Oxford,' 1880; 5. 'The Index to the First Seven Volumes of the Dodsworth MSS. in the Bodleian Library' (not published).

THE "Old Boys" of University College School have recently formed a club for themselves, which has its abode on Adelphi Terrace. The first house dinner and smoking concert of the club took place on Monday.

SCIENCE

The Brain as an Organ of Mind. By H. Charlton Bastian, M.D., F.R.S. "International Scientific Series." (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

DR. BASTIAN'S long promised work is more weighty in matter and manner than most recent volumes of the series to which it belongs. It cannot be regarded in any sense as a popular work, but rather as the fullest scientific exposition yet published of the views held on the subject of psychology by the advanced physiological school. It teems with new and suggestive ideas; and though the author displays throughout his customary boldness of speculation, he does not allow himself to be carried away so freely as of old by his own exuberant wealth of "scientific imagination." The book, which extends to seven hundred pages, is quite technical enough to prove difficult reading for all except real students; but it is clearly and attractively written, and contains numerous illustrations which aid greatly in keeping alive the attention of the reader amid the tedious minutiae of ganglia and convulsions.

Dr. Bastian begins in the true physiological style by describing the composition of a nervous system. In his opening chapter, on the origin and use of such structures, he accepts Mr. Herbert Spencer's definition of life as correspondence with the environment, as well as that biologist's theoretical explanation of the physical origin of nerves. Too much stress is, perhaps, laid on Mr. Romanes' first and partial views with regard to the Medusae, since so largely modified by the subsequent important discoveries of that investigator himself and of Mr. Schäfer; but such a mode of treatment was almost inevitable, as Mr. Romanes' further labours were not published until Dr. Bastian's work was already in the press. He then describes the nature of nerve fibres, cells, and ganglia, and puts forward his belief that the fibrillations of the cells, corresponding with distinct nerve fibrils, probably "indicate as many distinct paths of stimulus waves through them in different directions." Such fibrillations of the cell he believes are "sequential to, and gradually differentiated in the course of, its functional activity." If so, we must regard each cell as originally structureless, and as wholly dependent for its subsequent structure upon the individual experience, which is surely a singular standpoint for so determined a believer in evolution and hereditary transmission of faculties. As to the supposed rise of fresh cells to meet fresh wants of the organism and fresh combinations in the environment, Dr. Bastian suggests that they may grow out of the neuroglia or intermediate substance, which is, he says, "the probable matrix from which new nerve fibres and new nerve cells are evolved in animals, of whatsoever kind or degree of organization, during their advance in reflex, in instinctive, or in intellectual acquirements." Finally, he traces the mode in which he believes the connexion between sensory and motor centres to exist. All this disquisition on the histology and minute physiology of nerves is highly hypothetical in nature, but the author's views show a consistency and completeness which entitle them to respectful consideration.

After briefly examining the nature of sense-organs, which is explained in close accordance with Mr. Spencer's view, Dr. Bastian proceeds to describe the nervous systems of mollusks, vermes, and arthropods. The diagrams accompanying this portion of the text are rendered of much less value to the general public by being often unprovided with outlines representing the external shape of the animal itself. It is too much to expect that readers of a popular scientific series should be able to fill in from their imagination the outward form of a Serpula or a Chiton. The principal facts elicited from this survey of the invertebrate neurology may be summed up thus: that sedentary animals seldom possess a head or brain; that where a brain exists in invertebrates it is always a double organ; that its component parts are ganglia in connexion with sense-organs; that its size is roughly proportionate to the development of these sense-organs (though here we must object some notable exceptions, such as the ants); that touch and sight are the main senses of these lower animals; and that taste and smell are seldom highly developed, although smell seems in some insects (as is also the case in dogs) to become the dominant sense endowment. Hearing appears to be slightly developed, and the auditory sacculus, where they exist, are usually not in direct relation with the brain, but with motor nerve centres elsewhere. The double brain is thus the head office where all sense impressions (save the last mentioned) are received, and whence they are reflected through motor ganglia to the different muscles. Lastly, Dr. Bastian points out that the visceral system of nerves among invertebrates has a greater relative importance than among the vertebrates, and that impressions from this source, therefore, in all probability form a proportionally larger part of the ordinary mental lives of mollusks and insects.

The vertebrate receive somewhat different and not wholly systematic treatment. After two chapters on the brains of fishes, amphibians, reptiles, and birds, the objective exposition is suddenly interrupted by several subjective chapters on the scope of mind, sensation, consciousness, instinct, and so forth; and then we jump back incontinently once more to the brains of mammals and men. The important point amongst the lower vertebrates is the superadding to the sensory ganglia (which form almost the sole brain in the invertebrates) of two supplementary parts, the cerebrum and cerebellum, higher co-ordinating organs. These parts have only before been foreshadowed by the analogous (but not homologous) pedunculated ganglia of the bees and flies. They form, of course, the true brain, the higher co-ordinating mass which translates new sensations into appropriate movements of the most complex kind. In the subjective chapters Dr. Bastian shows an almost rabid objection to the use of the phrase "the mind"; he will hear of no "metaphysical entities," and insists upon speaking of "mind" alone. We must confess that, even from his own point of view, this objection, common to several extreme thinkers, seems to us overwrought. The English language will prove too strong for his purism; and when he further talks of mental phenomena which lie outside consciousness, and asserts that "the recognition of this fact necessitates the absolute rejection of the word 'mind' in its old signification," his readers will be tempted to ask whether he might not better invent a new term than so ill use an old one. He blames others for employing the expression "unconscious sensation," on the ground that "to feel and not know that we feel is an impossibility," yet himself talks of "unconscious cognition," which seems to us at least equally a contradiction in terms. Consciousness in lower animals he is inclined to restrict very greatly to the higher forms. As to the nature of instinct and its relations to reason, he follows pretty closely in the steps of Mr. Spencer and Mr. Douglas Spalding. The main result reached in these chapters amounts to this, that mind is to be identified with co-ordinated nervous action, conscious or unconscious, and that the brain is an organ, not the organ, of mind.

The central portion of the book, extending over more than two hundred pages, contains full descriptions and illustrations of the brain and its various parts in quadrupeds, quadrupeds, and the various races of man. Here the author is at home, and shows his wide and accurate knowledge of the subject to great advantage. The only criticism to be urged against his minute description is the obvious one that these structural details hardly help us at all, in the present fragmentary state of our knowledge, towards the understanding of the brain as an organ of mind. By far the greater part of them still possess a purely anatomical interest. Of their physiology and their subjective correlatives even the most ardent speculators must admit that we are in most cases absolutely ignorant.

The functions of the brain form the subject of the last six chapters, and are expounded with an intentional blending of the physiological and psychological aspects. On the vexed question of the cerebellum, Dr. Bastian decides that it is "a supreme organ for the reinforcement and regulative distribution of out-going currents," a decision which has at least the merit of being vague enough to embrace most of the partial and conflicting views now prevalent. In the localization of faculties and functional mapping out of the cerebral regions he chiefly follows Dr. Ferrier, though agreeing to some extent with Brown-Séquard in his theory of the diffuse and interblended arrangement of cells related to the various faculties. He certainly recognizes far more clearly than Dr. Ferrier the very complex nature of even the simplest mental acts, which renders their absolute localization in a single restricted region almost absurd; and in the special case of aphasia and its cognate disorders he has taken great pains to point out, in an admirable analytical study, the immense number of separate lesions which may produce distinct defects of verbal memory, all liable to be carelessly lumped together under the one head. But we still feel that he has not fully realized the inexpressible complexity of even a single perception or the endless number of separate nerve fibres and cells in all parts of the brain which must be excited to a more or less definite activity by the sight of a cherry or a daisy, with its associated emotions. The "faculties" of modern brain-mappers are a little less gross and artificial than those of the early phrenologists, but they are yet far from that deep-reaching analytical subtlety which we must command before we can hope to unravel the workings of so wonderfully complicated and intricately organized a labyrinth as the human brain.

On the whole Dr. Bastian's volume is a valuable and highly original contribution to the science with which it deals. The physiology of the brain is still for the most part known to us only in the roughest and most hypothetical way; diagrammatic ideas still take the place of ascertained fact; and it is not the author's fault if he can give us little more than shadowy outlines in the place of solid knowledge. But his work has been well done, so far as the materials permitted it; and though we may differ from him in places as to the exact sort of mental localization which it is reasonable to expect, we must allow that his researches are calculated to advance the science of nervous physiology, and that his present work has collected all the known facts into a most readable and comprehensive form.

THE QUARRELS OF CHEMISTS.

Leamington.

THE following letters may probably interest your readers. They are preserved in the family of the late Prof. Cumming, by whose kind permission I beg to send them to you. I add some extracts from the 'Life of Dr. E. D. Clarke,' which appear to explain the circumstances.

From Prof. A. De Morgan to Prof. Cumming.

7, Camden Street, Camden Town, July 8, 1854.

DEAR SIR,—Nearly thirty years ago, we had a slight acquaintance with each other—but I do not presume upon this, for I think I should have sent you the accompanying copy of a letter which I find among Mr. Friend's (my late father-in-law's) papers, whether or no.

I dare say you remember all about it, for though metals are so plenty that an old discussion about one of them might have escaped memory, yet I should suppose that Milner and Wollaston fighting the nature of things in their nightcaps in a lecture-room would not so easily evaporate.

I cannot well understand how such a discussion could have arisen so late as 1817—but the postmark is clear, and my knowledge of the history of chemistry is not.

I examined the date of your appointment—which tallies well.

Hoping you are in good health and determined to see your half century out in your chair, at least,

I remain, Dear Sir,

Yours truly,

A. DE MORGAN.

From Dr. E. D. Clarke to W. Friend, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR,—I will attend most punctually to all you direct to be done.

Never was there such a scene as that which took place in my lecture-room—present—

Dean Milner, ex-décan Professor of Chemistry,

Dr. Wollaston,

Prof. Cumming, Professor of Chemistry,

Mr. Holme, Indefatigable Chemist,

E. D. Clarke, Workman.

The Drama opened with Milner's taking off his wig and putting on a nightcap. Dr. Wollaston then put on also a nightcap, and thus armed, these mighty leaders of the dispute sat down to discuss, or rather to define, what each of them intended by the word metal. About an hour passed before this could be determined. Then I was permitted to exhibit the supposed metal of Barytes. Milner swore that it was as much a metal as Iron. Holme agreed with Milner. Wollaston and Cumming both allowed it to be a Metallic Body but not a Metal. Here I offered to pause; because this was granting all I have maintained: but Milner and Wollaston fell warmly into dispute. Milner filed the end of a file; saying he saw no difference between my metal and the metal of the File. Wollaston then rested upon his grand argument, that my Metal would not conduct Electricity. An Electrometer was brought; when Milner triumphantly proved that my Metal does conduct Electricity.

Thus, driven from every point, you would suppose that the London Philosopher ought to have made us the amende honorable, and acknowledged our victory—but not a jot of this. He returned to London as obstinate as ever; confessing, however, that he had seen things which he did not before believe in, nor expect to see.

This fine day I am going with my family, to use the Telescope you so kindly gave us, upon the Castle Hill.

Very sincerely yours,

E. D. CLARKE.

(Note by Prof. De Morgan: "No date; postmark 8 April, 1817, from Cambridge.")

Prof. Cumming rendered great assistance to Dr. Clarke in his experiments with the blow-pipe, for after a very serious accident, caused by the explosion of a copper gas reservoir, Prof. Cumming invented the safety cylinder as a means of preventing the recurrence of such danger.

The discussion described in the letter is referred to in Dr. Clarke's 'Life' (vol. ii. p. 349) with the circumstances that led to it, but without any of the details here made known: "It was the effect of his labours upon Barytes that led to a difference of opinion between Dr. Clarke and his friends on one side, and the chemists of the Royal Institution on the other. The metallic nature of the earths had been already discovered by Sir Humphry Davy, who had given the name of Barium to the metallic base of Barytes. In the course of his experiments on this earth, Dr. Clarke was convinced that he had obtained the metal Barium, or Plutonium, as he afterwards called it, by fusion with his gas blowpipe. This result was questioned by the chemists of the Royal Institution, as they had tried similar experiments without producing the metal, and they concluded that Dr. Clarke had been deceived by pseudo-metallic appearances. Dr. Clarke contended that the experiments at the Royal Institution had not been properly conducted; and he appealed for the truth of his conclusions to his numerous pupils and friends who had been the spectators in his lecture-room. After various discussions, Dr. Wollaston himself came to Cambridge, in April, 1817, to be present at the operation, observing that one pair of experienced eyes would be as good as the two hundred of the audience at the lectures. What his opinion was after this meeting does not appear, though it is probable that his doubts, which rested on the substance not answering certain nice metallic tests, remained unshaken." Reference is then made to the account of Dr. Clarke's discovery in Thomson's 'Chemistry,' vol. i. p. 342, ed. 1817.

E. E. ESTCOURT.

EARL PETERSEN.

THE death of Carl Petersen, which occurred near Copenhagen on the 24th of June, removes from the contemporary annals of Arctic exploration a once familiar name. Petersen was neither a man of science nor a sailor; yet for at least ten years he was almost continuously engaged in expeditions of discovery in the circumpolar lands, and to his share in these adventures owes his claim to the grateful remembrance of posterity. Born in 1813, he early left Denmark to push his fortunes in the settlements which the hardy Danes have planted along the western shores of Greenland from Cape Farewell to Tassinaak, in 73° north latitude. Here he lived until he was a man of thirty-seven, all the time industriously engaged in his trade of cooper, and anxious only to provide for his family by "heading up" blubber casks for the Kongelige Grønlandske Handel. But in the year 1850 there arrived off Upernivik the expedition of Capt. Penny on board the Lady Franklin and Sophia, bound for Lancaster Sound and Wellington Channel in search of the long missing ships of Sir John Franklin. The commander of the expedition was a Baffin's Bay whaler, well acquainted with the skill of the Upernivik cooper as a dog-driver and Eskimo interpreter, and, greatly to his astonishment, invited Petersen to join the party. Petersen hesitated for a moment, as well he might. Greenland is far enough in the outer world, but Wellington Channel is still further afield. Moreover, the Royal Board of Trade, whose servant he was, had to be consulted. But Inspector Olrik threw no obstacles in the way, and the British sovereigns were potent solvents of any doubts which the middle-aged cooper might have entertained regarding the prudence of the step he was taking; and how well he served Penny and the English, Dr. Sutherland's narrative relates. Accordingly, when Dr. Kane arrived in the ill-fated Advance on his expedition to Smith's Sound, Petersen was again in requisition, and required still less pressing to take Uncle Sam's dollars than he did to pocket John Bull's sovereigns. The story of Kane's expedition need not be recapitulated. It was not a fortunate adventure, nor, indeed, did it deserve to be a success. But the true history of those dreary winters in Smith's Sound requires still to be told, in spite of the commander's picturesque narrative and Dr. Hayes's more circumstantial "Boat Journey." Petersen, nevertheless, even by Kane's own account, came well out of an ordeal which tested some of the party rather severely. He had scarcely returned to Upernivik, after that voyage of which Kane has given so dramatic an account, than Sir Leopold M'Clintock asked him to accompany him in the Fox to King William Land. On this expedition he was engaged two years, and yet in 1861 we find him again off with Profs. Torrell and Nordenskiöld in their voyage to Spitzbergen, on board the Magdalena, about which a voluminous narrative was written by the late Dr. Ghydenus. After that date Petersen remained at home, having obtained from the Government the post of lighthouse keeper on the Seelands coast. It is almost needless to say that the veteran explorer was not an educated man. He was, however, the reputed author of a narrative of M'Clintock's search, under the title of 'Den Sidste Franklin-Expedition,' 1860; and in Leut. Deichman's 'Erindringer fra Polarlandene Optegnede af 1850-1855' will be found many details of the adventures which Petersen shared in, though neither work has unfortunately been translated into English. Petersen's example induced several other Greenland Danes and Eskimo to join Arctic expeditions; but, with the exception of his quondam companion, Hans Heindrik, the Eskimo whose curious narrative of his travels we noticed two years ago, none of these was fortunate enough to attain Petersen's well-deserved reputation or honour. He was decorated by Frederick VII. with the Dannebrogsmænd Cross, by the English Admiralty with the Arctic Medal, and by the Swedish Government with the medal "pour le mérite." When his old shipmate Nordenskiöld arrived at Copenhagen in the Vega, Petersen was among those waiting to shake his hand. But he did not long survive the reception, heart disease, from which he had long suffered, having cut him off a few weeks later.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

The eclipse of the sun on Wednesday next, the 7th inst., will be central and annular only in high latitudes in the South Atlantic Ocean. At the Cape of Good Hope there will be visible a partial eclipse, the greatest phase of which will be at 3^h 50^m in the afternoon, when 0.236 of the sun's diameter will be eclipsed.

The planet Mercury will be at its greatest eastern elongation on the 8th inst., at about 10 o'clock in the morning. It is of north declination, in the constellation Cancer, and may become visible for a short time soon after sunset.

Although the Report circulated not long since by Admiral Mouchez of the condition of the Paris Observatory during the year 1879 does not present any features of special interest, yet it is satisfactory to note that the admiral considers that, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather experienced at Paris as well as elsewhere, "les travaux accomplis à l'Observatoire présenteront un sensible accroissement sur les années précédentes, par suite d'une organisation plus complète du service méridien et de la ponctualité avec laquelle il a été toujours accompli par les astronomes qui en sont chargés." A much-wanted addition to the territory of the observatory is being acquired, and new instruments are in course of construction for the purpose of carrying out classes of observation which the progress of astronomy has made it desirable to undertake. Vigorous efforts have been made to proceed well with the re-observation on the meridian of the star catalogue of Lalande, a work begun indeed in 1854, but with which little progress had been made until 1878. There are 48,000 stars in the catalogue; the intention is to observe each of them three times, and it is hoped that this scheme will be completed in six or seven years. The meridian observation of the sun, moon, and planets has not been neglected; and the Paris observers appear to have paid more attention than others to that of the small planets. With the equatorial instruments active work has been continued in the formation of the ecliptical atlas of stars, but there does not seem to be much else of a positive character to report. The mirror of the great reflecting telescope has been refigured, and further experiments have been made in its use, but the admiral remarks, "On peut considérer que cet instrument est encore à la période d'essai et d'étude; il n'a donné en 1879 aucun résultat qui mérite d'être publié." He appears almost to wish that it had been set up in Algeria, where the fine sky would have permitted observations to be made with it far more frequently than in Paris, where it can seldom be used on more than forty or fifty nights in a year. Spectroscopic observations were commenced at Paris by M. Thollon with a new kind of spectroscope contrived by himself; but finding, after repeated trials, that the climatic conditions there were very unfavourable for the purpose (which requires a cloudless sky for lengthened periods), Admiral Mouchez has arranged with M. Bischoffheim that they shall be carried on during the greater part of the year at the Observatory at Nice, and for three months only of the fine season at Paris. Magnetic observations have been interrupted for several years at Paris; it is in contemplation to resume them, and record regularly and carefully the diurnal variations when the new acquisition of ground shall have afforded an appropriate position for so doing. It is always pleasing to hear of the progress of the French National Observatory, which is well known to date from a few years prior to our own, although for several reasons the regularity of its observations did not commence until a considerably later period. But there has certainly been no lack of activity there since the appointment of the late M. Le Verrier in 1854, the contents of the Annales de l'Observatoire de Paris, published from time to time by him, forming a noble monument to his memory, and the greatest contribution ever made to the perfecting of the theories of the movements of the principal planets.

It is stated that M. Coggia, of the Marseilles Observatory, is to remove to Algiers as director of the observatory there, where scarcely anything has been hitherto done, although the climate seems to be so well adapted to astronomical observing.

M. Gyliden has published an interesting paper on an attempt at a mathematical theory of the cause of the periodic changes of light in the variable stars, founded on that of Prof. Zöllner, which connects the phenomena with a slow rotation of the stars on their axes whilst the condensation is still in progress. But he remarks that observations are not yet available which could enable him to make a satisfactory comparison of his theory with them, as it requires a knowledge of all the circumstances of the variability of the stars of long period.

In No. 2319 of the Astronomische Nachrichten, Prof. von Oppolzer returns to the subject of the effects of an assumed resisting medium in space on the motions of some comets; his former paper was referred to in the Athenæum of June 12th. His special object in this is to ascertain whether the hypothesis can throw any light upon the presumed identity of the first comets of 1843 and 1880 (the great southern comet of the present year), it being difficult exactly to reconcile the observations in 1843 with a period of thirty-seven years, if the comet is moving only according to the ordinary law of gravity. Hitherto, however, the investigation has only led to a negative result. Different hypotheses may be formed as to the way in which the assumed force might act on different bodies at different perihelion distances from the sun; but the professor thinks that the identity of those comets had better not be looked upon as proved, especially as it is not so very rare a circumstance for comets certainly different to be moving in orbits very similar to each other. In fine, he remarks that "the anomalous phenomena in the motions of Encke's and Winnecke's comets may be attributed with some probability to a resisting force acting on their progress, but that nothing definite can as yet be asserted concerning the form of that resistance, the medium which produces it being apparently not perfectly continuous." It must be recollected that the extremely close approach of the comet or comets of 1843 and 1880 to the sun might well account for peculiarly large effects of a resisting medium of probably increasing density in that region, and we still think the comets of those years are identical.

Mr. Burnham publishes some further observations of that highly interesting double star, 85 Pegasi, the duplicity of which was discovered by himself in the month of July, 1878. That the star is a physical binary results very clearly from a comparison of the observations made then with others made about nine months afterwards, showing both a common proper motion amounting to about 14" annually. They indicate also a rapid orbital motion, but the difficulty of observing such an object accurately precludes at present any certain determination of its circumstances. The large star is of the sixth magnitude; whilst the small star was estimated to be only of about the twelfth magnitude of Struve's scale. The latter is, Mr. Burnham remarks, somewhat uncertain, for "few observers know how difficult to detect and measure a double star becomes when two stars, so widely different in light, are brought within a distance of 1" of each other. Possibly I may have under-estimated the magnitude of the companion, but it is certainly a very minute point when compared with the larger star, and will require, I think, an aperture of at least twelve inches to show it."

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—June 23.—R. Etheridge, Esq., President, in the chair.—Messrs. E. Muir, B. Sykes, and J. Thorburn were elected Fellows.—The following communications were read: 'On the Skull of an Ichthyosaurus from the Lias of Whitby, apparently indicating a New Species (I. Zelandicus, Seeley), preserved in the Woodwardian Museum of the University of Cambridge,' and 'Note on the Cranial Characters of a large Teleosaurus from the Whitby Lias, preserved in the Woodwardian Museum of the University of Cambridge,' by Prof. H. G. Seeley.—'On the Discovery of the Place where Palæolithic Implements were made at Crayford,' by Mr. F. C. J. Spurrell.—'On the Geology of Central Wales,' by Mr. W. Keppel, with an appendix by Mr. C. Lapworth on a new species of Cladophora.—'On New Erian (Devonian) Plants,' by Dr. J. W. Dawson.—'On the Terminations of some Ammonites from the Inferior Oolite of Dorset and Somerset,' by Mr. J. Buckman.—'Farøe Islands Notes upon the Coal found at Ruderoe,' by Mr. A. H. Stokes.—'On some New Cretaceous Comatulæ,' by Mr. P. H. Carpenter.—'On the Old Red Sandstone of the North of Ireland,' by Mr. F. Nolan.—'A Review of the Family Vinculariidae, Recent and Fossil, for the Purpose of Classification,' by Mr. G. B. Vine.—'On the Zones

THE Imperial Leopoldino-Carolina German Academy of Naturalists has created Mr. Stanley Doctor of Philosophy, "for his high merits concerning the exploration of Africa."

Mr. W. SAVILLE KENT's long promised 'Manual of the Infusoria' will be published by Mr. David Bogue. The complete MS. and drawings are in the printer's hands. The work will be issued in six monthly parts, the first of which is to be ready in October.

THE Records of the Geological Survey of India for May has reached us. This part contains some important geological notes by Mr. C. L. Griesbach, and a paper by the Deputy Superintendent of the Geological Survey of India, Mr. Wm. King, 'On the Artesian Wells at Pondicherry, and the Possibility of Finding such Sources of Water Supply at Madras.'

M. RAISER communicated to the Académie des Sciences on the 17th of May a second set of researches 'On the Proportion of Carbonic Acid in the Air.' The average of ninety experiments made in the country from June to November, 1879, was 29.78 C.O., in volume for 100,000 dry atmospheric air; and M. Schlösing, on the 14th of June, brought before the Académie a paper on the constancy of the proportion of carbonic acid in the air. He estimates that the sea holds a quantity of carbonic acid ten times greater than the entire quantity of that gas in the atmosphere, which is disposable for exchange, and therefore regulates the quantity of atmospheric carbonic acid.

MR. W. O. CROSSY contributes to the Occasional Papers of the Boston Society of Natural History a volume on the 'Geology of Eastern Massachusetts,' the result of a long and careful survey. There is a good geological map, and several graphic illustrations of the country.

MM. DELONGE AND DE LAPPARENT have in the Annales des Mines, first livraison of 1880, given "Extraits de Géologie pour les Années 1877 et 1878." Under the heads "Géologie," "Physiographique," "Lithologique," "Historique," "Géographique," and "Dynamique" they have given a very complete analysis of the scientific inquiries which have been carried out by the geologist in all parts of the world.

H. v. JÖRNER, in Chemiker Zeitung, No. 12 for 1880, states that the beautiful scarlet iodide of mercury appears quite white when viewed by the yellow light of the flame of sodium.

We have received the sixth decade of the 'Prodromus of the Palaeontology of Victoria,' by Prof. F. McCoy. In this decade we have illustrations of the extinct gigantic kangaroo and the curious extinct marsupial, Procoptodon, the ear-bones of whales of the same age as those of the Suffolk Crag, and the teeth of a gigantic fossil extinct species of spermaceti whale, with Scurus of Silurian molluscs and Tertiary sea-

	BL.	HL.	AL.	NI.	OL.
Fijian	66	74	102	57	85
Vaina Velava	72	75	101	50	88
Barbican	83	78	90	44	92

PHYSICAL.—June 26.—Prof. W. G. Adams in the chair.—A paper, by Prof Guthrie and Mr. C. V. Boys, 'On Measuring the Conductivity of Liquids by Magneto-Electric Induction,' was read.—Dr. Gladstone made a communication on the refraction equivalents of isomeric bodies.—Dr. Huggins described his recent observations on star spectra.—Mr. Liveing exhibited his electric incandescence fire-damp indicator.—Dr. Stone explained his new vacuum hunt for induction currents.—Mr. M. Gray read a paper on specific heats calculated from entropy.—Mr. Clark communicated a paper 'On the Behaviour of Liquids and Gases near their Critical Temperature,' and Messrs. Gee and Stroud one 'On a Modification of Bunsen's Calorimeter.'

MEETING FOR THE EVENING WORK

How	Admitt. 4c
From	Royal Institution, 8 - General Monthly Society of Medical Education at - Kingston Mansions, 7, Pic- cadilly, N. W. - Lecture, "History of the Abolition and Chivalry" W. H. St. John, Esq., Lecturer, 18, St. James's Place, S.W. - The Abolition of Slavery, 1833, 1834, 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492,

Science Society.

Under the auspices of the Government of Ceylon an elaborate illustrated work on the Lepidoptera of that island is in active preparation, edited by Mr. F. Moore, F.Z.S. The publication is entrusted to Messrs. L. Reeve & Co., from whom the first instalment may be expected shortly.

MR. HENRY LUDLAM, F.G.S., late of Piccadilly, has given by will his select and most valuable collection of minerals to the Royal Geological Museum in Jermyn Street. This collection is said to have cost Mr. Ludlam 15,000*l*.

urchins. These are all most carefully drawn and admirably lithographed.

PROF. JOSEPH HENRY is to have a statue erected to his memory in the grounds of the Smithsonian Institute, the United States Congress having voted the sum of 15,000 dollars in aid.

M. J. M. GAUGAIN, the French electrician, died last week at the age of seventy-seven.

MESSRS. DAWSON BROTHERS, of Montreal, announce for early publication a new work of travel in north-western North America. The route lies along the coast of the Pacific, starting from Victoria, as far as Port Eslington. Here the party took canoes, and ascended the Skeena to the Forks, through the Rocky Mountains by the Peace River Pass, down the Peace and its tributaries to Dunvegan, and thence across the Great Prairie region to Winnipeg. The writer travelled with one of the Dominion Government surveying parties. A number of illustrations are given, and in addition maps relating to the route. The book is to be published in London by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.

FINE ARTS

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE FORTY-SIXTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION IS NOW OPEN, from Nine till Dark.—Admission, 1s.; Children, 6d. Gallery, 21, Pall Mall, S.W. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

SIXTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF CARBONY PICTURES by Artists of the British and Foreign Schools IS NOW OPEN at THOMAS McLEAN'S Gallery, 7, Mark Lane.—Admission on presentation of Address Card.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN BLACK AND WHITE, Dudley Gallery, Ruyton Hall, Fife, consisting of Drawings, Engravings, and Reproductions. OPEN DAILY from Ten till Six.—Admission, 1s.; Children, 6d. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secy.

DOUGLAS ORRAT WORKS, 'CHRIST LEAVING THE PLASTERER,' 'CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM,' and 'THE BREAD OF LIFE' (the latter just completed), each 20 by 25 inch, with 'Thomas of Filio's Wife,' 'Soldiers at the Camp,' 'Night of the Crucifixion,' 'House of Canaan,' &c., at the DOME GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten till Six.—1s.

FRENCH BOOKS OF ART.

L'Art et les Artistes Hollandais. Par H. Havard.—II. Les Palamedes, Govert Flinck. (Paris, Quantin).—This is the second instalment of a series of books, the former portion of which, dealing with Miervelt and Titus Van Rhyn, we recently praised highly. The subjects of this volume, which is quite equal in interest to its forerunner, are three of the "Little Dutch Masters," the two admirable Palamedes and Flinck the elder, who, with Bol and De Koningh, was a pupil of Rembrandt. It was the more needful that recent researches into the history of the Palamedes should be made available because there exists, even in the minds of well-informed people, considerable confusion about the lives and works of Antony Palamedes and Palamedes Palamedes. Both were excellent painters, and their works are worthy of the care and discrimination of M. Havard. To each biography is attached a catalogue, which is unavoidably more or less incomplete, of pictures by the artists in question. Of Govert Flinck ample details were obtainable than of his companions here, but not enough to prevent us from desiring more than 120 pages of this volume can contain, although they include a careful catalogue of paintings, and an account of the deplorable autopsy of Ingitta, (born Thovelingsh, the first wife of Flinck, who suffered a dreadful martyrdom before she became a "subject" of the skill of Prof. Tulp, the famous anatomist, whom Rembrandt painted more than once, and pre-eminently in the 'Anatomy Lesson.' Ample materials exist for this capital biography of Flinck, who is scarcely known in England, although some of his works doubtless bear the names of other members of the school of Rembrandt or of that magnificent master himself. Of this latter misapplication of names there are but too many instances—too many false apologies for the fact that several much-admired paintings have been thus falsely assigned. Nevertheless it is certain that Flinck was a very able painter and a man of good birth, who married Ingitta, a damsel of good fortune; she brought him 10,000 florins. It is a pity that M. Havard was not permitted to pursue his researches into the history of Flinck's first marriage, for the man deserved much attention; he married again Sophia, born Van der Hoeve, a girl of good family, of whom we know no more, unless it be she who is represented in the portrait of the 'Wife of Flinck' which is at Munich, and bore the name of Rembrandt till Reynolds suggested that Flinck painted it. The documents printed in the appendix to the volume are very interesting; they refer to the Palamedes, A. Van den Tempel, Langelbach and A. Van de Velde, Bronckhorst, Metsu, Camp-huysen, Waterloo, and Flinck.

Les Œuvres de Bernard Palissy, publiées d'après les Textes Originaux. Par Anatole France. (Paris, Charavay Frères).—A new edition of 'Les Œuvres de Bernard Palissy,' by M. Anatole France, has this year appeared at Paris, where a new edition was wanted, for not only has that published by M. Cap in 1844 become rather scarce, but we are now in possession of fresh material, which requires to be incorporated into Palissy's works and life. The discovery by M. Fillon of the MS. 'Devis de la Grotte des Tuileries' has given us a few more pages to add to the list of his writings; and one or two other documents, also published by M. Fillon, and a curious petition from one Bastide de Launoy to the magistrates of Zaintes, printed by MM. Delange and Borneman, throw light on a hitherto obscure period of Palissy's life. M. Anatole France has edited the texts of his author with care, and he has, of course, included in the collection the 'Devis de la Grotte' previously published by M. Fillon ('Lettres écrites de la Vendée'); the bibliographical notice prefixed is precise enough, but what was our astonishment, on turning to the short biography with which the volume opens, to find that M. France had not only omitted all mention of the documents now in our hands, but repeats the old glosses concerning Palissy's life during the years 1564 and 1565 without comment. In 1564, says M. Anatole France, Catherine de Médicis was at Zaintes, and Palissy presented her with his 'Devis de la Grotte des Tuileries'; sent for by her to Paris in 1566, he left Zaintes never to return. Now, it is most unlikely that Palissy saw Catherine at Zaintes, for the accounts of some citizens of La Rochelle, published by M. Fillon, show that Palissy was actually in that town (where he had printed his 'Recepte Véritable' in 1563), borrowing money, in August, 1564, and as Catherine arrived at La Rochelle in the following month of the same year, it was probably at La Rochelle, if at all, that Catherine saw Palissy; and, again, we learn from documents which we owe to M. Fillon that Palissy was at La Rochelle in 1567, and we also know from the petition of Bastide de Launoy, published by M. Delange, that he retained his atelier in Zaintes as late as 1570, so that the old story, repeated by M. France, that Palissy left that town in 1566, never to return, is demonstrably false. Nor is this all. M. France, by neglecting to use the accounts published, has let slip the chance of citing the first certain date that can be given of Palissy's residence in Paris; it occurs in a payment made by him in 1570 to one of the citizens of La Rochelle, from which, coupled with the fact of his being still in possession of an atelier at Zaintes, it is now inferred that he did not finally break up his establishment at Zaintes until some time after he was called to Paris. These documents have all been used in recent work published in England, but one never expects French writers to be cognizant of anything not in their own tongue; the originals, however, exist in French, and that which is really surprising is that an author who sets out, like M. France, with the air of being about to do the thing more correctly and completely than it has ever been done before, should show such inexcusable negligence as actually to consult, without reading, the authors whom he cites. He cites Delange and he cites Fillon, but the most important facts which we owe to their investigations escape his notice. It is another instance, if another were wanted, of the extraordinary way in which all love of truth and accuracy is destroyed when, as in France, the sole test of an author's merits consists in the elegance of his phrases, and so long as they please the ear no one inquires whether he has anything to say or any right to speak.

NEW PRINTS.

MESSRS. COLNAGHI & Co. have sent us a proof on vellum, with the re-mark, from a plate etched by M. Brunet-Dehaines after the famous picture by Rembrandt called 'The Mill,' which is at Bowood. It is an extremely brilliant and powerful transcript of this very characteristic and impressive landscape, and renders with sympathetic tact and taste that grandeur which the painter imparted when dealing with homely buildings, a somewhat commonplace landscape, and a lowering sky, just after sundown, with lights and shadows flying past. The situation of the mill, on a low bluff above a little river, gave the painter an opportunity for displaying two of the great vices of the structure against the gloomy clouds; on the two other vases there is an accidental shadow, and they appear against the white glare of the lower cumulus, which rolls before the wind. This arrangement is primitive and obvious enough, but its impressiveness is as undeniable as its simplicity. The wan lustre of the evening sky and its more brilliant reflection by the river are most happily introduced. The boat in the foreground looks like an afterthought. The picture was formerly in the Orleans Gallery, when it was engraved. Mr. W. Smith bought it for 500 guineas. Lord Lansdowne gave 500 guineas for it. It was engraved by C. Turner, and exhibited at the Academy in 1878. Smith numbered it 601. The print gains on the student prodigiously, because the fine balancing of the tones in the original has been so ably rendered that the solid bluff and buildings on it stand differently dark and variously solid against the somewhat confused and undefined clouds; the latter, although in texture quite as like packs of wool as masses of vapour, are very majestic and impressive. The same publishers have sent us a portrait engraved in mezzotint, by Mr. T. L. Atkinson, after Mr. Richmond's 'Earl Granville.' It is remarkable for the care and completeness of the engraving of the face. The original picture is a little prosaic, still it is an excellent likeness.

From the Fine-Art Society we have a re-mark proof of a plate etched by M. C. Waltner, reproducing W. Hunt's drawing in water colour representing an old Sussex farmer seated at table before a meal, and, with hands joined in his lap, looking upwards slightly while he says grace to himself. It is called 'The Blessing,' and the original is one of Hunt's best works, so pathetic in its intense simplicity as to dispose of the notion that this painter had no poetical inspiration or grave motive in design. On the contrary, this is one of many drawings known to Hunt's admirers which place him high on the roll of poetical artists. The expression of the picture is most happily reproduced and understood; the face could hardly be better as a piece of handling giving the peculiar mode of the painter. The draughtsmanship is perfect. The action and treatment throughout are complete, with the exception of an excess of darkness which seems inherent in M. C. Waltner's work. In this instance that defect is injurious to the chiaroscuro and general keeping of the translation, and deprives it of some of the clearness and luminosity which are very important elements of Hunt's art.

From the same publishers we have an imation with the re-mark of a plate engraved by Mr. Herkomer from his picture called 'Grandfather's Pet.' The process is that of mixed etching and mezzotint, which has already been successfully employed by M. Gaillard and others. The print has the great advantage of being entirely autographic. Accordingly it is an admirable reproduction of the picture, one version of which, if not the only one, is now in the Royal Academy. We could have wished that Mr. Herkomer had used the opportunity of reproduction to revise thoroughly the defective drawing, to rectify the questionable proportions of the figures, and so far to readjust their joints so as to assure the spectator, who fears that the old man may be immovable and the little girl fall to pieces before his eyes. This opportunity has not been seized, therefore we have the loose joints, the large bodies of both figures, and the feeble legs of the older one just as they are in the picture. Such fidelity is laudable in an engraver from another man's picture, not so when a painter uses his own engraver. The same extreme faithfulness has preserved the better elements of the original, the sweet and naive expression of the girl's face, the rich and pure tonicity of her carnations; the vigorous, if rough, treatment of the man's countenance, and it has reproduced the peculiar, but by no means quite satisfactory, keeping of the dresses, their textures and tones. The use of so large a plate is the contrary of an advantage. One quarter of the size would have been ample for all there is worth reproducing in a picture which is big out of all proportion to its importance. It is right to add that some portions of the drawing are not blameworthy, though none are admirable.

Lovers of Turner will be thankful to those who have issued, through M. Thibaudeau, impressions from three unpublished plates of the 'Liber Studiorum,' being a, the finished mezzotint of 'Glaucus and Scylla'; b, the first etching of 'Ploughing, Eton'; and c, the nearly finished mezzotint from the latter plate. We have received impressions from these plates, together with one from the plate of 'Shoepwasing, Windsor,' which was bought by Mr. W. G. Rawlinson, and has been the subject of an interesting experiment for the recovery of the autographic etched work of Turner, that is, the clear and delicate outline of the design proper. The mezzotint, being so much worn that it would yield no more valuable impressions, was rubbed off the copper until the outlines alone remained. Original impressions from the plate as etched being very scarce, the experiment was worth trying, and the result is so far satisfactory that the plate gives an excellent idea of the etching, defective mostly in the more subtly drawn distance and finer touches of the rest of the work. What there is in genuine and estimable. The 'Glaucus and Scylla' is a coast view, with a late afternoon effect in serene weather illuminating rocks, cliffs, and foliage near the sandy shore of a little cove, where a hole in a promontory of stone gives a glimpse of another cove and sloping downs. In the distance are detached rocks on the edge of the land, rising down, and a golden haze. The sea falls in wavelets on a strand strewn with shells. Glaucus is near the shore, and Scylla appears in flight, frightened, and half-dressed. There is exquisite beauty and perfect repose in the landscape; nothing of the romantic sort could be more charming than the motive of the design; the large trees that stand in the calm air cast long, intense, yet clear shadows on the under cliff and the sands at its feet. The loftier cliff, crowned and enriched with foliage, seems to back in the sunny air, while the distance is a delightful mystery of light laden with vapour. It detracts from our pleasure in the design to observe that, whereas the sun faces us, and should project shadows directly to the front, the shadows are actually projected—see the long shadow of Scylla on the sand—at right angles to the light, and parallel to the plane of the picture! Discovery of this strange mistake may have led to the postponement of publication until the plate was corrected. Otherwise it is a lovely composition, beautifully executed, exquisite in the treatment of the sky. 'Ploughing, Eton,' has a fine sky, and a great wealth of suggestive expression; but the promise of a fine, delicate, and sombre evening effect is so far from being complete that it would be unfair to speak of it. The etching shows where the plate has been beaten up for alterations before it was put aside.

From Messrs. Dowdeswell we have an artist's proof of a plate from which they say only fifty copies were printed, after having been etched by Mr. L. B. Phillips, 'In Harbour.' The print shows that the artist is endowed with excellent intentions and some insight into the sentiment and beauty of nature. It is plain, however, that he has a great deal to learn. The outlines of his work need filling with fruits of knowledge and practice; his drawing is loose and indecisive; vague modelling can be remedied only by strenuous studies. At the same time it is only fair to say that this plate is considerably above the average of amateurs' work.

THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

It is a pleasant task to record the progress of one of the most valuable and entertaining of our public institutions. Mr. Scharf's learning and energy, the care and liberality of the trustees, and the patriotism of numerous donors, have formed in a brief space of time an unparalleled gallery of likenesses of men and women, famous and infamous in the history of the country, works which illustrate its arts even more than its arms, its people even more than the Court. From Britton the Small-Coach man to Queen Elizabeth, from Sir Isaac Newton to Gilly Williams, the notables of our nation are here so happily brought face to face with us that it must be an embarrassment for the men of our time who see them and look forward to the hour when the indefatigable director shall hang up their portraits, each in its niche in his Temple of Fame; for Mr. Scharf is bound to think of posterity, and to have his eye on those makers of history who are still among us.

Although not in the confidence of the crowd to whom the world owes so much of its knowledge of English portraiture, it is from time to time our duty to record what he has done, and indicate what old memories have received fresh lustre at South Kensington—whose niche is filled, and whose face made known to this generation. We are glad that the gallery of engraved portraits has a distinct existence, and we trust that no opportunity will be lost of augmenting it. In the British Museum is an ever-increasing collection of engraved portraits, but it need not interfere with this one, and it will be long before space can be found at Bloomsbury for such a collection as that which is now to be seen at the younger institution. Apart from this collection, and wisely placed in the picture gallery proper, is a capital impression of Faithorne's engraving, made ad vivum in 1670, from Milton at the age of sixty-two, and designed as a frontispiece to the 'History of Britain.' It is, perhaps, the most pathetic of all the portraits of that "blind old man."

Near this hangs a noble life-size three-quarters length effigy of Endymion Porter, painted by Dobson in a manner which gives force to King Charles's description of this artist as "my English Tintoret." Though Van Dyck was Dobson's master, it is far more like a Tintoret than a Van Dyck, and was executed with sharply defined purplish shadows in the face, full, deep, and almost tawny carnations, brought into fine harmony with the black clothes and the strongly-coloured accessories. The last comprise a table, on which the Gentleman of the Bedchamber rests his right hand while holding a written petition to the king; a bust of Seneca is behind the figure, and there is a glimpse of landscape, including a house and trees. It is among the curiosities of engraved portraiture that a plate by Faithorne, after Dobson's picture of the third Earl of Essex, was inscribed with the name of Endymion Porter, and sold as his likeness. Than these two few men could be more unlike; between their pictures there is not the least resemblance. Not far from the Dobson hangs a capital portrait, by an unknown artist, of Francis, Lord Cottington, the "Hispaniolised courtier" of the bitter and resentful Englishman of his day. It is a bust, in three-quarters view to our left, and shows the full features; the stiff, pointed beard and moustaches attest that he was one of the "king's men." Some of the best judges think that the peculiar ruddiness of the higher tints of the carnations prove that this is the work of a Spanish artist; this surmise is strengthened by the career and predilections of the original. The picture is dated 1631, the age of the sitter being given as fifty-two years.

Mrs. Jane Middleton represents one of the notorious "cattle" as Pepys called them, of King Charles the Second. She was the subject of one of the sharpest delineations of the pen of Grammont, and lives still in the king's letter to his sister of Orleans, in which, while recommending the lady to the duchess's favour, he deplored the fact that since she had had a child much of her beauty had departed, but that she was a good creature, so that his dear Henrietta must needs "be kind to her," poor thing! The portrait is a masterpiece of Lely's, and shows a shepherdess in brilliant white satin, holding a crook, with abundant fair hair, wonderfully flattened out at the sides of her head, the too exuberant contours freely displayed by a low dress, and "crumby" and extremely blanched forms, exactly answering to the very "white and fair" of Grammont. As well it might, an innocent lamb stands in front of, and stares hard at, this strange shepherdess, who lolls back with a lackadaemical air, and gazes at the sky. The picture is sumptuously painted; handled with great firmness and precision; a rich and solid impasto distinguishes it, and it is further remarkable because the light is represented as coming from below. It must have been the rôle of this damsel to be painted as a shepherdess. There is another portrait of her, by Gascar, seated in a landscape, holding across her lap that spindle-like implement we are accustomed to call a crook; more lambs graze in the distance of this portrait. There is at Windsor a fine Lely of "Lady," or Miss, Middleton, engraved by M^r Ardel, showing how she looked before the event the "morris" monarch deplored to his sister, and standing, with eyes very —long, laughing, and gay.

She is in the character of Ceres, and loaded with fruits. There is a third Lely (!) of the lady, seated, with one hand in her lap.

Lely painted the portrait of Prince Rupert, in the robes of the Garter, which has been hung lately at South Kensington, and shows him about the time when Pepys heard of this worthy son of royalty in the hands of the surgeons, who did trepan him terribly; he wears a dark, voluminous wig. Near it is a good likeness of Pepys's patron, the Earl of Sandwich, a duplicate of the picture at Hinchinbrook. Not far off are two contrasted portraits of Katherine of Braganza, showing the luckless queen as Stoop saw her in that quaint and hideous Portuguese coiffure which so startled her graceless bridegroom, and by Huyman, in the ordinary court dress which, at the king's instigation, she assumed soon after her arrival here.

Of an earlier date, and painted in a crude, primitive manner, is the curious and valuable portrait of Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, Elizabeth's minister, holding his white staff as Lord Chamberlain, and wearing the gold collar of knots and suns. In this portrait the badge of knighthood is remarkable, because it is suspended by a chain from the neck, independently from the collar. We conclude by calling attention to Boxall's timid picture of Copley Fielding and Beechey's portrait of himself.

NOTES FROM ROME.

THE tomb of C. Sulpicius Platorinus, the discovery of which was announced in my last "Notes," has not been fully excavated, because the engineers for the embankment of the Tiber prevent us from doing so. Since I wrote last three more cinerary urns and three inscriptions have been found. One of the urns, exquisitely carved in white Carrara marble, contained "cena. A. Crispini Crispionis"; another, cut in alabaster, and inscribed "Sulpicius. c. f. Platorinus," belongs to the daughter, or perhaps to the niece, of C. Sulpicius. Two inscriptions are engraved on the outside wall of the tomb, facing the river; the third is scratched on the inner wall. They are exceedingly important from an historical point of view. They give the names of personages either buried in the mausoleum or connected with its owners. Suetonius, speaking of Marcia Furnilla, the second wife of Titus, the mother of Julia, declares her to be "splendidi generis," of the noblest birth; but nothing else was known about the lady and her pedigree. Her name is not mentioned by other historians; no inscription, no coin belonging to her had yet been found. From the documents discovered in the tomb of C. Sulpicius Platorinus, we are informed that her father was Q. Marcus Bara Sura, son of Marcus Bara, consul A.D. 18, grandson of C. Marcus, and great-grandson of M. Artorius Geminus, prefect of the ararium militare of the Temple of Concord, a magistrate well known from the inscription discovered among the ruins of that temple on July 31st, 1817. Her mother was Antonia a. f. Furnilla, who may be the daughter of an Aulus Furnius and an Antonia, or else of an Aulus Antonius and a Furnia.

The other important names mentioned in the inscriptions are those of Crispinus or Crispinus Cæpio, and of Crispina, his daughter, who had married into the Sulpician family. According to Tacitus, Crispinus Cæpio was under-Governor of Bithynia A.D. 15; he accused his Governor, Granus Marcellus, of conspiring against Tiberius. See 'Annal,' i. 74. He was also a botanist, and studied especially the family of the Centafoles (Pliny, xxi. 10). Of Cornelius Prius, mentioned in another inscription, we know nothing, except that he belonged to the equestrian order. His son is mentioned on a tombstone found centuries ago near the Porta S. Sebastiano.

Between the tomb of Platorinus and the Ponte Sisto other discoveries have been made. Six thousand four hundred and three coins were found buried together underground. They belong to the end of the fourth and the beginning of the fifth century, and are of no importance. Next came an altar dedicated "Silvano Sancto," and another also dedicated to Silvanus by a M. Cuppius, who, besides the altar, had built at his own expense the chapel and the wall (maceria) enclosing the sacred area. All this ground between the tomb and the bridge was occupied by private dwellings of modest appearance, with narrow lanes crossing each other at right angles. From the water-pipes, running underneath the pavement of the streets, we gather that one of the adjoining houses belonged to L. Sempronius Rufus and another to Rufinianus. Between the two houses there was a shrine of the Lares Compitales, with a marble altar, inscribed "Laribus Augustis Sacrum."

The banks of the Tiber were public property. A line of cippi ran on each side of the river, from above the Ponte Molle down to the Navata, marking the extent of each strip of public land.

The cippi were set up for the first time A.U.C. 700 by the Censors P. Servilius Isauricus and M. Valerius Messalla. Forty-six years afterwards Marcus Censorinus and Asinius Gallus, who had been created "curatores alvei et riparum Tiberis," concluded the operation by erecting new stones, and raising again those which had been overthrown. Vespasian, A.D. 73, Trajan, 102, Hadrian, 122, and M. Aurelius, 161, restored also this line of stones, fifty of which have come down to us. The fifty-first was found the other day, forty-two metres above the Ponte Sisto on the Transtiberine side. It speaks, for the first time, of another restoration, made A.D. 197, by Septimius Severus and Caracalla, who was then Prince Imperial (imperator destinatus), under the curatorship of Valerius Macedo.

The temple of Romulus, son of Maxentius, on the Sacra Via, has been excavated down to the old level; all the houses, granaries, and churches surrounding the temple have been demolished. The architecture of the building is rather peculiar, its decorations tasteless and poor. The round cella, which Felix IV. occupied as a vestibule to his church of SS. Cosma e Damiano, stands between two rectangular halls. The façade was ornamented with four large columns of Cipollino marble, two of which still stand on their huge pedestals; the third was taken away by Urban VIII.; of the fourth the pedestal alone remains in situ. The bronze door, with its couple of porphyry columns (which had been raised to the modern level of the quarter by the same Pope), has been restored to its original place. Several inscriptions have come to light in the process of the works. A Latin epigram, in the style of Pope Damasus, speaks of the improvements made in the church by Pope Sergius I., A.D. 696. According to the 'Liber Pontificalis,' Sergius built the ambones and the ciborium above the confessional, and covered with lead tiles the cupola of the Rotunda of Romulus, which was then called trullum. This lead covering must have been stolen at an early date, because in restoring the roof of the trullum we have found roots and trunks of trees, six inches in diameter, which show that for many centuries the building had been completely left to decay. Opposite the door, on the other side of the Sacra Via, are to be seen the remains of a memorial shrine, raised in honour of Gordian the younger by the people of Tarsus; the inscription, however, praises the town itself more than the unfortunate emperor they wanted to honour. Tarsus is styled "the town of Gordian, of Severus Alexander, of Antoninus Caracalla, of Hadrian, the most excellent, the largest, the handsomest, the metropolis of three provinces (Cilicia, Isauria, and Lycania)," and so on. They could have said less and done better, because the very pedestal, for instance, which supported the statue of Gordian is a piece of marble not worth a farthing, and bought second hand, having been used before for some other purposes, as shown by another inscription, which the citizens of Tarsus did not even take the trouble to obliterate.

Two boys have found a curious statue on the slope of the Viminal which stretches between the Via Nazionale and the new botanical gardens. The statue, without doubt, had been stolen from some private grounds, and concealed in that remote spot; but before the would-be thieves could get any chance of securing or selling the stolen figure, it was discovered by these lads and handed over to the Municipality. It represents a shepherd or a pilgrim, a dry old thing, labouring under the weight of years and of a basket which he carries in the left hand. The bald head is shaded by a straw hat, in the shape of a petasus; the lower portion of the body is covered with rags. Altogether it is a remarkable piece of work, although marked by the characteristics of the decline of art.

Another statue, a headless, life-size Minerva, was found opposite the church of S. Callisto in the Transtevere, twenty-seven feet under ground. A third, a sitting female goddess, was found beyond the Villa Pamphily, in the ditch of the new fortress of Bravetta. In the gardens of S. Martino al Monti were found two inscriptions and a bust. One of the inscriptions is dated from the empire of Libius Severus, who reigned from 461 to 467, and whose name is hardly ever mentioned in epitaphs. Rare, also, is the name of Flavius Dioscorus, a consul of the fifth century, which occurs in the other inscription. The bust, very nicely worked and well preserved, represents Otacilia Severa.

The Ministry of Public Instruction, thanks to the energetic efforts of Senators Fiorelli, is actively engaged in rescuing from captivity those monuments of Rome which had become private property, and turned to every use which speculation could suggest. Nearly one half of the Baths of Titus will be opened to the public next autumn, and also that portion of the Forum of Augustus which extends from the Via Bonella and the Arco de' Pantani to the Torre dei Conti and the Forum Transitorium. The Government expects, also, to buy the Vigna Bernabò, which occupies one of the most beautiful sections of the Baths of Caracalla. At the eleventh milestone of the Via Tiburtina, the pavement of the old road was discovered for some hundred feet. There are remains of tombs on each side of the highway, in one of which a bronze statuette was found, eighteen inches high.

In the course of the winter campaign fully one acre of ground was excavated at Ostia. The results are rather important as regards the history and the topography of the commercial part of the town. The "down town," the busy quarters of Ostia, extended along the main branch of the Tiber, and inland as far as the forum and temple of Vulcan. The docks are all built on the same pattern—I dare say by the same architect and the same contractor. Imagine a network of streets, twelve feet wide, running from north to south and from east to west, with rows of stores or magazines on each side, built of reticulated work with layers of bricks. The ground floor was exclusively used for storing supplies, mostly grain cargoes; in the floor above were the offices and the residence of trading companies, and of the collegia of working men connected with the port. These upper rooms are better arranged, their pavements are ornamented with chiaroscuro mosaics, their walls coated with painted stucco. Commercial men, as a rule, never cared for aesthetics; accordingly not a single fragment of a work of art was found in this dry and lonesome region of docks. I will mention, however, one object—the bone handle of a pocket-knife—which is not without a certain interest. On one side of the handle are engraved the whip and the cap of a jockey, and his name, ΕΥΡΕΠΕΣ; on the other, the palm of victory, the head of a horse, and its name, ΝΕΡΖΟ. Now we must recollect that other handles, perfectly alike, have been found in Rome—one five years ago in the Via di Porta S. Lorenzo—inscribed with names of the same jockey and horse; another, seven years ago, sold by Pennell to an antiquary in Paris, in which the name of the horse is ΕΥΡΕΠΕΣ. It seems that the gallant agitor of the circus won his race with a biga, and this race must have been so famous, so popular, that tradesmen availed themselves of the opportunity to bring forth objets à la mode, such as pocket-knives and children's toys. In 1872, while excavating near the church of S. Eusebio on the Esquilina, we discovered the remnants of a diminutive biga, on the wheels of which (cut in lead) the name of ΕΥΡΕΠΕΣ was engraved. I expect to see very soon in the market pocket-knives and children's toys with the names of Archer and Bend Or engraved upon them. RODOLFO LANCIANI.

On the 25th ult. Messrs. Christie, Manson & Woods sold by auction the original water colours prepared for the steel plates to 'Picturesque Europe' and Cassell's 'Illustrated Shakespeare.' Among the Shakespeare illustrations were five water-colour drawings by Mr. F. Dicksee: Antony and Cleopatra, 148 guineas; Bertram and Helena, 110 ga.; Othello and Desdemona, 91 ga.; Caesar and Calphurnia, 105 ga.; Constance and Salisbury, 90 ga. Among the 'Picturesque Europe' drawings were some water colours by Birket Foster: St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall, 66 ga.; Windsor Castle, 61 ga.; Old Houses in Strasbourg, 51 ga.; Turnbury Castle, 51 ga.; Lauffenberg, 54 ga.; Verona, 60 ga.; Edinburgh, from Calton Hill, 58 ga.; Market Place at Orta, 64 ga.; Moulin Huet Bay, Guernsey, 50 ga.; Innspruck, 69 ga.

On Saturday last the same auctioneers sold the following water-colour drawings and pictures. Drawings. H. W. B. Davis, Sand Hills, with a Shepherd and Sheep, 157l. J. B. Burgess, Youth and Age, 159l. L. Haghe, Ruins in the Forum, Rome, 131l. Pictures: P. Bouvier, L'Occasion, 126l. V. Chevaliard, A Game at Cards, 162l. G. Koller, Albert Dürer receiving a Message from the Duchess of Parma, 136l. C. Seiler, "Official Orders," 241l. J. E. Saintin, "Treasured Mementoes," 105l. F. Domingo, The Cardplayers, 546l. A. Toulmouche, L'Attente, 115l.; White Lilacs, 115l. E. Castres, Outside the Ambulance, 241l. L. C. Müller, Mecca Pilgrims, 735l. Jules Breton, A Breton Woman, 451l. J. G. Vibert, An Unequal Match, 157l. B. W. Leader, On the Llugwy, North Wales, 157l. T. S. Cooper, Cows and Sheep, 246l.; Noon, Cattle Reposing, 231l. E. Frère, The Drum Lesson, 262l. E. Nicol, The School, 210l. W. Etty, The Triumph of Cleopatra, 525l.

Just-3rt Sensib.

M. RAYON has finished his plate after Mr. Watts's portrait of Herr Joachim, much to the satisfaction of the painter, and Messrs. Agnew & Co. will shortly publish it. The same publishers are about to issue another etching by this engraver from the same painter's picture, 'Joan of Arc,' which is now in the Grosvenor Exhibition. Messrs. Pilgram & Lefèvre will soon issue an etching from the little upright picture of Roman ladies in a bainum, which Mr. Alma Tadema has recently finished and called 'The Bath.' Our readers will remember that the women are standing in a white marble bath, in which the water pours from a dolphin of bronze.

THE Print Room has been lately enriched by the purchase on the Continent of a numerous collection of German broadsides, illustrated with engravings and woodcuts of historical and satirical subjects, dating from 1534, and including a considerable proportion of anti-papal satires, e.g., a striking one of the Pope driving his clergy in a chariot to hell; behind are many briefs hanging in a tree; in front devils are tormenting a monk. A similar work is dated 1588. Among other subjects of these prints are the great clock at Strasbourg, 1574, views of towns, castles, and other buildings, arms, armorials, costumes, and some good specimens of early stencil colouring of a vivid kind.

THE Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings held its third annual meeting on Monday last, in the Great Room of the Society of Arts, Adelphi. The Report of the Committee, enlarging on the continued activity of the Society, and describing its efforts, many of which have been fortunate, some fruitless, was read, and showed that the chief object of the body, the awakening public attention to the dangers of "restoration," as distinct from preservation of buildings, was being rewarded with a large measure of success. No greater proof of this is needed than the foundation of a similar society in France. The labours of the Committee in regard to St. Alban's have been unhappily defeated, and the building has been handed over to the caprice of Sir E. Bessett. With regard to St. Mark's at Venice, the Society's efforts had been strengthened by the support of a large and educated body of Italians, who deprecate the deplorable treatment to which that building has been subjected. No doubt a change has taken effect, and the wholesale abolition of antiquity which was threatened is, for the time at least, modified, if not stayed; the recent operations are of a less destructive nature than before. The efforts of the Society, backed by Mr. Street's and Mr. J. J. Stevenson's remonstrances, elicited many testimonies to the same effect, one of the most valuable of which is a letter published in the Building News of the 18th ult. by a practical mason, Mr. S. B. Burton, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The City Church and Churchyard Protection Society is in general alliance with the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings, and has similar, but not identical, objects. Three hon. secretaries have been added to the last-named body, in order to relieve Mr. W. Morris of part of those increasing duties which he has generously performed. These gentlemen are Mr. Eustace Balfour, the Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, and Mr. C. G. Vinnall. Mr. S. Leighton, M.P., was in the chair, and the meeting was addressed by that gentleman, Lord Talbot de Malahide, Prof. Colvin, Mr. W. B. Richmond, and others. The meeting was largely attended. It was pressed on members that they should endeavour to add to their number, in order to strengthen the hands and extend the influence of the Society.

MR. WILFRED CRUICK, the author of 'Old English Plate,' has just completed a companion volume on 'French Plate,' giving the date, letters, and marks. This book, which is the result of much original research, will be published shortly by Mr. Murray.

PROF. CHARLES ELIOT NORTON has just completed a new work, entitled 'Historical Studies of Church Building in the Middle Ages—Venice, Siena, Florence.' The work is already in the press, and will be issued simultaneously in New York and London.

THE Fourth Annual Fine-Art Exhibition at Dundee is now open. Many English Royal Academicians are represented, as well as members of the Royal Scottish Academy. Amongst the contributors are Sir Noel Paton, Mr. Alma Tadema, Mr. M'Whirter, Sir Daniel Macnee, and Mr. Pettie. Last year the sales realized 10,000l.

THE details of the coming Congress of Archaeology in Wiltshire have just been arranged. Visits will be made to the churches of St. John and St. Mary and the remains of the Old Castle, Devizes, Potterne Church, Eastwell, Eddington Church, Bratton, Steeple Ashton, Keevil, Poulshot, Bishops-Cannings Church, the Wansdyke, Abury, Silbury and its stone circle, Chippenham, Bradenstoke Priory, Malmesbury Abbey, Amesbury, Vespaian's Camp, Stonehenge, Bowood House, Lacock Abbey, Melksham, and other places of antiquarian and historical interest in the county.

A SPECIAL general meeting of the Glasgow Archaeological Society was held last week. Papers by Mr. James Napier, F.R.S.E., 'On Folk-lore among the Upper and Middle Clames,' and by the Secretary on the canoe recently discovered in a small island in the Clyde, were read. Prof. Young exhibited coins in the Hunterian Museum which have not yet been catalogued.

THE following pictures were lately sold, for francs, in Paris: Goya, La Toilette, 3,150. Diaz, Chien au repos dans un Bois, 4,100. Millet, L'Heure de Midi, 6,300. Saint-Jean, Bouquet de Fleurs, 11,400. Bronze: Barye, Thésée et le Minotaure, 4,000.

THE annual general meeting of the Arundel Society was held on Wednesday, in the Society's rooms. Sir Henry Layard took the chair. The formal business having been concluded, Sir Henry gave a résumé of the history of the Society. He reported that the balance at the end of 1879 amounted to upwards of 1,300l., and he called attention to some remarkable mosaics in a mosque on the shores of the Bosphorus, apparently by an Italian artist of the fourteenth century, which he thought might be advantageously copied. Sir William Gregory added some observations on some monuments and frescoes he had lately seen in Italy, which he thought desirable to be copied. Mr. Oscar Browning urged the importance of copying some more of those Italian frescoes which were peculiarly liable to injury or decay. Some explanations were given by the Treasurer, and after a few observations by Sir Coutts Lindsay and Mr. Burton, the Director of the National Gallery, the meeting separated.

AN exhibition of the works of Thomas Couture is preparing in Paris by M. Barbienne.

THE exhibition of the Fine Arts at Milan will be opened in the Brera from the 26th of August till the 30th of September next.

M. CHAFU is to execute a statue of Auber to be erected in Caen, the composer's native town. This sculptor has lately finished a statue of Jean Cousin, which will be uncovered at Sens, his birthplace, in September next.

M. CHAMFLEURY's last portion of his 'Histoire de la Caricature,' the second part of which we reviewed some time ago, will shortly be issued by the Librairie Dentu, Paris.

THE German papers announce that the excavations at Olympia stopped on the 18th ult. They have been most fruitful. Late in the autumn, before the explorers finally quit the Morea, it is proposed to make further search in the south-east corner of the Altis and on the southern side of the Byzantine church.

AN exhibition has been opened at Karlsruhe of the sketches and drawings left by the late K. F. Lessing. Some of these date as far back as 1824.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—'Le Pré aux Clercs.'
CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Handel Festival.
ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. Gann's Orchestral Concerts.
ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The Musical Union.
ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Philharmonic Society.

It is idle to speculate upon the possible work which Louis Joseph Ferdinand Hérold might have wrought for the French lyric stage had he not fallen a victim to consumption at the age of forty-two. He lived long enough to leave an indelible impression at a time when opéra comique was considered a worthy field of labour by musicians of genius. 'Marie,' 'Zampa,' and 'Le Pré aux Clercs' will serve to keep alive the memory of Hérold so long as comic opera obtains recognition as a legitimate form of art. Of the three works mentioned the last is perhaps the most unexceptionable for continuous melodic interest and unity of style, notwithstanding the indications in 'Zampa' of dramatic intensity which might eventually have been turned to the best account. 'Le Pré aux Clercs' was produced on December 15th, 1832, and on January 19th following Hérold died. If we possessed in London a theatre devoted to comic opera of the purest type, this work would enjoy the utmost popularity both with musicians and the general public, for its never failing tunefulness is equalled by the skill and grace displayed in the concerted music and the orchestration. But if it be asked whether Mr. Gye was wise to select the opera for production at Covent Garden we are forced to reply in the negative. Its pristine delicacy and subtlety suffer by transplantation to a stage many sizes too large for the display of such qualities. The substitution of recitative for the dialogue of the original tends to monotony, notwithstanding the interest of the drama, and many charming points of detail are of necessity lost in the new locale. The work was far more effective when presented at the Gaiety Theatre in 1875 by the French company, whose efforts failed to meet with appreciation owing to some caprice on the part of the public. Whether Signor Vianesi feels no sympathy with this typically French opera we cannot undertake to say, but, whatever the cause, the playing of the orchestra on Saturday last was strangely coarse and unrefined. Hérold's score is not overlaid with brass and percussion, nor devoid of succurs, as might be supposed from this performance. With regard to the cast, though it would be unfair to term it inadequate, yet it is undeniable that its leading members did not succeed in rousing the audience from a more than normal state of apathy. Madame Albani as Isabelle produced some effect in the celebrated aria "Jours de mon enfance," but otherwise her performance was by no means remarkable, and M. Engel was neither vocally nor dramatically equal to the part of Mergy. The best piece of acting was that of Signor Cotogni as Canterelli, and a word of approval may be given alike to Mdlle. Valleria as Nicette, and to M. Gailhard as Girod. Signor Corni made little of his opportunities as Comminge. The general unsuitability of the opera to its present purpose was curiously illustrated by the cold reception accorded to some of the most charming numbers, as, for example, the two trios, "Vous me disiez sans cesse" and "C'en est fait." In order to secure at least one of the essential features of grand opera, Signor Vianesi has interpolated a ballet with music by some very inferior hand. Hérold wrote several ballets, and one or more of them might surely have been utilised for the occasion. It is but due to the stage manager, Signor Tagliafico, to acknowledge the judicious and effective liberality displayed in the mounting of the work; the second and third acts give conclusive proof of his skill and taste in such matters. "Le Pré aux Clercs" will yet enjoy a career of popularity, but not on the Covent Garden stage nor in the Italian language. Madame Sembrich has followed up her initial success by appearing as Amina, a character affording similar opportunities for purely vocal display to that of Lucia, while possessing still less dramatic significance. Madame Sembrich's exceptional ability as a singer of florid Italian music has been placed further beyond dispute by her new assumption, but it is still impossible to speak with safety as to her dramatic resources. Her third and last impersonation this season will be that of Marguerite de Valois in "Les Huguenots."

The Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace was brought to a close yesterday week by what, in the unanimous opinion of all connoisseurs present, was one of the finest performances—possibly the finest—of 'Israel in Egypt' ever heard. There is no work of Handel's, nor indeed in the whole répertoire of music, so well fitted for a monster festival as this. Of the thirty-nine numbers which it contains, twenty-eight are choruses; and it is no disparagement to the eminent soloists engaged on these occasions to say that by far the greatest effects produced in the central transept of the Crystal Palace are those made by the choral portions of the music. In 'Israel,' moreover, more than in any other of Handel's works, double choruses abound, and very remarkable effects are obtained by the antiphonal treatment of the vocal masses. It will suffice to refer to such numbers as "He spake the word," "He gave them hailstones," "The horse and his rider," and "Thy right hand, O Lord," as illustrations of this point. Nowhere else is it possible to realize these effects to anything like the extent which is done at Sydenham, because no other orchestra in the country allows the two choirs to be placed at such a distance from one another. The choruses yesterday week were, on the whole, magnificently rendered. The few slips which we noticed were, with hardly an exception, precisely the same as have been made at every Handel Festival within our recollection. This is likely to continue to be the case until the rehearsal becomes one in reality as well as in name. If the time devoted to some of the more popular numbers, which every member of the chorus knows perfectly, were given to the practice of the more difficult pieces, many of which are never by any chance rehearsed at all, there might be a hope of future improvement. This, however, is, we fear, hardly to be looked for, as, although the artistic benefit would be indubitable, the financial result of such a change of procedure would probably be less satisfactory. We referred last week to Sir Michael Costa's alterations of Handel's text, and shall not again enlarge on this painful subject, merely saying that some of the liberties taken with 'Israel' were even more unwarrantable and repugnant to every artistic feeling than those already commented upon. The solo music was excellently given by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Bridson, and Mr. Frederic King. Sir Michael Costa received an ovation at the close of the festival, which, as a conductor at least, he certainly fairly earned. We are glad to learn that the attendance compares favourably with that of previous festivals, upwards of 79,000 persons having been present during the four days.

The last of the present series of Mr. Ganz's Orchestral Concerts, which was given at St. James's Hall last Saturday afternoon, was in more respects than one the best that has been heard during the season. The central point of attraction, at least to musicians, was the announcement of Berlioz's symphony 'Harold en Italie,' a masterpiece to which the public seldom have an opportunity of listening. It was performed at the Crystal Palace in 1878, and was also given at St. James's Hall last season under Mr. Ganz; but with these exceptions it had not been heard in London since the composer himself conducted it at the New Philharmonic Concerts in 1855. The work is essentially programme music, the idea being suggested by Byron's 'Childe

Harold,' and a solo viola being employed throughout the score as the representative of the hero. The four movements of which the symphony consists are respectively entitled "Harold in the Mountains—Scenes of Melancholy, Happiness, and Joy," "March and Evening Prayer of the Pilgrims," "Serenade of the Mountaineer of the Abruzzi to his Loved One," and "Recollections of the Scenes preceding the Orgy of Brigands." The form of the work is based on that of the classical symphonies, though with such important modifications of detail as to render the similarity by no means obvious without close examination of the music. The characteristics which strike the hearer most forcibly are the originality and wealth of the melodic invention, the remarkable boldness of the harmonies, and the rare beauty of the orchestration. In all these respects 'Harold' is a not unworthy companion of the 'Damnation de Faust.' The most pleasing and readily appreciable movements are the Pilgrims' March and the Serenade, while the final Orgy of Brigands, though of unquestionable power, seems in many parts to seek for truth of painting at the expense of musical beauty. The performance of the symphony under Mr. Ganz deserves high praise, as being by far the most satisfactory rendering of an orchestral work which we have yet heard under his direction. The first and third movements were especially well played. The important and difficult viola solo was admirably rendered by Herr Holländer, one of the most finished artists now before the public. The remaining orchestral pieces at this concert were M. Saint-Saëns's not particularly interesting Prelude to 'Le Déluge,' and the Overture to the 'Wood Nymph' (Bennett) and 'Tannhäuser.' Mendelssohn's Concerto in a minor was brilliantly played by M. Alphonse Duvernoy; and the vocalists were Mr. Sims Reeves and Miss Carlotta Elliot. Mr. Reeves sang "If with all your hearts" and 'Adelaide' in his own unapproachable style; Miss Elliot, who has an excellent voice, should be counselled not at present to attempt such pieces as "Bel raggio" from 'Semiramide,' which was obviously beyond her power.

There is no occasion to linger over the final programme of the Musical Union, as it consisted, according to recognized precedent, of items selected for their inherent attractiveness. Allowing for an unfortunate contretemps in the scheros, we have seldom heard Beethoven's Septet better played. One point worthy of notice was the judicious tempo adopted in the minuet, a movement frequently taken too fast. M. Alphonse Duvernoy's crisp touch and vivacious style told exceedingly well in the Septet of Hummel, and unstinted praise may be accorded to his rendering, with Herr Anser, of the two final movements of Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata. The Musical Union was one of three institutions whose existence it was supposed would be terminated by their several promoters after this season. But, as in the instance of the Sacred Harmonic Society, it seems that, in place of "Requiescat in pace," we should rather say "Resurgam!" After thirty-six years of unremitting labour for art—labour which we are assured has had extremely beneficial results—the director evinces a not unnatural desire to retire, and as the executive of the Musical Union lies solely in his hands, the adoption of this course would, it was naturally assumed, prove fatal to the further continuance of the undertaking. But it would seem that the subscribers and others interested in the matter have taken counsel, and a proposal has been made that a well-known musician, one of the regular executants at the Matinées, should assume the direction of the enterprise, or at any rate the more laborious part thereof, leaving the editing of the programmes, &c., still in the hands of Mr. Ella. We may be permitted to express the hope that an arrangement of this nature may be carried into effect. The Musical Union performances are among the most artistic and enjoyable of the summer season, and have been the means of introducing many continental musicians of note to the London public. A mere glance at the list of executants who have appeared during past seasons will serve to prove this. Musical institutions based on the most rigid art principles are not so common with us that we can afford to lose one of them without making at least an effort to maintain its existence.

The eighth concert of the Philharmonic Society (the last for the present season), which was given at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, was noteworthy for the introduction into the programme of an important work by a young English composer. As a general rule the Committee treat our younger race of musicians with such supercilious neglect that they deserve credit when for once they recognise the possibility that a native composer with a comparatively unknown name may perchance have written something worth hearing. We trust that the precedent set on Wednesday may be followed in coming seasons, because the impression undoubtedly exists (whether deservedly or not it is not our present business to inquire) that the Philharmonic Society does little or nothing for the encouragement of rising talent. The fortunate exception on Wednesday was Mr. Arthur H. Jackson, whose Pianoforte Concerto in D minor was played by Miss Agnes Zimmermann. Mr. Jackson was formerly a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where he received instruction in composition from the late Sir Sterndale Bennett and Dr. Sullivan, and he is now one of the professors of harmony in that institution. It is with sincere pleasure that we record the complete success of Mr. Jackson's work. It is not only a most musically and well-written composition, but it contains many passages of real charm and beauty. The slow movement is especially admirable; but the entire concerto deserves unqualified praise. The solo part, the treatment of which shows a thorough acquaintance with the technique of the piano, was most excellently rendered by Miss Zimmermann, and the hearty applause which greeted each movement ought to convince the directors of the Society that they will do well to pay more attention than they have hitherto done to the claims of English music at their concerts. Another English piece was included in Wednesday's programme, a pretty, but rather fragmentary, canonet, "I prithe send me back my heart," composed by Miss Maud Valérie White, and capably sung by Mr. Santley. Sir Julius Benedict's Overture to 'Twelfth Night,' composed expressly for the Philharmonic Society, was performed for the first time at the same concert. Like all its author's works, it is extremely well written and very effectively scored; but it shows more constructive skill than inspiration. Madame Norman-Néruda created great enthusiasm by her really splendid performance of the Adagio and Rondo from Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E (music, it may be remarked in passing, which is quite unworthy of her abilities); and the 'Pastoral' Symphony, Weber's 'Jubilee' Overture, and vocal music by Madame Antoinette Sterling completed a very interesting selection.

Musical Society.

MR. STEPHEN S. STRATTON, of Birmingham, who during the past season has given a series of chamber concerts at the Masonic Hall, announces a second series for next season. The prospectus which he has issued states that the number of concerts will be increased from four to six, each concert consisting entirely of instrumental music, and occupying rather less than two hours. No fewer than thirteen novelties are announced, of which six are by English composers—a fact for which Mr. Stratton deserves especial praise. The prices are so extremely low as to place the opportunity of hearing high-class music within the reach of all; and Mr. Stratton deserves the warmest support of his townspeople in his endeavours to diffuse the knowledge of his art.

At Mr. Charles Halle's Recital on the 18th ult. the novelty was Kiel's Quintet in A, Op. 75, a musically but not remarkably interesting work. At the next performance, on the 24th, there were two items marked "first time," neither of which, however, could be considered an absolute novelty. Goetz's Quintet in C minor, Op. 16, for piano and strings, was first performed in this country at the Popular Concerts, March 31st, last year. It is perhaps the most satisfactory of the lamented composer's chamber works, the themes being charmingly fresh and melodious and the development clear and unlaboured, though tinged with Schumannlike earnestness and poetic feeling. Mr. Halle played Schumann's 'Kinderscenen,' Op. 15, a composition which by its nature is unfitted for frequent public performance. Each of the thirteen sketches is a gem in itself, but the bond of union between the whole is but slight. It was noted that Mr. Halle took several of the numbers at a much slower pace than that indicated by the metronomic directions; and having regard to the style of the music and the fanciful titles bestowed by the composer it cannot be denied that there was ample justification for this course. For example, No. 12, 'Kund im Einschlummen,' would be meaningless if taken at the marked tempo. The remainder of the programme of Friday week must pass without comment.

MISS GERTRUDE WYNNE (Mrs. Dallas) gave a matinée musicale at 32, Craven Hill Gardens, on Wednesday, when she was assisted by Madame Edith Wynne, M. Sainton, and other artists. Miss Gertrude Wynne is a soprano of considerable promise, and a pupil of Madame Sainton-Dolby.

At the Paris Académie des Beaux-Arts the first Grand Prix for musical composition has been awarded by the judges to M. Lucien Hillemaier, the second to M. Marty, and honourable mention to M. Bruneau. All three gentlemen were pupils of M. Massenet.

It had been settled that M. Ambroise Thomas's new opera 'Françoise de Rimini' was to be produced next winter at the Paris Opera, Gounod's 'Le Tribut de Zamora' having given place to it. It is now stated by the Revue et Gazette Musicale that this arrangement has been altered, as M. Thomas finds it impossible to secure an adequate cast for his work, and therefore withdraws it till a more favourable opportunity. Under these circumstances it at present appears likely that M. Gounod's work will be the first given. Next January or February is spoken of as the probable date.

DRAMA

LYCEUM THEATRE.—SOLE LEASER AND MANAGER, MR. HENRY IRVING. Every Evening (except Saturdays, at 7.45) THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. 2nd Time (terminating with the Trial Scene) SHYLOCK. MR. IRVING, PORTIA, MISS ELLEN TERRY. Concluding with 'IOLANTER.' MISS ELLEN TERRY and MR. IRVING. SHYLOCK (Sings) JULY 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th, at 8 P.M. 'THE BELLS' (MAY TRIAL) MR. IRVING, and 'IOLANTER' (MR. IRVING and MISS ELLEN TERRY). 'THE MERCHANT OF VENICE' every Saturday at 9 o'clock. SHYLOCK, MR. IRVING, PORTIA, MISS ELLEN TERRY.—Box Office (Mr. Hunt), open 10 to 5.

THE WEEK.

VAUDEVILLE.—'The Guv'nor,' a Farceal Comedy, in Three Acts. By E. G. Lankester. SADLER'S WELLS.—'A Midsummer Night's Dream.'

WHILE to France we are indebted for two-thirds of our acting drama, German comedy is practically neglected. A few dramas of serious interest have during times comparatively recent been transferred from the German stage to the English, the most important being Dr. Westland Marston's 'Donna Diana,' which, though Spanish in origin, reaches us through the German of Joseph Schreyvogel, Mr. Oxenford's adaptation of Dr. Mosenthal's 'Deborah,' and Mr. Wills's two plays 'Hinko the Headman' and 'The Man of Airlie.' German humour has seldom, however, commended itself to the English public, and it is difficult to recall before the appearance of 'The Guv'nor' a single instance of a German comedy or farce which has found acceptance upon our boards. The specimen now afforded is likely to lead to further explorations of the source whence it is derived. Through an adaptation which is weak, undramatic, and juvenile penetrates enough of genuine drollery to stir an English public to paroxysms of laughter, and to secure for the play a complete success. That 'The Guv'nor' has even in the original any great merit, dramatic or literary, may be doubted. In its present shape, in addition to being feebly written, it is wholly preposterous in action, and its best effects are produced by the employment of unpleasant means. Physical imperfections are, so to speak, the mainspring of the action. But for the deafness of one of the characters the entire plot would drop to the ground; but for the stammer of a second the rolé he plays would be that of a walking gentleman. Now of all means of bringing about equivocation, that of making one of the characters deaf is the cheapest and the most common; of all methods of giving an appearance of comicality to a character not intrinsically comic, that of assigning it a peculiarity of speech is the simplest. In spite of these defects and the occasional vulgarity and the constant strain after wit which leads the English adapter to furnish his dialogue with the worst puns he can appropriate or invent, 'The Guv'nor' is a success. It has an intrigue which, though impossible from beginning to end, is diverting, and it has two or three scenes in which the fun is "fast and furious." It may, of course, be objected that the action from first to last is that of an assemblage of lunatics. Since, however, the appearance of the 'Chapeau de Paille d'Italie,' the most celebrated, if not the first, work of the class—a work which might safely be commended to the company of the Palais Royal during its stay at the Gaiety—pieces of this description have won acceptance and recognition. While modest enough, then, to permit of its being played in a boarding-school, this specimen of a Teutonic comédie-vaudeville is as diverting as the most fashionable French obscenity. A certain readiness, not always found, to yield to the empire of absurdity is an indispensable condition of enjoyment. Those who can so yield, and in the pursuit, and it may be said the gratification, of laughter can send their reason to sleep, may reap such amusement as they do not often obtain. The application, however, of the test of reason would be like that of the spear of Ithuriel to the hidden demon, or rather, perhaps, like a pinch of salt to a snail, effecting less of change than of apparent annihilation.

A singularly fine performance of a comic, jolly, and bibulous old boatman was afforded by Mr. James, who in parts of this description has now no equal on the English stage. As a picture of ineffable and good-hearted vulgarity and radiant self-content the impersonation cannot easily be surpassed. Mr. Maclean acted in a style equally moderate and effective as a retired confectioner who is the victim of an almost interminable series of delusions, and Mr. Thorne elicited much laughter in a scene of comic anger and bewilderment. An interpretation adequate throughout was afforded, and the performance from the point of view of farce must be regarded as satisfactory.

The revival of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' at Sadler's Wells is creditable, in some respects. Mr. Edmund Lyons as Bottom, though he is over emphatic in the later scenes, acts with intelligence and judgment. Mr. Hendrie is a satisfactory Quince, Miss Rosa Kenney plays Hermia, and Miss Ella Dietz Helena. For the fairy scenes meanwhile juvenile exponents have been secured, some of whom display remarkable intelligence. Miss Laura Lawson is a spirited Oberon, and Miss Addie Blanche a diminutive and also a most impish Puck. So well trained are the tiny exponents in general, that the ordinary objections to the employment of children disappear. Their delivery of the lines assigned them is, on the whole, equal to that of their elders, and the contrast between the fairies and the human beings in whose loves and feuds they take an interest, mischievous or sentimental, is effective. Against the plan adopted little can be urged. 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' lends itself to fanciful treatment, and musical or spectacular effects may be introduced almost ad libitum. An attractive and amusing exhibition is afforded. It may, perhaps, be urged that there is more of scenery than of Shakespeare and more of music than of both. Fortunately most of the music is Mendelssohn's.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—E. M. E. D.—A. H.—H. M. W.—A. B.—W. L.—R. I.—J. M.—G. W.—J. H. P.—G. R.—G. B. R.—F. J. F.—P. B.—Received.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

G I O T T O.

By HARRY QUILTER, M.A.,
Trinity College, Cambridge.

Illustrated with Photographs of the Frescos in the Cappella d'Arezzo, Padua: a Facsimile in Colour of a Madonna in the lower Church of Assisi and Engravings from the Mosaics of the Grotto Campanile at Florence.

Small 4to. handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt top, price 12s. [Now ready.]

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS OF ART EDUCATION.

Edited by EDWARD J. POYNTER, R.A.

Each volume contains numerous illustrations, and is strongly bound for the use of Students. Price 6s.

The Volumes now ready are

PAINTING.

CLASSIC AND ITALIAN. By Edward J. POYNTER, R.A., and PHOEBY M. HEAD, Lincoln College, Oxford. Upwards of 80 Full-page and other illustrations. Bound in extra cloth limp 5s. [Ready.]

* This Volume contains an introductory Preface on Art Education by Mr. Poynter, who also contributes a chapter on Egyptian Art, and succinct notices of the various Italian Schools, &c.

ARCHITECTURE.

GOTHIC AND RENAISSANCE. By T. ROGER SMITH, F.R.I.B.A. 120 Illustrations. Cloth limp, 5s. [Ready.]

* This Volume treats of the history of Architecture from the rise of the Gothic style to the general depreciation which overtook the Renaissance style at the close of the eighteenth century.

A SECOND EDITION is ready of Mr. R. D. BLACKMORE'S
NEW NOVEL.

MARY ANERLEY: a Yorkshire Story.

3 vols. crown 8vo 31s. 6d.

"One of his happiest productions."—Saturday Review.
"A better novel we have not read for a long time. Racy language, quiet comedy, rich humour, keen observation, and a talent for apt allusions are not every man's gifts."—Athenæum.
"Mary Anerley is not so much a story though it is as admirably constructed story, as a fund of deep studies of splendid pictures, of most amusing and graphic sketches of the quaintest, queerest people that ever believed themselves to be the salt of the earth."—Daily News.
"Mary Anerley" is Yorkshire throughout, racy of the soil. [Hall's Note.]

THE STORY OF AN HONEST MAN.

By EDMOND ABOUT. 3 vols. price 31s. 6d. [At all Libraries.]

LEAVES from the ASH. "Igdrasil, is not every leaf of it a biography?" By MARGARET FIELD. Small 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

Elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, 468 pages, price 12s. 6d.

SYLVAN SPRING. By Francis GEORGE HEATH. Author of 'The Fern World,' &c. Illustrated by 12 Coloured Plates by F. R. Hulse, F.L.S., by 12 Full-page and 108 other Wood Engravings of Flowers and Ferns, &c.

"Admirers of the beauties of nature owe another debt of gratitude to Mr. Heath for this handsome volume."—Globe.
"An ideal educational book. It is rare to meet with a work in which botanical facts and power of word-painting are so happily combined as they are in this volume. Such a book as 'Sylvan Spring' is an addition to our literature."—The Press.
"This is another elegant volume from the familiar pen of Mr. Heath."—Academy.

A PHYSICAL TREATISE ON ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM. By J. R. H. GORDON, B.A., Cambridge, Assistant-Secretary of the British Association. 2 vols. demy 8vo. cloth extra, 30s.

A RIDE in PETTICOATS and SLIPPERS from FEE to the ALGERIAN FRONTIER. By Captain F. E. COLVILLE, of the Grenadier Guards. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 12s.

Now ready, No. 35, Vol. V. 4to in Wrapper, price 1s. 6d.

MEN of MARK, for July. Containing, with brief Biographical Notices, very fine Permanent Coloured Photographs by Lock & Whittell, taken from Life for this work only, of—

THE BISHOP of LICHFIELD.

By CANON LIDDELL.

JOSEPH COOPER, M.P.

"The photographs are very fine specimens of their art."—Times.

ST. NICHOLAS, for July, will be ready shortly full of Illustrations and Stories, 4to price 1s.

Miss Alcott's New Novel—An appreciative critic writes as follows to the publishers of St. Nicholas:—"Do you good gentlemen realize what a capital serial Miss Alcott is giving the St. Nicholas boys and girls this year? If not, I would like to call your special attention to it. 'Jack and Jill' is decidedly the best story she has written hardly excepting that first book which led her triumph into the very heart of American and English home-life. Indeed it closely resembles 'Little Women' in spirit, though it has a wider scope in action and treatment. It seems to me the strongest and tenderest, current child-story in the language full of rollicksome heartiness and beautiful sympathies—a story in which the girl-readers are honestly and safely delighted to meet live, manly boys and boy-readers actually and themselves capable of being as interested in a home-scene as a fight—just as a bright, noble girl as in a gorilla."

Stories, Poems, sustainable and humorous, and pictures of fun and frolic appear here and there in the Number, and the pages devoted to very young readers to 'Jack-in-the-hoop' repairs, the 'Letter-box' and the 'Kiddle-box' are filled with fresh, varied, and amusing items, stories, letters from the boys and girls, and puzzles.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON.

GEOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS.

BY A. C. RAMSAY, LL.D. F.R.S.,

Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom.

GEOLOGICAL MAP OF THE BRITISH ISLES.

Scale, 1½ miles to an inch; plate, 30 inches by 20.
Mounted on Rollers, Varanahel, 42s.

GEOLOGICAL MAP OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

This Map shows all the Railways, Roads, &c. and when Mounted in Case holds into a convenient pocket size, making an excellent Travelling Map.

Scale, 1½ miles to an inch; size 30 inches by 42.

Fourth Edition in Sheet 25s. Mounted in Case 30s.; on Rollers, Varanahel, 32s.; Spring Roller, 31 12s. 6d.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Fifth Edition, greatly Enlarged, post 8vo. with Geological Map printed in Colours, and numerous Additional Illustrations of Fossils, Sections and Landscapes. 12s.

BY EDWARD HULL, B.A. F.R.S.,

Director of H.M.'s Geological Survey of Ireland.

GEOLOGICAL MAP OF IRELAND.

Founded on the Maps of the Geological Survey of Sir R. M. HARRIS, G.B.E. and of Professor J. M. ST. JOHN. This Map is constructed on the basis of the Ordnance Survey and Coloured Geologically. It also shows the Railways, Stations, Roads, Rivers, Antiquities, &c. and is when Mounted in Case forms a good and convenient Travelling Map.

Scale, 5 miles to 1 inch; size, 31 inches by 20.

On Two Sheets, 25s.; Mounted in Case, 30s.; on Rollers, Varanahel, 32s.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF IRELAND.

Part I. Geological Formation of Ireland. Part II. Physical Geography of Ireland. Part III. The Glaciation of Ireland. Post 8vo. with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 7s.

BY JAMES B. JORDAN,

Of the Mining Record Office.

STANFORD'S LIBRARY MAP OF LONDON.

Geologically Coloured from the Maps of the Geological Survey.

Scale, 6 inches to a mile; size, 60 inches by 78.

Twenty-four Sheets in a Portfolio, 2 12s. 6d.; Mounted in Morocco Case, or on Rollers, Varanahel, 4s.; Spring Roller, 6s.

A GEOLOGICAL SECTION.

Showing the Order of Superposition and Approximate Maximum Thickness of Sedimentary Strata in the British Islands.

Scale, 3½ feet to 1 inch; size, 11 inches by 40.

Price, folded in book form, 4s.; Mounted on Rollers, Varanahel, 6s.

By H. W. BRISTOW, F.R.S. F.G.S.,

Director of the Geological Survey of England and Wales.

TABLE

OF BRITISH SEDIMENTARY AND FOSSILIFEROUS STRATA.

The Description of 116 Groups and Distribution by R. ETHERIDGE, F.R.S. Second Edition, Revised.

Price, folded in book form, 4s.; Mounted on Rollers, Varanahel, 6s.

GEOLOGICAL DIAGRAMS

Price of each, Mounted on Rollers and Varanahel, 6s.; or folded in book form, 4s.

CHARACTERISTIC BRITISH

FOSSILS. By J. W. LOWRY F.R.S. Exhibits nearly 900 of the most prominent forms of Organic Remains found in British strata, arranged in the order of their occurrence, and accompanied by a column showing the succession and thickness of the strata, and the geological character of each formation.

CHARACTERISTIC BRITISH

TERTIARY FOSSILS. By J. W. LOWRY F.R.S. The Diagram is similarly arranged to No. 1, and illustrates upwards of 400 specimens of the Tertiary Fauna indicating the local series to which they belong, the formation in which they exist the proportions of the Drawings to the natural size, and whether still found living.

FOSSIL CRUSTACEA. By J. W.

RAITER, A.L.S. F.G.S., and H. WOODWARD, F.G.S. F.R.S. Consisting of about 200 Illustrations of the Orders and Sub-Orders, and showing their range in Geological Time. Shows recent types are introduced, and the Natural History succession is observed as far as possible, each group being commencing in the lower strata and carried upwards to its rise or to modern times, thus indicating through what period any genus existed.

London:

EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

GROSVENOR GALLERY.

SUMMER EXHIBITION.

NOW OPEN, from NINE till SEVEN.

ADMISSION, ONE SHILLING.

WILL CLOSE SATURDAY, JULY 31st.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY,

NEW BOND-STREET,

NOW OPEN.

Available for both Ladies and Gentlemen.

COMPRISES AN

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CIRCULATING LIBRARY,

Provided with all the best and Newest Literature; a LIBRARY OF VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC;

A REFERENCE LIBRARY;

READING, WRITING, AND NEWS ROOMS,

Supplied with the Daily and Weekly Journals;

LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM,

DINING AND LUNCHEON ROOMS, SMOKING-ROOM,

And all the appliances and comforts of a FIRST-CLASS CLUB.

Subscription to the Circulating Library, ONE GUINEA per Annum.

Subscription for Club Membership, TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

Subscription for Club Membership, together with Six Volumes delivered free from the Circulating Library, THREE GUINEAS per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.—An Annual Subscription of FIVE GUINEAS entitles a Country Subscriber to Fifteen Volumes and the use of the Club for himself and one other member of the Family.

SUBSCRIPTIONS CAN COMMENCE FROM ANY DATE

The Directors beg to inform the Subscribers to the Circulating Library that a constant endeavour will be made to provide a punctual and ample supply of all new works of interest and authority; and in order to carry out this intention efficiently, they must rely in some measure upon the co-operation and assistance of the Subscribers themselves. It is notorious that a large number of new books of a wholly trivial character are now put into circulation, for which there is no real demand, and the publication of such works is in many instances only rendered possible by the system upon which Circulating Libraries have hitherto been conducted. The expenditure upon works of this class will be strictly curtailed, and the funds will be applied as far as possible to the purchase and circulation of books of a higher order and a really popular character, such as the majority of readers are anxious to obtain upon the date of their publication. The Directors trust by this means to render the Circulating Library, in the truest sense of the word, select, while they will seek at the same time to avoid the kind of interested and arbitrary censorship that has been found alike vexatious to authors and the public.

All the Books in the Library are available for Subscribers, without distinction as to amounts of Subscription

Full details of Subscriptions, both for Town and Country Members, on application to Mr. CHAS. LES ALLEN, the GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), 135, NEW BOND-STREET, W.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d., royal 32mo. cloth, 3s.

THE DAILY ROUND. Meditation, Prayer, and Psalms, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year
London J. Whittaker, 12, Warwick Lane.

2 vols. crown 8vo. 14s. with Map and Ground-Plans.

CHURCH WORK and LIFE in ENGLISH MINISTERS. the ENGLISH EPISCOPAL MINISTERS. By MACKENZIE R. C. WALCOTT, B.D., Professor of Chichester.
Chitto & Windus, Piccadilly

Now ready, price 1s.

DR. WEDGWOOD on PROGRESS of DENTISTRY the Mouth and Teeth in Relation to Eating, Speaking, Hearing, and Breathing—Conservative Treatment, Replantation of Teeth. By J. J. WEDGWOOD, M.D. D.D.S. L.D.S., &c., of University of New York State and Royal College of Surgeons.
London C. L. Marsh & Co. 130, Fleet-street.

Ninth Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT O. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.L., &c., 5, Bulstrode-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.
London: C. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Eighty-eighth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ADVICE to a MOTHER on the MANAGEMENT of her CHILDREN and on the Treatment of some of the most of their more pressing Illnesses and Accidents. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.
J. & A. Churchill, London; and all Booksellers.

One Hundredth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ADVICE to a WIFE on the MANAGEMENT of her own HEALTH, and on the Treatment of some of the Complaints incidental to Pregnancy, Labour, and Breeding. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.
J. & A. Churchill, London; and all Booksellers.

Enlarged to pp. 300, bound, 1s. or 14 stamps.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Dr. R. EPPA. Revised by WASHINGTON EPPA, L.R.C.P. Describes fully and Prescribes for a Hundred Diseases.
James Epps & Co. 68, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly

Small crown 8vo. cloth, price 1s. 6d.

REALITIES of the FUTURE LIFE.

C. Egan Paul & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

NOW READY,

Price 1s.

A LETTER on "THE EXACT GOD."

BY

A MECHANIST.

C. Egan Paul & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

MESSRS. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED,

I.

TROUBLESOME DAUGHTERS. By L. B. WOLFORD, Author of 'Cousins,' 'Pauline,' 'Mr. Smith: a Part of his Life,' &c. 3 vols. post 8vo. 25s. 6d.

II.

CAMPAIGNING in SOUTH AFRICA. Reminiscences of an Officer in 1879. By Captain W. E. MONTAGUE, 84th Regiment, Author of 'Claude Meadowleigh,' &c. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

III.

Fifth Edition, Revised throughout and greatly Enlarged.
The MOOR and the LOCH. Containing Minute Instructions in all Highland Sports, With Wanderings over Crags and Corries, Past and Fell. By JOHN COLQUHOUN. Fifth Edition, to which is added, Recollections of the Author's Early Life. 2 vols. post 8vo. with 2 Portraits and other Illustrations, 70s.

IV.

DAVID ARMSTRONG; or, Before the Dawn. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 17s.

"This is a novel of no common order."—Morning Post.

V.

REATA: What's in a Name? By E. D. GERAUD. 3 vols. post 8vo. 25s. 6d. Originally published in Blackwood's Magazine.

"It is long since we have read a story in which excellence of plot and excellence of character-painting are so well combined. From the first page to the last the reader is thoroughly interested in the story. Such evenness of execution, such admirable balance between the interest of the story, the interest of the characters, and the mere interest of the local colouring itself, is very rare."—Spectator.

VI.

A DREAMER. By Katharine Wylde. 3 vols. post 8vo. 25s. 6d.

"Here is the unmistakable contagious touch of genuine feeling, worth volumes of ingenuity and folios of cleverness."—Spectator.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo. 282 pages, price 7s. 6d., postage, 6d.
THE JESUS of HISTORY and the JESUS of TRADITION. By HERBERT SOLOMON
 London: Reeves & Turner, 126, Strand, W.C.

12mo. cloth, price 5s.
THE THOROUGH GUIDE to the ENGLISH
LAKE DISTRICT, containing an original Description of all the Localities, Curious Drama, Poetic Treasures, Mountains, Accidents within the District; a full account of the various Approaches, Tables showing cost of Tourist's Tickets, &c. Illustrated with 13 Maps. By M. J. H. RADDLETT, B.A. The Maps engraved by J. Bartholomew, F.R.S., Edinburgh.
 Dukes & Co. 27, Soho-square.

Every SATURDAY, 24 Pages, Price 4d. of all Booksellers.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

A Medium of Intercommunication for Literary Men, Artists, Antiquaries, Genealogists, &c.

"When found, make a note of."—CAPTAIN CUTLER.

CONTAINING EVERY WEEK AMUSING ARTICLES ON SOME OF THE FOLLOWING SUBJECTS:

ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTTISH HISTORY.

Illustrated by Original Communications and Inedited Documents.

BIOGRAPHY.

Including unpublished Correspondence of eminent Men, and unrecorded Facts connected with them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

More especially of English Authors, with Notices of rare and unknown Editions of their Works, and Notes on Authorship of Anonymous Books.

POPULAR ANTIQUITIES and FOLK- LORE.

Preserving the fast-fading Relics of the old Mythologies.

BALLADS and OLD POETRY.

With Historical and Philological Illustrations.

POPULAR and PROVERBIAL SAYINGS.

Their Origin, Meaning, and Application.

PHILOLOGY.

Including Local Dialects, Archaisms, and Notes on our old Poets.

GENEALOGY and HERALDRY.

Including Histories of Old Families, completion of Pedigrees, &c.

Published by JOHN FRANCIS, 90, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

TRUSTEES.
 The Right Honourable BARON CAMPBELL.
 The Right Honourable VISCOUNT CLANRITHSON.
 The Right Honourable LORD JUSTICE THORNTON.
 The Honourable VIC-CHANCELLOR SIR CHARLES HALL.
WILLIAM FRANKLIN HIGGINS, Esq.
EDMUND ROBERT TURNER, Esq.
DIRECTORS.
 Edward Bailey, Esq.
 Francis Thomas Bircham, Esq.
 The Hon. Katharine O. Campbell.
 John Clerk, Esq. Q.C.
 Frederick George Davidson, Esq.
 John Deedes, Esq.
 William James Farver, Esq.
 Henry Hay Freshfield, Esq.
 Sir Farver Henshall, Q.C. & M.P.
 William Frederick Higgins, Esq.
 Grosvener Hodgkinson, Esq.
 Holdsworth Hunt, Esq.
 John James Johnson, Esq. Q.C.
 William Rolle Malcolm, Esq.
 Richard Nicholson, Esq.
 Charles Stanley Smith, Esq.
 John Swift, Esq.
 The Right Honourable Lord Justice
 Thomson.
 Edward Tompess, Esq.
 Sir William Henry Walton, Esq.
 Arnold William White, Esq.
 Basil Thomas Woods, Esq.

Invested assets on 31st December, 1879, £503,781.
 Income for the year 1879, £14,868.
 Amount paid in claims to 31st December last, £13,809,497.
 Reversionary Bonus allotted for the five years ended 31st December last, £75,358.
 Aggregate Reversionary Bonus hitherto allotted, £1,108,091.
 The Expenses of Management (including commission) are under 4% per cent. of the annual income.
 Attention is specially directed to the revised Prospectus of the Society;
 as the new rates of Premium, which are materially lower for young lives than heretofore; to the new conditions as to extended limits of free travel and residence, and to the reduced rates of extra Premium.
 Loans are granted on security of Life Interests and Reversions in consideration with policies of insurance.
 Prospectus and Form of Proposal will be sent on application.
GRIFFITH DAVIES, Actuary.

"SANTAS" and DISINFECTION.—The Pine Forest at Home.—The SANTAS PREPARATIONS are in use in more than 300 Hospitals of British Hospitals, & Non-patients stations, agreeable, and healthful. Disinfecting Fluids, Powders, and Household Soaps. Toilet Soaps and Florida Tooth and Nursery Powders.
 Of all Chemists, or of the Santas Company Limited, Bathing Green, London E. Testimonials of highest Medical and Sanitary Authorities free. Of universal necessity as the most perfect Purifier and Disinfectant.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO.

20 and 40, MARK-LANE, LONDON.
 (Established 1862.)

CHARGING BANKERS—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

DEPOSITS of 10L and upwards received and Receipts issued—
 On demand 5s per cent. per annum.
 Seven Days' Notice 4 " " " "
 14 Days' Notice 4 " " " "
 30 Days' Notice 4 " " " "
 3 Months' Notice 4 " " " "
 An Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit
 Twelve complete Months.
 Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

THE LIVERPOOL and LONDON and GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY

1, Dale-street, Liverpool, Cornhill and Charing Cross, London.

FIRE—LIFE—ANNUITIES.

The Report and Accounts for 1879 showed the net Yearly Income £1,583,493
 The Capital (paid up) £45,000
 The General Reserve and Fire Re-insurance Fund £1,500,000
 The Balance of Profit and Loss Account after paying Dividend, 1879 £2,694
 The Life and Annuity Fund £1,061,071
 The last Actuarial Valuation showed that the New Life Participation Class had been very successful, enabling the Company to declare the high Reversionary Bonus of 26s. per cent. per annum on the Policies effected in that class during the quinquennium.
 All descriptions of Fire Insurance effected upon favourable terms.
 FIRE RENEWAL PREMIUMS falling DUE at MIDSUMMER should be paid within fifteen days thereafter.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1783.
 Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
 Insurances effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. BROOKFIELD, Secretary.

UNION ASSURANCE SOCIETY. Instituted in the Reign of Queen Anne, A.D. 1714. Chief Office, 21, Cornhill, E.C.; Western Branch, 70, Baker-street, W. London.
DIRECTORS, TRUSTEES, &c.

JOHN MOKLEY, Esq., Chairman.

MEMBER SOAMES, Esq., Deputy-Chairman.
 Daniel Britton, Esq.
 William James Ford, Esq.
 John Hibbert, Esq.
 Edmund Holland, Esq.
 Wm. Burrows Lewis, Esq.
 J. Trevelyan Mills, Esq.
 Charles Mortimer, Esq.
 John Thornton Rogers, Esq.
 Leonard Ryder, Esq.
 James Thompson, Esq.
 Alderman Sir Sydney H. Water-low, Bart.
 R. Haynam Wood, Esq.

Fire Insurances falling due at MIDSUMMER should be paid within fifteen days from the 24th of June.
 The published accounts give the fullest details as to the position of the Society.

WILLIAM BURROWS LEWIS, Managing Director.
CHARLES DARRELL, Secretary.

GUARDIAN FIRE AND LIFE OFFICE,
 11, LOMBARD-STREET, LONDON, E.C.
 Established 1871. Subscribed Capital, Two Millions.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—AUGUSTUS PREVOST, Esq.
Deputy-Chairman—JOHN O. TALBOT, Esq., M.P.
 Henry Hale Berran, Esq.
 Henry Bonham-Carter, Esq.
 Charles Wm. Currie, Esq.
 Charles F. Dumas, Esq.
 Sir Walter E. Farquhar, Bart.
 Alben G. H. Gibbs, Esq.
 James Goodson, Esq.
 Archibald Hamilton, Esq.
 Thomson Hankey, Esq.
 Richard M. Harvey, Esq.
 Sir Hon. John G. Hubbard, M.P.
 Frederick H. Janson, Esq.
 G. J. Shaw Lefevre, Esq., M.P.
 Beaumont W. Lubbock, Esq.
 John B. Martin, Esq.
 Henry John Norman, Esq.
 David Poynter, jun., Esq.
 Henry Vigne, Esq.
Manager of Fire Department—F. J. Mardon.
Secretary and Secretary—T. G. C. Berran.

Share Capital at present paid up and invested £1,000,000
 Total Funds available £2,961,000
 Total Annual Income nearly £200,000
 N.B.—Fire Policies which EXPIRE at MIDSUMMER should be renewed at the Head Office, or with the Agents, on or before the 15th day of JULY.

H. SOTHERAN & CO.'S CATALOGUE for JUNE, published this day, contains a large assortment (extending to 64 pages) of FINE, RARE, and CURIOUS BOOKS, Ancient and Modern, including Works in all Classes,

 Picture Galleries and other Books of Prints, many fine and expensively illustrated Works, Natural History, Books printed on Vellum, Old Manuscripts, Facetiae, Productions of George Cruikshank, Collections of Portraits, many Books with MS. Notes by H. T. Buckle, &c.

Subscription, 3s. per annum. A Specimen Number sent gratis and post free.

H. SOTHERAN & CO. ANCIENT AND MODERN BOOKSELLERS, 36, Piccadilly (opposite St. James's Church), London.—Established 1816.

NOW READY,

In crown 4to. tastefully printed on Dutch hand-made paper, and handsomely bound in Roxburgh, gilt top, lettered, price 7s. 6d. post free.

THE FIRST VOLUME

OF

THE ANTIQUARY

CONTAINS,

Among others, Interesting Articles on the following subjects:—

THE VALUE and CHARM of ANTIQUARIAN STUDY. By G. C. Swayne.

INSTRUCTIONS from JAMES II. to EARL of TYE-CONNEL. By Lord Talbot de Malahide.

HISTORICAL MEMORIES of TEWKESBURY ABBEY.
 By Dr. Hayman.

FOLK-LORE, and the FOLK-LORE SOCIETY. By G. L.
 Gomme, F.S.A.

LAST RELICS of the CORNISH TONGUE. By Rev. W.
 Lach-Sayrma.

THE CANTERBURY COINS of EDWARD I., II., III.
 By H. W. Henfrey.

OLD PAROCHIAL REGISTERS of ENGLAND. By Geo.
 Beaman.

THE SCHOOLMASTER PRINTER of ST. ALBANS. By W. Blades.

A VALHALLA of SOMERSET WORTHIES. By A. Kinglake.

On the IMITATION of CHRIST by THOMAS A KEMPIS.
 By E. Waterton, F.S.A.

CIVIL and other MACES. By G. Lambert, F.S.A.

THE OXFORD of PAST AGES.

NOTES on BOOK PLATES. By a Collector.

THE ANCIENT EARLDOM of MAR. By Harrington Beaumont.

CERAMICS of the ANCIENT BRITONS. By Llewellynn
 Jewitt, F.S.A.

On COLOUR in FOLK MEDICINE. By W. G. Black.

NOTES on SOME NORTHERN MINSTERS. By Rev.
 Mackenzie E. C. Walcott, F.S.A.

THE CIVIL WAR in HEREFORDSHIRE.

THE EARLY HISTORY of ROME. By J. H. Parker, C.B.

EXPENDITURE of EDWARD III. By Sir J. H. Ramsay.

JADE. By T. F. Threlkeld Dyer.

THE RUSSELL MONUMENTS at CHENIES.

CELTIC SUPERSTITIONS in SCOTLAND and IRELAND.

AUTOGRAPH PRAYER of CHARLES I. By F. B. Marsh.

LEGEND or HISTORY? By T. Morgan Owen.

* A Prospectus of VOLUME II. (now in course of publication) will be sent post free on application to the Publisher.

ELLIS STODD, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

R. & J. BECK have REMOVED to 68, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

* * Enlarged Illustrated CATALOGUE of MICROSCOPES, &c., sent post free on application.

Just out, 8vo. 5s.

A HANDBOOK TO POLITICAL QUESTIONS OF THE DAY;

BEING THE ARGUMENTS ON EITHER SIDE.

By SYDNEY C. BUXTON.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW WORKS.

On July 5th, 2 vols. demy 8vo.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.

With Illustrations and Maps.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo. 5s.

DRAMATIC IDYLS. Second Series.

By ROBERT BROWNING.

NEW VOLUME BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASSAGES FROM THE PROSE WRITINGS OF MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

BEAUTY'S DAUGHTERS.

By the Author of 'Molly Bawn,' 'Airy Fairy Lillian,' 'Phyllis.' 3 vols.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

NEW WORK BY LIONEL S. BEALE.

Now ready, demy 8vo. pp. 230, price 5s.

SLIGHT AILMENTS:

THEIR NATURE AND TREATMENT.

By LIONEL S. BEALE, M.B. F.R.S. F.R.C.P., Prof. of the Principles and Practice of Medicine in King's College, London.

J. & A. CHURCHILL.

TO BOOK COLLECTORS.

A CATALOGUE of RARE OLD BOOKS and

Early Illuminated and other MANUSCRIPTS, comprising a great number of Volumes of Old English Poetry, many Early English Books in Black Letter, and a great many very rare and curious Books relating to Scotland; also a most valuable and important Collection of Official Documents and Private Papers of Sir Philip Francis, the Author of 'Junius's Letters.' Free by post for six stamps.

ELLIS & WHITE, 29, New Bond-street, London, W.

E P P S ' S C O C C O A.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & Co. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON.
MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—Sold in Labelled Boxes only.

NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE

Established 1797.

HEAD OFFICE: SURREY-STREET, NORWICH.

LONDON OFFICE: 50, FLEET-STREET, E.C.

Amount Insured £125,000,000

Claims Paid £11,000

Norwich, June 24th, 1880.

C. E. RICHMOND, Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.
And may be provided against by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE COMPANY.
The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
Right Hon. Lord KINMAIR, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.
Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.
A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 65, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.,
28, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUARY WORKS OF ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

INEXPENSIVE BOOKCASES, Oak or Mahogany, with Movable Shelves, 4 ft. deep, Embossed Leather under Fronts, 11 ft. 6d. to 3 ft. 6d. Party Bookcases, Thirty Library Tables, in Stock to select from. Price Lists post free.—BRUCE, SMITH & Co., 27 and 28, Tottenham Court-road, and 1, Chancery-street, W.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S
STEEL PENS.
Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT THE
COUNTRY BY THE MOORE'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The Original, Best, and most Liberal.
Cash Prices.
No extra charge for time given.
Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F MOORE, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25,
Newwell-street, W.C. Established 1853.

F MOORE begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.
Bed-room Suites, from 4 ft. 6 in. to 10 ft. 6 in.
Drawing-room Suites, from 12 ft. 6 in. to 14 ft. 6 in.
Dining-room Suites, from 11 ft. 6 in. to 14 ft. 6 in.
And all other Goods in great variety.
F MOORE, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25,
Newwell-street, W.C. Established 1853.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE,
BRYANT & MAY'S
PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.
HIGHEST PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES —
Are not POISONOUS.
Are free from SMOKE.
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus.
Are perfectly harmless
To the operatives employed.
Are very DAMP PROOF.
LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

HIGHEST PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.
MR. G. H. JONES,
SURGEON DENTIST,
67, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON
(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.
Consultation free, from 10 to 4.

A POLLINARIS WATER.
"Largest demand for Pollinaris."—Herald, Nov. 17, 1878.
GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.
ANNUAL SALE, 8,000,000.
APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 18, Regent-street, London, E.W.

LOTS 110 and 111. — Lot 110, very soft OLD
PALE SHERRY at 30s., and Lot 111, very soft OLD OROSO SOLERA, pale gold, at 35s. per dozen — BERRIES of the old style, mellowed by age, very soft, and entirely free from the bitterness which has been so detrimental to the consumption of Sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realisation and are offered to the Public while on the special Lot List, at greatly reduced prices, instead of below half value. — The LONDON
CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION, Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adelphi, W.C. (removed from 44, Strand).

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of the Pure Solution as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-
ACHE, COLIC, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Agent for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.
DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

HAY-FEVER. — ANTHOXANTHUM. — This
Fever is sold in bottom, 2s. 6d. (by post, 3s.), 4s. 6d., and 11s.
A large quantity for its perfect application, prepared only by JAMES EPPS & Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, 170, Piccadilly, and 65, Threadneedle-street.

31, SOUTHAMPTON-STREET, STRAND, July 3rd, 1880.

SAMUEL TINSLEY & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE NEW WORKS OF FICTION AT ALL LIBRARIES,
EACH IN THREE VOLUMES.

NOTICE.—New Novel by the popular Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Woman against Woman,' 'Petronel,' &c.

The FAIR-HAIRED ALDA. By Florence Marryat,

Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Woman against Woman,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

CHARLIE: a Waif's History, told by Himself. By

Mrs. WOODWARD. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The DEAN'S WIFE. By Mrs. Eiloart, Author of

'The Curate's Discipline,' 'How He Won Her,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

CARMELA. By the Princess Olga Cantacuzene,

Author of 'In the Spring of My Life.' Translated by EUGENE KLAUS, with the Author's approval. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

JACK ALLYN'S FRIENDS. By G. Webb Appleton,

Author of 'Catching a Tartar' and 'Frozen Hearts.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Examiner says:—"There is a great deal of cleverness in this book. The quality in the work which most impresses us is the liveliness and 'go' which pervade it throughout."

The Graphic says:—"A novel which combines the merits of Miss Braddon with those of Bret Harte. Jack Allyn's Friends is just the kind of book to commend itself to thousands of holiday-seekers this summer weather."

The Scotsman says:—"Mr. Appleton knows how to write novels of absorbing and unflagging interest, and of remarkable cleverness, and his latest effort, 'Jack Allyn's Friends,' unmistakably possesses these qualities."

KINGS in EXILE. By Alphonse Daudet. From the French by express authority of the Author. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"A very competent and well-executed translation."

HOLLYWOOD. By Annie L. Walker, Author of 'A

Canadian Heroine,' 'Against Her Will,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Spectator says:—"Hollywood is the best novel which its author has yet written; the plot is the most cleverly contrived and carefully worked out, and the people of the book are the most interesting and real with whom Miss Walker has made us acquainted."

The Graphic says:—"Hollywood is a book that deserves to be read. There is nothing in it which jars on the feelings, and there is a great deal to interest in its well-written pages. We must congratulate Miss Walker on a steady improvement."

The Athenæum says:—"A good book, simple in plot and unobjectionable in its manner of narration. Hollywood is likely to please its readers without taking them by storm; it is a book which cannot offend and cannot leave a bad impression."

The Morning Post says:—"This story is exceptionally well written."

The Scotsman says:—"A well-written and emphatically readable book. The style is easy and bright."

LORD GARLFORD'S FREAK. By James B.

RAYNARD, Author of 'The Rector of Oxbury.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Morning Post says:—"Mr. Raynard may be complimented upon having produced in 'Lord Garlford's Freak' a very amusing novel, which deserves, for more reasons than one, to rank higher than the ordinary run of current works of fiction."

The Spectator says:—"This novel has the crowning merit of being distinctly readable. We found it above the average in merit. The characters are cleverly drawn, and the plot is well conceived."

The Scotsman says:—"A rallying, amusing story, which is likely to find many readers."

The ACTOR'S WIFE. By Edmund Leathes, Actor.

3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Mr. Leathes possesses both culture and good feeling. His work bears evidence of careful thought and no small amount of interest."

HARRINGTON'S FORTUNES. By Alfred Randall.

3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Standard says:—"The episode of the execution of O'Gorman, the traitor, is told with weird power."

The Athenæum says:—"There is interest and vigour in this story."

The BURTONS of DUNROE. By M. W. Brew.

3 vols. 31s. 6d.

* * * Other important Works nearly ready. Full Lists, &c., on application.

London: SAMUEL TINSLEY & CO. 31, SOUTHAMPTON-STREET, STRAND.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 30, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Printed by H. J. FRANKS, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANKS, at No. 30, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

Agents: for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn, and Mr. John Macmillan, Edinburgh; for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, July 3, 1880.

POPULAR BOOKS OF THE DAY,
EACH COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME.

NOTICE.—A Third Edition of this important Work, with New Preface, is now ready.

DON GARCIA in ENGLAND. Scenes and Characters from English Life. By GEORGE WINDLE SANDYS. 8vo. handsomely bound, 12s.

The Spectator says:—"To those who enjoy a book of social criticism, neither tame nor offensive, full of happy remarks, we can honestly recommend Mr. Sandys's book."

UNDER the ROSE: a Prose Idyll.

By Mrs. HERBERT DAVY. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"The work of a gentlewoman who has the soul of a poet and the refinement of genius. A pleasant companion for a railway or yachting journey than 'Under the Rose' we cannot conceive. It is impossible to find any fault with it."

EVELINE; or, the Mysteries. A

Tale of Ancient Britain. By M. DE VERE SMITH. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"The book is decidedly a success."

FROZEN, BUT NOT DEAD: a

Novel. By A. B. WOODWARD. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Morning Post says:—"A clever story of fashionable life, interesting and even exciting."

A YEAR in INDIA. By Anthony

GEORGE SHIELL. 1 vol. demy 8vo. 14s.

The Athenæum says:—"The reader who desires merely a rapid but effective glance at the principal sights of India will hardly find them more vividly and pleasantly portrayed than in these pages. A clever and agreeable book."

SQUATTERMANIA; or, Phases of Antipodean Life. By ERRO. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"The intending emigrant would do well to peruse this work, for it contains a few lessons which it is well that he should learn."

The Liverpool Albion says:—"Gives a graphic and fairly realistic view of Antipodean life. The story is a lengthy one and full of information."

The Scotsman says:—"He has performed his task with unquestionable rigour and narrative descriptive power."

The Shrewsbury Chronicle says:—"This is a charming work, and gives a good picture of life in Australia at an early period of its colonization."

DONA PERFECTA: a Tale of Modern

Spain. By B. PEREZ GALDOS. Translated by D. P. W. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

MILDRED FORBES: a Tale of

Our Times. By ADNA. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The RED CROSS. Translated from the German by E. J. FELLOWES. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

VOICES in SOLITUDE. By Roland

GEORGE HILL. Fcap. 8vo. 4s.

The BATTLE of SENLAC, and other

Poems. By the Rev. J. M. ASHLEY, B.C.L. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Mr. ARCHIBALD FORBES and the ZULU WAR. By N. L. WALFORD, Captain Royal Artillery. In wrapper, with Map, 1s.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1880.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

[illegible]

WANTED, by a GERMAN of good abilities and extensive scholastic acquirements, a SITUATION as LIBRARIAN or GENERAL ASSISTANT in a respectable establishment.—Address F. B., 104, Queen's-road, Ealing.

EDUCATION in SWITZERLAND.—No. 1. FRAUENSTERN ACADEMY ESTD. Established 1825. Prepares for the University. Courses: 1. Preparatory, 2. German, 3. English, 4. French, 5. Latin, 6. Mathematics, 7. Natural Science, 8. History, 9. Geography, 10. Music, 11. Drawing, 12. Needlework, 13. Household Management, 14. Bookbinding, 15. Typewriting, 16. Stenography, 17. Bookkeeping, 18. Foreign Languages, 19. Physical Education, 20. Social Science, 21. Moral Science, 22. Law, 23. Medicine, 24. Agriculture, 25. Horticulture, 26. Forestry, 27. Veterinary, 28. Pharmacy, 29. Engineering, 30. Architecture, 31. Mining, 32. Metallurgy, 33. Textile Industry, 34. Paper Industry, 35. Glass Industry, 36. Pottery, 37. Jewellery, 38. Watchmaking, 39. Clockmaking, 40. Printing, 41. Bookbinding, 42. Stationery, 43. Calligraphy, 44. Engraving, 45. Sculpture, 46. Painting, 47. Music, 48. Dancing, 49. Gymnastics, 50. Games, 51. Sports, 52. Travelling, 53. Languages, 54. Literature, 55. History, 56. Geography, 57. Natural Science, 58. Mathematics, 59. Physics, 60. Chemistry, 61. Botany, 62. Zoology, 63. Mineralogy, 64. Geology, 65. Meteorology, 66. Astronomy, 67. Navigation, 68. Commerce, 69. Law, 70. Medicine, 71. Veterinary, 72. Agriculture, 73. Horticulture, 74. Forestry, 75. Mining, 76. Metallurgy, 77. Textile Industry, 78. Paper Industry, 79. Glass Industry, 80. Pottery, 81. Jewellery, 82. Watchmaking, 83. Clockmaking, 84. Printing, 85. Bookbinding, 86. Stationery, 87. Calligraphy, 88. Engraving, 89. Sculpture, 90. Painting, 91. Music, 92. Dancing, 93. Gymnastics, 94. Games, 95. Sports, 96. Travelling, 97. Languages, 98. Literature, 99. History, 100. Geography, 101. Natural Science, 102. Mathematics, 103. Physics, 104. Chemistry, 105. Botany, 106. Zoology, 107. Mineralogy, 108. Geology, 109. Meteorology, 110. Astronomy, 111. Navigation, 112. Commerce, 113. Law, 114. Medicine, 115. Veterinary, 116. Agriculture, 117. Horticulture, 118. Forestry, 119. Mining, 120. Metallurgy, 121. Textile Industry, 122. Paper Industry, 123. Glass Industry, 124. Pottery, 125. Jewellery, 126. Watchmaking, 127. Clockmaking, 128. Printing, 129. Bookbinding, 130. Stationery, 131. Calligraphy, 132. Engraving, 133. Sculpture, 134. Painting, 135. Music, 136. Dancing, 137. Gymnastics, 138. Games, 139. Sports, 140. Travelling, 141. Languages, 142. Literature, 143. History, 144. Geography, 145. Natural Science, 146. Mathematics, 147. Physics, 148. Chemistry, 149. Botany, 150. Zoology, 151. Mineralogy, 152. Geology, 153. Meteorology, 154. Astronomy, 155. Navigation, 156. Commerce, 157. Law, 158. Medicine, 159. Veterinary, 160. Agriculture, 161. Horticulture, 162. Forestry, 163. Mining, 164. Metallurgy, 165. Textile Industry, 166. Paper Industry, 167. Glass Industry, 168. Pottery, 169. Jewellery, 170. Watchmaking, 171. Clockmaking, 172. Printing, 173. Bookbinding, 174. Stationery, 175. Calligraphy, 176. Engraving, 177. Sculpture, 178. Painting, 179. Music, 180. Dancing, 181. Gymnastics, 182. Games, 183. Sports, 184. Travelling, 185. Languages, 186. Literature, 187. History, 188. Geography, 189. Natural Science, 190. Mathematics, 191. Physics, 192. Chemistry, 193. Botany, 194. Zoology, 195. Mineralogy, 196. Geology, 197. Meteorology, 198. Astronomy, 199. Navigation, 200. Commerce, 201. Law, 202. Medicine, 203. Veterinary, 204. Agriculture, 205. Horticulture, 206. Forestry, 207. Mining, 208. Metallurgy, 209. Textile Industry, 210. Paper Industry, 211. Glass Industry, 212. Pottery, 213. Jewellery, 214. Watchmaking, 215. Clockmaking, 216. Printing, 217. Bookbinding, 218. Stationery, 219. Calligraphy, 220. Engraving, 221. Sculpture, 222. Painting, 223. Music, 224. Dancing, 225. Gymnastics, 226. Games, 227. Sports, 228. Travelling, 229. Languages, 230. Literature, 231. History, 232. Geography, 233. Natural Science, 234. Mathematics, 235. Physics, 236. Chemistry, 237. Botany, 238. Zoology, 239. Mineralogy, 240. Geology, 241. Meteorology, 242. Astronomy, 243. Navigation, 244. Commerce, 245. Law, 246. Medicine, 247. Veterinary, 248. Agriculture, 249. Horticulture, 250. Forestry, 251. Mining, 252. Metallurgy, 253. Textile Industry, 254. Paper Industry, 255. Glass Industry, 256. Pottery, 257. Jewellery, 258. Watchmaking, 259. Clockmaking, 260. Printing, 261. Bookbinding, 262. Stationery, 263. Calligraphy, 264. Engraving, 265. Sculpture, 266. Painting, 267. Music, 268. Dancing, 269. Gymnastics, 270. Games, 271. Sports, 272. Travelling, 273. Languages, 274. Literature, 275. History, 276. Geography, 277. Natural Science, 278. Mathematics, 279. Physics, 280. Chemistry, 281. Botany, 282. Zoology, 283. Mineralogy, 284. Geology, 285. Meteorology, 286. Astronomy, 287. Navigation, 288. Commerce, 289. Law, 290. Medicine, 291. Veterinary, 292. Agriculture, 293. Horticulture, 294. Forestry, 295. Mining, 296. Metallurgy, 297. Textile Industry, 298. Paper Industry, 299. Glass Industry, 300. Pottery, 301. Jewellery, 302. Watchmaking, 303. Clockmaking, 304. Printing, 305. Bookbinding, 306. Stationery, 307. Calligraphy, 308. Engraving, 309. Sculpture, 310. Painting, 311. Music, 312. Dancing, 313. Gymnastics, 314. Games, 315. Sports, 316. Travelling, 317. Languages, 318. Literature, 319. History, 320. Geography, 321. Natural Science, 322. Mathematics, 323. Physics, 324. Chemistry, 325. Botany, 326. Zoology, 327. Mineralogy, 328. Geology, 329. Meteorology, 330. Astronomy, 331. Navigation, 332. Commerce, 333. Law, 334. Medicine, 335. Veterinary, 336. Agriculture, 337. Horticulture, 338. Forestry, 339. Mining, 340. Metallurgy, 341. Textile Industry, 342. Paper Industry, 343. Glass Industry, 344. Pottery, 345. Jewellery, 346. Watchmaking, 347. Clockmaking, 348. Printing, 349. Bookbinding, 350. Stationery, 351. Calligraphy, 352. Engraving, 353. Sculpture, 354. Painting, 355. Music, 356. Dancing, 357. Gymnastics, 358. Games, 359. Sports, 360. Travelling, 361. Languages, 362. Literature, 363. History, 364. Geography, 365. Natural Science, 366. Mathematics, 367. Physics, 368. Chemistry, 369. Botany, 370. Zoology, 371. Mineralogy, 372. Geology, 373. Meteorology, 374. Astronomy, 375. Navigation, 376. Commerce, 377. Law, 378. Medicine, 379. Veterinary, 380. Agriculture, 381. Horticulture, 382. Forestry, 383. Mining, 384. Metallurgy, 385. Textile Industry, 386. Paper Industry, 387. Glass Industry, 388. Pottery, 389. Jewellery, 390. Watchmaking, 391. Clockmaking, 392. Printing, 393. Bookbinding, 394. Stationery, 395. Calligraphy, 396. Engraving, 397. Sculpture, 398. Painting, 399. Music, 400. Dancing, 401. Gymnastics, 402. Games, 403. Sports, 404. Travelling, 405. Languages, 406. Literature, 407. History, 408. Geography, 409. Natural Science, 410. Mathematics, 411. Physics, 412. Chemistry, 413. Botany, 414. Zoology, 415. Mineralogy, 416. Geology, 417. Meteorology, 418. Astronomy, 419. Navigation, 420. Commerce, 421. Law, 422. Medicine, 423. Veterinary, 424. Agriculture, 425. Horticulture, 426. Forestry, 427. Mining, 428. Metallurgy, 429. Textile Industry, 430. Paper Industry, 431. Glass Industry, 432. Pottery, 433. Jewellery, 434. Watchmaking, 435. Clockmaking, 436. Printing, 437. Bookbinding, 438. Stationery, 439. Calligraphy, 440. Engraving, 441. Sculpture, 442. Painting, 443. Music, 444. Dancing, 445. Gymnastics, 446. Games, 447. Sports, 448. Travelling, 449. Languages, 450. Literature, 451. History, 452. Geography, 453. Natural Science, 454. Mathematics, 455. Physics, 456. Chemistry, 457. Botany, 458. Zoology, 459. Mineralogy, 460. Geology, 461. Meteorology, 462. Astronomy, 463. Navigation, 464. Commerce, 465. Law, 466. Medicine, 467. Veterinary, 468. Agriculture, 469. Horticulture, 470. Forestry, 471. Mining, 472. Metallurgy, 473. Textile Industry, 474. Paper Industry, 475. Glass Industry, 476. Pottery, 477. Jewellery, 478. Watchmaking, 479. Clockmaking, 480. Printing, 481. Bookbinding, 482. Stationery, 483. Calligraphy, 484. Engraving, 485. Sculpture, 486. Painting, 487. Music, 488. Dancing, 489. Gymnastics, 490. Games, 491. Sports, 492. Travelling, 493. Languages, 494. Literature, 495. History, 496. Geography, 497. Natural Science, 498. Mathematics, 499. Physics, 500. Chemistry, 501. Botany, 502. Zoology, 503. Mineralogy, 504. Geology, 505. Meteorology, 506. Astronomy, 507. Navigation, 508. Commerce, 509. Law, 510. Medicine, 511. Veterinary, 512. Agriculture, 513. Horticulture, 514. Forestry, 515. Mining, 516. Metallurgy, 517. Textile Industry, 518. Paper Industry, 519. Glass Industry, 520. Pottery, 521. Jewellery, 522. Watchmaking, 523. Clockmaking, 524. Printing, 525. Bookbinding, 526. Stationery, 527. Calligraphy, 528. Engraving, 529. Sculpture, 530. Painting, 531. Music, 532. Dancing, 533. Gymnastics, 534. Games, 535. Sports, 536. Travelling, 537. Languages, 538. Literature, 539. History, 540. Geography, 541. Natural Science, 542. Mathematics, 543. Physics, 544. Chemistry, 545. Botany, 546. Zoology, 547. Mineral

1

Library of Music. Copyright of Mackay and Bishop's English Songs and Melodies, &c.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their House, 47, Leicester-square, W.C. on MONDAY, July 19, at 1 o'clock an extensive LIBRARY of MUSIC including a COLLECTION of early INSTRUMENTS, the Property of a GENTLEMAN of TITLE, &c., also the valuable COPYRIGHT of the COLLECTION of ENGLISH SONGS and MELODIES written by Charles Mackay Esq. with Symphonies and Accompaniments by Sir H. B. Bishop. Kat. part of which were originally published in the Illustrated London News.

Catalogues on receipt of two stamps.

Monthly Sale of valuable Musical Property.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their House, 47, Leicester-square, W.C. on THURSDAY, July 23, at 1 o'clock a large ASSORTMENT of MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS including valuable Pianofortes, Harmoniums, American Organs, Harps, Collection of Italian Violins, Violas, Violoncellos, Brass and Wood Wind Instruments.

Catalogues (by post), two stamps.

Portion of the Library of the late J. R. PLANCHE, Esq., Somerset Herald, &c.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their House, 47, Leicester-square, W.C. on WEDNESDAY, July 22 and Two Following Days, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely a COLLECTION of BOOKS, including the DRAMATIC PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late JAMES ROBINSON PLANCHE, Somerset Herald, a fine Chippendale Secretaire Bookcase, &c. also the valuable LIBRARY of a GENTLEMAN, removed from Kent, comprising Genl's Birds of Asia, and other fine Books.

Catalogues are preparing.

Valuable Engravings, the Property of a well-known Collector giving up the pursuit.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 47, Leicester-square, W.C. on SATURDAY, July 24, and Three Following Days (Sunday excepted), valuable and rare ENGRAVINGS (some being unique) formed during many years by a COLLECTOR, consisting of Works by and after the Masters of the Italian, German, Flemish, Dutch, French, Spanish, and English Schools, scarce Chiaroscuro and Wood Prints, and rare British and Foreign Portraits.

Now ready, price 6s. for JULY.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. CXLIII containing

1. THE TWO NATIONS and the COMMONWEALTH.
2. FATHER CURCI on the ROMAN CHURCH.
3. RELIGION and MORALITY.
4. EVOLUTION in RELATION to THEOLOGY.
5. INSPIRATION.
6. IRISH LAND REFORMS.
7. THE LONDON WATER QUESTION.
8. THE GENERAL ELECTION and its RESULTS.
9. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, for JULY, will be published on THURSDAY NEXT

Contents.

1. THE PRECURSORS of NEWTON.
2. MIND in the LOWER ANIMALS.
3. NAVAL POWER in the PACIFIC.
4. MEMOIRS of the PRINCE CONSORT.
5. BABIANS and CHRISTIANS of ST JOHN.
6. LANDLORDS, TENANTS, and LABOURERS.
7. MEMOIRS of MADAME DE RÉNÉE.
8. HODOKIN'S INVADERS of ITALY.
9. BRIGHT'S EDITION of PEPPY'S DIARY.
10. THE DIVORCE of KATHARINE of ARAGON.
11. THE NEW PARLIAMENT in SESSION.

London: Longmans & Co. Edinburgh: A. & C. Black.

Now ready.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW. New Series, No. CXV JULY, 1880. Price 6s.

Contents.

1. THE SCOTCH PEERAGE.
2. THE PLACE of SOCRATES in GREEK PHILOSOPHY.
3. THE PEASANT POETS of RUSSIA.
4. MARRIAGE with a DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.
5. THE LIFE of the PRINCE CONSORT.
6. GAME LAWS and GAME PRESERVING.
7. STATE PAPERS: FOREIGN SERIES.
8. A NEW VIEW of the INDIAN EXCHANGE DIFFICULTY.

INDIA and our COLONIAL EMPIRE. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.

London: Trübner & Co. 57, Ludgate-hill.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, for JULY, 1880, price 2s. 6d.

THE FUTURE of LIBERALISM By Matthew Arnold.

ATHEISM and REPENTANCE: a Familiar Colloquy By W. H. Mallo.

THE CLOTURE in PARLIAMENT By E. D. J. Wilson.

MODERN FRENCH ART By Gerard Balguy Brown.

A STRANGER in AMERICA. By George Jacob Holyoake.

STORY-TELLING By James Payn.

THE COMMERCIAL TREATY between FRANCE and ENGLAND. By E. Harold Davis.

THE HOUSE of LORDS and NATIONAL INSURANCE. By the Rev. W. Lewney Mackley.

THE FRENCH CLERGY and the PRESENT REPUBLIC. By the Abbot Martin.

THE PALAIS ROYAL THEATRE. By Françoise Barrey.

BLKEDDING to DEATH By H. M. Hyndman.

C. Kegan Paul & Co. London.

THE DRESDEN GALLERY.—The Publication of a Series of elaborate Reproductions, on a large scale, of the celebrated Paintings in the Dresden Gallery was commenced in the ARCHITECT of Saturday last, July 2nd, when Two Engravings, at the 'Adoration of the Magi' and the 'Marriage of Cana,' by Paul Veronese, was given. Each measure 25 in. by 13 in. Price 4s. 6d. or by post, 5s. Publishing Offices, 175, Strand, London, W.C., and of all Newsmen.

Price 2s. Quarterly; Yearly, 12s. post free.

M I N D. No. XIX. JULY.

1. STATISTICS of MENTAL IMAGERY By F. Galton, F.R.S.
2. THE UNITY of the ORGANIC INDIVIDUAL By E. Montagu.
3. ON the FORMS of LOGICAL PROPOSITION By J. Venn.
4. PERFECTION as an ETHICAL END By T. Thorndyke.
5. JEWISH PHILOSOPHY and APOLOZY. By W. M. Sorley.

With Notes and Discussions. Critical Notices &c.

Williams & Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

Price Half-a-Crown.

THE MODERN REVIEW: a New Quarterly Magazine.

Contents of No. III JULY

1. CRITICAL METHOD I. By Professor Keynes.
2. THE LATER STONE AGE in EUROPE. By Edward Clodd, F.R.S.
3. SYNOPSIS of CYRENE. II. By R. Crompton Jones, B.A.
4. NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE and RELIGIOUS INTERNATIONALISM. By Professor Albert Herdrie.
5. FRANCE and the JESUITS. By Professor Rawnsheoff.
6. SOME TENDENCIES of MODERN BIOLOGY. By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D. F.R.S.
7. THE MONKS of BOLTON. By Robert Collier.
8. THE AUTHORSHIP of the 'BIBLON BASILIAN.' By W. Blake Ogden, LL.D.
9. THE TWELFTH GERMAN PROTESTANTISM. By Pastor J. R. Ransau.
10. NOTES and NOTICES. By Francis J. Garrison, Mark Wilks, &c.

Published for the Proprietors by James Clarke & Co. London, John Haywood, Manchester, and may be had by order of all Booksellers.

Now ready Part II. Vol. XLIII JUNE, 1880, price 2s.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY'S JOURNAL.

Contents.

- ON the EDUCATION and TRAINING of the CHILDREN of the POOR. By F. J. Mount, M.D. F.R.C.S.
- VITAL STATISTICS of CAVALRY HORSES. By Surgeon-General T. Graham Smith, M.D. F.R.S.
- TEN YEARS' STATISTICS of BRITISH AGRICULTURE, 1870-79. By Captain F. G. Craigie.
- ON the HOME PRODUCE IMPORTS, CONSUMPTION, and PRICE of WHEAT over the HARVEST YEARS 1852-53 to 1878-79 inclusive. By J. B. Lawes, LL.D. F.R.S., and J. H. Gilbert, Ph.D. F.R.S.
- MISCELLANEA.—General Results of the Commercial and Financial History of 1878.—The Movement of the Population in Russia during 1871-78.—Lloyd's Statistics of Marine Casualties for 1878.—An Iron Trade Chart for the Past Fifty Years. Notes on Economical and Statistical Works.—Additions to the Library, &c.

London: Edward Stanford, 45, Charing Cross, S.W.

Now ready, price 6d. by post, 7d.

No. 7, for JULY, of the Third Series of the COVENT GARDEN MAGAZINE. Conducted by W. H. C. NATION.

1. A Train of Thought.
2. Metropolitan Water Supply.
3. A Happy Queen.
4. Built upon Sand: A Story.
5. The Railing and Wages of Merchant Seamen.
6. The Dogmatism.
7. In the Outer Circles.
8. The Trunk of Timekeeper.
9. Called to Account: A Story.
10. Ships and Shipping.
11. Gardening in Different Parts of the World.

Office: 44, Catherine-street, Strand, London.

Edited by Rev. SAMUEL COX.—Is Monthly

THE EXPOSITOR for JULY, commencing the TWELFTH Volume, contains Articles by Dean PEROWNE, Canon FARRAR, Dr. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, Dr. WOKINSON, Rev. J. A. ARIST, and the EDITOR.

This day, in 8vo. pp. 485, price 7s. 6d.

THE ELEVENTH VOLUME of

THE EXPOSITOR. The Contributors to this Volume include—

- | | |
|----------------------------|----------------------------|
| Rev. R. Balgarnie, M.A. | Rev. George Fensley, B.A. |
| Rev. J. A. Arist | Rev. Professor Maule, M.A. |
| Rev. A. R. Bruce, D.D. | Rev. George Matheson, D.D. |
| Rev. T. H. Chace, M.A. | Rev. J. Morison, D.D. |
| Rev. Samuel Cox | Rev. E. H. Plumptre, D.D. |
| Rev. A. B. Davidson, D.D. | Rev. W. Sanday, D.D. |
| Rev. A. M. Fairbairn, D.D. | Rev. P. Thompson, M.A. |

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JULY contains:

Coffee Music Halls—Berlioz and his Critics—The Great Composers—Spohr—Music of the Gipsies—The Lyrical Drama, by Professor Macfarren: The Handel Festival—The Opera—Richter and London Musical Society's Concerts—Reviews—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence &c. Price 2d. post free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s. (including postage).

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JULY contains:

"O give thanks unto the Lord," Anthem, Alto, Solo, and Chorus, by William Jackson, Jun. (Masham). Price, separately 1/6d.

London: Novello, Ewer & Co. 1, Berners-street, W; and 50 and 51, Queen-street, E.C.

CENTRAL SCHOOLS, SHEFFIELD.—See the BUILDER (4d. by post, 4d.) for View Plans, and Section—Views of House in Bucklebury and House at Bowdon—Program of Invention—The Bridge Report—Stained Glass from Modern Point of View—Exploration, Apple Minor—Industrial Arts in Germany—Greek Vases, &c.

45, Catherine-street, and all Newsmen.

Reduced in price.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S HEBREW CONCORDANCE, from 2s. 12s. 6d. to 2s. 2s.

DAVIDSON'S HEBREW CONCORDANCE, from 2s. 2s. to 2s. 2s.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S GREEK CONCORDANCE, from 2s. 2s. to 1s. 1s.

R. Baggot & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, London.

Now ready, tastefully printed on hand-made paper and bound in Roxburgh gilt top, price 7s. 6d. post free.

THE ANTIQUARY. Volume L. Containing

Articles on Subjects of Interest to the Antiquary by the following amongst many other well-known Writers:—Dr. Hayman G. L. Gomme, W. Hades, Llewellyn Jewitt, John Henry Parker, Rev. M. R. C. Walcott, and Lord Talbot de Malahide.

Prospectus of Vol. II (now publishing) sent post free.

London: Elliot Stock, 22, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Nearly ready (Prospectus will be forwarded on application).

THE TREATISE of FYSSHYNGE WYTH AN ANGLE By Dame JULIANA BERNERS. A Fac-simile reproduction of the First Book printed on the subject of Angling. Taken from the First Edition printed by Wynkyn de Worde, at Westminster, in 1496.

London: Elliot Stock, 22, Paternoster-row, E.C.

1 vol. crown 8vo. 184 pages, price 5s.

THE CITY of DREADFUL NIGHT, and other Poems. By JAMES THOMSON ("B. V").

"It is at least ten years since a read unmistakable poet has written himself in England."—Vide "A New Poet," in Fortnightly Review, July, 1860.

London: Reeves & Turner, 128, Strand, W.C.

Now ready, in 1 vol. cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of the YOUTH of ARTHUR: 1. A First Trilogy of Magic-Dramas. 2. The Advent of Merlin. 3. The Twelfth Battle. 4. The View of Percival. By J. S. STUART-GLENNIE, M.A.

Moson, Sanderson & Co. 23, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

PAR PALIMPSESTORUM DUBLINENSIS.

In royal 4to. with 4 Fac-simile Pages, price 21s. cloth.

THE CODEX RESCRIPTUS DUBLINENSIS of St. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL (2), first published by Dr. Barrett in 1801. A New Edition Revised and Augmented. Also, Fragments of the Book of Isaiah in the LXX. Version from an Ancient Palimpsest, now first published. Together with a newly-discovered Fragment of the Codex Bezae Cantabrigiae. By T. K. ARNOTT D.D., Fellow of Trin. Coll. and Prof. of HEB. Lit. in the Univ. of Dublin.

London: Longmans, Green & Co. Dublin: Hodges, Foster & Figgis.

Now ready, medium 8vo. cloth, price 14s.

STUDIES OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY IN ITALY. By VERNON LEE.

CONTENTS.

THE ARCADIAN ACADEMY.

THE MUSICAL LIFE.

METASTASIO and the OPERA.

THE COMEDY of MASKS.

GOLDONI and the REALISTIC COMEDY.

CARLO GOGGI and the VENETIAN

FAIRY COMEDY.

"These studies show a wide range of knowledge of the subject, precise investigation, abundant power of illustration, and healthy enthusiasm.... The style of writing is cultivated, neatly adjusted, and markedly clever.... Can be cordially recommended as treating an important and little-known theme with conspicuous ability."—Athenæum.

"Amusing and interesting.... Clever and readable."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Lee has brought to his subject a great amount of curious and recondite learning."—Spectator.

W. SATCHELL & Co.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND.—Conducted by Charles Dickens. Advertisements for All the Year Round should be sent before the 10th of each Month to

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 59, Fleet-street, E.C.

IN AND OUT OF LONDON

The New Alphabetical Railway Guide (price 4d.) for Travellers.

On the First of every Month.

THE LONDON and PROVINCIAL BRADSHAW: by Alphabetical and Tabular Arrangement.—Advertisements should be sent to

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 59, Fleet-street, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d., and at every Library,
PIPISTRELLO, and other Stories. By Ouida,
 Author of 'Moths,' &c.

"Written with all the power and beauty of which the gifted authoress is capable."—Graphic.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s., a New and Cheaper Edition of MOTHS. By Ouida.
 "Not only the author's finest work, but one which marks a new epoch in fiction."—Morning Post.

MRS. LINTON'S NEW NOVEL.—3 vols. at every Library,
WITH a SILKEN THREAD, and other Stories. By R. LYNN LINTON.

"All the stories have the grace and nervous simplicity of style, the imaginative richness, the power in the creation of distinct character types, and the peculiar skill in construction which are the characteristics of her larger works."—Scotsman.

Fourth Edition, 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s., and at every Library,
A TRAMP ABROAD. By Mark Twain.

"The fun and tenderness of the conception, its grace and fantasy and slyness, make of all this episode of Jim Baker and his joys a piece of work that is not only delightful as mere reading, but also of a high degree of merit as literature.... The book is full of good things."—Athenæum.

CHARLES GIBSON'S NEW NOVEL.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d.
IN PASTURES GREEN, and other Stories.
 By CHARLES GIBSON. [In the press.]

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s. 6d.
UNDER ONE ROOF. By James Payn.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s. 6d.
The SEAMY SIDE. By the Authors of
 'The Golden Butterfly,' 'The Monks of Theleme,' &c.

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS,
 ARRANGED AND REVISED BY THE AUTHOR.
 Now ready, 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

The COMPLETE POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS OF BRET HARTE, including a fine Steel-plate Portrait, specially engraved for this Edition, and a Biographical Introduction by the ALTHORP. The entire Series, which will include everything written by Bret Harte, will consist of five handsome Library Volumes, to be issued at short intervals. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. per vol.

MR. SWINBURNE'S NEW POEMS.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.
SONGS of the SPRINGTIDES. By ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

Small 8vo. cloth limp, 4s. 6d.
HANDBOOK of POTTERY and PORCELAIN. By HODDER M. WESTROFF. With numerous beautiful illustrations, and a list of Marks.

Crown 8vo. cloth limp, 2s. 6d.
VOICE PRODUCTION and VOICE PRESERVATION. A Manual for Speakers and Singers. By GORDON HOLMES, L.R.C.P.E. With Illustrations.

Post 8vo. cloth limp, 1s. 6d.
A POPULAR HANDBOOK of PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE. By HENRY W. LUCY.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
CURIOSITIES of PURITAN NOMENCLATURE. By CHARLES W. RAMSLEY, Author of 'Our English Surnames.'

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 1s. 6d.
MEMOIRS of BARTHOLOMEW FAIR. By HENRY MORLEY. A New Edition, with nearly One Hundred illustrations.

Price 1s. with 4 illustrations,
BELGRAVIA HOLIDAY NUMBER.

The RIDEOUTS. By Percy Fitzgerald. Illustrated by G. L. Seymour.
MY CIRCULAR TOUR. By J. Arbuthnot Wilson.
KITTY. Illustrated by F. S. Walker.
BEYOND RECALL. By M. Hepworth Dixon.
DR. GATES and the FAVORITES. By Frederick Boyle.
BEAUTY and the HUTCHINGS. By R. Montgomery Banks.
 Illustrated by F. S. Walker.
An OVERHEATED PRESCRIPTION. By James Payn.
The CASE of HIGH MAYNARD. By Denton Cook.
MAJOR MULLINER. By J. W. Sherce.
BALLADE of JUNE. By W. R. Henley. Illustrated by Agnes Furnivall.
A GAME of HAZARDS. By Sydney Wilson.
DIVIDED. By Louisa R. Ward.
MY LADY. By Violet Hunt.

CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

This day is published, Fifth Edition, Revised throughout and greatly Enlarged,

THE MOOR AND THE LOCH.

Containing MINUTE INSTRUCTIONS in all HIGHLAND SPORTS, with WANDERINGS OVER CRAG and CORRIE, FLOOD and FELL.

By JOHN COLQUHOUN.

FIFTH EDITION, to which is added, RECOLLECTIONS of the AUTHOR'S EARLY LIFE.

2 vols. post 8vo. with 2 Portraits and other Illustrations, price 26s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'COUSINS,' &c.

This day is published,

TROUBLESOME DAUGHTERS.

By L. B. WALFORD,

Author of 'Cousins,' 'Pauline,' 'Mr. Smith: a Part of his Life,' &c.

3 vols. post 8vo. 26s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

NEW NOVEL BY MISS M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

FORESTALLED. By M. Betham-Edwards,

AUTHOR OF

'KITTY,' 'BRIDGET,' 'A SUMMER IN EASTERN FRANCE,' &c.

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

A FEMALE NIHILIST.

By ERNEST LAVIGNE.

Translated from the French by G. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.

Crown 8vo. 9s.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co. 13, Waterloo-place.

On Tuesday, in paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

POPULAR FRENCH NOVELS;

Being Translations of Masterpieces of recent French Fiction, perfectly unobjectionable in tone, and unabridged. Carefully printed in type of a good size, and in post 8vo. form.

FROMONT the YOUNGER and RISLER the ELDER. By ALPHONSE DAUDET.

(Translated from the Fifth French Edition.)

SAMUEL BROHL and PARTNER. By VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.

MAUGARS JUNIOR. By ANDRÉ THEURIET.

The DRAMA of the RUE DE LA PAIX. By ADOLPHE BELOT.

To be followed shortly by other striking Works.

VIZETELLY & Co. 10, Southampton-street, Strand.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842 in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries. Great care has always been taken in the selection of Books to study the wishes of Subscribers, and to make the Library not only "Select" but comprehensive.

THE COLLECTION NOW EXCEEDS ONE MILLION VOLUMES.

Additional Copies of all the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all the principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM AND UPWARDS,

According to the number of Volumes required.

Book Societies and Literary Institutions supplied on Liberal Terms.

THE NAMES OF NEW SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENTERED DAILY.

Prospectuses postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET, LONDON.

CITY OFFICE—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

NOW OPEN.

Subscription to the CIRCULATING LIBRARY, from ONE GUINEA per annum.

Subscription to ALL THE CLUB PRIVILEGES, available for both Ladies and Gentlemen, and comprising Reading and Writing Rooms, and a Reference Library, TWO GUINEAS per annum.

Subscription to ALL THE CLUB PRIVILEGES, as above, together with the right to Six Volumes, delivered free, from the Circulating Library, THREE GUINEAS per annum.

Fuller details of Subscription on application to Mr. CHARLES ALLEN.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW BOND-STREET.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

R. & J. BECK have REMOVED to 68, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

 Enlarged Illustrated CATALOGUE of MICROSCOPES, &c., sent post free on application.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

NOTICE.—Now ready, THROUGH a NEEDLE'S EYE. By HESBA STRETTON. With Frontispiece, crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

BARBARA: MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

Early in August, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF

B A R B A R A :

HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.

By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

London: JOHN & ROBERT MAXWELL.

BARBARA: MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, 2 vols. demy 8vo. 32s.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.

With Illustrations and Maps.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING

DRAMATIC IDYLS. Second Series. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

By ROBERT BROWNING.

NEW VOLUME BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASSAGES FROM THE PROSE WRITINGS OF MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Contents: 1. Literature.—2. Politics and Society.—3. Philosophy and Religion.

RENAISSANCE IN ITALY: Age of the Despots.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.

Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 16s.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

BEAUTY'S DAUGHTERS.

By the Author of 'Molly Bawn,' 'Airy Fairy Lilian,' 'Phyllis.' 3 vols. post 8vo.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

E P P S'S
C H O C O L A T E
E S S E N C E.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.
Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

WEALE'S RUDIMENTARY SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES AND NEW EDITIONS.

The Construction of Gas Works, and the Manufacture and Distribution of Coal Gas. Originally written by SAMUEL HUGHES C.E. Sixth Edition. Rewritten and much enlarged by WILLIAM RICHARDS, C.E. With 72 illustrations. 4s. 6d. [Just published.]

The Tree Pruner: a Practical Manual on the Pruning of Fruit Trees, Shrubs, Climbers, and Flowering Plants. By SAMUEL WOOD, Author of 'Good Gardening,' &c. 2s. [Just published.]

The Tree Planter and Plant Propagator: a Practical Manual on the Propagation of Forest and Fruit Trees, Shrubs, Plants, Pot-herbs, &c. By SAMUEL WOOD. 2s. [Just published.]

The Tree Planter, Propagator, and Pruner. By SAMUEL WOOD. Author of 'Good Gardening,' &c. Consisting of the above two books in one handsome volume, 3s. 6d. [Just published.]

Outlines of Farm Management. By ROBERT SCOTT BURN, Author of 'Modern Farming,' &c. 2s. 6d. [Just published.]

Outlines of Landed Estates Management. By ROBERT SCOTT BURN. 2s. 6d. [Just published.]

Landed Estates and Farm Management. By R. SCOTT BURN. Author of 'Outlines of Modern Farming,' Editor of 'The Complete Farmer,' &c. With Illustrations. Consisting of the above two books in one handsome volume, 6s. half bound. [Just published.]

The Boiler Maker's Assistant, in Drawing, Templating and Calculating Boiler Work and Tank Work. By JOHN COLTNEY. Practical Boiler Maker. Revised and Edited by D. KINNEAR CLARK, M.I.C.E., Author of 'Railway Machinery,' &c. [Nearly ready.]

Pioneer Engineering: a Treatise on the Engineering Operations connected with the Settlement of Waste Lands in New Countries. By EDWARD DIXSON, Assoc. Inst. C.E. Second Edition, Revised. With numerous Plates and Wood Engravings. [Nearly ready.]

Slate and Slate Quarrying (a Treatise on): Scientific, Practical and Commercial. By D. C. DAVIES, F.G.S., Mining Engineer, &c. Author of 'Metalliferous Mining,' &c. Second Edition, Revised. With numerous Illustrations and Folding Plates. [Nearly ready.]

Fuel: its Combustion and Economy. By C. W. WILLIAMS, A.I.C.E. With extensive additions on Recent Practice in the Combustion and Economy of Fuel—Coal, Coke, Wood, Petroleum, &c.—by D. KINNEAR CLARK, M.I.C.E. With numerous Illustrations. Second Edition, 3s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

A Book on Building, Civil and Ecclesiastical: including Church Restoration. By Sir EDMUND BECKETT, Bart. LL.D. Second Edition, Enlarged, 4s. 6d.

Plumbing: a Text-Book to the Practice of the Art or Craft of the Plumber. Second Edition, Revised and much Enlarged. Containing 300 Illustrations. By WM. PATON BUCHAN, Sanitary Engineer. 3s. 6d.

Hints to Young Architects. By GEORGE WIGHTWICK, Architect. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged by G. HUNKISSON GUILLAUME, Architect. With numerous Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

Electro-Metallurgy: Practically Treated. By ALEXANDER WATT, F.R.S.E. Seventh Edition, Revised, with important Additions, including the Electro-Deposition of Nickel, &c., 3s.

The Sailor's Sea Book: a Rudimentary Treatise on Navigation. By JAMES GREENWOOD, R.A. New Edition. Adapted to the Daily Use of Seafarers and Shipmasters on Long and Short Voyages. By W. H. ROSSER. With numerous Woodcuts and Coloured Plates, 2s. 6d.

Mathematical Tables for Trigonometrical, Astronomical, and Nautical Calculations. With a Treatise on Logarithms by HENRY LAW, C.E. and a Series of Tables by Prof. T. H. YOUNG. New and Revised Edition, 3s. 6d.

Practical Navigation. Consisting of the Sailor's Sea Book. By GREENWOOD and ROSSER. Together with Mathematical and Nautical Tables. By LAW and YOUNG. 7s. half bound.

Steam and the Steam Engine, Stationary and Portable. Being an Extension of Mr. John Kewell's 'Treatise on Steam,' By D. K. CLARK, M.I.C.E. Second Edition, Revised, 3s. 6d.

Locomotive Engines. By G. D. DEMPSEY, C.E. With large Additions treating of the Modern Locomotive by D. KINNEAR CLARK, M.I.C.E. With numerous Illustrations. 3s.

Sanitary Work in the Smaller Towns and in Villages. In Three Parts. I. Some of the more Common Forms of Nuisance and their Remedies. II. Drainage. III. Water Supply. By CHARLES SLAGO, A.I.C.E. 2s. 6d.

The Rudiments of Practical Bricklaying. General Principles of Bricklaying, Arch Drawing, Cutting and Setting, Pointing, Tiling, Materials, Slating and Roofing, Practical Geometry, Measurement, &c. By ADAM HAMMOND. With 65 Woodcuts, 1s. 6d.

The Art of Letter Printing Made Easy. By JAMES GREGG BARNHART. Illustrated with 12 Full-Page Engravings of Examples, &c., 1s.

WEALE'S RUDIMENTARY SERIES comprises, besides the above, upwards of 350 Books in 100 Volumes of 8, 10, 12, 16, and 20 Parts. Complete Lists of the whole Series sent free on application to the Publishers.

London: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & Co. 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

FOUR NEW NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MRS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

II.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.

FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret MAJENDIE. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

III.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'ROBIN ADAIR.'

ALAN DERING. By the Hon. Mrs. PETHERSTONHAUGH, Author of 'Kilcorran,' 'Robin Adair,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

IV.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY GRIZEL,' &c.

IN HER MAJESTY'S KEEPING. By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD, Author of 'My Lords of Strogue,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Mr. Wingfield has given us a novel that surpasses any of his former efforts, and that is saying a great deal."—Graphic.

THE BURLINGTON LIBRARY.

Each Volume to be had separately, with few exceptions, in crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

THIERS' HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. 3 vols. 20s.

Sir E. CREASY'S HISTORY of the OTTOMAN TURK. 6s.

Sir E. CREASY'S FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES. 6s.

BARHAM'S LIFE of THEODORE HOOK. 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES of CELEBRATED VIOLINISTS. 6s.

The DEAD CITIES of the ZUYDER ZEE. 6s.

GUIZOT'S LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. 6s.

MIGNET'S LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. 6s.

Dr. McCausland's SERMONS in STONES. 6s.

Dr. McCausland's ADAM and the ADAMITE. 6s.

Dr. McCausland's BUILDERS of BABEL. 6s.

Lord DALLING and BULWER'S HISTORICAL CHARACTERS. 6s.

TIMBS'S LIVES of PAINTERS. 6s.

TIMBS'S LIVES of STATESMEN. 6s.

TIMBS'S WITS and HUMORISTS. 2 vols. 12s.

TIMBS'S LATER WITS and HUMORISTS. 2 vols. 12s.

TIMBS'S DOCTORS and PATIENTS. 6s.

The BENTLEY BALLADS. 6s.

SOUTH SEA BUBBLES, by the EARL and the DOCTOR. 6s.

GUILLERMIN'S The SUN. 6s.

BESANT and PALMER'S HISTORY of JERUSALEM. 6s.

CROWE'S the GREAT TONE POETS. 6s.

The WIT and WISDOM of Lord CHESTERFIELD. 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MR. WATKINS'S NEW WORK.

New ready, in 3 vols. 21s.

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES.

By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A.

Contents: The Old Countess of Desmond—The Edgumbees of Edgumbe and Cotehele—The Lynches of Galway—A Cadet of the Plantagenets—The Proud Duke of Somerset—Lady Killybeg—The Danes of Caruath—The Ladies of Llangollen—The Plores—The Stuarts of Traquair—Belted Will Howard—An Episode in the House of Dunderdale—The Duke of Hamilton—The Chief of Dundas—The Duke of Chandos and Princes Canons—The Spencers and Comptons—All the Howards—The Lockharts of Lee—A Ghost Story in the Noble House of Bedford—A Tragedy in Pall Mall—An Eventful Russell—The Lady of Lathom House—Two Royal Marriages in the Last Century—The Boyles—The Merry Duke of Montagu—The Romance of the Earl of Huntingdon—Lady Rester Stanhope—The Countess of Nithsdale—The Romance of the Earl of Mar—Margaret Duchess of Newcastle—Lord Northampton—The Cutlers of Wentworth—The Earl of Bridgewater—The Carvers of Beddington—A Chapter on the Peasage—The Kirkpatricks of Clovenstone—The Cliffords, Earls of Cumberland—The Homes of Polwarth—The Duke House of Bedford—Tragedies of the House of Innes—The Duke House of Leinster—The Royal House of Stuart—The Great Douglas Case—The Radcliffe of Derwentwater—The Mice of the House of Hardwicke—Field-Marshal Keith.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1817-1874) by his daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. [Just ready]

The VILLAGE of PALACES; OR,

CHRONICLES of CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. G. LESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 11s.

"The work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting portion of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit. 'Palaces' is a title which is much to be commended. The book is a treasure to our readers."—Spectator.

ROYAL WINDSOR. By W. HEP-

WORTH DIXON. Vols. III and IV done; 8vo. 2s. COMPLETING the Work. SECOND EDITION.

CONVERSATIONS with DISTIN-

GUISHED PERSONS during the SECOND EMPIRE, from 1860 to 1880. By the late W. W. SEXTON. Edited by his Daughter, M. C. M. SEXTON. 2 vols. 8vo. 21s.

THE NEW NOVELS.

FORESTALLED. By M.

NATHAN EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridget,' 'Maidens in Eastern France,' &c. 2 vols.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.

G. LUNNUS BANKA, Author of 'The Manchester Man,' &c. 2 vols.

"Woolers and Winners" will add to Mrs. Banka's literary name. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting. — Court Journal.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

3 vols.

"A Modern Greek Heroine is one of the most clever and original works of fiction of the year. Indeed, it is one of the most clever and original more amusing and interesting by a modern novel. Its freshness and unconventionalities are very attractive." — John Bull.

A very interesting novel. The characters are admirably drawn, the incidents attract attention, and the whole book is replete with dramatic interest. Few novels will be read with more interest than the life and adventures of this Modern Greek Heroine. — Court Journal.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DERBY, Author of 'Kilverdale,' &c. 3 vols.

"Lord Derby shows his accustomed liveliness in description, which is never prolonged as to become wearisome. — Illustrated.

"A bright, lively story full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volume. — Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.

MILBURNWORTH, Author of 'Hathorcourt Rectory,' &c. 2 vols.

"Miss Bouverie is one of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one who takes it up will lay it down ungraciously. — Post.

A very charming story. In these delightful volumes Mrs. Milburnworth has produced a masterly work. — Graphic.

POOR ZEPH. By F. W. Robinson,

Author of 'Grandmother's Memory,' &c. 3 vols.

"The author has written many good stories. He has done well to reproduce these charming studies and sketches. — Illustrated.

POET and PEER. By Hamilton

ALAN. 3 vols. Dedicated to Lord Lytton.

"A novel of unusual merit, the work of a cultivated man of the world, who describes what he has seen. It is the best of Mr. Alan's novels, and will interest and amuse every reader who takes it up." — Illustrated.

THREE RECRUITS, and the GIRLS

THEY LEFT BEHIND THEM. By JOSEPH HATTON. 3 vols.

THE TENTH EARL. By John Ber-

WICK HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Flavin,' 'Young Lord Farnish,' &c. 3 vols. [Just ready]

CHEAP EDITION of SIR GIBBIE.

By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 6s. bound and illustrated.

GUIDE-BOOKS and MAPS for TOURISTS.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES. Pp. 8vo. cloth.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. With 2 Maps and 3 Panoramic Views. Also in Four Sections with Maps 1s. of each 1. Keswick, 2. Windermere and Langdale, 3. 4. Ambleside, Barmreagh, and Windermere, 4. Grasmere and Lodore.

NORTH WALES. With 2 Maps. 1s. 6d. Also in Five Sections. Chester, Llandudno, Llanfair, 2. Conwy and Barmreagh, 3. Llanfair and Llanfair, 4. Llanfair and Llanfair, 5. Llanfair and Llanfair.

ISLE of MAN. With Map. 1s. 6d. Also in Four Sections. Llandudno, Llanfair, 2. Conwy and Barmreagh, 3. Llanfair and Llanfair, 4. Llanfair and Llanfair.

CARLISLE DISTRICT. The ROMAN WALL, and Neighbourhood. With Map. 1s. 6d.

ISLE of WIGHT. With 2 Maps. 1s. 6d.

JENKINSON'S SMALLER PRACTICAL GUIDES. Pp. 8vo.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. With Map. 1s. 6d.

NORTH WALES. With Map. 1s. 6d.

ISLE of MAN. With Map. 1s. 6d.

CARLISLE DISTRICT. The ROMAN WALL, and Neighbourhood. With Map. 1s. 6d.

ISLE of WIGHT. With 2 Maps. 1s. 6d.

STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES of TOURISTS' GUIDES. Pp. 8vo.

cloth, with Maps, &c. each 2s.

Channel Islands. By H. Clarke. 1s. 6d.

Derbyshire. By J. Charles. 1s. 6d.

Devon. By J. Charles. 1s. 6d.

Devon (South). By J. Charles. 1s. 6d.

English Lake District. By H. 1.

Jenkinson. By H. 1.

Kent. By H. 1.

These are also published in One Volume price 3s. 6d.

LONDON MAP and GUIDE for both

VISITORS and RESIDENTS. COLLINS'S

STANDARD MAP of LONDON, Enlarged and Corrected from recent surveys, and delineating the Postal Districts, the Railways with the latest Extensions, the Omnibus and Tramway Routes, and the Steamboat Piers. The facilities for finding any locality are greatly enhanced by the addition of an Alphabetical List of nearly 4,000

References, the Map being divided into One Mile Sections for this purpose. It also contains an Illustrated Guide to the principal Places of Interest, and Notes relating to the Public Conveyances. Scale, 4 inches to a mile. Size, 34 inches by 44. Price, plain, in case, 1s. 6d.; coloured,

1s. 6d.; mounted on linen, in case, 1s. 6d.; on roller, varnished, 7s. 6d.

ISLE of WIGHT.—VISITORS' GUIDE and MAP. STANFORD'S TOURISTS' MAP of the ISLE of WIGHT, showing the Roads, Railways, Landing-places for Buses, and Popular References to Famous Localities, Antiquities, &c., and an inset Map, showing the Island, Southampton Water, and the adjacent country.

Size, 21 inches by 21; scale, 1 mile to an inch, with a

Visitors' Guide, 32 pp., containing Introduction, Appendices, Means of Locomotion, Hotels and Inns, Leisure, Outing Tours, Walking Tours, Dictionary of Places.

Plain, folded in case, 1s.; coloured, folded in case, 1s. 6d.;

coloured, mounted, in case, 1s. 6d.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS for ENG-

LAND, WALES, SCOTLAND, IRELAND, ENGLISH

COUNTIES, &c. List on application.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS to the

CONTINENT, FRANCE, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND,

ITALY, SPAIN, ALGERIA, EGYPT, &c. List on application.

BLACK'S GUIDES to ENGLAND,

WALES, SCOTLAND, IRELAND, ENGLISH COUN-

TIES, &c. List on application.

BAEDEKER'S GUIDES to SWITZER-

LAND, EASTERN ALPS, the RHINE, GERMANY,

ITALY, PARIS, &c. List on application.

ENGLAND and WALES.—ORD-

NANCE SURVEY MAP. Any sheet may be purchased separately. Large sheets, each 2s. 6d.; small sheets, each 1s. Size of each large sheet, 40 inches by 27. Mounted for pocket, full sheets, 4s. 6d.; coloured, 6s. 6d.; cloth case, 6d. extra. Sections, composed of four small sheets, 6s.; coloured, 4s. 6d.; cloth case,

6d. extra. An Index Map, defining the contents of each sheet, may be had gratis on application, or by post for postage stamp. Stanford's Selected List of the Ordnance Survey Maps, gratis; by post for penny stamp.

EDWARD STANFORD supplies all the best MAPS and BOOKS

(reproduction of Publishers) suitable for the British and Continental Traveller.

London.

EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

He who taught me! Greeks prove ingrates! So insult you us?
When your teaching bears its first-fruits, Peter—wait and see!"

As the word, the deed proved; ere a brief year's passage,

Fop—that fool he made the jokes on—now he made the jokes for, gratis:

Hunks—that boarder, long left lonely in his creak age—

Found now one appreciative deferential friend:
Powder-paint-and-patch, Hag Jerebel—recovered
Strange to say, the power to please, got courtship till she cried Jam satia!

Fop be-flattered, Hunks be-friended, Hag beloved—

Nobody o'erlooked, save God—he soon attained his end.

As he lounged at ease one morning in his villa, (Hag's the dowry) estimated (Hunks' bequest) his coin in coffer,

Mused on how a fool's good word (Fop's word) could fill a

Social circle with his praise, promote him man of mark,—

All at once—"An old friend fain would see your Highness!"

There stood Peter, skeleton and scarecrow, plain writ Phi-le-so-pher

In the woe-worn face—for yellowness and dryness, Parchment—with a pair of eyes—one hope their feeble spark.

By acting upon this principle—by fostering men's vices under the pretence that virtues will spring from them—Pietro's pupil rises in the world till at last he becomes prime minister to the Kaiser. After the pupil has enjoyed ten years of success Pietro calls upon him again, and asks protection of the minister.
The pupil's answer is a further demand—a demand for spiritual power, the power of a pope,—compared with which all other power is weakness: let Pietro give his pupil that, and the debt of gratitude shall be paid—"each penny in the pound."

By aid of Pietro's mysterious power the hero becomes pope, and again his benefactor intrudes upon him, this time to ask his pupil not for protection for himself (for he is now ninety years old), but for his book:—

"I've an author's pride: I want my Book's survival:
See, I've hid it in my breast to warm me mid the rags and tatters!

Save it—tell next age your Master had no rival!
Scholar's debt discharged in full, be 'Thanks' my latest breath!"

"Faugh, the frowsy bundle—scribblings harumscarum

Scattered o'er a dozen sheepskins! What's the name of this farrago?

He—"Conciliator Differentiarum—"

Man and book may burn together, cause the world no loss!

Stop—what else? A tractate—eh, 'De Speciebus Ceremonialis Magi-a!' I dream sure! Hence, away, go,

Wizard,—quick avoid me! Vain you clasp my knee, bums

Hand that bears the Fisher's ring or foot that boasts the Cross!

"Help! The old magician clings like an octopus!
Ah, you rise now—fuming, fretting, frowning, if I read your features!

Frown, who cares? We're Pope—once Pope, you can't unpope us!

Good—you muster up a smile: that's better! Still so brisk?

All at once grown youthful? But the case is plain!
Am—

Here I dally with the fiend, yet know the Word—compels all creatures

Earthly, heavenly, hellish. Apote, Sathanas!
Dicam verbum Salomonicum—"—diavolo!" When —whisk!

What was changed? The stranger gave his eyes
a rubbing:

There smiled Peter's face turned back a moment at him o'er the shoulder,

As the black-door shut, bang! "So he escapes a drubbing!"
(Quoth a boy who, unespied, had stopped to hear the talk).

"That's the way to thank these wizards when they bid men

Benedictio! What ails you? You, a man, and yet no bolder!

Foreign Sir, you look but foolish!" "Idmen, Idmen!"

Groaned the Greek. "O Peter, cheese at last I know from chalk!"

Now the chief interest of this poem is that it is offered as an anecdote of one of the most remarkable figures among those strange Paduan mystics who in the thirteenth century founded a school based on the teaching of Averroes the Arabian. But that interest is destroyed when we contrast Mr. Browning's conception of the character of Pietro with the common conception of the real Pietro.
A physician of acknowledged skill, Pietro refused (so it is said) to exercise his talents except in consideration of fees so exorbitant that, considering the value of money in the Italy of those days, it is marvellous how they could have been paid. He would see no patient outside the city walls under fifty crowns a visit, and when Pope Honorius IV. sent for him, he refused to attend until he had been promised four hundred ducats a day. If such a curmudgeon was persecuted, it may almost be said that he deserved it, and for once we feel a certain sympathy with the Inquisition, which having captured him, and being prevented by his death from burning him, decided to burn his dead body, and, on this being stolen in the night by a friend, captured his portrait and burned that. As a parable showing the self-sophistications of the ingrate, Mr. Browning's story—whether he invented it or dug it from mines unknown save to such learning as his—is no doubt rich; while the received story of Pietro's life inculcates nothing, unless it be that, even when the cook is the Inquisition itself, the hare, after it has been caught, is never safe till it is well in the pot; but perhaps
Mr. Browning would have done better had he written a parable, and left Pietro alone.

This idyl is preceded by an Arabian anecdote of Hóseyn's love for his mare, which is much more successfully treated; in fact, it is the most pleasing poem in the volume.
Hóseyn, though apparently the poorest, was the richest of men. Though he had neither flocks nor herds, "neither salt nor bread" to give to the stranger, he loved passionately
"Mulýkeh, the Pearl," the mare who for fleetness and for beauty had no rival and no second; and Mulýkeh was his. Not all the wealth of the Ruby Hills would have bought her, as every one knew; yet so envious of Hóseyn's good fortune was Duhl, the son of Sheybán, that he made effort after effort to obtain her. He offered Hóseyn the price of a thousand camels. This was refused, as were all the offers made by Duhl in his desire to possess the wonderful mare, for A certain poet has sung, and sealed the same with an oath,

"For the vulgar—flocks and herds! The Pearl is a prize apart."

Duhl determined at last to steal the mare:—
Through the skirt-fold in glides Duhl,—so a serpent disturbs no leaf

In a bush as he parts the twigs entwining a nest:
clean through,

He is noiselessly at his work: as he planned, he performs the rape.

He has set the tent-door wide, has buckled the girth, has clipped

The headstall away from the wrist he leaves thrice bound as before,

He springs on the Pearl, is launched on the desert like bolt from bow.

Up starts our plundered man: from his breast though the heart be ripped,

Yet his mind has the mastery: behold, in a minute
more,

He is out and off and away on Bubýseh, whose worth we know!

And Hóseyn—his blood turns flame, he has learned long since to ride,

And Bubýseh does her part,—they gain—they are gaining fast

On the fugitive pair, and Duhl has Ed-Dárraj to cross and quit,

And to reach the ridge El-Sabán,—no safety till that be spied!

And Bubýseh is, bound by bound, but a horse-length off at last,

For the Pearl has missed the tap of the heel, the touch of the bit.

She shortens her stride, she chafes at her rider the strange and queer:

Bubýseh is mad with hope—best sister she shall and must,

Though Duhl, of the hand and heel so clumsy, she has to thank.

She is near now, nose by tail—they are neck by croup—joy! fear!

What folly makes Hóseyn shout "Dog Duhl, Damned son of the Dust,

Touch the right ear and press with your foot my Pearl's left flank!"

And Duhl was wise at the word, and Mulýkeh as prompt perceived

Who was urging redoubled pace, and to hear him was to obey,

And a leap indeed gave she, and vanished for ever
more.

And Hóseyn looked one long last look as who, all bereaved,

Looks, fain to follow the dead so far as the living
may:

Then he turned Bubýseh's neck slow homeward,
weeping sore.

The lesson inculcated by the poem called "Doctor ——" is of a more practical kind. It teaches that the only way to conquer the devil is to give him a wife.
The devil (who, it seems, is also death) grew jealous of a certain proverb, which said that there is one thing stronger than death, a bad wife; whereupon the Deity suggested that, as the truth of the proverb was problematical, it would be best for the devil to marry a woman and try. This the devil did, and the issue was a son, who when he reached manhood set up as a doctor of medicine, and, though entirely ignorant of his art, soon became rich and famous, as it is said most men do who "have a devil of a father." The fact was that the devil had given his son a hint as to how to distinguish a doomed from an undoomed patient. When the devil (exercising the functions of death) had decided that a sick man should die, he would make his appearance by the side of the victim's head. When the patient was to recover the devil used to simply show himself at the window. The doctor, acting upon this secret knowledge, was reputed to have in his hands the keys of life and death.
All went pleasantly between father and son till, on a certain occasion, the emperor fell sick, and promised the doctor as a reward for curing him not only boundless wealth, but his lovely daughter in marriage. Now, for the first time, the doctor, who perceived that the emperor was doomed, asked his father to spare a victim. The devil, however, resisted all entreaties, and the emperor was fast dying when the doctor thought of a means of circumventing the Great Circumventer himself. He secretly sent for his mother, the devil's wife. The catastrophe is easily imagined: in the direst dismay the devil flew out of the window before that power which is stronger than death—a wife—and the emperor rapidly recovered. However, the spectacle of a wife's awful power so appalled the doctor that he declined even a princess and her dowry, and left the emperor a sadder and a wiser man.

"Echelos" tells the story of the man who, according to the Athenian tradition, appeared in a mysterious manner at the battle of Marathon, dressed as a rustic and armed with a plough, with which weapon he did such execution among the barbarians as to materially affect the issue of the battle. The last poem in the volume is a rendering in ottava rima of the legend alluded to by Virgil ('Georg.' iii. 390), that the naked Moon, seeking to hide herself from gaze, was entrapped by Pan into taking refuge in a cloud where he himself was concealed.

The volume is full of power, picturesqueness, and beauty, and displays the astonishing agility of intellect which has always been a characteristic of Mr. Browning's poetry, and which years seem not to weaken, but rather to strengthen. In point of humour, however, it is not equal to the first series of 'Dramatic Idyls,' while its metrical peculiarities are more pronounced. It is not for a critic to dictate to a poet in what metres he should write; it is perhaps hardly within his function to suggest, unless the poet shall, either from wilfulness or from defective ear, transgress those fundamental laws of verbal melody without regard to which metre cannot exist. It is an error to think that Mr. Browning's genius naturally falters in metrical expression. Hundreds of passages might be culled from his poems in which the music is quite new, quite his own, and entirely beautiful; but there are times when his persistent quest of original movements leads him astray. Of the metre in which is written "Pietro of Abano," Mr. Browning says:—

I have—Oh, not sung! but lilted (as—between us—Grows my lazy custom) this its legend. What the lilt?

And being apparently aware that it is beyond scansion, he tries to indicate what he himself meant it to be in two lines of musical notation.

No poet of his time has taken such liberties with metre as Mr. Browning, but in "Pietro of Abano" he seems to go out of his way to force the rhythm of the thought into an opposite direction from that of the rhythm of the metre. Like two opposing currents, one impedes the other, and the result is a whirlpool of sound. At this important subject we can but glance here. Among the many good reasons for the existence of verse this is perhaps the chief, that the natural emphasis of the matter should not be weakened but strengthened by the artificial emphasis of metre. The Anglo-Saxon alliterative poetry shows this more decisively than even the rhymed poetry which in our country followed it. That the eighteenth century poets were too careful of this adjustment—that their lines beat on the cæsura and the rhymes too monotonously—is true, but the reaction which set in with the first quarter of this century, and which culminated perhaps in 'Endymion,' went sufficiently far—and more than sufficiently far apparently; for, when he came to write 'Lamia,' Keats himself—who understood emphasis more thoroughly than any modern poet except Coleridge,—was as careful almost as an eighteenth century poet to make the rhythm of the sense meet the rhythm of the sound. When Mr. Tennyson in 'Maud' and the 'Grandmother' made his metrical experiments with long lines having a hexametrical basis, he saw what effects might, by a poet with a fine ear such as his, be produced by occasionally playing with the metrical emphasis, and showing—that it is quite legitimate, and even in a deep sense essential, in art to show—the struggle going on between freedom and law, and which had been so magnificently shown by the tumultuous splendours of Mrs. Browning. From that moment almost all poets began to write in long lines and to play with the rhythmic emphasis, with an effect, it must be conceded, which it is often grievous to think of. That Mr. Browning is a great sinner in this direction is but natural, seeing how deep is his passion for the grotesque. Of the grotesquerie of rhythm as well as of rhyme he is certainly the greatest master in our language; for, the true grotesque—that is to say, Teutonic grotesque, which lies in the expression of deep ideas through fantastic forms—not Butler nor Swift nor Hood nor Barham attempted. In Italian and French grotesque the incongruity throughout all art lies in a simple departure from the recognized line of beauty; but in the Teutonic mind the instinctive quest is really not—save in music—beauty at all, but the wonderful, the profound, the mysterious; and the incongruity of Teutonic grotesque lies in expressing the emotions aroused by these qualities in forms that are odd, unexpected, bizarre. Rabelais, with all his masiveness of intellect, shows once only any real sense of the mysterious, and then he merely recounts a legend. Mr. Browning, notwithstanding his genuine passion for Italy, and perhaps for the Latin races generally, is more Teutonic in genius than any other English poet of our century; and in the matter of grotesque he effects by rhymes entirely incongruous with the ideas what Richter and Mr. Carlyle effect by the incongruity of their deep sayings with the prose quips and cranks which embody them. However, this at least must be said, that he has produced a new thing in English literature.

A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. Edited by W. Smith, D.C.L., and S. Cheetham, M.A. 2 vols. (Murray.)

Like commentaries on the New Testament, dictionaries increase in number. The age needs instruction, and instruction, too, supplied in a condensed form which makes independent research superfluous. The good derived from cyclopedias and dictionaries is so palpable as to outweigh the inconveniences. An accumulation of knowledge brought together and presented in a readable shape saves the time and labour of inquirers. For the production of such a work the association of writers has many advantages. If topics be judiciously distributed among them, they will treat them with ability because of their previous acquaintance with the department of knowledge of which they make a speciality. Division of labour usually issues in ultimate success. A further improvement is to have various editors with certain departments under their control. A single editor must necessarily pass perfunctory articles, because he is unacquainted with all the subjects treated, if not, at times, with the competence of writers selected. But while there is advantage in having many contributors, a plethora of writers is apt to be an evil. It is not unusual to find one contributor treading on the province of another, and expressing a different opinion. To secure consentaneousness it is necessary to have as few authors as possible, their multiplication weakening the effect of the whole. There are not many cases in which ten well-chosen contributors would not suffice—men of tried and acknowledged ability.

The present work professes to be a continuation of the 'Dictionary of the Bible' formerly issued under the superintendence of Dr. W. Smith. The first volume appeared in the year 1875, giving five years for the preparation of the second. Whatever may be thought of the competency of the editors, it will be generally admitted that the number of contributors is excessive. No less than a hundred and thirty-three names compose the list of writers in this work and 'A Dictionary of Christian Biography' issued from the same publishing house. A dozen would have done the work better.

The kind of information supplied is miscellaneous and curious, and it is so various that everybody will find here something to instruct and interest him. The title 'Christian Antiquities' suggests no adequate idea of the contents. A store of knowledge is deposited in the two thousand and sixty closely printed pages. We do not suppose that the Biblical critic will care for the lore of this book; but many divines and laymen will probably prize the work highly. All who possess antiquarian tastes or ritualistic tendencies, who love an ornamental public worship and decorated churches, all who are curious to learn the peculiarities of religious orders and the practices that have prevailed in the services of different churches, will find entertainment, if not edification, in the dictionary. In the words of the editors, "the work treats of the organization of the Church, its officers, legislation, discipline, and revenues; the social life of Christians; their worship and ceremonial, with the accompanying music, vestments, instruments, vessels, and insignia; their sacred places; their architecture and other forms of art; their symbolism; their sacred days and seasons; the graves or catacombs in which they were laid to rest." Commencing at the period at which the 'Dictionary of the Bible' leaves off, it ceases at the age of Charlemagne, and thus stops short of what are commonly called the Middle Ages.

The reader who expects elaborate articles on the subjects specified and looks for a tolerable approach to completeness will not be disappointed. The information presented under the different letters of the alphabet shows that the writers have endeavoured to give a full view of the topics on which they undertook to write. Not a few of the articles are long; and the long articles are generally the best, although their length is often excessive. Thus under "Monastery" there are fifty-one pages; twenty-eight are devoted to "Holy Orders," and nearly seventeen to "Rings." "Ordination" fills twenty-two pages, and "Liturgy" nineteen. Numerous extracts might have been dispensed with, such as the decree of Gelasius, which is given at length from Hardouin so far as it contains a list of prohibited books. The extracts, too, are sometimes of little value, as is that from Conybeare's Bampton Lectures about Clement's Epistle to the Corinthians, in which it is said that the Church addressed had largely consisted of such as had been Jews or Jewish proselytes, because the writer often quotes the Old Testament. There is no logical connexion between Clement's use of the Septuagint and the Jewish Christian constitution of the Corinthian Church.

In perusing the pages of this interesting dictionary the reader is struck with the amount of research which must have been spent upon it, all tending to one result, that is, a pretty full account of each subject. Many articles are excellent specimens of concise and satisfactory description, such as those on the apostolical canons and constitutions, which leave nothing to be desired. Those on "Exorcism" and "Inscriptions" are also excellent. But it would be tedious to single out and characterize even the majority of the topics which are discussed in a way worthy of the highest commendation. If we have been occasionally disappointed, the incompetence of a few contributors is not to be wondered at. Thus the article "Agape" fails to satisfy because the connexion between these feasts and the Lord's Supper is obscurely alluded to. If the opinion of Chrysostom and other fathers be correct, the agape preceded the eucharist in apostolic times. Abuses led to their separation and the putting of the agape after the supper—a separation which afterwards became a considerable interval, as appears from councils held at Laodicea, Carthage, Orleans, and elsewhere. The writer of "Agape" does not clearly describe the relation of the two repasts in successive times and various lands.

It would be unreasonable to expect freedom from error. In a multitude of writers there is no safety from it, especially if they happen to be of no repute for learning or undistinguished in the knowledge of particular subjects. A weakness in the examination of Scripture and its bearings is often observable, when post-Scriptural opinions and practices are correctly given. For example, under the phrase "Angels of Churches," it is asserted that bishops are meant, and that St. John is believed on other grounds to have been "pre-eminently the organizer of episcopacy throughout the Church." The interpretation and belief are undoubtedly wrong. In the remarks on marriage, where the directions to Timothy and Titus respecting a bishop being the husband of one wife are noticed, an incorrect view is adopted, viz., that they should be persons "faithful to the marriage tie," whereas the meaning is that they should be but once married. Under "Prohibited Degrees" there is an argument upon Leviticus xviii. 18, in which various interpretations are cursorily noticed and dismissed in favour of one which is incorrect, viz., "one wife to another." The true rendering is that of our common version, and the marginal one cannot be allowed, though it is pronounced "grammatically unassailable," and objections to it are characterized as "minute and arbitrary." In this instance the idiom is adverse to the translation "one wife to another"; and to be accurate in grammatical niceties often demands minuteness. The fatal objection to the proposed rendering, which is not arbitrary, but advanced by all good Hebraists, is that the phrase here differs from analogous cases by the absence of reciprocal action or relation. Elsewhere a number of 'things contained in a plural nominative, followed by a plural verb, are said to be added to one another; they are inanimate objects feminine, and the subject of discourse is first mentioned, governing the import of the phrase. The grammatical idiom in the present instance differs from those cases where the rendering is "one to another," so that the writer's argument misses its mark. In accepting the interpretation of Revelation i. 10, which finds in it a reference to the weekly Lord's day as a well-known and established festival in the apostolic Church, more is assumed than is warranted or probable. The festival was not established so early.

Critical infirmity appears also in ecclesiastical history. In the article "Baptism" we find this paragraph about Tertullian:—

"He was of full age before the death of Irenæus, and in knowledge of antiquity and of the usages of the Church was second to none then living. And he gives absolutely conclusive proof that baptism of infants was a common practice of the Church in his own time, towards the close of the second century. With characteristic freedom he expresses his own opinion that the practice might wisely be altered, stating reasons for his opinion ('De Bapt.' c. 18). But he nowhere says one word to imply that the practice of his own contemporaries was an innovation upon the earlier usage of the Church."

As Tertullian was an opponent of infant baptism he did not look upon it as an apostolic institution. His language furnishes no "conclusive proof that baptism of infants was a common practice of the Church" in his day. Rather does his zealous opposition to it indicate that it was not common.

In speaking of the list of canonical Scriptures determined by the third Council of Carthage, the writer states that the confirmation of Rome was probably obtained. This is in opposition to the decree of Pope Gelasius (about 496), which forbids the reading of the deeds of martyrs. It is not accurate to speak of the Papal lists attributed to Gelasius and Hormisdas as different. The text which lies at the basis of both is sometimes referred to Damasus, sometimes to one or other of the two just mentioned.

The statement that "certainly from the time of the Maccabees, and probably before, one lesson from the Pentateuch and another from the prophets were read in the synagogues every Sabbath day" is rash. Lessons from the prophets were not read so early; and the division into Haphtaroth was much later. The conjecture of Elias Levita about the origin of prophetic lessons, baseless as it is, has led many astray. Regarding St. Isidore of Seville and his enumeration of the canon, it is stated that he acknowledged but one epistle of John. This is incorrect. In his book of Etymologies three are expressly ascribed to the apostle. He followed Jerome rather than Augustine in treating of the canonical writings. In the letter of Polycrates to Victor, where John is described as a priest wearing the golden plate (κράλον), the language is taken allegorically for two reasons, both unsatisfactory. The literal acceptance alone is evidently that which the original writer intended, though it is a stumbling-block in the way of many. In regard to the date of the council at Laodicea, the writer does not seem acquainted with the fact that Mansi, Spittler, and Gieseler concur in making it 363. His putting it not earlier than A.D. 375 is erroneous.

Nor have we to complain only of weak reasoning and incorrect assertions; there are not a few statements which need to be supplemented for the sake of completeness. Thus the Psalter of Jerome after the Hebrew, published by Delagarde in 1874, is unnoticed, though it is the best and most accurate edition. The citations of councils respecting prohibited degrees of marriages should have been given more fully. Omissions are observable, such as the Council of Valence, A.D. 374, that said to be held under St. Patrick, the capitula of Gregory the Great between 590 and 604, &c.

The language is capable of great improvement, being often slovenly and awkward. Take this as an example:—

"In one of the appendices to the works of Augustine is a letter from Avitus, a Spanish priest then living in Palestine, to Palchionius, Bishop of Bracara in Spain, which was to be conveyed to him by Orosius the historian, then about to return to Spain, which was his native land."

Or this:—

"Though it is impossible to feel positive and maintain that St. John certainly wore no such ornament, we feel that it is far more likely," &c.

English Men of Letters.—Alexander Pope. By Leslie Stephen. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. LESLIE STEPHEN has not collected any new materials for his pleasant monograph on Pope, nor, indeed, did the scope of his work necessitate his doing so, but he has given a clear statement of the facts of Pope's life as established by the researches of the late Mr. Dilke and Mr. Elwin. Not very much matter regarding Pope has turned up in the last six years; still Mr. Stephen would have done well to have examined it. Had he, for instance, consulted the 'Curll Papers' of a well-known authority, he would hardly have spoken of Curll as he has done. Curll was not spotless, but he was not such a villain as Pope chose to consider him. Nichols long ago said:—

"The memory of Edmund Curll has been transmitted to posterity with an obloquy more severe than he deserved. Whatever were his demerits in having occasionally published works that the present age would very properly consider too licentious, he certainly deserves commendation for his industry in preserving our National Remains."

The author of the 'Curll Papers' points out that the Clarendon Press still prints Curll's memoir of South, and adds:—

"Those who denounce Curll as a publisher of books of an offensive character—and the charge is true enough—would do well to remember that indecency was one vice of the age in which he lived; and that nothing that Curll ever issued from the press did, or could, exceed in coarseness and indecency those satirical articles in Pope and Swift's 'Miscellanies' in which Curll figures as the hero."

Mr. Stephen, too, is hardly accurate when he follows Mr. Elwin (who has been misled by a note to the 'Dunciad') in saying that Curll threatened to publish the 'Town Eclogues,' and that "Pope with Lintot had a meeting with Curll." The 'Eclogues' were published before the interview—"on Monday, the 26th," says the 'Full and True Account,' and the interview was "on the Wednesday ensuing." But as a rule Mr. Stephen's narrative may be depended on; and readers who wish to obtain a general idea of the tortuous ways adopted by Pope to secure the publication of his correspondence cannot do better than read Mr. Stephen's clear and concise account. Mr. Stephen is naturally disgusted at Pope's dishonesty, and in consequence, though he recognizes it, he has hardly brought out with sufficient clearness Pope's extreme generosity. As Mr. Dilke says:—

"His pleasure was in scattering, not in hoarding, and that on others rather than himself: he was generous to the Blounts.....generous to his half-sister, generous to her sons, generous to Dodsley, then struggling into business, nobly generous to Savage.

Nor, on the other hand, does Mr. Stephen make quite clear to the modern reader Pope's independence of character. People nowadays scarcely realize what a noble act it was of Pope's to decline the pension Craggs offered him, and how valuable to literature was the example he set. Mr. Stephen says that "Pope deserves the credit of preserving his independence"; but at a time when Gay openly wrote,

Places, I found, were daily given away,

And yet no friendly Gazette mentioned Gay,

Pope deserved far more than credit. It is always to be remembered to Pope's honour that he preferred to give

Ten years to comment and translate rather than add to his means by accepting a pension, or by changing his religion and obtaining a place.

Mr. Stephen's estimate of Pope as a poet seems to be lower now than when he wrote the two agreeable articles which appear in the 'Hours in a Library,' and he adopts an expedient for depreciating Pope that is scarcely generous. He quotes the famous close of the 'Dunciad,' telling the reader that Johnson and Thackeray admired it, and leaving him to infer that Mr. Stephen does not. In the same way he hints, but does not say, that the lines "By foreign hands" are much overrated. An iconoclast should have the courage of his opinions. The truth seems to be that Mr. Stephen is before all things ethical; and he is growing dissatisfied with Pope because he sees but too clearly the weakness of the 'Essay on Man.' The 'Essay on Man' has certainly been portentously overrated, and Pope is not the first poet who has not understood his own strength; but the poverty of the 'Essay on Man' does not prove the badness of 'Eloisa to Abelard.'

Having said so much in the way of fault-finding, let us quote a passage which may show what excellent criticism Mr. Stephen can write:—

"I fancy that under Pope's elaborate masks of hypocrisy and mystification there was a heart always abnormally sensitive. Unfortunately it was as capable of bitter resentment as of warm affection, and was always liable to be misled by the suggestions of his strangely irritable vanity. And this seems to me to give the true key to Pope's poetical as well as to his personal characteristics. To explain either, we must remember that he was a man of impulses; at one instant a mere incarnate thrill of gratitude or generosity, and in the next of spite or jealousy. A spasm of wounded vanity would make him for the time as mean and selfish as other men are made by a frenzy of bodily fear. He would instinctively snatch at a lie even when a moment's reflection would have shown that the plain truth would be more convenient, and therefore he had to accumulate lie upon lie, each intended to patch up some previous blunder. Though nominally the poet of reason, he was the very antithesis of the man who is reasonable in the highest sense; who is truthful in word and deed because his conduct is regulated by harmonious and invariable principles. Pope was governed by the instantaneous feeling. His emotion came in sudden jets and gushes, instead of a continuous stream. The same peculiarity deprives his poetry of continuous harmony or profound unity of conception. His lively sense of form and proportion enables him indeed to fill up a simple framework (generally of borrowed design) with an eye to general effect, as in the 'Rape of the Lock' or the first 'Dunciad.' But even there his flight is short; and when a poem should be governed by the evolution of some profound principle or complex mood of sentiment, he becomes incoherent and perplexed. But on the other hand he can perceive admirably all that can be seen at a glance from a single point of view. Though he could not be continuous, he could return again and again to the same point; he could polish, correct, eliminate superfluities, and compress his meaning more and more closely, till he has constructed short passages of imperishable excellence."

Again, of the audience to which Pope addressed himself:—

"The standard of good writing always implicitly present to his mind is the fitness of his poetry to pass muster when shown by Gay to his duchess, or read after dinner to a party composed of Swift, Bolingbroke, and Congreve. That imaginary audience is always looking over his shoulder, applauding a good hit, chuckling over allusions to the last bit of scandal, and ridiculing any extravagance tending to romance or sentimentalism.....It is only too easy to expose their shallowness, and therefore to overlook what was genuine in their feelings. After all, Pope's eminent friends were no mere tailor's blocks for the display of laced coats. Swift and Bolingbroke were not enthusiasts nor philosophers, but certainly they were no fools. They liked in the first place thorough polish. They could appreciate a perfectly turned phrase, an epigram which concentrated into a couplet a volume of quick observations, a smart saying from Rochefoucauld or La Bruyère which gave an edge to worldly wisdom; a really brilliant utterance of one of those maxims, half true and not over profound, but still presenting one aspect of life as they saw it, which have since grown rather threadbare."

The only thing wanting in these remarks is a clearer recognition of the fact that Pope was greater than his audience; that sometimes he rose above the limitations he sought to impose on himself, and allowed scope to the emotional side of his genius. Wordsworth, an admirable critic, clearly saw this, and has acknowledged it, but done so in his habitually ill-natured way.

This monograph may fairly be reckoned one of the best of the series to which it belongs, and it is in a great measure free from those curious slips which disfigure so many of the series. An exception may be mentioned. On p. 85 Mr. Stephen says, "Pope, indeed, did not enjoy the honour of any personal interview with royalty," a sentence which is rather startling, but on the next page it is said, "Pope was naturally more allied with the Prince of Wales, who occasionally visited him," which shows that Mr. Stephen has used the word "royalty" in a peculiar fashion.

Tales of our Great Families. By Edward Walford, M.A. Second Series. 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE editor of 'The County Families' seems indefatigable in his endeavours to keep himself before the reading public, and never to be at a loss for materials for a fresh compilation. The printer's ink of this second series of 'Tales of our Great Families' is hardly dry when it is announced that its author has a fresh work in the press, entitled 'Holidays in the Home Counties.' It is to be hoped that the forthcoming work may be better than the present. It can hardly be worse.

Most of the tales here brought together are either singularly uninteresting or marvellously trite, and few, if any, of them are worth the most careless perusal. The romances of the peerage and aristocracy have already been pretty well exhausted by Sir Bernard Burke and other writers, and the present collection, which first appeared in a ladies' weekly newspaper, should never have been republished.

The best of these tales are the Countess of Nithsdale's narrative, in her own words, of how she contrived the escape of her husband from the Tower the evening before he was to have been executed; and the "Romance of the Earldom of Huntingdon," which Mr. Walford has condensed from the late Mr. Nugent Bell's interesting account of the arduous researches he undertook in 1817-18 in order to get together the proofs that were necessary to establish the claim of his friend Capt. Francis Hastings to the Huntingdon peerage, which was supposed to have become extinct on the death of Francis, the tenth earl, in 1789; but the story as briefly told by Mr. Walford is not nearly so interesting as when it is read in Mr. Bell's quarto. The episodes of the ride in a market cart with an old female dependent of the Hastings family, who supplied information of the utmost value, and the encounter with a ghost in a church, are amusing, but they, too, were better told by Mr. Bell.

Through haste in writing and carelessness in revising, Mr. Walford commits himself in these tales to many inaccuracies and misleading statements. For instance, he twice calls Josceline, eleventh Earl of Northumberland, who died in 1670, a duke, though there was no Duke of Northumberland till 1674; and he makes Gerald, eighth Earl of Kildare, live in the reigns of Edward III. and Henry VII. Again, he says that the ancestors of the Dunbars, Earls of March, derive their descent from the Saxon princes of England, when he means that they were descended from the Saxon Earls of Northumberland, a female ancestress of whom was a daughter of Ethelred the Unready. One is tempted to smile, too, when one reads Mr. Walford's statement that the healing powers of the famous heirloom of the Lockharts of Lee, the "Lee-penny," "are one of the very few supernatural matters which are still regarded as true north of the Grampians." Many such inaccuracies might easily be pointed out in these tales, but they are dwarfed into insignificance by others of far greater moment.

Before advertent to the worst errors in this book, attention may be directed to a common mistake that ought to be refuted. At p. 201 of the first volume of these tales Mr. Walford says:—

"It is not given to many of our nobility to boast of a legitimate descent from royalty, whether English or foreign; but the present Duke of Norfolk can look back without a blush, and point to a French as well as English king among his progenitors."

Putting aside the absurdity of limiting his Grace of Norfolk to one royal ancestor in each of the countries named, this statement is most inaccurate. As a member of the Genealogical Society, Mr. Walford ought to know that a large proportion of our nobility, as well as very many untitled families in our own country, can trace with perfect legitimacy, through female ancestors, to our Plantagenet kings, and consequently to Charlemagne and the early kings of France. No one can work much at tracing pedigrees without being struck by the number of persons in this country who, though ignorant of the fact themselves, and often in very humble circumstances, can be traced through female ancestors to John of Gaunt and his brothers, or to earlier Plantagenets. The reasons for this are not far to seek. In the first place, our national records are wonderfully copious, through our country having enjoyed a most happy immunity from invasion, and through the care that was taken of them during our Civil War. Secondly, the issue of John of Gaunt in particular, and of other Plantagenets in a lesser degree, has been very prolific; whilst in this country the younger sons of peers are commoners, and there has never been any rigid separation of classes, as on the Continent, to act in restraint of marriages between the nobly born and those of humbler origin. Lastly, so many centuries have elapsed since the reign of William I., and indeed since that of Edward III., that the blood of our early kings has had ample time to filter down through all ranks of society, even to the very lowest.

Assuming that none of the ancestry of a person now living had ever married a blood relation, and taking a generation at thirty years (which is very near the mark), he or she would be descended from more than one million of persons contemporary with Edward III., and would be descended from upwards of sixty millions of persons contemporary with William I.; that is, perhaps, from sixty times as many individuals as composed the population of England at the time of the Domesday survey. Conversely, supposing William I. had but two children and four grandchildren, and that the number of his descendants always increased from generation to generation at that very moderate rate, he would now be, if none of his descendants had ever intermarried, the common ancestor of upwards of sixty millions of persons. Putting these facts together, and making every allowance for far more marriages of those of the royal blood amongst themselves than with outsiders, there seems reason for believing that an immense number of Englishmen must be descended from the Conqueror. However that may be, it is unquestionably the fact that the blood of the Plantagenets runs in the veins of persons in the humblest circumstances; and amongst the well born a great proportion can be traced by many different lines to our early kings. At present comparatively few of our countrymen can claim descent from Henry VII., though he flourished four hundred years ago, and his issue seems to have been singularly unprolific; nevertheless there are at the present time a sufficient number of them to make it not improbable that four hundred years hence their number will be immense. Of course, whilst correcting Mr. Walford's mistaken assertion, we do not wish to disparage the blue blood of the Duke of Norfolk, who is undoubtedly the lineal representative of Thomas of Brotherton, a younger son of Edward I., and who also shares with a limited number of Englishmen and foreigners the right to quarter the royal arms of England. All we maintain is that if descent through females who are not heiresses is to be taken into account, a vast number of our countrymen at the present day are descended from our early kings.

The worst errors in this work are to be found in the "Romance of the Earldom of Mar," which gives as one-sided and as misleading an account of the claim that was litigated for some years, and finally decided in 1875, as it is possible to conceive. Mr. Walford has, apparently, never seen the cases that the Earl of Kellie and the opposing petitioner submitted to the Committee of Privilege, nor the evidence adduced in support of them, nor the judgments of Lord Cairns, Lord Redeale, and the late Lord Chelmsford, which, on the strength of Lord Crawford and Balcarres's ex parte pleadings, he ventures to impugn. It would be an endless task to expose all the ill-founded statements contained in this "Romance"; but by pointing out one or two of them we can easily show that the account of the Mar peerage case here given is untrustworthy, and that the most charitable view to take of this performance is to assume that its author has never had time to look into the matter about which he expresses such a decided opinion. But, even if this be so, he ought never to have committed himself to violent partisanship in so complicated a matter, or to have cast reflections in the way he does at the conclusion of his tale on the peers who decided the case after a most patient hearing.

The facts relating to the main point in dispute in the Mar case can be stated in a few words. It is admitted on all hands that one of Mr. Erskine-Goodeve's maternal ancestors received a grant of the territories of Mar from Queen Mary of Scotland by a Latin charter which is extant, and which was produced before the Lords. (It is printed in the Minutes of Evidence, p. 121.) This charter is dated June 23rd, 1565, and it purports to grant "the comitatus lordship and regality" of Mar, together with "the lordship and regality of Garveach" (or Garioch), to Mr. Erskine-Goodeve's ancestor, John, Lord Erskine, to hold, &c., all the lands, castles, towers, &c., to the said Lord Erskine, his heirs and assigns, "in free comitatus fee and inheritance for ever." Relying upon this charter, Mr. Erskine-Goodeve assumes that Queen Mary, along with her grant of the comitatus of Mar, restored to the Erskines the ancient title of Earl of Mar, which was descendible through females, and out of which the family had been wrongfully kept for a hundred and thirty years. The Lords who sat on the Committee of Privilege decided that this assumption was unproved, and rested their decision on one given by Lord Mansfield in "the Sutherland Case," which ruled that when a claim to a title is made through a female, the fact that the title can so descend must be proved by the claimant; and further ruled that in default of such proof the title must be presumed to have been limited on its creation to heirs male. The Mar peerage case fell completely within this rule, and must have been decided in the way it was settled five years ago had no evidence at all been forthcoming against Mr. Erskine-Goodeve's contention. Evidence, however, was produced tending to show that Queen Mary made a distinct grant of the title of Earl of Mar to Lord Erskine some weeks after the charter of infeoffment, and that she limited the title to his heirs male. In the first place, although Lord Erskine took the grant of the lands of Mar and the lordship of the Garioch, as above stated, on June 23rd, it is proved, by the Register of the Scottish Privy Council, that he sat at the Council till nearly the end of the next month as Lord Erskine and not as Earl of Mar, and that he did not sit as Earl of Mar until August 1st, on which date his attendance is recorded in the Register as follows:—"Johannes Comes de Mar. (ye first tyme he sits earle)." It is to be noted, too, that the opposing petitioner did not allege that his ancestor ever bore the title of Lord Garioch, which must have passed to him by the charter had the title of Earl of Mar done so. In the next place, as mentioned by Lord Redeale, Queen Elizabeth's envoy Randolph wrote from Scotland, in a letter still extant, that is dated July 31st, 1565: "Two things I have almost forgotten. Thone was to honour the feast [that is, on the occasion of the marriage of Queen Mary and Darnley, which took place about July 27th] the Lord Earaken was made Earle of Marre"; and lastly, though first in point of time, Queen Mary, when she conferred the title of Earl of Mar upon her brother, the Regent Murray, four years before the date of the charter on which Mr. Erskine-Goodeve and his friends rely, limited it strictly to his heirs male.

These being the salient facts that bear upon the main point of Mr. Erskine-Goodeve's contention, Mr. Walford does not hesitate to quote, at p. 84 of his second volume, from Lord Crawford and Balcarres the following passage:—

"At length, after a lapse of one hundred and thirty years, Queen Mary, ever desirous of redressing injustice, restored, per modum justitiæ, by charter, 23rd June, 1565, to John, Lord Erskine, the direct descendant of Earl Robert (and his heirs general), the Comitalis of Mar, or dignified señe, which, at that time, and till the close of the century carried the honour."

On the preceding page Mr. Walford's partisanship is equally conspicuous, and his ignorance of the case he is writing about is so thorough that he unconsciously refutes one of his misstatements almost as soon as he has made it. On p. 83 he writes:—

"He [that is, Sir Robert Erskine, who claimed to be co-heir to a moiety of the lands of the Countess Isabel of Mar, who died about 1407] was 'returned heir,' in 1438, to the whole Earldom [these italics, which are Mr. Walford's, are noticeable], and in accordance with law and custom became Earl of Mar."

Here the truth is that Sir Robert Erskine, who was, or who at all events asserted himself to be, co-heir to the Countess Isabel, was only retoured heir at that date (by his friend the sheriff of Aberdeen) to a moiety of the lands of Mar, and that the sheriff's retour could have no effect upon the title, which, as a matter of fact, was never accorded to Sir Robert Erskine by the Crown or by his contemporaries. The author apparently does not see that the passage he quotes from Lord Crawford, to the effect that at the date of 1565 one hundred and thirty years had elapsed since the title had been held by its rightful owner, conflicts with his assertion that Sir Robert Erskine became Earl of Mar in 1438; and the bold misrepresentation which he emphasizes by italics is sufficient by itself to show that any of his statements about the Mar peerage must be accepted with caution.

It is surely unnecessary to adduce further instances of the misstatements and misrepresentations contained in this "Romance." We think we have conclusively shown that Mr. Walford's statements about the Mar peerage case do him no credit, and we sincerely hope that before he again ventures to give to the public an account of matters in dispute he will strive to be impartial, and will at least consider the evidence of both sides before pronouncing his opinion.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

The Violin Player. By Bertha Thomas. 3 vols. (Bentley & Son.)

A Cruel Secret. By Lolo. 3 vols. (Tinsley Brothers.)

Eros: Four Tales. 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Red Cross. Translated from the German by E. J. Fellowes. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

The Rival Doctors. Translated from the French of A. Lapointe by Henri Van Laun. (Nimmo & Bain.)

MISS THOMAS'S new novel is a success. She has now chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story. Her ability was obvious in her former books; but 'Cressida' was unfortunate, and even in 'Proud Maizie' the reader could see that the writer was capable of doing much better. This she has undoubtedly done in 'The Violin Player.' She has, for one thing, moderated the exuberance of her description—arranged her epithets and figurative phrases a full tone lower, so to speak; and with greater simplicity of style there have come greater vigour and a decided condensation of thought. The restraint placed, whether consciously or not, upon her expression has not impeded the progress of the story, but rather made it easier and more rapid. The interest is well sustained. Miss Thomas seems to have borne in mind the obvious rule, so simple to lay down, so difficult to observe in the heat of writing, that the essential thing in a novel is the story, and that comment and description must only be accessory. In studies of character her book is unusually rich. She understands the artistic temperament thoroughly, and has traced it in a musician and in a sculptor, in a woman and in a man, with very great skill. No less able is her delineation of the character of Lady Brereton, a fascinating woman of the world, a person with artistic taste but not an artist. It is clear that Miss Thomas possesses the gift of novel-writing and that she has the ability to improve it. She has still a tendency to extravagance which must be kept in check; but 'The Violin Player' gives firm ground for hope that she may in future improve still further.

'A Cruel Secret,' by Lolo, portends to the experienced reader something thrilling and at the same time not too realistic. The most lifelike portrait in these volumes is that of Master Jacky, a fiend in childish form, who sticks darning needles into the calves of his mother's guests, and disguises himself as a bolster in order to disturb the rest of an ill-tempered old lady. These gentle quips are matched by the humour of his parent, who addresses those she admires as "dear little devils," and storms and swears herself into a commanding position among her unhappy acquaintances. The sister of this virago is the hero's mother, and it is to her disingenuous manœuvring that the complications of the story are due. These are so circumstantial and so many that the plot really centres more in her than in the gentle heroine, who conceals a murder, or the stately rival, whose conscience is fettered by an untimely vow. Clara is of the two the less lymphatic, though the scruples of both are of the feeblest sort. It is well for the hero, however, that Clara's religious vacillation prevents her marriage, for he would have been incapable himself of coming to any practical decision between the adoring and the admirable cousin. This will be a successful book among those who like plenty of commonplace action in their novels, and cannot be bored with sentiment or character.

'Eros,' as a little co-operative attempt in literature is prettily named, consists of four tales, all daintily written and suited to the average taste of the novel-reader. Mr. Wingfield's story is garnished with the drapery at least of the Court of Louis XIV. The incident on which it turns is the failure of the Duke of Maine before Namur, and the aged king is depicted storming and caning his courtiers, after the approved modern fashion of taking the valet's view of royalty. Miss Tyler's is a story with more pith in it; the brave lass whose self-devotion is bent on proving her husband's innocence is a gracious figure, and the manner of its proof is dramatic enough. Misses G. and B. M. Butt contribute two Highland stories, of which the plots are better than the execution. They have not any gift for northern speech, northern names, or northern traditional politics, and the result in such a tale as "Pearls" destroys the interest which might well have been excited by a more "educated" pen. Nor is the author of the last-named tale more happy in the English which is put in the mouth of the eighteenth century heroine. It is laboured but unreal, and an anachronism. An historical writer, too, might have remembered the motto of the Fairfax.

'The Red Cross' is highly romantic and highly improbable. It is, however, readable, and will, no doubt, fulfil its purpose of whiling away an empty hour, but whether it merited the honour of translation is questionable. The story is laid in France at the time of the Franco-German War. The hero is a member of the Red Cross fraternity, who is quartered in a French house and falls in love with the photograph of a young French girl. Her brother, a prisoner of war in Germany, returns the compliment by falling in love with a German girl. After the usual complications all ends with marriage bells. There are some freshly described scenes, giving an idea of the feeling of hatred in the two camps, that furnish to the book a more solid background.

With 'The Rival Doctors' Mr. Van Laun leads off the new series of translations from foreign novels which he edits, and which is conducted on the principles of international copyright. The type and paper of the book are excellent, and the question whether these advantages will reconcile railway travellers and the rest of the class of readers to whom the series appeals to paying more than the shilling which has become recognized as the price of paper-covered books has, no doubt, been duly considered by the publishers. As for the present volume, it is a good specimen of the French novel of the provinces. Mr. Van Laun has done unwisely in affixing the English titles Mr., Mrs., and Miss to his characters. "Mrs. Malicorne" and "Mr. Fromentin" look very odd in type. In the sentence "It is very funny that the patients who are attended by the new doctor do not die, while yours.... All the same you have no chance," we fail to perceive the meaning, and we have not the original at hand. Of course the French of that original cannot be, as one is tempted to think, "pas de chance," because Mr. Van Laun must know better than we do that the English of "pas de chance" is "no luck," and not "no chance." It is odd, though, that "no luck" would make perfect sense.

HISTORICAL AND ANTIQUARIAN PUBLICATIONS.

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. send us A Guide to Modern English History, by Mr. William Cory, Part I., 1815-1830. There is room for a good history of England which, without being too diffuse, shall furnish a thoroughly intelligent and intelligible, and, if possible, an impartial, account of the events of the past two or three generations. Sir Erskine May's able continuation of Hallam deals too exclusively with constitutional changes, and Mr. Justin McCarthy writes rather for circulating-library readers than for students. Mr. Cory's volume, therefore, is welcome, though, even if he con-times his work as well as he has begun it, it will not stand in the way of the more complete and comprehensive one that we hope may soon be written. It professes only to be "a guide," and is, at best, only a clever review. It is always readable, and generally sound in its judgments. It clearly explains many of the forces that have been at work in the recent progress of our country, and is suggestive where it is not explanatory. But it omits some important points and slurs over others, while of others, again, which are especially interesting to the writer, it takes too much account. It is rather a series of short and disjointed essays than a consecutive narrative, and the usual absence of dates, which is not atoned for by a chronological summary or even a table of contents, much impairs its value as a text-book. Readers who are not familiar with the events of three quarters of a century ago, or who are embarrassed by the profuse and often contradictory memoirs of prominent persons and particular episodes which are plentiful, and who wish for something shorter and fresher than Miss Martineau's 'History of the Peace,' may turn to it with profit. It should be especially serviceable to those "English gentlefolks and educated voters" for whose use it is chiefly intended, and among whom, Mr. Cory reasonably complains, "there is but little knowledge about the meaning of terms employed in political writings." In this first small volume, or half-volume, Mr. Cory has a manageable period to deal with. He starts with a good sketch of what he calls "the complete settlement of rights and limits made for all Europe and its dependencies by the chief nations" in 1815, saying most about those parts of the settlement which directly concerned England. He thinks highly of Lord Liverpool as "a patient and discreet man," who, "by the conscientious exercise of authority, did as much as any of his successors, and more than any of his predecessors, to make statecraft acceptable to virtuous citizens"; and he appears to have a yet higher opinion of Lord Castlereagh, who, in spite of his being no orator and "not over scrupulous," was "the most dignified and courageous of all those personages, whether emperors or ministers, who invaded France in 1814," not "a reactionist, a bigot, nor a blockhead," but "a good-natured, peacemonger, enlightened gentleman," and much ill-used in being "hated by English reformers and lampooned by the fashionable poet, Lord Byron." Mr. Cory does not allow himself to understand how the domestic troubles caused by the long war with France and its injurious effects on trade and agriculture encouraged the movements in favour of political reform that were started in the early years of the peace, but he traces with a tolerably impartial hand the growth of those movements down to 1830, and his closing chapter contains a lively description of the various classes of anomalies and abuses under which the last unreformed House of Commons was elected. He touches also on the pernicious working of the Corn Laws, and on the necessity shown for improvements both in the spirit of the laws and in the methods of their administration by such treatment as Hone received and such action as Lord Ellenborough adopted on the bench. His account of the circumstances under which Catholic emancipation was effected is lucid and instructive. One of Mr. Cory's chapters is devoted to the literary history of the period, and points to the good influences exerted on society by some of the men who "followed their own pursuits outside the lines on which warriors and politicians moved." Coleridge he ranks first, "as a sort of prophet testifying that man does not live by reason alone." Of Bentham, though a "philosophical Radical," he thinks well, and about Scott he is enthusiastic, regarding him as Shakspeare's successor, the great teacher in whose writings, "by the spirit of romance, the sense of duty was heated" throughout the land. Wordsworth had almost ceased to be a poet before 1815, but "the poetry of Mr. Keats ripened in a corner, and twenty years later bore such fruit as no other nation could match." Of Keats's contemporaries Mr. Cory has no great admiration; but he tolerates Byron, because "he was the only man of fashion who loudly proclaimed rebellion against Church and State formalism," and because, though "he did not gather round him a company of liberal reformers," yet "he was able to keep up a running fire against tyranny and hypocrisy, and such an ally must be taken into account"; and he is lenient towards the "unmeasured fluency and literary self-indulgence of Mr. Shelley," because he "contributed not a little to the stock of indignation which was gathering for the day of freedom."

Messrs. Houlston & Sons send us a History of Stamford, by the Rev. C. Nevinson, published at Stamford by Mr. H. Johnson. The lot of Stamford has been happier than that of many towns of superior rank; there are four or five books which treat of it with more or less success; no one of them is absolutely bad, and Peck's 'Annals' falls but little short of being good. It, however, ends at so early a period that many of the more important events in the history of the old borough are left without notice. Mr. Nevinson's book contains little that is original. He modestly says in his preface that his work presents "the old ascertained facts from the old established sources.....arrayed, indeed, in a new dress, but still substantially the same as those which have already appeared in print." This is straightforward enough, but one cannot help asking why, if Mr. Nevinson was moved to write a history of Stamford at all, he did not give something new. He cannot think that Peck, Drakard, and the smaller men have told all there is to be known about that town, which was once the rival of Oxford. He must be aware that a few days in the British Museum or the Bodleian would supply him with numerous interesting facts unknown to the older authorities, and we cannot but believe that he has some vague notion as to the value of the contents of the Public Record Office and the diverse repositories where wills are kept. Not one of these obvious sources of information seems to have been used. It is but just to say, however, that as a mere compilation from compilations Mr. Nevinson's book is not ill done. Without any pretensions to style, he tells his tale in a direct manner, and no doubt many of the inhabitants will thank him for giving them something of what may be known about their town in small compass. The best part of the book is that which treats of Browne's Hospital, of which Mr. Nevinson is warden. Portions of the history are well told, and hints are given as to the nature of the changes which were made when this interesting building underwent the process called restoration.

Mr. E. Peacock sends us a reprint of a paper On the Churchwardens' Accounts of the Parish of Stratton, in the County of Cornwall, which he communicated to the Society of Antiquaries. The true "history of the English people" has not yet been written; the manners and customs, indoors and out of doors, public and private, in the village and in the cultivated lands, in the town and the city, all have to be investigated. The labour of comparing the village and church accounts of all parts of the country might be lessened by the Index Society if they would take in hand an index of the published local accounts as a companion volume to their contemplated index to the Household Books. Mr. Peacock has done his work of editing well. By way of foot-notes he has in many instances compared the Stratton accounts with those of other places, and he has explained many obsolete terms. "Stratton is a very ancient market town in the hundred of the same name, in Cornwall. It consists mainly of one street, lying upon the Roman way, whence the name.....The volume in which these accounts are contained is an ordinary foolscap folio in limp parchment binding. It is entitled 'The counte boke of the hys crosse wardenys of Stratton.' It begins in 1512 and ends in 1577. The first thing that strikes us, on even the most cursory examination of the record, is the strange and very varied manner in which money was raised for the support of the church and its services. Nothing like a church-rate seems to have been in use; the income of the wardens came from the voluntary contributions of the people." A large portion of the income arose from payments made for having names put upon the bede-roll. Then there was the custom of selling the right to have a grave in the church, the ringing of a knell for the dead, church-ales, the letting of funeral vestments, and the letting of the "church house," all of which brought money into the coffers of Stratton Church. Mr. Peacock is rather inclined to doubt the heathen origin of church-ales. "Speculative archaeology," he says, "is one of the least useful of mental processes, and there is a very long time to bridge over between the church-ale of the late mediæval time and its heathen prototype." But long as this time is, it has been bridged over by other "survivals" from primitive times. We have old village assemblies, old methods of agricultural life; we have the village pound, than which, says Sir Henry Maine, there is no more ancient institution in the country. So long as these various "survivals" are kept apart and considered apart, they will appear now and then to be the outcome of "speculative archaeology." But it is, or should be, the chief object of the student of early English institutions to place together in historical relationship all the fragments of olden times which have been restored to knowledge. Besides church-ales, there are many entries which tell much of social life in small towns. "Paid for a luke to the vonte, vjd," reveals the superstition of getting the water of the font to use it for purposes of magic. The "expenses for making cross yn the towne" are curious. The villagers heard something of the great outside world when they "paid for the lone of a horse to Ryde to London, vjs. viiij." And if they occasionally "paid for iij new bockes notyd for matens & evenong & matens yn ynglysh xvjd," they also "rec for ij peces of olde bockes sold xijd." The entry, "paid to the yeryshman for menden of the clark ys chamber iijd," is, perhaps, an unconscious satire upon the natives of the Emerald Isle. Then we have a few town officials named,—the bearward, the warden (a fine is received "for the refusing of the wardenyshep iija. iijd."), the baylee; and the surname of "maior" exemplifies the influence of official life on the origin of surnames. There are two little matters, moreover, which take us away from local and social history. Readers of Mr. Coote's remarkable book, 'Romans of Britain,' will remember his curious identification of "Welsh" and "Roman" as synonymous terms in the language of the people. A curious entry in these accounts seems to restore the old meaning of "foreigner" for Welsh: "rec of Wylliam Olyuer for a walch boerd iijd." And this leads Mr. Peacock to say, with much force, "probably a board of 'foreign' timber." Again, in Mr. Coote's illustrations of the pronunciation of v as w, he instances the old spelling of "velvet" as "welvet." In the Churchwardens' Accounts of Hammersmith the word is spelled "welvet." At Stratton, however, a town on the Roman road, all trace of the w is lost in the spelling "felvott." Such gleanings as these are found throughout the accounts, and they should be studied by all who wish to be perfect in English social history.

Sir George Duckett has done good service in compiling the two interesting papers, Penal Laws and the Test Act in 1688, and King James II.'s Proposed Repeal of the Penal Laws and Test Act in 1688. The penal laws against Dissenters and Roman Catholics and the struggles to maintain and to abolish them form an im-structive chapter of English history. We think we are not rash in saying that until Lord Macaulay published his history no one was well informed on the subject, and even now there is a dense mass of ignorance on the matter which it would be most useful to have removed. To the ordinary nineteenth century mind it still seems a passing strange thing that those persons who most nearly answered to what we should now call political Liberals were on the side of religious intolerance. It cannot be too often and too strongly impressed on the minds of men that, although we have grown much in our ideas as to religious freedom since the reign of James II., our forefathers then had as strong a desire for civil liberty as we have, and that while the latter passion is dormant with us, because there is not the least fear of political rights being invaded, it was passionately active with them, because they knew that it was the desire of the king to become absolute if he could, and had the best grounds for feeling assured that there were many, both in the Dissenting and the Romanist camps, who would be willing to barter their birthright as free Englishmen for some concessions far short of religious equality. James II. was unsuccessful, and therefore it has been the custom to speak indiscriminately of all his acts as if they were foolish. This is probably an error. His object was bad, and it is well that he was foiled, but many of the steps he took to accomplish his design were sufficiently astute. The canvass which he had carried out in 1687 of all the magistrates and deputy-lieutenants in England and Wales was certainly a politic move, as it was calculated to induce almost all the more prominent landowners to commit themselves to a definite line of action. He hoped the Court influence was stronger than he found it to be, and the returns made on that occasion, if he ever saw them, should have demonstrated to him how thin was the ice on which he was treading. A manuscript volume among the Rawlinson books in the Bodleian contains the answers given in by the justices of peace and deputy-lieutenants for "most of the counties of England and Wales." Sir George Duckett has printed them for Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Yorkshire. It is important to have them in any form, and we cannot be too thankful to Sir George for giving us the fragments he has done, but an important historical document of this kind should not be split up and divided among the Transactions of local societies. Cannot he be induced to edit the whole series? His knowledge of family history gives him peculiar qualifications for the task.

Mr. Keralake, of Bristol, in the Proceedings of the Dorset Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club, tries to prove the existence of a sort of island of Welsh inhabitants in the interior of Dorsetshire as late as the time of Athelstan. How far his reasoning will stand the searching criticism of Mr. Freeman or Dr. Stubbs we do not know, but his remarks are highly suggestive. Among other things which we should like to mention, Langport on the Parret must surely be the Llŷnborrh of Welsh poetry, where a great battle was fought between the men of Devon, headed by Geraint, and the West Saxons (see Skene's Four Ancient Books of Wales, ii. 37). It is probably the engagement with Ine, under the year 710, in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle.

Mr. Stock sends us the first volume of the Antiquary, the handsome appearance of which does him credit. The journal has improved as it has gone on, and we trust it may succeed in establishing itself; but considering how liberally he helps himself to the "Gossip" of the Athenæum, the editor might be less chary of his acknowledgments of his indebtedness.

We have received two interesting monographs relating to mediæval history and extracted from Arabic authors: 1. Prof. J. de Goejes's (of Leyden) pamphlet in Dutch, containing an account of the Slave about 905 A.D., according to al-Bekri (who lived in the second half of the eleventh century). The Arabic text in extenso as well as Russian and a German translation will appear at St. Petersburg. 2. Prof. A. F. Mehren's (of Copenhagen) pamphlet, in Danish, relating to the history of mediæval philosophy, with the title of Den Arabiske Filosofi Ibn-Sahn's Sendebrev til Keiser Frederik II. af Hohenstaufen eller de Sicilianske Spørgsmaal, according to a MS. in the Bodleian Library. Both pamphlets have appeared in the Transactions of academies.

Dr. Hermanegild Jirecek has just published at Prague, in a convenient form, a collection of the chief Slavonic codes (Svod Zakonov Slovanstych) in the original languages, which will be of great service to all students of Slavonic history.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Diary of an Early Methodist, by the late Richard Rowe (Strahan & Co.), is on the whole a successful attempt at reviving the style and manner of thought of the early Methodists. Mr. Pidgeon's adventures, though not remarkable otherwise than from the effect produced upon his mind by their occurrence, are ably told, and the glimpses of family life which we obtain throughout are natural and touching. The writer, though obviously a warm partisan, does not commit the error of making his hero faultless; in credulity Nathaniel is not beyond the standard of his class and age, nor in the charity of his judgments on his neighbours does he excel the level of his sect. But we can respect his religious faith, though it is combined with a strong belief in witches and a persuasion of the Satanic possession of a certain squire's household; and can recognise the traits of a loving spirit, though he considers the shocking deaths which befall certain unbelievers as providentially ordained to point a moral on theological subjects. The language, on the whole, is not badly handled, though it may be doubted whether the barbarism "a wage" for "wages" was current in Nathaniel Pidgeon's time.

Under the title of Glimpses through the Cannon Smoke Mr. Archibald Forbes has reprinted from various magazines a series of lively sketches. These stories are capital light reading and ought to be popular. Messrs. Routledge publish the volume.

A Year's Cookery. By Phillis Browne. (Cassell & Co.)—A year's cookery, with bills of fare for every day in the year, with directions for cooking, for marketing, and for making arrangements for the next day, makes up an invaluable present for young housekeepers, which will save much worry and vexation on the part of the young wife and much grumbling on the part of the husband. The book is suited to "the meanest capacity" and the most inexperienced housekeeper. A judicious wife, using this book with discretion, may keep her husband in perpetual good humour. He need not then fear "the inflammation of his weekly bills."

Breakfasts and Luncheons at Home, by Short (Kerby & Eadean), is full of intelligible receipts for preparing delicious dishes and how to make the most of scraps and fragments. The familiar demon of cold mutton on a washing day ought to undergo a splendid transformation process, making it more acceptable than in its first estate.

The Marvellous Little Housekeepers: What They Did, and How They Did It. By Ida Jocelyne. (Kerby & Eadean.)—Verily these were "marvellous little housekeepers"; for they remember what to do upon every emergency, and are the most dainty-fingered little household brownies that ever blessed a home with their presence. The little book is full of the most valuable receipts, hints, and observations, and though few readers will be able to carry their performance to the same perfection as these "marvellous housekeepers," yet practice and painstaking would enable them to follow in their steps.

SIR H. THOMPSON has reprinted, with additions, the articles on Food and Feeding which he contributed to the Nineteenth Century, and which now form a useful and amusing volume, published by Messrs. Warne. The same firm send us a manual intended to show the way of acquiring the money for paying for the dinners on which Sir H. Thompson descants. Our Sons: How to Start them in Life, by Mr. A. King, is one of the best books of its class. It does not, of course, solve or profess to solve the problem that perplexes so many middle-class parents, but it supplies a great deal of useful information. Mr. King falls into the usual mistake of rather under-estimating expense, still he writes very sensibly. About schools he might have given more information, and a note of warning regarding its expensive character ought to have been put to Wellington as well as Eton. In speaking of the Universities some notice should have been taken of Cavendish College.

A HANDSOMELY printed Catalogue of the Printed Books in the Library of the Middle Temple has just appeared. It is alphabetically arranged under authors, has an index of subjects, and covers more than a thousand pages of thick paper. It is unluckily impossible to say more in its favour. The general rule is followed of making the most significant word in the title in anonymous books the leading word. Thus 'Acts of the Legislature of Bermuda' finds a natural place in the alphabet under "Bermuda." But the very first title in this Catalogue, 'A Collection of Statutes,' appears under "A." This on the threshold of the work is a blot, made all the darker by the fact that further on there are nearly four pages of entries under "Statutes."

Among the various publications which have appeared in commemoration of the Camoens tercentenary we take note of Fragmentos d'uma Tentativa de Estudo Scolastico da Epopeia Portuguesa, by D. G. de Vasconcellos Abreu, Reader in Sanscrit in the University of Lisbon. The volume is valuable on account of the elucidation it contains of passages in the 'Lusiadas' relating to localities and myths in Further India and Ceylon. More especially does the author's novel and interesting exposition of certain Buddhist legends to which allusion is made in the tenth canto commend itself to the notice of the Folk-lore Society.

Hymns and other Poetry of the Latin Church, translated by Mr. D. T. Morgan, published by Messrs. Rivington, is a small volume which scarcely fulfils the promise of the title-page. Mr. Morgan may be said to have produced a somewhat dull and heavy paraphrase, rather than a poetical translation, of the hymns which he has selected. In fact, the less said of the poetical quality of Mr. Morgan's version the better; it can take rank, perhaps, with the exercises of the higher classes of boys in our public schools. But a more serious objection to the usefulness of the book as a translation is the fact that, with regard to the majority of the hymns, it can scarcely even claim the name. In many instances the original thoughts and sentiments are passed over and new ideas made to fill their place. Take the first two stanzas of Mr. Morgan's first hymn; few who remember the famous "Primo diem omnium" would allow such lines as these to be a translation:—

Welcome! thou chiefest of all days
That on the new made world didst shine,
When heaven and earth came forth to praise,
And God approved His work Divine.

Or again:—

Almighty Father, gracious Lord,
Fountain whence purity doth spring—
To Thee our every thought and word,
Through Thy dear Son, we dare to bring.

Mr. Morgan says in his preface that "about half of these translations were printed for private circulation only, and so would have remained had not a valued friend, to whose judgment and experience I felt bound to refer [sic], urged their publication." As the praise which can justly be given to Mr. Morgan's poetic talent must be only faint, it seems to be a pity that he did not continue to rely on his own first and better opinion.

We have on our table William Ellery Channing, by C. T. Brooks (Boston, U.S., Roberts Brothers),—Evolution and Involution, by G. Thomson (Trübner),—The Constitution of the Earth, by R. Ward (Bell),—The Jews, their Customs and Ceremonies, by the Rev. E. M. Myers (Trübner),—The New Nation, 5 vols., by J. Morris (Morris),—Xenophon's Agesilaus, by R. W. Taylor (Rivingtons),—Domestic Economy, Part I. Clothing and Food (Chambers),—The Recent Depression of Trade, by W. E. Smith (Trübner),—British Dogs, Parts VII. and VIII., by Hugh Dalziel ('The Bazaar' Office),—The Practical Fisherman, Part VI. ('The Bazaar' Office),—Prehistoric Remains in Central India, by J. H. Rivett-Carnac (Calcutta, Asiatic Society of Bengal),—Rough Notes on the Snake Symbol in India, by J. H. Rivett-Carnac (Calcutta, Asiatic Society of Bengal),—Time Scales, Horizontal and Vertical, by J. F. Campbell (Stanford),—Report of the First Annual Meeting of the Index Society (Longmans),—Tales of the Chesapeake, by G. A. Townsend (New York, American News Company),—Almost a Hero, by R. Richardson (Nelson),—Louisiana, and That Lass o' Loure's, by Frances H. Burnett (Macmillan),—Sketches of Parochial Life and Character, by the Silent Member (E. W. Allen),—A Few Lyrics, by an Amateur (C. Kegan Paul),—Folded Wings, and other Poems, by Edith Skelton (Griffith & Farran),—Physiology of Religion, Part I., by H. Lee (Trübner),—The Gospel Wall, by W. P. Lockhart (Nisbet),—What can be Certainly Known of God and of Jesus of Nazareth? by J. M. Capes (Bumpus),—The Genesis of Evil, by S. Cox (C. Kegan Paul),—The Church in Relation to the State, by E. Miller (C. Kegan Paul),—Der Kleine Lehrer (Hodder & Stoughton),—and Weltindustrien, by Dr. Karl von Scherzer (Trübner). Among New Editions we have An Introduction to the Elements of Euclid, by the Rev. S. Hawtrey (Longmans),—Book-keeping, by G. Jackson (Wilson),—Practical Boat-Building for Amateurs, by A. Neison ('The Bazaar' Office),—Collins's Guide to London and Neighbourhood (Collins),—and With the Armies of the Balkans, by Lieut.-Col. Fife-Cookson (Cassell). Also the following Pamphlets: The English Words of the 'Passion Play' at Ober-Ammergau, by Miss E. Childe (Masters),—The Great Bubble Chemical Co-operative Society, by E. Heptenstall (Heywood),—Truthfulness and Ritualism, by O. Shipley (Burns & Oates),—The Chinese Bible, by C. Alabaster (Shanghai, 'North China Herald' Office),—Principles of Agriculture, by S. Tomlinson (Simpkin),—and The Future of Epping Forest, by W. Paul (Paul).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Poetry.

Todhunter's (J.) Study of Shelley, cr. 8vo. 7/6.

Philology.

Shut's (Rev. W. W.) Etymological Dictionary of the English Language, Part 3, 4to. 10/6.

History and Biography.

Calendar of State Papers, Colonial: America and West Indies, 1661-5, by W. N. Bainsbury, roy. 8vo. 15/6.

Dickens's Child's History of England, Popular Library Edition, cr. 8vo. 3/4.

Goldsmid's (Major-General Sir F. J.) James Outram, a Biography, with Illustrations and Maps, 8vo. 32/6.

Science.

Familiar Wild Flowers, Figured and Described by F. S. Hulme, Second Series, coloured plates, cr. 8vo. 12/6.

Marwick's (H. J.) Medical Education and Practice in all Parts of the World, 8vo. 10/6.

Seiboth's (J.) Alpine Plants painted from Nature, the Text by F. Graf, edited by A. W. Bennett, Vol. 2, 2½/6.

General Literature.

Bower's (Capt. O. E. K.) Drops from the Ocean, or Life under the Pennant, cr. 8vo. 3/6.

Charlton's (M.) Love in Cyprus, 12mo. 2/6.

Parlier's Directory for 1880, compiled by Edward Brown, roy. 8vo. 5/6.

Great Industries of Great Britain, Vol. 3, roy. 8vo. 7/6.

Irwin's (M. E.) The Three M's: Mind, Manners, and Morals, cr. 8vo. 6/6.

London Journal, Vol. 71, 4to. 4/6.

Mitchell's (A.) The Past in the Present: What is Civilization? 8vo. 15/6.

Probation, by the Author of 'The First Violin,' cr. 8vo. 6/6.

Punch, Vol. 78, January to June, 1880, 8/6.

Scottish Folk, illustrated, sm. 4to. 2/6.

Theosophy and the Higher Life, by G. W., cr. 8vo. 3/6.

Trevelyan's (Sir C.) The Irish Crisis, being a Narrative of the Measures for the Relief of the Distress caused by the Great Irish Famine of 1846-7, 8vo. 2/6.

Waylen's (J.) House of Cromwell, and the Story of Dunbarton, roy. 8vo. 12/6.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Rothe's (E.) Theologische Encyclopädie, aus seinem Nachlass hrsg., 2m. 10.

Sprinz (J.) Die Theologie der Apostolischen Väter, 8m.

Philology.

Dictionnaire Historique de la Langue Française, publié par l'Académie, Vol. 2, Part 2, 4 fr. 50.

Symbolae Jochimiane, Part 1, 7m.

History.

Bender (H.) Römische Leben im Alterthum, Parts IX, XI, 6m.

Champfleur: Histoire de la Caricature, de Louis XIII. à Louis XVI., 5 fr.

Gleichenbruch (W. v.) Geschichte der Deutschen Kaiserzeit, Vol. 5, Part 1, 8m. 50.

Stacks (L.) Deutsche Geschichte, Part 2, 4m.

Strickler: Actenammlung zur Schweizerischen Reformationsgeschichte in 1821-3, Vol. 3, 20m.

Bibliography.

Petsholdt (J.) Bibliographia Dantes ab a. 1865, Nov. ed. supplementa aucta, 7m. 50.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Boetticher (K.) Die Thymele der Athena-Nike auf der Akropolis, 4m.

Durm (J.) Constructive u. Polychrome Details der Griechischen Baukunst, 30m.

Marie (P.) Les Décorations Égyptiennes, Series 1, 12 fr.

Schmidt (A.) Die Keramik auf der Pariser Weltausstellung, 8m.

Woltmann (A.) Geschichte der Malerei, Part 7, 3m.

Geography and Travel.

Neurat (A. S.) L'Atlas: Notes d'une Excursion, 4 fr. 50.

Science.

Roblitz (H.) Die Medizin. Classiker Deutschlands, Part 2, 14m.

Seibell (H.) Die neuesten Fortschritte auf dem Gebiete der elektrischen Beleuchtung, 3m.

Zöllner (F.) Ueb. den Missbrauch der Vivisection, 6m.

General Literature.

Bouvier (A.) Les Cranciers de l'Écluse, 3 fr.

Fortalis (E.) Deux Républiques, 3 fr. 50.

SIR JOHN FIELDING AND THE WILKES RIOTS.

SOME interesting facts, hitherto unpublished, appear in the State Papers in connexion with Sir John Fielding and the Wilkes riots. Sir John Fielding was Chairman of the General Quarter Sessions of Westminster, in which office he succeeded his half-brother Henry, the novelist. Sir John Fielding fell under the blame of Lord Weymouth for not having rendered assistance against the mob on the night of the illumination on the occasion of the election of Wilkes as member for Middlesex, and he was asked for an explanation of his conduct. Sir John replied, giving a history of the transactions of the night, and stating that, "to the best of his knowledge, and to the best of his abilities, with unwearied attention, diligence, and application, he had done everything in his power to preserve peace and good order, and to detect offenders and bring them to justice, from the beginning to the conclusion of the late unhappy disturbances." After expressing his sincere concern that Lord Weymouth should be dissatisfied with his conduct as a magistrate, the writer thus concluded his reply:—"Unfortunately he has always been; at present particularly so, when his warmest endeavours to discharge a public trust with loyalty to his Sovereign, fidelity to his country, and obedience to his superiors, have been so far ineffectual as not to secure him the confidence of those by whom he would wish to be approved." The order of events may be thus stated:—On the 26th of April, 1768, Wilkes's solicitor informed the Attorney-General that his client would submit to be arrested by suffering himself to be served with the capias; the fact was communicated privately to the Duke of Northumberland, Sir John Fielding, and John Pownall, Esq., so that preparations might be made for whatever might happen. It was apprehended, if the court should send Wilkes to the King's Bench prison, that attempts would be made to rescue him; for the mob went to the King's Bench prison on the night of the day when he appeared at Westminster, and alarmed the keeper, who gave them beer to keep them in good humour. The magistrates and peace officers of Westminster met at Guildhall, and sat with closed doors. They resolved that no magistrates then present should absent himself without leave of the body, and that two of them at a time should go out to reconnoitre the state of Westminster Hall and parts adjacent, and make their report to their colleagues at Guildhall. This was done every half hour until they adjourned. On the 28th Wilkes was committed, and, when the court broke up at Guildhall, he was put into a coach, attended by the Marshal of the King's Bench and the Chief Justice's tipstaff. The magistrates on the Surrey side had been desired to prepare themselves for this event. Mr. Welch, one of the justices, attended the coach to the Surrey side of Westminster Bridge, and then returned to Guildhall; but, before he got there, a number of persons took off the horses, turned the coach round, and drew it through the Strand and Temple Bar into the City. Sir John Fielding, Mr. Kelynge, and Sir John's clerk got into a coach and pursued to Temple Bar, but found the streets perfectly quiet. Then Sir John Fielding despatched the High Constable, his clerk, and other persons to pursue Wilkes's coach. They did not return till near one o'clock, when the clerk reported that "the mob had drawn Mr. Wilkes's coach to Spital Square, and afterwards to the Three Tuns tavern by Spitalfields Church, where Mr. Wilkes remained some time, but he was in the King's Bench prison before eleven o'clock." On the evening of the same day there was a riotous assembly before the King's Bench prison, when the military were called out, and dispersed the mob before the prison; but the mob gathered again in the High Street, and committed some acts of violence, and compelled the inhabitants to illuminate their houses. Thus lasted till about two in the morning, when, the streets being quiet, the magistrates departed, leaving a sergeant's guard. Similar occurrences took place the next night, the mob beginning to pull down the fences before the prison. Mr. Ponton, with other magistrates and the constables, destroyed the intended bonfire; but, the prison not being thought safe, the military were sent for; the constables, however, had dispersed the mob in the High Street before their arrival. At twelve at night all things were again quiet.

Mobs continued to gather daily, and on the 10th of May—the day which witnessed the opening of Parliament—a troop of horse, and afterwards a hundred men, were sent over to support the civil magistrates at the King's Bench in Surrey, a man having been killed there. On the night of the 9th there had been a riot at the prison, when the magistrates, endeavouring to read the proclamation and seize some of the rioters, were obliged to retire into the marshal's house for shelter. The Guards were ordered out, and finally, about eleven, the mob in a great measure dispersed, threatening, however, to return the next day. On the 7th of June—the day before that appointed for Wilkes's trial—Lord Weymouth wrote to Sir John Fielding, saying "he thought it right to apprise Sir John that if the same indecent contempt of the civil power should appear on this occasion that was shown when the magistrates were assembled at the same place, and permitted Mr. Wilkes to be rescued and drawn through the City without any person being taken into custody, he would think it necessary to make strict inquiry, and would expect to have a more satisfactory account given than he had received of that affair." He concluded by observing that "if civil magistrates were disgraced when the Secretary of State had so often exhorted them to do their duty, and had prepared the military to support them legally as their last resource, it must be their own fault." This censure greatly distressed both Sir John Fielding and the magistrates, the more so as they declared that they had never taken more pains in their life to discharge a public trust than at that time. By a ruse of the magistrates, after his trial Wilkes was quietly conveyed to Lambeth by water, while the mob at Westminster Hall door were kept amused, waiting for his expected appearance. Lord Weymouth wrote to Sir John Fielding, on the following day, that he was sorry to have given the magistrates any degree of uneasiness. "His lordship was very sensible of the trouble Sir John had been at, and of the diligent attendance of the magistrates at Guildhall on those occasions when their presence was thought to be necessary. At the same time, if Sir John could justify what happened upon the occasion of Mr. Wilkes's rescue, his lordship would be glad to have reasons for changing his opinion of it. Till then, he must continue to think that Mr. Wilkes's rescue was a disgrace to civil government, which called for his animadversion when he had to give instructions on a similar occasion. But he was as happy now in an opportunity of being able to bear favourable testimony to their diligence and activity as he was mortified when he found it his duty to disapprove."

Wilkes was sentenced to one year's imprisonment for the 'Essay on Woman,' ten months for the North Briton (No. 45), 500*l.* fine for each offence, and to give security for seven years' good behaviour. No movement was made by the mob. In reporting this, Sir John Fielding wrote to Lord Weymouth's private secretary that, as he hoped it was the last time he should have any occasion for troubling Mr. Wood on Mr. Wilkes's coming to Westminster Hall, he felt himself in duty bound to the magistrates of the city and liberty of Westminster (who had done him the honour to make him their chairman) to assure Mr. Wood that their zeal, attention, and attendance (often to the injury of their private affairs) in the late unhappy disturbances deserved every commendation, and, he flattered himself, had been of infinite service in preserving the public peace; and that, when leisure would permit, he did not doubt but that he could convince him (Mr. Wood) that the misrepresentation of some facts had thrown blame where praise was due. The magistrates met on the 18th, and their resolutions, with Sir John's letter, were communicated to Lord Weymouth. This quarrel between the Secretary of State and the Westminster magistrates and their chairman was concluded to the satisfaction of all parties by a letter written on behalf of Lord Weymouth by Mr. Wood. The writer conveyed to Sir John Fielding and the magistrates who had acted with him his lordship's hearty thanks for their assistance, together with an assurance that he would not fail to do them ample justice, in taking the first opportunity of stating their services to the king in a proper light.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, GOWER STREET.

THE admission of women to the Arts and Science classes at University College, London, has been justified in every way. There has been during the session now closed a perfect working of the system; the number of men in the College, instead of being diminished, has considerably increased; and at the late distribution of prizes in the Faculty of Arts the women took a very honourable place among their fellow workers. Of 68 prizes the men took 52, the women 16; of 103 first class-certificates the men took 65, the women 38; of 50 second-class certificates the men took 40, and the women 10; of 52 third-class certificates the men took 50, and the women 2. Although in a former year the highest mathematical prize, a scholarship of 50*l.*, has been taken by a woman, this year the women have not distinguished themselves in mathematics; they have been distanced also by the men in the fine-art classes; but they have won first places in political economy and in Latin and Greek.

The College will open next October a new section of its north wing, with large additions to the space available for the Fine-Art School and for the Schools of Chemistry, Zoology, and Physiology. The basement floor and a large laboratory annexed will give room for the development of the School of Chemistry; the space available for students of zoology will extend from the present Museum of Comparative Anatomy into the north wing. There will be a new suite of rooms at the disposal of the Professor of Physiology; and the new fine-art studios will be the best in England.

Additions lately made will also strengthen the professoriate of University College. Prof. Henri having been appointed to the chair of Applied Mathematics, left unoccupied after the death of Prof. Clifford, the chair of Pure Mathematics became vacant. To this the Council has appointed Mr. R. C. Rowe, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, who was not only third Wrangler at Cambridge, but also, when graduating as M.A. in mathematics at the University of London, took the gold medal. After the resignation of the Greek chair by Prof. Wayte a year ago, Prof. Goodwin undertook for a session the conduct of both Greek and Latin classes in the College, and they have prospered much under his management. Prof. Goodwin, who held formerly the Latin chair, will in future hold the professorship of Greek; and a scholar well known even to the general public for the taste with which he has brought home to English readers a sense of the genius of Homer, of Virgil, and of the Greek tragedians, the Rev. Alfred J. Church, is now the Professor of Latin. These changes, with the addition of Mr. Newton's services, both to the classical teaching and to the study of fine art, as Professor of Archaeology, and the appointment of a new Professor of Italian, who yet remains to be chosen from among fifteen candidates, give assurance of vigorous work next year in the great London college, which has more than doubled the number of its students during the last fifteen years, and is now asking of London 85,000*l.* to provide yet further accommodation. University College and Hospital already possess invested endowments to the value of 300,000*l.*, but these have all been appropriated by their founders to educational and benevolent uses. None of them supplies money for building.

Literary Gossip.

THE Hon. Mrs. Hardcastle is preparing for the press a life of her father, the late Lord Campbell. The work, which will fill two volumes, will contain selections from Lord Campbell's autobiography as well as from his journals and letters. Mr. Murray will publish the book.

MR. MURRAY further promises several works that ought to be of interest. 'India in 1880' is the name of a book by Sir Richard Temple. Lady Eastlake is busy with a sketch of Mrs. Grote's life. Dr. Smiles is writing, under the title of 'Duty,' a companion volume to 'Self-Help' and other popular works of his of the same class. The Dean of Westminster is preparing a series of essays on ecclesiastical subjects, which will be called 'Christian Institutions.' Mr. Clements Markham promises a book on a subject he has made peculiarly his own: 'A Popular Account of the Introduction of Peruvian Bark into British India and Ceylon,' and he will give particulars of the progress and extent of its cultivation.

THE memoir of Francis Deák, the Hungarian statesman, which was lately published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. with a preface by Mr. Grant Duff, is from the pen of Miss Florence Arnold Forster.

WE hear that the friends and pupils of the late Mr. Long intend to found a scholarship for Roman law at the University of Cambridge, in memorial of their friend and master.

ALL students of our literature and history will be glad to hear that Mr. Murray has in the press a volume of collected essays by the late Prof. Brewer. His 'English Studies' (that is the title chosen) comprise such subjects as "New Sources of English History," "Green's Short History of the English People," "Hatfield House," "The Stuarts," and "How to study English History."

THE Bishop of Derry promises, through Mr. Murray, a life of St. John.

MR. JOHN DENNIS is at work on a new edition of his pleasant collection of English sonnets.

A CHANGE is about to take place in the old publishing and bookselling firm of Hodges, Foster & Figgis, of Dublin, formerly Hodges, Smith & Co. Messrs. Hodges and Smith have been dead for some years, and prior to the death of the latter gentleman (who survived his partner), Mr. William Foster, who had been for a very long period connected with the house, became a partner. Mr. Foster now, on account of long-continued ill health, is about to retire, the entire business falling into the hands of Mr. Samuel Figgis, who has been in this house for more than twenty years, and who came into a share of the business shortly after Mr. Smith's death.

A SOCIETY for the study of philosophy has recently been formed, under the title of the Aristotelian Society, and Mr. Shadworth H. Hodgson, LL.D., has accepted an invitation to become the president. During the present session the members have devoted their attention to ancient Greek philosophy, and they hope during the next session to take a summary view of the leaders of philosophical thought from Anaximander to Comte. Afterwards the Society looks forward to discussing modern problems apart from the works of individual philosophers.

THE Bodleian Library has just acquired a Persian MS. which contains the journal kept by Mir Izzet Ullah, the intelligent native friend and travelling companion of William Moorcroft. This MS. is, perhaps, one of the two from which the late Prof. H. H. Wilson made his English translation of this interesting diary.

PROF. JOHN RHYS, of Jesus College, Oxford, has undertaken to write the history of the Breton Celts for the series of the Christian Knowledge Society.

THE wooden coffin in which the remains of Kant are enclosed, being found to be decayed and broken when the vault at Königsberg was lately opened, is to be replaced by a metal one.

MR. PIERCE EGAN, the son of Pierce Egan, the well-known sporting writer, died on the 6th inst. He was educated for an artist, but soon turned his attention to writing, becoming one of the pioneers of cheap literature. His earlier works, 'Robin Hood,' 'Wat Tyler,' and 'Quintyn Matsys,' first published in 1837 and the following years in penny weekly numbers, illustrated by himself, were enormously popular. After contributing to the Illustrated London News, he started in 1847, and edited during the five years of its existence, the Home Circle. Subsequently he wrote tales for the now defunct Reynolds's Miscellany, and afterwards for the London Journal, which he joined in 1857, and with which, until quite recently, his name has been intimately associated as its leading writer of fiction. Mr. Egan was a Liberal in politics, and was for some time connected with the Weekly Times.

SINCE the accession of Lord Selborne to the Chancellorship he has not been present at the meetings of the Oxford Commissioners, and Mr. Mountague Bernard now presides.

MR. REGINALD HANSON, who was the other day elected Alderman of Billingsgate Ward, deserves a line of mention in a literary journal, as he published in 1876 a history of tea and the tea trade, and he has also been for some time past engaged in collecting materials, from the records of the Corporation, the Public Record Office, &c., for a series of biographical notices of the aldermen of his ward from the earliest times.

MR. A. R. ADAMSON, of Kilmarnock, is preparing a work on the graveyards of Ayrshire. Of somewhat similar interest, and following up the present celebrations in Scotland, is the 'Tales and Sketches of the Covenanters,' to be issued shortly at Newcastle as a memorial of the Covenanter struggles in Scotland. In connexion with this subject we may also mention the death of the Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Wigtownshire, one of Mr. Mark Napier's opponents some years ago in the discussion on the "Wigtown Martyrs."

THE Governing Body of Westminster School have been summoned to deliberate on a matter that will materially affect the future of College. It is to be hoped that no fresh vested interests may be created to obstruct the changes which are contemplated.

THE Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, presented on Wednesday, the 30th ult., the first diplomas granted to students of the Bedford College, York Place. These diplomas are granted to regular students who have been at the College for three sessions, and who have obtained at least two-thirds of the possible number of marks in four subjects at the annual examinations. Alice Elizabeth Lee, Sophie Elise (Lita) Marshall, and Laura Gulliver received diplomas. It may be remembered that Miss Lee was at the head of the list at the matriculation examination of the University of London in December.

'THE Regeneration of Roumania; or, the Days of Renaissance amongst the Roumanians,' by Kalixt Wolski, is being translated by Mr. Oxley, and will be shortly issued by Messrs. Kerby & Endean.

FATHER BOLLIO, one of the librarians at the Vatican Library, is engaged upon an edition of Samaritan prayers and hymns according to a MS. in the Vatican Library. If we are not mistaken, this MS. is not only the oldest but also the completest in existence in any European library.

FELIX DAWN is engaged upon a new work, which will be issued shortly. It is of a purely historical character, free from romance, and deals with the battle fought by the Alemanni near Strasbourg in the year 357 A.D.

WE owe an apology to Mr. Webb Appleton, the author of 'Jack Allyn's Friends,' for having misread one of the names in his novel, and having consequently charged him last week with perpetrating a bad joke, of which he is really innocent. Jack Allyn's chief friend is styled, not "Sandford and Merton," as we supposed, but "Sandford of Merton."

"THOUGH the entire matter for the proposed 'Bibliography of Ohio' (Cincinnati, P. G. Thomson) is," the New York Nation says, "ready for the printer, the subscriptions, we regret to learn, fall short some two hundred of the requisite number. The author renounces his profits in favour of the better manufacture of the volume, which is promised to be the handsomest of the kind ever published in this country."

HEAR J. COHN, Stud. Philosophiæ at Berlin, is preparing an edition of R. Saadyah Gaon's Arabic commentary on Job, from MSS. in the Bodleian and the Berlin Library.

THE death is announced of Mr. Frederic Blackett, of Woodhouse, near Leeds, in his forty-seventh year. Mr. Blackett was a well-known Yorkshire antiquary, and possessed a vast fund of curious information.

THE Wool Trade Review, which has hitherto been published monthly, is to be incorporated with Wool, and will be issued on the 7th of August as a weekly trade journal, devoted to the interests of wool merchants and manufacturers.

SCIENCE

A Physical, Historical, Political, and Descriptive Geography. By Keith Johnston, F.R.G.S. With Maps. (Stanford.)

MR. KEITH JOHNSTON'S text-book of geography is a work of much thought, wide research, and no inconsiderable literary skill. The last portions of the manuscript, we are told in the preface, were sent home from Zanzibar, and proofs were forwarded by the return mail, that they might be revised during the author's halt there or on his onward journey! But before they arrived Mr. Johnston had fallen a victim to exposure and the climate, and a career already marked by good work done for geography and giving great promise of future achievement was suddenly brought to an end. Specially qualified by training, possessed of an acute critical faculty, and endowed with the power of giving expression to his conceptions in a lucid and attractive manner, Mr. Keith Johnston, had he been spared to us, would no doubt have won a position in the foremost rank of scientific geographical writers. All that has proceeded from his pen is distinguished by a breadth and massiveness, a thorough knowledge of his subject, and a discriminating use of the multifarious materials at his disposal, which very broadly mark off his productions from the superficial performances of the bulk of our writers on geography, whose every page bears witness to the small grasp they have of the subject they venture to deal with. The author has succeeded in presenting us with a perspicuous account of all that is essential to know about the earth, its physical features, productions, and inhabitants. He has not attempted to place on record every locality likely to be mentioned in a newspaper or that may possibly turn up when planning a continental tour. It cannot be the business of a text-book to furnish information of this kind, which must be sought for in gazetteers or other works of reference. But, so far as we are able to judge from a somewhat careful perusal of his book, he has omitted no locality or place which plays a leading part in the economy of nature or in that of any of the states into which the earth's surface has been parcelled out. Even thus his nomenclature is considerable, and there certainly is no occasion to burden the pupils' memories with the barren names of towns, provinces, or rivers whose importance is altogether local, and which could be introduced only by sacrificing other matters which it is really essential they should know. The introductory chapter on the rudiments of astronomical geography and mapping is tersely and lucidly written, and deserving of attentive study, for it lays the foundations for a proper appreciation of maps, which play so conspicuous a part in the teacher's geographical apparatus. In the next chapter, however, the author appears to us to have wandered somewhat away from his subject. His "Sketch of Historical Geography" fills eighty pages of a volume not at all too large for an adequate treatment of the subject to which it is devoted. Not content with supplying a sketch of the progress of geographical exploration, the author furnishes a complete abstract of universal history. We might object, too, to the historical periods which he has adopted, for they mostly embrace one or more full centuries, and no notice is taken of the fact that historical events and the achievements of our great discoverers are not controlled by the dates of the Gregorian Calendar. The excision of a considerable portion of this chapter, we believe, would enhance the value of the work. It would throw into greater relief the leading events of geographical exploration, and leave space for dealing in a somewhat more ample manner with our colonies. The bulk of the volume is devoted to descriptive and political geography, and in a condensed yet readable form it contains a vast amount of information on the physical features of the countries of the world, their climate and productions, commerce and industry, political institutions, administrative divisions, and leading towns. A set of maps, coloured so as to distinguish forest regions, agricultural lands, steppes, and deserts, forms a welcome addition to this judiciously planned and carefully written text-book.

The Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century. By Jules Verne. With Maps and Illustrations. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THIS second volume on "celebrated travels and travellers" is quite equal to its predecessor in interest. The accounts furnished of the voyages of Cook, Bougainville, and other navigators and explorers are very readable, and the illustrations numerous and for the most part selected with judgment. The book cannot, however, take rank as a scientific work. We are not prepared to accept the author's statement that "D'Anville was the first to construct a map by scientific methods," nor can we agree with him when, only a few lines lower down on the same page, we are bid remember that his great countryman "was neither a man of science nor even well versed in classic authorities." It is a pity, too, that the French author's quotations from English books should have been retranslated, instead of being given in accordance with the original versions. Many serious errors, wholly due to the double translation, have arisen from this practice. Dr. Kippis, for instance, is quoted as having said that "the sea ran so high that the water was above Cape San Diego, and the vessel was so driven by the wind that her bowsprit was constantly under water.....Dr. Solander was seized with vertigo." Turning to the pages of Kippis's somewhat tame narrative of Cook's voyages, we find that "the tide drove the ship out with so much violence, and raised such a sea off Cape St. Diego, that she frequently pitched, so that the bowsprit was under water. ...Dr. Solander was seized with a terror." There are, besides, many errors in the spelling of proper names. For "Richter" read Rucher, for "Delais de la Ceyère" read Delais de la Croière, for "Walkner" read Walckenaer, for "Hally" read Halley, &c.

The Wandering Naturalists: a Story of Adventure. By J. A. Lawson. (Remington & Co.)

SOME years ago the author of this book tried to play a practical joke on the reading public by publishing a fictitious narrative of adventures in New Guinea in the guise of a true story of travel. We hardly know whether the present book is intended as another attempt at a similar joke, which scarcely bears repetition, or whether it is intended as a story-book for boys. On the whole, we prefer to believe that it is designed for the latter purpose, and it may fairly succeed in interesting boys with a turn for adventure. The title of the book is a misnomer; for the author certainly cannot claim the title of naturalist, as is shown in many ways by the very marvellous descriptions which he gives of the animals of Northern India, many of which he identifies with European species. The adventures, the scene of which is laid in an unexplored region of Northern India and the Himalayas, more especially in Bhotan and Nepal, recall forcibly the late performance of the Hanlon-Lees at a London theatre. Throughout the book the author and his one companion are seen to fall through one surprising adventure into another. They meet and slay, or are themselves mauled by, quite countless tigers, with bears, cheetahs, and other wild beasts. The author now sits upon a cobra, not upon its head, but, with great want of forethought, upon its tail, so that it inflicts three bites; now, unseen by his companion, he falls into a chasm, so inaccessible that he is on the point of committing suicide to avoid a lingering death by starvation; now, the flesh of his calf having been laid open by a blow from the paw of a tiger, he sews up the wound himself; now he leads laden horses and mules over impossible bridges, though not always successfully, for the animals have a knack of falling off these bridges into measureless abysses. The mules and horses of the party become almost used to being crushed by falling rocks or dying in some equally tragical way. On one occasion the author was enabled to run his lance through the flanks of a boar. "The weapon broke, leaving the head and three feet of the staff sticking in the beast, which was run through from side to side. Notwithstanding the serious nature of the wound, its activity was not at all diminished, and its ferocity seemed considerably increased..... After more than an hour of this fiddling work, the boar made a determined effort to escape, and broke across country." After these and innumerable other similar adventures, it is not surprising to read the writer's statement that "the number of escapes I have myself had from the jaws of wild creatures is, if I may say so with a due regard to modesty, extraordinary; and every part of my body is marked with scars, the result of fights with tigers, bears, and boars." Perhaps the most startling adventure is that told in the following passage. The effect of the story is much heightened by the abrupt way in which it is introduced, without any previous or subsequent allusion to the author's mental habit. Capt. Lawson, in telling of his ascent of "the highest mountain in the world, Mount Everest,"—by the way, it is not the first time that we have heard of this author ascending a "highest mountain in the world,"—says: "Our view of the snow-capped mountains and ranges was sublime, but a mass of dark-coloured clouds hid the valleys below from sight. About four o'clock in the afternoon we observed that the sun reflecting on these clouds lit them up with all the colours of the rainbow. The sight was marvellous, wonderful, grand. I am not exaggerating when I say that the effects of it on my mind were such as to inspire a gravity I had never experienced before. I was at this time a very young man, not gifted with much wisdom, and holding the doctrines of an atheist; but I came down from that mountain a firm believer in a Supreme Being, the majesty of whose wisdom was inexplicable and awful, and my conviction was permanent. No greater testimony, I think, can be given of the grandeur of the scene which met our view."

Catalogue of Books and Papers relating to Electricity, Magnetism, the Electric Telegraph, &c., including the Ronalds Library. Compiled by Sir Francis Ronalds, F.R.S. With a Biographical Memoir. Edited by Alfred J. Frost. (Spon.)

SIR FRANCIS RONALDS left an electrical library and an electrical catalogue, both of which have been given to the Society of Telegraph Engineers, on condition of their publishing the one and binding the other. They have not been allowed to make any additions to the catalogue, so it is now published just as it was left at the author's death in 1873. It is not a catalogue of the library merely, but of every electrical work of which he could learn the title, and contains 13,000 entries arranged in alphabetical order of authors' names. Sir Francis laboured hard for many years, both at home and abroad, to make it as complete as possible, and it forms a valuable contribution to electrical history. The printing and editing are well done, and a few copies have been printed on one side only for library use.

EXPLORATIONS IN AFRICA

By the mail from Zanzibar we learn that Mr. Thomson, in command of the Royal Geographical Society's expedition, has carried out his design of exploring the course of the Lukuga outlet of Lake Tanganyika. He has followed the stream for many days' journey downwards, but was prevented from reaching its junction with the Congo by the hostility of the natives. Returning to Mtwara (the London Missionary Society's new station on the western shores of the lake), he dismissed a large number of his native followers, who proceeded to Zanzibar. With his party thus reduced, and in lighter marching order, he has started on his long return journey, via the southern end of Tanganyika, to Kilava, on the Indian Ocean.

Dr. Lenz has reached Fum el Hoan, a small town on a tributary of the Wad Draa. Sheikh Ali received the German traveller kindly, and promised to forward him to Timbuktu, for which a caravan was to have started towards the end of April.

The Algerian journal El Akhbar is concerned at the progress made by the English factory recently established at the mouth of the Sakiet el Hamra, near Cape Juby, and predicts that England will absorb the whole of the trade of the Sahara unless France occupies Arguin or some other locality on the west coast. The English factory is described as a fort armed with cannon and enclosing several stone buildings. A pier has been constructed, and a small steamer keeps up daily communication with the Canaries. Commercial relations have been established with Adrar, Wad Nun, and more distant places, and the trade is growing in importance. This trans-Saharan commerce, however, is after all but a small affair. Dr. Olive, in the Bulletin of the Geographical Society of Marseille, supplies some interesting particulars on the trade of Tinduf, the most important emporium for the commerce between Morocco and Timbuktu. The Tajakant of that town purchase sugar, tea, powder, tobacco, English cottons, &c., in Morocco for export to Timbuktu. At Taudeni the caravans barter a portion of their merchandise for salt. At Timbuktu they purchase gold, slaves, ostrich feathers, and ivory. The great annual caravan numbers 300 or 400 men, well armed, and 1,000 to 1,200 camels. It spends sixty-eight days on the journey from Timbuktu to Mogador, and imports merchandise to the value of 31,000*l.* The ostrich feathers are mostly exported to London; the ivory and slaves remain in Morocco. The freight for a hundred-weight of merchandise amounts to 6*l.*

Prof. H. Fritz, in a paper to be published in the forthcoming number of the Geographische Mittheilungen, deals with the "variability in the volume of rivers." Berghaus and others since his time had asserted that the volume of European rivers was steadily decreasing, and they ascribed this phenomenon mainly to the destruction of forests. The author of the present paper carefully considers this question, and arrives at quite a different conclusion. According to him the volume fluctuates with the quantity of rain, but in no European river can a diminution be traced since the beginning of the century.

'Johnston's Half-Crown National Atlas' (W. & A. K. Johnston) consists of thirty-two quarto maps, neatly printed and accompanied by an index of names. The features of the ground are merely indicated by bold black lines, intended to mark the direction of mountain ranges. This expeditious method is not without its advantages, but in the present instance these lines have been engraved somewhat at haphazard, and we must assume either that the author has been very careless or that his knowledge of physical geography is somewhat limited. On the map of Europe, for instance, we miss the range of the Alps which stretches to Vienna, the Little Carpathians, and the Tatra.

We have received Parts XII. to XV. of the new edition of Stieler's 'Hand-Atlas.' The maps of Asia and North-western Germany, as well as a sheet illustrative of the distribution of land and water (by H. Berghaus), have been expressly engraved for this edition. Of the excellence of Vogel's new map of Germany we have spoken before. Asia, by Habenicht, is fully entitled to a place in this set of maps. It is coloured politically, but the depth of the sea is indicated by tints, and several other physical features have been introduced with much judgment. We once more draw attention to the praiseworthy practice of attaching the names of compilers, draughtsmen, and engravers to the maps issued by Herr Perthes. We should like English publishers to imitate this example.

SOCIETIES.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—July 1.—The Lord Talbot de Malahide in the chair.—Mr. B. Lewis read a paper 'On Antiquities in the Museum at Palermo.' After some introductory remarks on the history of Sicily and the monuments of the various races that have occupied it, Mr. Lewis invited attention to the following objects:—1. A bronze caduceus from Imacham, bearing the inscription IMAXAPAION ΔΑΜΟΣΙΟΝ; it may be compared with a herald's staff from Longanus in the British Museum. 2. Three lions' heads, used as gargoyles, from a temple at Himera; they belong to the best period of Greek art, and, while there is a general resemblance, differ in details. 3. Greco-Roman mosaics from the Piazza Vittoria, Palermo, discovered in the year 1868. The grand mosaic appears to be nearly contemporary with those at Pompeii. It contains many mythological subjects; amongst them the heads of Apollo and Neptune are the finest. The representations of the seasons are like Ceres, Flora, and Pomona at Corinth. In the same building was discovered a mosaic in which Orpheus is portrayed surrounded by birds and beasts. The workmanship in this case is inferior, and suggests the age of the Antonines as a probable date. 4. A Byzantine gold ring found at Syracuse, with a sacred personage (Christ or the Virgin?) standing between an emperor and empress. This device occupies the bezel, and round it are the words + OCΘIAONEYΔOKIACECTEΦANOCACHMAC. Outside the hoop of the ring are seven facets, each containing a scene from the Gospel history, viz., the Annunciation, Visitation of Elizabeth, Nativity, Adoration of the Magi, Baptism of Christ, Ecce Homo, and Women at the Sepulchre. Salinas says that Eudocia mentioned in the motto is wife of Heraclius I., but, as we have more likely that Eudocia Macrembolitissa is intended, and that the ring commemorates her marriage with Romanus Diogenes. According to this supposition, the ring should be assigned to the latter part of the eleventh century.—Mr. F. C. J. Spurrell gave an account of implements and chips from the floor of a palæolithic flint workshop at Crayford, Kent, and showed in the clearest manner, from the flint objects which he exhibited, that he had found a spot where a "palæolithic man" sat down on the then sandy foreshore and fashioned his weapons. Having done his work, the man appears to have been disturbed either by an enemy, a storm, or beasts, and never returned to claim his property. The evidences of his handiwork had, however, been most skilfully again brought together by Mr. Spurrell, who showed not only the manner of the man's proceedings, but a so the tools he worked with, which were found on the same site.—Mr. W. M. F. Petrie exhibited and explained a large series of plans of earthworks and stone remains in Kent, Wiltshire, and Cornwall. Mr. W. T. Watkins sent some notes and photographs illustrating recent discoveries at Maryport and Beckfoot.—Mr. J. Nightingale exhibited a pair of large wooden stirrups, bound with iron, of the sixteenth century, from the Spanish main, and another pair of open ironwork footed stirrups of the same period.—Mr. W. J. B. Smith sent a reponace steel knee-cap, representing a lion's face, with engraved and etched details.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.—July 5.—G. Busk, Esq., Treas. and V.P., in the chair.—Messrs. W. H. Hudson, R. Johnson, H. O. Lindsay-Bucknall, C. H. Lunkater, C. Montefiore, and S. Winkworth were elected Members.

QUEKETT MICROSCOPICAL.—June 23.—Dr. T. S. Cobbold, President in the chair.—Nominations for officers to be elected at the ensuing annual meeting were made, and notices given as to some proposed alterations in the by-laws. Several short communications by Mr. J. Debye were read by the Secretary.—A new paraboloid gas slide, devised by Dr. Edmunds, was exhibited and described.—Mr. R. T. Lewis read a note 'On some Peculiarities in the Pygidium of a Flea,' and presented some drawings of the same in illustration.—A new swinging substage was described by Mr. McKenzie.—Mr. W. H. Gilbert read a paper 'On the Histology of the Pitcher Plant,' illustrating the subject by numerous diagrams.—The President read 'Some further Observations on F. larina,' by Dr. Manson, in continuance of the subject opened at the meeting in February last; also, some short papers and translations bearing upon the same subject by eminent continental helminthologists.—The President remarked that it was curious to find that the hearts of birds as well as of carnivora were found literally crowded with nematoid worms, and he exhibited a bottle containing a number of the hearts of Chinese magpies which were very obviously so infested.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHEOLOGY.—July 6.—Dr. S. Birch, President, in the chair.—The following communication was read by the author, 'The Hittite Monuments,' by Prof. A. H. Sayce.—A communication from M. Terrien de Lacouperie, 'On the Common Origin of the Akkadian and Chinese Writing,' was read.—The Rev. J. N. Strassmaier communicated the translation of a contract tablet of the seventeenth year of Nabonidus.—Mr. R. Cull contributed 'Remarks on the Form and Function of the Infinitive Mood in the Assyrian Language.'

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—July 2.—Mr. R. Harrison, Treasurer, in the chair.—A paper by Mr. W. E. A. Axon was read, the subject being 'The Poetry of Bibbomania.' Besides the well-known verifications of Dr. Diklin, Dr. F. Ferrari (the zealous member of the Manchester Literary and Philosophic Society), and Mr. J. Haslewood, specimens were given of anonymous and pseudonymous verses, some of which were very quaint.—An excellent Catalogue, by Mr. Knappan, of the Library of the Pharmaceutical Society was exhibited.

SPELLING REFORM ASSOCIATION.—July 6.—Mr. C. B. Arding in the chair.—Mr. H. Woolton read a paper 'On Speech-Production: its Proximate Bases and Symbols,' which was intended as a contribution to the settlement of some points still doubtful in phonetics. After describing the organs of speech, the lecturer discussed the formation of vowels and consonants, laying special emphasis upon what appeared to him to be the basal sounds, and the influence of accentuation in modifying the basal sounds into those of actual speech. A principal point of interest was the lecturer's novel resolution of the vowels, which, however, was not unsupported by authority, and in some essential points resembled that effected by the Hindu grammarians for Sanscrit. The lecture was illustrated with numerous tables and diagrams, and excited considerable interest among the audience.

Science Gossip.

MR. MIVART is preparing a monograph on the Cat, "an introduction to the study of backboneed animals." Mr. Murray is the publisher.

A PETITION from the medical profession is to be presented to Parliament shortly, praying for the revival of the Medical School at Oxford, which is now practically in abeyance.

AMONG the papers in Part I. of Philosophical Transactions for the present year, just published, a few are of especial interest. Capt. Noble and Mr. Abel give the second instalment of their 'Researches on Explosives: Fired Gunpowder.' 'On the Determination of the Rate of Vibration of Tuning Forks' is contributed by Prof. McLeod and Lieut. Clarke of Cooper's Hill College. Messrs. W. De La Rue and Müller carry their 'Experimental Researches on the Electric Discharge with the Chloride of Silver Battery' to a third part, including 'Tube-Potential, and Potential at a Constant Distance and under Various Pressures,' to which they add 'Remarks on the Nature and Phenomena of the Electric Arc.' Prof. C. Niven, a recently elected F.R.S., has a paper 'On the Conduction of Heat in Ellipsoids of Revolution,' and the part ends with the first section of Messrs. Lawes and Gilbert's 'Agricultural, Botanical, and Chemical Results of Experiments on the Mixed Herbage of Permanent Meadow,' conducted for more than twenty years in succession on the same land.

Two eggs of the great auk, discovered in an old private collection in Edinburgh, were sold by Mr. J. C. Stevens on Friday, the 2nd inst., and fetched 100*l.* and 102*l.* guineas respectively.

MR. CAREY LEA, of Philadelphia, has communicated to the American Philosophical Society a paper 'On Substances possessing the Power of developing the Latent Photographic Image.' The most active agents were found to be the borate, phosphate, sulphide, and oxalate of iron respectively, dissolved, the phosphate in neutral oxalate of ammonium, and the others in neutral oxalate of potassium.

THE official return gives the value of diamonds exported from the South African diamond fields in 1879 as 3,685,810*l.*, the value of those obtained in 1878 being 3,084,711*l.*

DR. ANGUS SMITH brought before the Manchester Geological Society on Tuesday, the 29th ult., what he calls a "spark tube" for detecting inflammable gas in collieries. Producing ignition by the compression syringe is well known. Into a tube similarly arranged, the bottom of it being of strong glass, some spongy platinum was placed. The syringe was filled with air in any suspected place, and the piston, being driven home powerfully, ignited the gas if any were present. By this instrument 2½ per cent. of marsh gas had been detected.

PROF. BAEYER has discovered and patented a method of obtaining artificial indigo, which is to be worked on a commercial scale by the Badon Aniline Company. The indigo is obtained from chloride of isatine, which is produced from benzole.

PROF. SOPHUS TROMHOLT, of Bergen, has been organizing a system for observing the aurora borealis in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, and he desires to extend it to Iceland and to Great Britain. There are reasons for believing that we are approaching a period of maximum auroral occurrences, and Prof. Tromholt is desirous of enlisting observers on the same system as he has introduced into Scandinavia. The necessary instructions will be sent to any one applying to him at Bergen before the end of August.

M. JANSEN brought before the Académie des Sciences on June 24th some examples of a curious reversal of the photographic image. With a certain length of exposure a negative image is obtained, but if the exposure is prolonged this image disappears, and a positive one results. This is, we believe, due entirely to the reduction by the actinic rays of the oxide of silver formed in the first place, and the development of metallic silver as the result.

FINE ARTS

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE FORTY-SIXTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION IS NOW OPEN. From Nine till One.—Admission 1*l.* Children 6*d.* Gallery, 4, Pall Mall S.W. R. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

VARIATION OF WORKS OF ART IN BLACK AND WHITE. Under Gallery, Painters' Hall, Piccadilly, is a collection of drawings in black and white, OPEN DAILY FROM TEN till ONE.—Admission 1*l.* Children 6*d.* R. F. PHILLIPS, Secy.

DOUGLAS GREAT WORKS.—CHRIST PLAYING THE FORTUITOUS CHILDKIND EXHIBING 25 REVELS AND THE SHAPE'S REVELS. The latter just completed, each 24 by 24 in. with 1000 of plates. W. to holders of the 1*l.* Night of the Crucifixion. A Mirror of Calypso. At the DOME GALLERY, 10, New Bond Street, Daily. Ten to Six.—A.

Le Costume au Moyen Age d'après les Sceaux. Par G. Demay. (Paris, Dumoulin.)

M. DEMAY, "Archiviste aux Archives Nationales," is a great authority on the subject he has chosen, and this book is a first-rate contribution to our knowledge of costume. He writes clearly, and with that enthusiasm which enables a learned man to compress valuable matter into the smallest space possible if the work is to be readable. Others have written upon seals "au point de la vue diplomatique"; some have treated them as heraldic records; and many have occasionally borrowed details concerning costume from them. But we do not know that any one has treated seals alone as sources of information on costume with anything like our author's completeness. The subject is so rich that it would supply half-a-dozen volumes like this one, and as well furnished with capital drawings. The figures on seals vary most oddly. The Evil One himself occurs in the seals of the Dean of St. Marcel, 1284, and of the Abbey of Corisy, 1222; Satan quits the mouth of a man possessed in the seal of the Abbey of St. Tibéry, 1303. It is difficult to say what a diligent inquirer might not find in les sceaux. The seal of Pamiers, 1267, shows the soul of St. Anthony de Pamiers afloat in a barque, attended by two angels in the form of birds; the sigillary of the redoubtable Roger de Quincy, second Earl of Winchester, shows him in the act of combating a lion, and doubtless symbolizes the strength of his religious faith, but in later times this seal became the foundation of a story of a veritable combat. In his curious paper on the descent of the earldom of Lincoln, Mr. J. Gough Nichols figured the vesica-shaped seal of Hawise de Quincy, Countess of Lincoln, 1232, which, besides the maces of her husband's ancient name, bears the impress of an inserted Gnostic gem of still greater antiquity. Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, who gave his name to Lincoln's Inn, is represented on his seal charging in battle while standing in the stirrups, and bending his head below the margin of his shield. On the housings of the horse are the rampant lions of his earldom. The untimely fate of his two sons had to do with the course of English history. The elder was accidentally drowned in the well of Denbigh Castle; the other fell from one of the towers of Pontefract while attempting to run round the battlements. Earl Henry's heir, Alice, married Thomas of Lancaster, Derby, Leicester, Lincoln, and Salisbury. Defeated at Borough-bridge, he for his liberty offered his captor one of these five earldoms, but he was beheaded at Pontefract in 1322. The inheritance of the Countess Alice passed to her husband's nephew, Henry, Earl of Lancaster, and helped to make up the great appanage of his namesake who became Henry IV.

The seal of Hawise de Quincy was not the only one which included an antique gem. Among other instances are those which M. Demay has pointed out. The Carolingian kings bore the effigies of antique gods in their sigilla; Charlemagne employed the head of M. Aurelius, and, later, that of Scarpis; Pepin F. stamped with a head of Augustus; Louis le Débonnaire used that of Commodus; Lothaire I. the figure of Alexander Severus. Artistically speaking there was not very much to be said for these antique works. On the other hand, a large proportion of the mediæval seals are not only masterpieces of beautiful design, but delicate in their execution. The gracefulness of such figures is charming, and the draperies they wear are most elegant. Scores of instances must be known to every student of seals, more than enough to make us wonder why some accomplished critic has not considered seals from the artistic point of view, which, except incidentally, is not the intention of M. Demay. Not only have such relics an intrinsic charm, but they perfectly illustrate the state of sculpture in the days of their execution. For example, the seated figure of Louis Hutin, 1315, could hardly have a finer cast of drapery, the attitude could hardly be more stately. There is characteristic portraiture in the effigy of Louis XII., 1498, fig. 29. With all the quaintness in the execution of the form of Adèle de Champagne, third wife of Louis le Jeune, 1190 (see fig. 31), the style of the design is good. The seal of Alix de Neale, fig. 34, is a capital example of sculpture of the first decade of the fourteenth century, of which the effigies of Queen Eleanor of Castile on the famous crosses, the brass of Joan de Cobham, and an effigy in St. Denis are admirable specimens. The figure of Yolande of Flanders, No. 35, 1373, displays the progress of sculpture, and is almost identical with the weepers about the tomb of John of Eltham. Very beautiful is the figure of Jeanne de France, 1336, fig. 54, standing in the attitude of Queen Eleanor, holding with one hand her sceptre, with the other the band of her mantle. This was a favourite action (see the seaux of Yolande of Brotagne, No. 43, and Perronelle de Maubisson, No. 42, 1247). No sculptor of the best time of the Renaissance designed a more graceful statue than the effigies, No. 57, of Jeanne, Lady de Sainte Croix, 1286, a date which may stand for the flowering time of the loveliest Gothic art.

Among the curiosities of manners displayed in M. Demay's book, we may notice that Adèle, Countess of Soissons, rode astride while hawking in 1186, and wore a voluminous toga-like mantle. Alix, Duchess of Brabant, went hawking and hunting, but she rode in a side-saddle, 1260, while twenty years earlier the lady of Pierre-Portuse mounted a pillion, but rode alone. The sword of Louis I., Count of Flanders, 1322, and others are secured from the pommels to the wearers' breast armour by strong chains, and this is the case with Philip de Rouvre, Duke of Burgundy, 1361, and John I., Duke of Lorraine. The lozenge shape, which still distinguishes the escutcheon of a lady from that of a man, has been noticed by our author so long ago as 1262, for Isabelle de St. Vrain thus enclosed her two-headed eagle; Jeanne de Bourbon, Countess of Auvergne, did the like in 1504.

M. Demay, writing on costume, and not on seals per se, has wisely classified his records, not with regard to their sources, but according to his intention to illustrate each article of dress or weapon or furniture. He begins with a very interesting introductory chapter on gold, silver, tin, lead (used by the Popes), bronze, and wax seals; fashions and usages in respect to colouring the wax are not neglected; then follow notes on the use of the imprints when they were made, the means adopted for their preservation in boxes of iron, wood, ivory, and textiles or chemises. We are next led to consider the forms of seals, round, oval, shield-shaped, polygonal, or otherwise; the filatures which secured them to the documents they attested and the modes of securing each to each come next. The use of counter-seals, secretæ, and the custody of seals are all discussed, and some notes are given on the authenticity of seals; "Teste sigillo," "Temoing mon seel ci mis," are the usual forms of attestation.

Common in classical antiquity were the tickets of admission to circuses and amphitheatres. These are frequently little "squeezes" of baked clay, the material having been pressed into moulds bearing the effigies appropriated to certain stages, as tiers of seats in the theatre, or such as were proper to the city to which each belonged. For example, an elephant stood for one place or tier, an eagle for another. On the back of many of these tickets are to be seen the imprints of the thumbs of the makers, veritable signs-manual of classical antiquity—marks of thumbs that perished two thousand years ago. In mediæval practice something that is still more curious occurs:—

"Quelquefois l'empreinte seule des doigts remplaçait l'image gravée d'un sceau. Nous lisons dans le registre du Trésor des chartes coté J J 170, No. 108: 'Et scellées en cire vermeille où la jointe de l'un de ses doigts fit empreinte sans autre signet'; tandis que dans certaines circonstances on accompagnait le sceau d'un symbole particulier, de poils de barbe, d'un fétu."

As to the use of straws, we observe that it was no uncommon practice to attach seals to documents by their aid.

So much for signs-manual proper, but we have not found in M. Demay's book any reference to a very interesting and pathetic circumstance connected with the seals which are attached to many documents, the peculiar nature of which adds prodigiously to the attraction of a study of seals, either as regards their historical or their artistic characters. The thumb-mark of a slave of the amphitheatre is by no means without interest. What, then, shall we think of impressions made with their own hands of the secretæ of Charlemagne and St. Louis? M. Demay records how carefully seals were kept.

We know how "Master Roger," Vice-Chancellor of Richard I., being wrecked at sea, was found dead with the royal secretum tied round his neck. We know that a certain faithful servant of a great king, being trusted with the private signet of the monarch, on hearing of the death of the latter instantly cast the seal into the sea. Owners of seals guarded them as almost sacred, and used them with their own hands. How great, then, is the interest of the imprint of St. Louis's signet or that of Charlemagne, to say nothing of innumerable other such relics!

One of the rights of the Priory de la Saussaie, near Villejuif, was that of inheriting the matrices of the royal seals after the death of a sovereign. The matrix of the seal of Charles the Bold is preserved at Berne, likewise that of the grand bâtarde Antoinette.

Michael Angelo, Leonardo da Vinci, and Raphael. By C. Clément. Translated by Louisa Corkran. (Seeley & Co.)—This is a spirited and complete translation of a work which was originally published in 1861, and has since been reprinted. The book has been revised, and new notes added. In some respects it is, even now, a little behind the state of knowledge in the present day. This is particularly obvious in the excellent and comprehensive introductory essay. The three biographies are rather memoirs and criticisms than simply lives of the painters, and they are good examples of their kind. They will prove agreeable to the general reader as well as to the already informed student who is not an artist. Eight illustrations include two capital transcripts from Raphael by Marc Antonio, and fac-similes from drawings by Leonardo are suitable and welcome. It is a pity, however, that some competent person has not revised Miss Corkran's pages. We turn to p. 48, and find a reference—just as the author left it—to the 'Madonna and Infant Christ, St. John the Baptist, and Angels,' as "the admirable picture in tempera, which a short time ago [1857!] was the great attraction in the Exhibition at Manchester." Again, in the catalogue, p. 307, of M. Angelo's works, this picture is spoken of in just terms, but it is said to be "at Mr. Labouchere's, Stoke Park." This was not quite correct even in 1861, for it was in 1859 that Mr. Labouchere became Lord Taunton. He died long since, and the picture was bought ten years ago by the nation, so that it is now No. 809 in the National Gallery! Again, on p. 313 the famous bas-relief which Buonarrotti executed for Taddeo Taddei, and which belonged to Wicwar the painter, is described as "now in the National Gallery, London." It certainly once was in Trafalgar Square and in the National Gallery building, but it belonged then, as now, to the Royal Academicians, and left Trafalgar Square with its owners. In the catalogue of Raphael's works, p. 329, a beautiful drawing in red chalk, a so-called "krin," representing 'The Vices shooting at Innocence,' is said to be in the National Gallery, whereas it has long been an important feature of the royal collection at Windsor. M. Clément doubtless now knows more about the 'Mona Lisa' of Da Vinci than when he wrote about the reputed "restorations" of that picture, and did not notice that it has been rubbed. In the catalogue of Raphaels the pen sketch of the 'Dream of the Young Knight' is said to be in the National Gallery, but not a word is said about the far more important picture for which it was made, and which is in the same frame in Trafalgar Square. To our surprise the same page, 360, speaks of a 'Portrait of a Young Man' in the Kensington Museum as one of the works of Raphael. These are obvious errors, but they are not all, and the whole book needs revising so as to include those facts, and the inferences to be drawn from them, which it is the pride and glory of modern artistic archæology to have employed itself upon, not unfrequently to very little profit. M. Clément, although happy in the logical consequences he draws from his knowledge and his impressions, is not well grounded in technical matters, and is a little out of his depth now and then, so that unconsciously, as usual in such cases, he writes more like a dilettante professor than a painter, and is not a safe guide in darksome ways. For instance, at p. 342 he speaks of Lord Suffolk's 'La Vierge aux Rochers' as "a very fine copy or duplicate [of the picture in the Louvre], which some persons consider original" (!). Again, he says the MSS. of Da Vinci are "hardly legible." We frequently read of "Mr. Woodburn's Collection" as if it still existed; numerous details of this class are out of date. On p. 352 we read of the London Gallery of the Fine Arts as the place of deposit for the cartoon of St. Anne by Da Vinci. We read a translation of a well-known name in "Jean-Jacques-Trivulce." On p. 312, the group, the 'Virgin and Child,' in the church at Bruges, is spoken of in terms which show that M. Clément had not, when they were written, so far cultivated his æsthetic sense as he should do, and he was not aware of the latest particulars of this group. Notwithstanding these anachronisms and shortcomings, the spirit of the book is so sound and good, and the author's taste so sensitive and his judgment so just, that we should not hesitate to place it in the hands of any young amateur—any one desiring to inform himself about Michael Angelo, Leonardo, and Raphael.

Our Own Country, Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial. Illustrated. (Cassell & Co.)—This is the second volume of an interesting popular work, remarkable for the judgment exercised in selecting historical and pictorial subjects for illustration by pen and pencil, and for the brightness and clearness of the letter-press as well as the woodcuts. The chosen subjects comprise Chester, Charnwood, Bedford, Durham, Derbyshire, the Menai Straits, Skye, the Wye, Cambridge, Exmoor, and the like. Each section is enriched with neat woodcuts of well-chosen scenes.

Notes by Mr. Ruskin on Samuel Prout and William Hunt. Illustrated with Autotypes. (The Fine-Art Society.)—This handsome volume is a reprint of notes on drawings exhibited lately in New Bond Street, and it is accompanied by photographic fac-similes from fifteen drawings by Prout and five by W. Hunt. It is a handsome volume, but it ranges badly with a former issue by the same publishers, containing Mr. Ruskin's Notes on his Turner Drawings, which we reviewed last year. We are compelled to differ from Mr. Ruskin's estimate of Prout, believing that he rates that dexterous drawing-master beyond his merits. A graceful anecdote the author relates of his own youth probably accounts for this. His bias is due to memories of his boyish admiration for a drawing of Prout's which hung in "the old house at home." This difference of opinion does not forbid us from admiring the exquisite critical sense the author displays in dealing with his own impressions of Prout and the characteristics of that artist. On the other hand, we agree heartily with the opinions Mr. Ruskin has expressed about Hunt's works, and differ from him only in ranking the painter still higher than he has done. There is much more to be said for Hunt as a pathetic designer in a fine though homely and simple mood than is said here. Our estimate of Hunt as a humourist, not a caricaturist, is very high: we could hardly expect Mr. Ruskin to admire such a quality, but surely no criticism of the artist ought to be without any recognition of it. The following remark, on a drawing of Hunt's representing an old man praying, is true and finely put; it is described as one of the "things that the old painter was himself unspeakably blessed in having power to do." This is almost as good as Hunt saying in a reverential mood of himself, "I feel really frightened when I sit down to paint a flower." The author's analysis of Hunt's technique has all that exquisite acumen and power which, it appears to us, is wanting in his estimate of Prout. Within its range how true and just is the following criticism on a drawing called 'The Butterfly':—"Now this little brown-red butterfly is a piece of real painting; and it is as good as Titian or anybody else ever did. And if you can enjoy it you can enjoy Titian and all other good painters; and if you can't see anything in it, you can't see anything in them, and it is all affectation and pretence to say that you care about them. And with this butterfly, in the drawing I put first, please look at the mug and loaf in the one I have put last, of the Hunt series, No. 171. The whole art of painting is in that mug—as the fisherman's genius was in the bottle. If you can feel how beautiful it is, how ethereal, how heathery and heavenly, as well as to the utmost muggy, you have an eye for colour, and can enjoy heather, heaven, and everything else below and above." The photographs in this book are admirable.

Illustrated Catalogue of the Paris Salon, 1880. Published under the direction of M. F. G. Dumas. (British and Foreign Artists' Association.)—This is the English version of the second issue of a serial of which we lately noticed the first issue in French, referring to the Salon of 1879. It contains nearly four hundred reproductions in fac-simile of drawings made for the book by the artists whose works are represented. These include pictures, drawings, and sculptures, and they have the inestimable advantage of giving, so far as they go, autographic expressions of the motives of the larger number of the artists who have supplied the Salon with its greatest attractions. Here is a collection of excellent memoranda, by aid of which the student may refresh his memory of the designs, compositions, and incidents of the works which he saw this year in the Champs Elysées. So much praise, and it is great, may be freely given to a very acceptable book—a work the difficulty of producing which no one who has not had to deal with the thousand-and-one interests, whims, piques, and passions of artists is in a position to estimate fairly. The serpent, whose wisdom is proverbial, must be a perfect fool to M. Dumas, who has succeeded so far as this volume attests he has done. On the other hand, we are bound to say that the reproductions are frequently of a most limited kind, generally bare, if spirited and spontaneous, outlines of the examples, and lack the proper and nobler elements of the pictures. For example, M. Chabry's sketch of his 'Au Mois d'Août à Valère,' a landscape of the most gorgeous enamel-like coloration, most forceful contrasts of tone and light and shade, is no better than a diagram. The effect and chiaroscuro of the pictures are almost invariably absent. In short, good as these diagrams are, they serve to show not only how much has been done, but that more has yet to be achieved, and that the art of making complete memoranda of pictures on a small scale has yet to be brought into general use. It may be done, and M. Dumas's contributors are in the right way. We need hardly add to our testimony of admiring wonder at the success of the editor who has secured the aid of so many artists by saying that the absence of transcripts of a considerable number of good pictures testifies how, in some cases, even he has failed.

The Art of Fan Painting. By Madame la Baronne Delamardelle. Translated by G. A. Bouvier. (Lechertier, Barbe & Co.)—This is an artists' colourman's price list, with a few notes added on the history and uses of fans, and very brief instructions as to the modes of painting those dainty articles. Some of the instructions are exquisitely primitive, e.g., "Trees on fans do not resemble a bit those trees painted after the laws of nature." We are not quite sure we understand this fragment. The next is plainer, but surely not infallible:—"The representation of water looks well on a fan. It is always done horizontally, excepting, however, when it is a waterfall or spring." Temerarious critics might demand of Madame la Baronne Delamardelle, "How about the sea in a storm?"

NOTES FROM ATHENS

June 26, 1880.

THE Archæological Society has lately recommenced the excavations at Dipylum at the ancient cemetery of the Ceramicus. Till the other day the researches yielded nothing of interest; the Society, however, continued to lay bare a considerable mass of earth which covered a double wall, which appears to have formed part of the rampart of the town. One of these walls was most carefully built, but the other, which was in front of it and ran parallel to it, is not so well constructed. But two weeks ago a monument of great value was found. This is a funeral stèle, which served as cover to a water conduit, broken unluckily at the top and on the right side, at a height of about two metres. In the centre is sculptured a great vase, which is shaped like a hydria; on the left is a kylix of very small dimensions. On the right is seen the foot only of a third vase, which formed, no doubt, a pendant to the bottle on the left. Above is a bandlet in the form of a garland; in the left corner is suspended an alabastrum. The large vase is decorated with a bas-relief representing a farewell. A young man standing erect before a horse holds two lances of unequal length, and gives his right hand to an old man, behind whom is a draped child. Above this bas-relief is read—Παναγιώτης Ἀπαφύρε[ις].

Upon the kylix is represented a child, who runs trundling a hoop. The work on these two bas-reliefs is careful, and belongs to a good epoch of Greek art. The characters of the inscription belong to the first half of the fourth century.

Another piece of sculpture has been found lately in some excavations undertaken near the Military Hospital, in the street which leads to Phalerum. It is a statue of a Mænad, who is lying asleep upon a rock. It is made of white Pentelic marble, and the execution, although of Roman times, is very careful, and is marked by many excellent points. The figure lies on her right side, and above her one sees a panther's skin, and the head of the animal is hung at the corner. Her hair is very carefully executed, and the tresses divided with great art; her eyes are closed. In the same locality has been discovered an ancient altar. Since formerly the debris of a great house were found here, it is believed that this statue belonged to some wealthy owner.

Other very interesting relics have been found by a German architect, Herr Bohn, at the entrance to the Acropolis, where he was making purely scientific researches. They consist of a new fragment of the Balustrade which bordered the terrace of the Temple of Nike Aptera. This fragment, like those previously known, represents a Victory. The face looks almost straight to the front; the wings are extended, the right leg slightly advanced. The head is missing, and the upper part of the body is much injured. At the same place has been unearthed a little statue of Victory, of which the moulding is in one of the museums of Athens, and which was supposed to be lost; but the head has disappeared. At the same time Herr Bohn has removed almost all the earth accumulated on the slope of the Propylæa, and he has laid bare the rock at the left of the lateral staircase. Besides this, he has opened a trench at the foot of the gate, and of the wall of which it forms the centre. Near the gate, on the right, at a depth of half a metre, there has been found embedded in the wall a bas-relief of small dimensions, representing a quadriga, in a perfect state of preservation. The charioteer is perched before the car on the pole, while a young warrior in the rear seems to be in the act of placing his foot on the ground. Another fragment, found near the wall, represents, in relief, a serpent, which coils itself round an olive tree laden with fruit. It is supposed to represent the serpent of the Erechtheum.

At the same time with the discoveries made at Athens, two others, of some importance, have to be mentioned. The one is the discovery at the Piræus, quite close to the Bay of Zea, of the theatre mentioned in Xenophon (Hellen. ii. 4), quite distinct from that of Munychia, the ruins of which are to be seen much further on to the north-east of Zea. On this find I put off writing for the present, as the excavations are still in progress, and I pass on to the discovery made in the island of Paros.

At Parikia, the principal port of Paros, the company which works the quarries was digging for a railway. In a field near the Monastery Hecatontapyliani has been found an ancient cemetery, which contains numbers of sarcophagi and bas-reliefs in a very good style of art. In the sarcophagi have been found several skeletons, ancient vases, and various ornaments. Unfortunately the excavations have been suspended, because over the ancient cemetery is situated the modern, and it has to be removed.

M. P. LAMBOC.

SALES.

Messrs. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS sold, last week, the following pictures and water-colour drawings. Drawings: D. Cox, A Hayfield, 79*l.*; A View in Wales, with Castle and Peasant with Sheep, 88*l.*; A Gipsy Encampment, 90*l.*; A Hayfield, 50*l.* G. Barrett, Travelling Peasants, near the Coast, 53*l.* P. De Wint, A Lake Scene, 68*l.* Pictures: Bernardo Caneletti, View of Dresden, 178*l.*; The Companion, 189*l.* G. Poussin, A Landscape, with Apollo and the Muses, 183*l.* A. Cuyp, Portrait of the Artist's Father, 110*l.*

Five-3rd Gossip.

MR. DYALL, the curator of the Walker Art Gallery at Liverpool, writes:—"I see in the 'Fine Art Gossip' column of last week's Athenæum that the Dundee Exhibition made sales last year to the amount of 10,000*l.* In making this statement you have no doubt been misled by the wording of the Dundee advertisement inviting artists to contribute, in which is given the amount of 10,000*l.* as the result of two years' sales. No provincial exhibition sold 10,000*l.* worth last year as far as I know; the only one that approached that sum was the Liverpool Corporation Exhibition, the sales there amounting to 9,159*l.* 15*s.*"

A RETURN to an Order of the House of Lords has been published, and comprises resolutions of the Trustees of the National Gallery, with remarks on the same by the Director in respect to the proposed increase in the public usefulness of the institution. The Trustees recommend the abolition or considerable modification of the practice of closing the Gallery in the autumn, provided the staff is increased commensurately to the public demands. They see no objection to extending the hours of admission during the summer on a similar condition. They deprecate the indiscriminate admission of the public on the students' days, because that practice might endanger the pictures and would cause great inconvenience to the students. But, if the Government desires to curtail the privileges of the students, the Trustees are willing to consider and report on the subject. Mr. Burton says that, as everybody already knew was the fact, the extension is purely a financial question. He agrees with the Trustees that an extension of hours of opening the Gallery during the summer would be unattended with benefit, because that class of the public in whose favour this would be done would least use it in practice. He energetically urges the claims of the students to those facilities which were given them as essential conditions at the foundation of the Gallery, to deprive them of which would be to depart from one of the purposes of such an institution, and limit the means provided for direct artistic education. The easels would be in the way of the visitors and endanger the pictures if the public were indiscriminately admitted while the students were at work. He condemns the alleged example of continental practice in this respect, because abroad the number of visitors is much less than in England. With us the number of students is much greater than in Dresden, Munich, and Vienna. Reserved days are needed, as Mr. Burton avers, for dusting and cleaning the pictures. In Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and Munich one day in each week is strictly reserved, and, except at Vienna, where students are admitted on that day, no visitor has entrance to any of those national galleries. Mr. Burton might have added that no other gallery exhibits pictures in such small rooms as those which are thoroughfares in Trafalgar Square, and could hardly be simultaneously devoted to the students and the public. On the whole, the Trustees and Director trust that abolition of the autumnal closing will satisfy the reasonable demands of the public. We should have added among the desiderata an extension of the hours in the summer and admission of the public for a small fee on the students' days, a plan which has worked admirably at South Kensington. The practice of admitting the public and students together in the British Museum is not applicable to the National Gallery, while the rooms are smaller and the attractions greater in Trafalgar Square, the risks of damage being much more considerable than in Bloomsbury.

MR. F. SKYMOUR HADEN's brochure on the 'Etched Work of Rembrandt' has been translated into French, and published in the form of a rider to the July number of the Gazette des Beaux-Arts.

We shall shortly resume publication of "The Private Collections of England," and propose successively to deal with the fine galleries at Wentworth - Woodhouse, renowned for Van Dycks, at Wortley Hall, at Duncombe Park, at Nostel Priory, and at Grantley Hall. These collections belong to Earl Fitzwilliam, the Earls of Wharfedale and Faversham, to Mr. Winn, and Lord Grantley respectively. Although most of the galleries are exceptionally rich in fine works, even the more important of them has been overlooked, except in the perfunctory notices of Dr. Waagen. Wentworth-Woodhouse is historical, and Earl Fitzwilliam has given exceptional facilities for our studies; at Nostel are many undescribed things of very great value. In seeing these the advantages we owe to the owner are many.

M. BASTIEN-LEPAGE, who is at present at work on a portrait of Mr. Henry Irving, proposes to make a tour in Scotland.

MR. A. S. MURRAY is engaged on a 'History of Greek Sculpture' from the earliest times to the age of Phidias. The book, which will be illustrated, will be published by Mr. Murray.

We are indebted to Messrs. J. Hogarth & Sons for a portfolio of 'Drawings by Japanese Artists,' reproduced with admirable fidelity, coloured in fac-simile by the autotype process, and comprising descriptions by Mr. F. Dillon, one of the most conscientious of our artists. These works were not long since exhibited privately by the Burlington Club, and it is proposed, should this portfolio be welcomed, to add further collections of the same kind, and thus more completely illustrate the survival of one of the most remarkable forms of art the world knows, of which it is but too probable this is the final instance. Mr. Dillon has contributed a very intelligent and highly appreciative preface to the portfolio. It is one of the best essays on Japanese art, where few are even tolerable, so great is the presumption of the authors. We cordially recommend the portfolio to the student of art in general, not only for its own sake, but because of the great advantages which intelligent studies of the subject offer to inquirers into the history of æsthetics. These fac-similes are not unworthy of Da Vinci, for they render nature with exceptional felicity, and reproduce her beauties in the finest, most faithful style. As specimens of pure draughtsmanship they are exemplary, for they embody the principles of the noblest modes of execution; some of them are like Albert Dürer's sketches.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—Cohen's 'Estella.'
HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Bont's 'Mefistofele.'

It would serve no useful purpose to criticize M. Jules Cohen's 'Estella' with the same minuteness observed below in dealing with 'Mefistofele.' Here we have to do not with the work of an original thinker, but with the product of a well-read and earnest musician, apparently incapable of taking the lead in any hitherto untrodden path, or of even suggesting an idea not already appropriated by some one else. M. Cohen wrote several works for the Parisian stage between 1860 and 1870, including 'Maitre Claude,' 'José Mario,' 'Dea,' and 'Les Bluets' ('Estella'). For the last decade he has added nothing to this list, and is now one of the professors at the Conservatoire. 'Les Bluets' was produced at the Théâtre Lyrique in 1867; but in spite of the advantage gained by the co-operation of Mdlle. Christine Nilsson, and the fact of its being the year of the Paris Exhibition, the opera was only performed about ten times, and has never been revived in the French capital. The present Italianized version was written for Nice in 1873, the dialogue being exchanged for recitative, a comic character eliminated in favour of one extremely serious, and other changes effected with a view of rendering the work more imposing. The story, by Messrs. Cormon and Trianon, is not objectionable on either moral or æsthetic grounds, but it labours under the disadvantage of being entirely unympathetic, the principal characters having no marked individuality, and the hero being singularly destitute of the quality of heroism. The final scene, wherein the coronation of the new king of Castile is seen simultaneously with that of the assumption of the black veil by the girl he has weakly deserted, borders on caricature. The music is, as a rule, rather cleverly manufactured, the various strains intended to be bucolic, amorous, religious, or heroic generally answering their purpose most appropriately. But of freshness of idea or treatment not a trace is to be noted. Reminiscences abound in every number, and especially in those portions which, judged by themselves, are the most effective in the opera. There is over all an air of artificiality which is destructive of all charm. It would be unjust to term 'Estella' a worthless opera, but it is in no sense a great one, and it must be added to the already lengthy list of failures identified with the recent history of the Royal Italian Opera. As to the performance, we have little but praise to offer. The part of the heroine makes no undue strain on either the vocal or dramatic powers of Madame Patti, and she invests it with all the charm of which it is capable. Signor Nicolini as Fabio, the uninteresting hero, is perhaps less objectionable than usual, and the other parts are, on the whole, adequately interpreted. As usual at this house, the mise en scène is elaborate and splendid, but this liberality will not save the opera.

The production of Signor Boito's 'Mefistofele' will not only serve to render an otherwise dreary opera season memorable, but it will impress many minds with the welcome truth that Italy must not yet be erased from the list of productive musical nations. The condition of affairs had, indeed, become desperate, and even now it would be rash to assume that the mantle of genius is about to pass from the relaxing grasp of Signor Verdi to the shoulders of another, instead of falling to the ground, as once seemed to be inevitable. But if the promise shown by the composer of 'Mefistofele' is happily fulfilled, a new school of Italian opera may arise, nobler and loftier than that of previous generations, but no less calculated to charm by mere force of sensuous beauty. Signor Arrigo Boito was born in 1840, and 'Mefistofele' was produced at La Scala, Milan, in 1868. For a musician of twenty-eight years the work must be considered a wonderful achievement, if not wholly without precedent in the annals of the lyric drama. Previous to this, however, Boito had given evidence of his individuality. After leaving the Milan Conservatoire in 1862, he commenced to publish a series of articles on music, remarkable for their daring flights of fancy, and also a quantity of original verse, including a work entitled 'Il Re Orso,' equally unconventional, not to say extravagant. 'Mefistofele' achieved a fiasco equal to that of Berlioz's 'Benvenuto Cellini'; and the result is not surprising, for a work more at variance with the ordinary style of an Italian opera it would be impossible to conceive. Thus temporarily discouraged, Signor Boito devoted himself chiefly to literary composition for a time, producing the libretto of an opera, 'Amleto,' for Franco Faccio, a kindred spirit with himself, and other poems for music. A two-act operetta, 'Ero e Leandro,' of which he wrote the words and music, has not yet been represented, and he is at present engaged on a grand opera on the subject of Nero, which is to see the light at La Scala in 1882, notwithstanding the insulting reception accorded in that theatre to the earlier work. The success of Wagner's 'Lohengrin' at Bologna paved the way for a resurrection of 'Mefistofele' in 1875 at that place, and the judgment of the Milanese public was promptly reversed. The fame of the work, which, it is fair to say, had undergone extensive revision, quickly spread through Italy, but until this week no other country had had an opportunity of pronouncing an opinion on the composer. A glance at the score is sufficient to impress a musician with a sense of the extreme boldness and independence of the author, and a similar feeling must have dominated the minds of those present at the performance on Tuesday. But the description of Signor Boito as an ardent disciple of Wagner is far from being accurate or exhaustive. The abandonment of the stereotyped forms of musical structure in opera is one of the principles of the German reformer, but there are others which the Italian composer evinces no disposition to adopt, at least in the present work. In Wagner's libretto—or, more properly speaking, poems for music—dramatic consistency is a salient feature. The story proceeds steadily to its climax, and the attention is not for an instant diverted to side issues or by the introduction of extraneous matter having no bearing on the main theme. It is just in this respect that Signor Boito departs most widely from his alleged teacher, even to the extent of damaging his work in the eyes of critics and the general public. The six sections into which 'Mefistofele' is divided are identical in spirit, though not in letter, with scenes in Goethe's 'Faust'; but the want of continuity is obvious, and it is a considerable advantage that the non-literary portion of the public has been already rendered familiar with the details of the grand conception of the German poet through the medium of the cleverly arranged libretto of Messrs. Barbier and Carré utilized by M. Gounod. The "Prologue in Heaven," the scenes on the Brocken and with Helen of Troy, have but little significance except as aids to the picturesque. The general effect at first acquaintance is that of a series of dream-like tableaux disoriented and bewildering to the mind. It is to be fervently wished that in his next lyric drama Boito will show that he is not wholly indifferent to the advantages of symmetry and unity in design. But it is time that we should speak more particularly of the music. The Prologue is to a large extent eccentric rather than original, and altogether lacks nobility until the climax, which is undeniably effective, though the art displayed is not of a very lofty description. The objections taken to the stage representation of Goethe's paraphrase of Job i. have all the more weight because the music is mostly of the earth, earthy. The Kermesse scene is fragmentary, and the same effort to be unconventional is apparent. The prolonged bass notes at the change of scene are unmeaning, and to the orchestra might surely have been allotted more interesting work during the inevitable pause in the action. The ensuing cantabile for Faust is in agreeable contrast to the preceding music, and the song of Mephistopheles, "Son lo spirito che nega sempre," has some character. But it is in the garden scene that Boito's genius first manifests itself free from all trammels. The entire treatment of this episode is delightfully piquant and fresh, and in curious contrast to the dreamy sentimentality of M. Gounod's setting. Perhaps the Italian composer has erred on the side of flippancy, but only to a slight extent. In the arrangement of the music to the Witches' Sabbath on the Brocken there was a risk of plagiarizing from Weber or Meyerbeer. The first danger has been avoided, but there are some faint reminiscences of 'Robert le Diable.' Nevertheless, the scene is powerful, and in the main original, especially the final fuga infernale, than which we can call to mind nothing more wild, surging, or impetuous, save Wagner's "Walkürenritt." Still more admirable is the succeeding prison scene. Gretchen's air, "L'altra notte in fondo al mare," is genuinely pathetic; the colloquy with Faust shows intense dramatic feeling, and the reprise of the celestial motive from the Prologue has an exquisite effect. But the greatest charm is to be found in the scene of the "Classical Sabbath," wherein Signor Boito was enabled to follow the bent of his own mind uninfluenced by memories of what other composers had done. The duet, "Canta la serenata," now familiar enough in our concert-rooms, is a mere trifle, but it has an ineffable charm, and the subsequent ensemble is remarkable for sensuous beauty. In the final scene the attempt to portray by means of orchestral motifs Goethe's four ghostly figures which trouble Faust when his last hour is nigh is not particularly successful; but the climax, in which the themes of the Prologue and of the Classical Sabbath return, the former prevailing, is very effective. From a technical point of view the music presents some striking features. Progressions of consecutive fifths are made with unblushing audacity alike in the celestial, terrestrial, and infernal scenes, and extraneous modulation is used with the utmost excess. But the phrasing is essentially Italian, and the writing for the voices is generally flowing and grateful. In the matter of orchestration Signor Boito shows himself a master. He is evidently well versed in modern scores, and his effects are almost invariably felicitous and certainly never vulgar, though when noise seems to be demanded he does not spare. Recurring to the main question as to whether the work is an adequate musical illustration of its great original, a conclusive answer cannot be given either way. That Boito looks at 'Faust' through Italian spectacles is manifest alike by his literary and musical treatment of the theme. Schumann and Liszt were fascinated by the philosophical and mystical aspects of the subject; M. Gounod evolved from it an infinity of sentiment and passion; Berlioz and after him Boito have sought to depict its picturesque and dramatic possibilities. Only a colossal genius could grasp the wondrous creation from all these diverse points of view. Temperament and nationality have to be considered if we would render justice to the various commentaries of the musicians named.

The production of 'Mefistofele' and the manner in which it has been accomplished are circumstances in the highest degree creditable to the Impresario of Her Majesty's Theatre and his various subordinates. The work is one of exceptional difficulty to all concerned, but the general performance on Tuesday was marked by singularly few hitches in any department. Even the stage management, of which we have had frequent occasion to complain at this house, was exceptionally good, and the scenery by Signor Magnani is in the purest taste. The orchestra under Signor Arditri was very praiseworthy, and the chorus sang with unwonted vigour, though with a sad want of delicacy, a good piano being seldom if ever obtained. Owing to the peculiar arrangement of the libretto, only five principals are required, so that the difficulties in the way of securing a good cast are not great. Madame Christine Nilsson's embodiment of Margherita was a triumph; but this was by no means a foregone conclusion, as the part differs strongly from that in Gounod's 'Faust.' In the garden scene the freshness and nervousness of Gretchen's nature were charmingly expressed, and the death scene was almost painful in its intensity. In a psychological sense the representation was perhaps the most vivid we have witnessed for many years on the lyric stage. From this to the calm and statuesque beauty of the Elena episode was a great step, but Madame Nilsson conquered the difficulty, and thus her entire share in the performance gave the highest satisfaction. Madame Trebelli was perfectly artistical in the small parts of Marta and Pantalio, and Signor Campanini as Faust sang and acted very effectively, the part being already familiar to him. Signor Nannetti was even more successful as Mefistofele. The character is more of a demon and less of a buffoon than in Gounod's opera, and Signor Nannetti, who first performed the rôle at the Bologna revival in 1875, realized all its dramatic capabilities. The reception of the opera was never for an instant in doubt. From the Prologue until the climax the applause was enthusiastic, but the composer modestly refused all calls until the end, when he had appeared three times. We do not for an instant contend that this flattering verdict was undeserved. Even making allowance for all the faults to which we have unhesitatingly called attention, 'Mefistofele' is a work of extreme significance. Its imperfections are due to the fact that at the age of twenty-eight originality generally resolves itself into mere peculiarity. That so much of inspiration is to be found in a youthful work speaks loudly for the genius of the composer. To paraphrase the words inscribed on Schubert's tomb at Vienna, it may be said of Signor Boito's score, "Herein is contained a rich treasure, and fairer hopes."

NEW VOCAL PUBLICATIONS.

The Year: a Cantata. The Words selected from various Poets; the Music composed by William Jackson (Masham). (Novello & Co.)
Christmas Eve. A short Cantata for Alto Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by Niall W. Gade. Op. 40. (Same publishers.)
Mus in C, for Four Voices and Organ. Composed by E. Silas. Op. 62. (Same publishers.)
Handel's Opera Songs. A Collection of Fifty-two Songs, selected from Handel's Italian Operas, with Italian and English Words; the latter by M. X. Hayes. Edited, with a Pianoforte Accompaniment arranged from the Score, by W. T. Best. (Boosey & Co.)

A large number of important musical works published of late years by English composers must be a source of gratification to all who care to see native art take a worthy place in public estimation. We have been as a nation far too much inclined to undervalue what may be described as the musical products of our own land. Nowhere has a more striking illustration been seen of the proverb that a prophet has no honour in his own country. The common datum that the English are not a musical nation has been repeated ad nauseam; and though we can point to such names as those of Purcell, Gibbons, Wilbye, Croft, and Boyce in the past, and in our own day to those of Bennett, Macfarren, and many others, the legacy is only lately exploded, and is probably now believed in to some extent. It is for this reason that we have placed an English work first on the list of new publications now under review. True, Mr. Jackson's cantata is not a novelty, having been produced at the Bradford Festival of 1859; but the fact of its republication more than twenty years after its first performance is none the less significant. The career of William Jackson, known as "Jackson of Masham," to distinguish him from his namesake, the composer, William Jackson of Exeter, is a remarkable instance of what enthusiasm and industry can accomplish, even when unaided by the slightest spark of genius. From the short biography given in Dr. Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' we learn that he was the son of a miller, and that his love for music induced him to teach himself nearly every instrument, besides harmony and counterpoint; that while engaged in business at Masham as a tallow-chandler he wrote two oratorios, 'The Deliverance of Israel from Babylon' and 'Isaiah'; that he subsequently gave up his business, and adopted music as a profession, becoming successively chorus-master at the Bradford Festivals, and conductor of the Festival Choral Society. The present cantata, composed, as already said, for one of the Bradford Festivals, is in its subject similar to Haydn's 'Seasons.' The selection of the words made by Mr. Jackson, ranging from Fletcher and Herrick down to Leigh Hunt and Thomas Hood, has the disadvantage, inseparable from the plan pursued, of an entire want of unity of style. The music has a considerable amount of melody, which, though showing no individuality of thought, is at least free from obvious reminiscences. It is nowhere great; and when the composer attempts a high flight, as, for example, in the Storm Chorus (No. 15), he fails; but many of the numbers are decidedly pleasing. Among the best may be named the duet "The earth smiles greenly" (No. 6); the chorus "Pack clouds away" (No. 9), in which the orchestration (to judge from the indications in the piano score) appears rather vulgar; the part-song (No. 18) "Let us quit the leafy arbour," the trio "Now the pale moon" (No. 19), and the "Harvest Home" chorus (No. 21), all of which are effective. Two waltz numbers, one for soprano solo and one for chorus, are also pretty, though decidedly trivial. As a whole, the cantata is a creditable specimen of good amateur work, and will be found acceptable on account of its pleasing character and only moderate difficulty, to choral societies of limited resources.

Gade's 'Christmas Eve,' though new in an English version, is not one of its composer's most recent works. Under its German title, 'Die heilige Nacht,' it was published at Leipzig some fifteen years ago. The English translation is from the skilled hands of the Rev. J. Troutbeck, which is equivalent to saying that it is excellently done. The cantata is one of Gade's most charming works, full of beautiful melody, and very effectively written both for solo and chorus. The latter is mostly in eight parts, a fact which may hinder its acceptance by small choral societies; but those who have the needful resources will certainly be delighted with it. In popularity it ought at least to equal the same composer's well-known 'Spring's Message.'

We learn from the title-page of Herr Silas's Mass that it was written for the great International Competition of Sacred Music held in Belgium in 1866, and that it obtained, among seventy-six competitors of twelve different nations, the first prize, consisting of a gold medal and 1,000 francs. Though described as "for four voices and organ," it is evident from the foot-note "Full score in MS." that it was originally written with orchestral accompaniment. The work displays great talent and thorough mastery of composition, but there is little inspiration in it. It is very effectively written, and can hardly be called dry; yet there is nothing which particularly impresses either with the sense of power or beauty. Real genius is, however, so rare that, in default of it, we may be content to accept such excellent workmanship as we find in this Mass. It is somewhat remarkable that throughout the work there are no fugues. In the "Pleni sunt coeli" and in the "Dona" we meet with imitative passages in the fugal style, but in neither of these is the subject strictly answered according to the laws of fugal composition. No one would doubt Herr Silas's ability to write a fugue if he wished; but his refraining from doing so under such circumstances is none the less curious.

Mr. Best has earned the gratitude of singers by rescuing from oblivion many of the fine songs to be found in Handel's operas. Public taste has so changed as regards dramatic music that there is hardly the remotest chance of any of Handel's operas being revived in this country, though as we write we recall the fact that, at a series of historical opera performances recently given at Hamburg, his first opera, 'Almira,' was performed as a curiosity. Though seldom containing more than one short chorus, Handel's operas are, as regards their songs, fully equal in merit to his oratorios. It is well known that he frequently, in the latter part of his life, transferred songs from his secular to his sacred works with little or no alteration; and perhaps the first thing that will strike those who examine the present volume will be the identity of style in these songs with those to be met with in such works as 'Samson' or 'Judas Maccabæus.' The selection which has been made by Mr. Best, comprising the finest numbers from twenty-two operas, is most excellent, to specify all the gems to be met with, it would be needful to catalogue the larger number of the titles. The pianoforte accompaniments are very judicious, and faithful to the intentions of the composer. In a few cases Mr. Best has changed the time-notation (e.g. in the songs "Vendi prati" and "Lacrima ch'io piango"), but he is fully justified in doing so, as the old method of writing would have conveyed an erroneous impression to those not accustomed to ancient music. All lovers of Handel will heartily welcome the appearance of the present admirable collection.

THE GARDNER LEGACY.

23, Cambridge Square, Hyde Park, July 4, 1880.

THERE probably never was a time when more attention was given to the improvement of the condition of the blind; and owing to the general diffusion of the Braille system of embossed writing, the young and the intelligent blind of all ages have an instrument of self-culture placed in their hands which much reduces the disadvantages under which they labour. A literature is at their disposal only limited by the necessary bulk and cost of embossed books. Maps and other educational apparatus have also been brought to perfection, and are obtainable at a small cost, while for the old and hard-handed embossed books suitable to their wants are provided on Moon's system.

Never have there been as many blind successfully maintaining themselves by basket-making and other handicrafts, as well as in business, and even in the liberal professions. It is but a few years since not more than about one per cent. of the old pupils of our various institutions succeeded in earning a living by the profession of music, and this proportion is still maintained in many of the older and more backward institutions; but the last report of the Royal Normal College shows that, after careful training, about 80 per cent. of the old pupils of that institution succeed in maintaining themselves.

For the old and infirm blind there are many excellent societies which, by granting them pensions at their own homes, make their lot more tolerable, though what is done in this way still falls short of what is required; indeed, the same want of funds hampers the operation of almost every agency which is doing good work for the blind; and it would be a great benefit to them if sufficient funds existed to place within the reach of all the advantages now enjoyed by a comparatively limited number, and experienced persons were to check waste, and see to the proper application of the money. Such a happy state of things appeared to dawn upon the blind when the late Mr. Henry Gardner in his will provided for all classes of the blind, and appointed five trustees, some of whom were men of whose judgment and capacity there could be no doubt. The provisions were briefly as follows: he bequeathed 300,000*l.* to be invested for the benefit of the blind of England and Wales; the interest is to be applied partly to the education of the young, especially in the profession of music; partly in assisting others in learning and exercising handicrafts; lastly, he did not forget those who from age or infirmity are unable to do much towards their own support, as he directed a portion to be set apart for pensions. The trustees were the Bishop of London, Lord Kinnaird, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, the testator's nephew, Capt. Beaumont, and his only daughter, Mrs. Richardson-Gardner. So far everything seemed satisfactory; but it soon appeared that the trustees could not agree. Mrs. Richardson-Gardner, whose husband is M.P. for Windsor, wished to found a large blind school in that place especially devoted to the teaching of music, while the help to the older blind was to take the shape of almshouses connected with this Gardner institution. The other trustees thought that, as the will directs that the money should be distributed between education (especially musical), handicrafts, and pensions, and since excellent institutions already exist for the carrying out of these objects, it would be more in accordance with the will of the testator, and more to the advantage of the blind, if the money was given to existing institutions, attaching to them the donor's name, as a memorial of his munificence. In this view four out of the five trustees concurred, but Mrs. Richardson-Gardner would not yield, and the decision of the matter rests with the Court of Chancery.

Most, if not all, of the blind institutions of the country have now been consulted, and, although differing on matters of minor detail, appear to be all but unanimous in condemning the Windsor scheme. In the first place the majority of the blind lose their sight after the period of childhood, and being, therefore, incapable of taking up music as a profession, are compelled to practice some form of handicraft, by which many are able to support themselves, while others, though not earning sufficient for their maintenance, can make from five to ten shillings a week, which keeps them from the tedium and demoralization of idleness, and enables them, with a little further help, to live comfortably. All these people, who form the majority of the working class, and who were distinctly provided for by the will of the testator, would be excluded from participation in his bounty if the Windsor scheme be carried out.

For the aged and infirm, who can only be assisted by direct charity, pensions are more acceptable than almshouses. No one who has had much experience among the poor can doubt this, and it has been acted upon with great advantage in the case of Greenwich Hospital and other old foundations. It seems quite unnecessary to return to a form of charity which is condemned by most competent authorities, especially as it is not enjoined, or even hinted at, by the testator. There remains now to be considered the musical part of the scheme. There is no doubt that the late Mr. Gardner was right in attaching great importance to the musical education of the blind. Indeed, during his lifetime he was a liberal benefactor to the Royal Normal College, certainly the foremost and most successful school of its kind in Europe. The most natural and economical way of applying that part of the Gardner fund which is set apart for musical training seems to be to found a certain number of Gardner scholarships, tenable at the college and open by competition to blind children wherever educated. Such an arrangement would ensure the maximum good at the minimum cost, and would stimulate the musical education of the blind throughout the country. The present buildings of the college can accommodate about 120 pupils, and it would be dangerous to train many more just now, as there is a very real risk of sending out more teachers, tuners, and organists than are required to supply the demand; but independently of this objection to a new institution, a large sum would have to be spent in buildings, staff, &c. The founders of the Normal College saw distinctly that the cause of the comparative failure of the older schools was that they did not aim sufficiently high. The founders, therefore, provided an adequate number of new first-class pianos, instead of the old jingling abominations so often seen in schools for the blind. They also spared neither trouble nor money, obtaining the very best resident teachers that could be found, and fixed on a site within easy reach of London, so that the best professors for organ, piano, singing, &c., are easily accessible, and the young men in the tuning department who are sufficiently advanced can go up daily to tune in the London factories. Besides this, the Crystal Palace is within a few minutes' walk of the college, and the pupils have the right not only of attending the concerts, but also the rehearsals given there. It is generally acknowledged that there is no place in England where so much first-rate music can be heard as at the Crystal Palace, and the advantage to the pupils of constantly living in such an atmosphere is incalculable. There is no really great musical school in Europe which is not within easy reach of first-rate concerts, and if this is found necessary for the fullest development of musical talent in the seeing, why should not the blind enjoy similar privileges? Windsor in all these respects possesses no advantages over the neighbourhood of the Crystal Palace, but, on the contrary, is far inferior to it in all the requirements for a musical training college.

This subject has been brought rather prominently before the public during the last week by two concerts, given on June 28th and July 1st, at the Mansion House and St. James's Hall respectively. The performers were the blind pupils of the Institution des Jeunes Aveugles of Paris. Several orchestral pieces were effectively rendered, such as the National Anthem, the 'Marseillaise,' Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March,' &c., while the blind professors performed solos on the clarinet, violin, &c. The concerts were very pleasing, and those who were invited had good reason to thank Mr. and Mrs. Richardson-Gardner, who brought the performers over at their own expense.

On June 30th another concert was given by the pupils of the Royal Normal College at Grosvenor House. This was in many respects different from the French performances. Nothing but chamber music was given, and a great number of the pupils were tested in their knowledge of the piano by having to play difficult classical music, in which they acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of a somewhat critical audience. The first piece was Mozart's Sonata in F major, arranged for two pianos, three movements of which were played, and at the close of each movement the pupils were changed, thus testing the musical capabilities of six pupils in this piece.

The last report states that about eighty per cent. of the former pupils are at the present moment entirely self-supporting. It is scarcely reasonable to expect that a better result will ever be obtained.

Though it is impossible to withhold our sympathy and admiration from our French neighbours who have so lately been our guests, we must not forget that, though the school has been established for nearly a century, and though the blind are deeply indebted to Paris for the introduction and development of en-bossed characters, yet in the great problem of self-maintenance they have been already distanced by our own Royal Normal College, which is not yet ten years old.

T. R. ARMITAGE, M.D.,
Hon. Sec. British and Foreign Blind Association.

"WHEN ALL THY MERCIES"

IN No. cccxlii. of the Spectator, published on Saturday, August 9th, 1712, appeared a hymn in thirteen stanzas, which from that day to the present has always been attributed as an original composition to Addison himself, and wherever it has been printed in the various hymn-books of religious sects in England it has had his name appended to it. There are, however, a few words of introduction to the piece, as it appeared for the first time in the pages of the Spectator, which might have led to a different conclusion: "I have already obliged the Publick with some Pieces of Divine Poetry which have fallen into my Hands, and as they have met with the Reception which they deserved, I shall from time to time communicate any Work of the same Nature which has not appeared in Print and may be acceptable to my Readers." Then follows the well-known hymn, beginning,

When all thy Mercies, O my God,
My rising Soul surveys;
Transported with the View, I'm lost
In Wonder, Love and Praise.

Some time ago, however, having occasion to examine a manuscript volume of political, religious, and satirical pieces in prose and verse among the papers of John Ellis, Under-Secretary of State during the reign of Queen Anne, I came on an original letter, without date, addressed to John Ellis, and signed Richard Richmond, and the writer encloses as his own composition the above hymn, and founds thereon a plea for preferment in the Church. The letter runs as follows:—

For
The Rt. Worshipfull
Mr Justice Ellis
In Pall Mall

Most Honored Sir

Your Piety And Prudence Your Charity and Candor Engrave Your Name for Posterity: As well as the Present Age to Admire Therein Appropriate this Most Excellent Hymn Suitable & to Your Excellent Virtues. And hope it may prove A Motive for Your Honors Christian Benevolence To the Author in Adversity To Comfort the Sorrows in Life. Shall be Thankfull to Heaven And Your Worships Most Gracious hand

RICHARD RICHMOND

The hymn is headed "A Divine Hymn, In Praising The Almighty Jehova For the manifold Mercies And Blessings Wee have Received." The author, Richard Richmond, seems to have been rector of the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill co. Lancaster, from 1690 to 1720, and subsequently patron of the same living. He also, so far as I can make out, was grandfather of Richard Richmond, vicar of Walton, who is curiously described in Baines's 'History and Antiquities of Lancashire' as Bishop of "Boda" in 1773. I suppose that Ellis on the receipt of the hymn handed it over to Addison to make what use of it he pleased.

EDWARD J. L. SCOTT.

Musical Society.

THE Royal Society of Musicians will give its annual performance of the 'Messiah' at St. James's Hall this afternoon, under the direction of Mr. W. G. Cousins. The soloists announced are Mrs. Osgood, Miss Adela Vernon, Madame Bohngbroke, Miss Marian Mackenzie, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Sidney Tower, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Signor Foli. Mr. J. T. Wilby will lead the orchestra, Mr. T. Harper will be the solo trumpet, and Mr. E. J. Hopkins will preside at the organ.

Among the concerts of the week have been that of Mr. Edward Plater, at St. George's Hall, on Wednesday afternoon; Misses Wanda and Jadwiga de Bulewski's morning concert, on the same day, at Willis's Rooms; Mr. J. Niedzielski's concert, at Steinway Hall, on the same evening; Mr. John Thomas's harp concert, at St. James's Hall, on Thursday afternoon; and Mlle. Leona Fabre's Matinée, at the Grosvenor Hall, yesterday.

THE annual prize concert of the students of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Upper Norwood will be given at the Crystal Palace this afternoon, when the pupils will be assisted by the Saturday band of the Palace. Mr. F. J. Campbell, the principal of the school, has, as usual, provided a very interesting programme, including, among other works, Gade's rarely heard fifth Symphony, with pianoforte obligato.

WE have received a prospectus of the Scottish Musical Society, an institution the chief objects of which are stated to be the promotion of the study and practice of music in Scotland, the forming and maintenance of a permanent professional orchestra in one or more cities or towns of Scotland, the conferring of scholarships on persons of musical ability, the giving an opportunity to composers of producing their works, and the general raising of the status of the musical profession in Scotland. The list of its presidents and of the council of the Society is a strong one. It would be premature to express any opinion as to the probability of its success, but the objects it has in view are such as to deserve all sympathy and encouragement.

THE programme of Mr. Charles Halle's last recital yesterday week contained Beethoven's rarely played Variations for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Op. 44; Chopin's Sonata in a minor, Op. 58; and other works of greater familiarity.

ON the anniversary of Robert Schumann's birth (June 8th), his opera 'Genoveva' was performed at Wiesbaden for the fiftieth time in that town. The Musikalisches Wochenblatt remarks that on no other stage has the opera secured so firm a place in the repertoire.

THE experiment tried last January at the Vienna Opera of giving a series of representations of Mozart's operas has just been repeated with great success. The principal singers have been Madame Pauline Lucca, Fraulein Marienne Brandt from Berlin, Madame Prochaaska from Hamburg, Madame Schuch-Proska from Dresden, Mlle. Bianchi, Fraulein Ehn, and Messrs. Walter, Scaris, Rokutanski, and Bignio.

DRAMA

LYCORN THEATRE.—SUNDAY EVENING AND MONDAY, MR. HENRY JEVING. Every Evening except Saturdays at 7.45. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. 25th Time, terminating with the Trial Scene. NEW YORK, DR. IRVING. PORTIA, MISS ELLEN TERRY. (Including with SOLANGE, MISS ELLEN TERRY and MR. IRVING. Saturday Evening July 10th 17th and 24th at 7.30. THE BELLA MATTHIAS DR. IRVING and SOLANGE. (MR. IRVING and MISS ELLEN TERRY). THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. Every Saturday in July at 7 o'clock. WALLACK. MR. IRVING. PORTIA, MISS ELLEN TERRY. — Box Office (Mr. Kuntz) open 10 to 5.

THE WEEK.

ADVERT.—'Forbidden Fruit,' a Comic Drama, in Three Acts. By Dion Boucicault. GAIETY.—Representations of the Palais Royal Company. Célimare le Bien-Aimé, 'Le Panache.' Revue of the Madame Chaumont: 'Geneviève', ou, 'La Jalouse Paternelle.' 'Madame attend Monsieur,' 'Le Homard,' 'L'Affaire de la Rue de Lourcine,' 'Lolotte,' 'Le Roi Candaule.'

ONE merit must be conceded Mr. Boucicault's new adaptation, 'Forbidden Fruit,' which now holds temporary possession of the Adelphi. It is lighter in touch and sharper a dialogue than any previous work of its class which has been seen on the English stage. From that basetting infirmity of the English adapter, the disposition to stop the action of a play while he puts a word through all the forms of torture of which it is capable, Mr. Boucicault is free. When his dialogue is witty, as it occasionally is, the wit, instead of depending upon mere verbal quibble and dealing with subjects outside the interest of the story, is concerned with things, and has direct reference to what is before the spectator. The effect of treatment like this in reconciling the audience to what is extravagant in plot cannot easily be overrated. Action seems seldom preposterous to the extent of shocking our sense of probability except when characters are inconsistent, and act as we cannot conceive of their acting under the conditions presented. To apply, for the purpose of illustration, to small things the standard of great literature is full of characters which conform to no known experience and yet win recognition as true to themselves and so conceivable. Such are, for instance, Ariel and Caliban, and a score of beings, fanciful or human, from Mephistopheles and Don Quixote down to Gulliver or even Munchausen. Our dramatic humourists would fail in the attempt to give us a Munchausen even, did they make the effort, the marsh light which would mislead them from the track being the pursuit of brilliancy of language. When Mr. Boucicault puts a joke into the mouth of one of his characters, it is always appropriate to the individual and natural under the situation.

In his hands, then, a work like 'Forbidden Fruit' wins a favourable verdict, although it presents no scene nor situation with which the playgoing world is not familiar. If there is one thing indisputable with regard to the drama, it is that the public, so far from being offended at repetition, is pleased with it. A réchauffé, well seasoned and served hot, is more to its taste than a newly cooked dish. In the hands of Mr. Boucicault, a plot, the whole idea of which consists in a husband going at night, unknown to his wife, to some public gardens, and finding there his spouse supping à la carte with a stranger, is enough for three acts, the interest in which does not flag. All is, from the standpoint of art, trifling and inconsiderable; it is none the less thoroughly amusing. Action so easy in its absurdity and dialogue so whimsical in its extravagance are not obtained without careful workmanship. What farces and vaudevilles have supplied Mr. Boucicault with characters and incidents it is needless to inquire. In a note which appears on the playbill he confesses to indebtedness to an old French vaudeville. If the vaudeville is more than six or eight years of age, recent writers in France must have anticipated Mr. Boucicault in turning to it. Plays which cannot well be described as old have at least a strong resemblance to it. Not altogether a novelty is 'Forbidden Fruit,' the first performance having been given in 1876 at Wallack's Theatre, New York. In an interpretation which is brisk there is one performance which is thoroughly comic: this is the Serjeant Buster of Mr. J. G. Taylor.

With the arrival of Madame Chaumont a change has come over the performances of the Palais Royal company. Previous to her arrival MM. Geoffroy, Lhéritier, and other members of the troupe were seen in 'Célimare le Bien-Aimé,' by MM. Labiche and Delacour, and 'Le Panache,' by M. Edmond Gondinet. Not especially noteworthy is the piece last named, which deals with matters so exclusively French it is not easy for an Englishman to feel any special interest in them. So strongly flavoured with Gallic salt meanwhile, or with what it would, perhaps, be more just to call Palais Royal salt, is 'Célimare le Bien-Aimé,' it is difficult to understand how it passed through those portals of censure firmly shut upon 'Le Mari de la Débutante' and 'La Sensative.' It was finely played, and its performance inspired high interest. Much has been said concerning the age of the chief members of the Palais Royal company. It is true that one or two of these are older than is desirable in their own interest or in that of the public. Some suggestions of overripeness may be found in the acting of M. Hyacinthe, who, owing to sixty-six years, still plays quasi-juvenile parts, and in that of M. Lhéritier, who is half-a-dozen years older. Our stage would be the richer, however, if we had a single actor capable of exhibiting a performance as droll in its extravagance as the Bocardon of the former, or as mellow and as full of colour as the Vernouillet of the latter. M. Geoffroy as Célimare is inimitable in breadth and in sincerity.

UPON her first appearance in 'Madame attend Monsieur' Madame Chaumont displayed some nervousness and some consequent exaggeration. Not until her second appearance in 'Lolotte,' a piece in which she has not previously been seen in London, was the full worth of her method disclosed, or the fact that there is little falling off from former days established. Lolotte is an actress whom, for the purpose of studying a rôle to be played in amateur theatricals, a lady of rank invites to her house. All proceeds quietly at first, and the baroness is surprised at the distinction of speech and bearing of her guest. After a time Mlle. Lolotte discovers that her hostess is her rival in the affections of her lover. The true woman then discloses herself, and in place of the successful copyist of aristocratic manners we see a true 'fille de Madame Angot.' The scene in which Lolotte abandons her fine airs and shows in her language the blood she has in her veins parodies amusingly the famous scene in 'Adrienne Lecouvreur' wherein the actress confounds and denounces her aristocratic rival. 'Lolotte,' written by MM. Meilhac and Halévy especially for Madame Chaumont, is suited in all respects to her talents and offers them happy opportunity for development. Its first production at the Vaudeville took place last October. Of the pieces which have been given by the Palais Royal company during the present week little needs to be said. 'Geneviève; ou, la Jalouse Paternelle,' an old-fashioned vaudeville of Scribe, served for the first appearance of Mlle. Legault, the most distinguished among the female members of the company of the Palais Royal; and 'L'Affaire de la Rue de Lourcine,' a brilliantly extravagant piece of M. Labiche and two collaborators, was the means of introducing M. Daubray. The artist last named is an excellent comedian. Mlle. Legault has a thin voice, but her style is artistic and natural. 'Le Homard' and 'Le Roi Candaule' are already familiar to the London playgoer.

Dramatic Gossip.

LONDON is at present well stocked with American actors, who may be expected to make before long their appearance here. Among CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Now ready, the SECOND SERIES (complete in 1 vol. price 12s. 6d.) of FAMILIAR WILD FLOWERS. By F. E. Hulme, F.L.S. F.S.A.,

Art Master in Marlborough College. With 40 FULL-PAGE COLOURED PLATES, and Descriptive Text.

"The coloured figures are exquisitely beautiful; they are more like finished paintings than prints, and the appearance of the work is elegant throughout."—Gardener's Magazine.

"The beauty and fidelity of the illustrations to this work, the pleasant mode of instruction on a delightful subject, and the handsome binding, combine to make of it a charming gift-book."—Court Circular.

Now ready, complete in 1 vol. demy 4to. price 35s.; half-morocco, 45s.

CANARIES and CAGE BIRDS, The ILLUSTRATED BOOK of.

With 56 BEAUTIFUL FAC-SIMILE COLOURED PLATES, and numerous Wood Engravings.

"We do not know a book in which so many varieties of the canary family are so brilliantly depicted, and in which they are so fully described and dealt with from every point of view. Its attractive aspect, its splendid illustrations, and its numerous merits as a guide to bird fanciers, ought to make it very popular."—Queen.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d.

OUR OWN COUNTRY. Vol. II. With upwards of 200 Original ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Capital woodcuts of famous and beautiful, historical and legendary sites in Great Britain are joined to spirited and varied descriptions, which develop the main points in the history of each place."—Athenæum.

Now ready, complete in 3 vols. 7s. 6d. each,

GREAT INDUSTRIES of GREAT BRITAIN. With nearly 400 ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Supplies a vast deal of information with regard to many of the great branches of our manufacturing enterprise."—Economist.

"Of the work itself we need not say much; hundreds of pens have borne testimony to its rare worth.... Exceedingly handsome, replete with illustrations, and of absorbing interest to students of industrial and economic science."—Nottingham Daily Guardian.

Now ready, Two Volumes (each complete in itself) of assisted by Eminent Scientific Writers. Each containing about 350 Illustrations and Diagrams. Extra crown 4to. cloth, 9s. each.

SCIENCE for ALL. Edited by Dr. Robert Brown, M.A. F.L.S., &c.,

"All branches of science equally find a place in the work.... The illustrations are very good, and the work entirely maintains its original high standard."—Academy.

NOW READY,

Price 3s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, 5s.

THE MIDSUMMER VOLUME OF "LITTLE FOLKS,"

WITH NEARLY 500 ILLUSTRATIONS, AND A COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

Now ready, price 1s.; or cloth gilt, 2s.

The "LITTLE FOLKS" NATURE PAINTING BOOK.

With numerous Illustrations intended for Water-Colour Painting, consisting of well-known British Flowers, Butterflies, Birds, and Animals.

* * Two Editions of 15,000 copies of this Work have already been disposed of, and a Third Edition is now ready.

"Little Folks' Nature Painting Book contains an excellent series of outline engravings for water-colour painting, with stories and verses. Prizes for competitions are offered, and the books sent in will be given to the children's hospitals."—Yorkshire Post.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO. Ludgate-hill, London.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE LIVE STOCK JOURNAL AND FANCIERS' GAZETTE. A CHRONICLE FOR COUNTRY GENTLEMEN, BREEDERS, AND EXHIBITORS. EVERY FRIDAY, Price 4d.

Contains FULL REPORTS OF ALL SHOWS AND STOCK SALES, AND ARTICLES ON HORSES, CATTLE, SHEEP,

PIGS, DOGS,

DAIRY FARMING,
MARKET GARDENING,
POULTRY FARMING, PASTURES, UTILIZATION OF,
&c. &c.

POULTRY, PIGEONS, AVIARY,
RABBITS,
PETS,

Publishing Office and Office for Advertisements: LA BELLE SAUVAGE-YARD, LUDGATE-HILL, E.C.

A STUDY of SHELLEY.

By JOHN TODD HUNTER.

Author of 'Laurels, and other Poems,' 'Alceste,' &c.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 7s.

C. Kegan Paul & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

In Use at Eton, Westminster, Harrow, Cheltenham College, Christ's Hospital, St. Paul's, Merchant Taylors', City of London School, Greenwich Hospital School, Edinburgh Academy, &c.

DE LILLE'S NEW GRADUATED COURSE.

The Beginner's Own French Book. 2s.—Key to the same 7s.

Easy French Poetry for Beginners. 2s.

French Grammar. 5s. 6d.—Key to the same, 3s.

Répertoire des Prosaïques. 6s. 6d.

Modèles de Poésie. 6s.

Manuel Étymologique. 2s. 6d.

A Synoptical Table of French Verbs. 6d.

Whittaker & Co. Ave Maria-lane.

Ready, in 2 handsome vols. (1,200 pp.), 12s. 6d.

THE LIFE, TIMES, and CORRESPONDENCE of BISHOP DOYLE (J. K. L.), long out of print, but now greatly enlarged and enriched with striking Revelations. By W. J. FITZPATRICK M.R.I.A. See Illustration of Jan. 31, 1880, on its "interest and importance."

J. Duffy & Son, 1, Paternoster-row, and Dublin.

Poap. 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.; royal 8mo. cloth, 3s.

THE DAILY ROUND. Meditation, Prayer, and Praise, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year.

London: J. Whitaker, 12, Warwick-lane.

Ninth Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.L., &c., & Blandford-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.

London: C. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Eighty-eighth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ADVICE to a MOTHER on the MANAGEMENT of her CHILDREN and on the Treatment on the Moment of some of their most pressing Illnesses and Accidents. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.

J. & A. Churchill, London, and all Booksellers.

One Hundredth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

ADVICE to a WIFE on the MANAGEMENT of her own HEALTH and on the Treatment of some of the Complications incidental to Pregnancy, Labour, and Nursing. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.

J. & A. Churchill, London, and all Booksellers.

COMPANION to MUNICH and the AMMERGAU PASSION PLAY.

AN ART-STUDENT in MUNICH. By ANNA MARY HOWITT-WATTS. New Edition, Revised by the Author, with several new Chapters. Of all Bookellers. Crown 8vo. 2 vols. cloth, price 10s. 6d.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Crown 8vo. 2 vols. cloth, price 15s.

STRANGE STORIES from a CHINESE STUDIO.

Translated and Annotated by HERBERT A. GILES, of H.M.'s Consular Service. Of all Bookellers.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Now ready, Second Edition, crown 8vo. price 7s. 6d.

CARD ESSAYS, CLAY'S DECISIONS, and CARD-TABLE TALK. By "CAVENDISH." With Portrait of Author. Of all Bookellers, and at the Librarian.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Demy 8vo. cloth, price 2s. with Map, and Illustrations on Wood.

JUNGLE LIFE in INDIA: or, the Journeys and Journals of an Indian Geologist. By V. HALL, M.A. F.G.S., &c. Of all Bookellers.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 7s.

BOSWELL'S CORRESPONDENCE with the HON. ANDREW ERKINE, and his JOURNAL of a TOUR to CORSCA. By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. Of all Bookellers.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Crown 8vo. 2 vols. cloth, price 10s. 6d.

ERNESTINE: a Novel. By the Authoress of the 'Vulture-Maiden.' Translated from the German by the Rev. S. MARINO-GOLD, Of all Bookellers.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 10s.

A SIMPLE STORY, and NATURE and ART. By Mrs. INGHAM. With a Portrait and Introductory Memoir by WILLIAM BELL SCOTT. Of all Bookellers.

Thomas De La Rue & Co. London.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo. 202 pages, price 7s. 6d., postage, 6d.

THE JESUS of HISTORY and the JESUS of TRADITION IDENTIFIED. By GEORGE SOLOMON.

London: Reeves & Turner, 186, Strand, W.C.

Demy 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE BIRDS, FISHES, and CETACEA COMINGLY FREQUENTING BELFAST Lough. By ROBERT LLOYD PATTERSON, Vice-President of the Belfast Natural History Society, &c. With a Map and Tab. &c.

London: Day & Bogue, 2, St. Martin's-place, W.C. Belinf: Marcus Ward & Co.

Fourth Edition, cloth, free by post, 1s. 2d.

WILLS of their OWN: Curious, Eccentric, and Beauvoulent. With a Chapter on Doctors' Commons. "Let us choose executors and talk of wills." Shakespeare.

This book must not be mistaken for a work lately published under the title of 'Curiosities of the Bench-Room,' the above book being published long before.

London: William Tegg & Co. Paternoster-lane, Chancery-lane, E.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET and CHARING CROSS, LONDON—Established 1783. Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements. Insurances effected in all parts of the World.

JOHN J. KROGFIELD, Secretary.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COMPANY (Limited), having Branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Larnaca (Cyprus), is prepared to transact every description of General Banking Business with those Places.

London, 27, Clements-lane, E.C.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY, 79, FALM MALL.

For LIVES ONLY ESTABLISHED 1807. Accumulated Funds .. £2,043,548 Also a Subscribed Capital of more than .. £1,500,000 Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.

GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

UNION ASSURANCE SOCIETY, Instituted in the Reign of Queen Anne, a.d. 1714. Chief Office, 61, Cornhill, E.C.; Western Branch, 20, Baker-street, W. London.

DIRECTORS, TRUSTEES, &c.

JOHN MORLEY, Esq. Chairman. STEPHEN SOAMES, Esq., Deputy-Chairman. Daniel Byles, Esq., John Thornton Rogers, Esq., William James Ford, Esq., Leonard Slater Esq., John Hibbert, Esq., James Thompson, Esq., Edmund Holland, Esq., Alderman Sir Sydney H. Waterlow, Bart., M.P., Wm. Harcourt, Esq., J. Freeman Hill, Esq., Charles Muller, Esq., R. Heysham Wood, Esq.

Five Insurances falling due at MIDSUMMER should be paid within fifteen days from the 24th of June.

The published accounts give the fullest details as to the position of the Society.

WILLIAM BURROWS LEWIS, Managing Director.

CHARLES DARNELL, Secretary.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, Fleet-street, London.

TRUSTEES.

The Right Honourable BARON CAMPBELL. The Right Honourable VISCOUNT CRANBROOK. The Right Honourable LORD ALSTICL THURGOOD. The Honourable VICE-CHANCELLOR Sir CHARLES HALL. WILLIAM FRANKER HIGGINS, Esq. EDMOND ROBERT TURNER, Esq.

DIRECTORS.

Edward Bailey, Esq., John James Johnson, Esq. Q.C., Francis Thomas Nibbham, Esq., William Rolle Malcolm, Esq., The Hon. Hellyburton G. Campbell, Esq., Richard Nicholson, Esq., John Clerk, Esq. Q.C., Charles Manley Heath, Esq., Frederick George Davidson, Esq., John Hill, Esq., John Deedes, Esq., The Right Honourable Lord Justice Tholker, Henry Ray Fremantle, Esq., Edward Tompkins, Esq., Sir Farer Herschel, Q.C. & P., Sir William Henry Walton, Esq., William Frederick Higgins, Esq., Arnold William White, Esq., Grosvenor Hodgkinson, Esq., Basil Thomas Wood, Esq., Holdsworth Hunt, Esq.

Invested assets on 31st December, 1879, £2,011,751. Income for the year 1879, 474,000. Amount paid in claims to 31st December last, 12,339,407. Reversionary Bonus allotted for the five years ended 31st December last, 6,532.

Aggregate Reversionary Bonus hitherto allotted, £1,198,011. The Expenses of Management (including commission) are under 4 per cent. of the annual income.

Attention is specially directed to the revised Prospectus of the Society; to the new rates of Premium which are materially lower for young lives than heretofore, to the new conditions as to extended limits of free travel and residence, and to the reduced rates of extra Premium.

Business is graded on security of Life Interests and Reversions in connection with policies of insurance.

Prospectus and Form of Proposal will be sent on application.

GRIFFITH DAVIES, Actuary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME, and may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company. Right Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman. Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.

ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM VIAN, Secretary.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO. BANKERS, 29 and 30, MARK LANE, LONDON. (Established 1863.)

CLEARING BANKERS—THE BANK OF ENGLAND. DEPOSITS of 100 and upwards received and Receipts issued—

On demand 3 per cent. per annum. Seven Days' Notice 4 " " " 14 Days' Notice 5 " " " 30 Days' Notice 6 " " " 3 Months' Notice 8 " " "

An Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit Twelve complete Months. Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRESSING BAG. ALLEN'S STRONG DRESS BAGS. ALLEN'S REGISTERED ALBERT DESPATCH BOX. ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 600 Articles for Continental Travelling, post free.

27, West Strand, London.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS. 255, OXFORD-STREET, W. ANTIQUE WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HYGE SYSTEM. The Original, Best, and most Liberal. Cash Prices. No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free. F. MOEDER, 249, 250, 251, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been Rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 40 to 60 Guineas. Drawing-room Suites, from 40 to 45 Guineas. Dining-room Suites, from 70 to 80 Guineas. And all other Goods in great variety.

W. MOEDER, 249, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing

Ironmonger, by appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. SENDS a CATALOGUE GRATIS and POST PAID.

It contains upwards of 500 Illustrations of his unrivalled Stock, with Lists of Prices, and plans of the 30 large show-rooms. As 20, Oxford-street, 1, 1A, 2, 3, and 4, Newman-street, 4, 5, and 6, Fenchurch-lane, and 1, Newman-yard, London, W.

FENDERS, FIRE-IRONS, STOVES, RANGES, &c.

REGISTERED STOVES	from 2 4 6	5 6 8
CHINA-TILED ALCOVE	0 9 0	10 0 0
DOO-STOVES	0 12 0	13 0 0
FENDERS, Brasses or Black	0 9 0	10 0 0
DIET STERIL and ORKILL	2 2 0	20 15 0
FENDERS FRAMES for TILE HEARTH	1 0 0	10 0 0
MARBLE SINKS	3 0 0	10 0 0
PIECED BRASS FENDERS	2 2 0	10 0 0
FIRE-IRONS, Set of Three	0 4 0	10 0 0
DIET RESTS for TILE HEARTH, per Pair	0 12 0	13 0 0

GAS and HOT-WATER WORK.—ESTIMATES FREE.

BEDSTADS, BEDDING, and FURNITURE.

BEDSTADS of Best Make only, from 10s. 6d. BEDDING of every description made on the Premises, and guaranteed of pure materials and good workmanship.

AMERICAN WALNUT matched-made CHAIRS and FURNITURE. A large Stock of CHAIRS, UPHOLSTERY, and SOUND FURNITURE of the above make on view at prices usually charged for ordinary deal.

FURNITURE for BED, DINING, and DRAWING ROOMS, and every article necessary for HOUSE FURNISHING.

EARLY TERMS of PURCHASE. Special Arrangements made by WILLIAM S. BURTON with reference to CREDIT without in any way altering the system of PLAIN FIGURES and FIXED PRICES, thus retaining to the PURCHASER all the advantages of prices arranged for NET CASH, and charging only such interest as may be necessary for the time over which the payments are extended.

COLZA OIL, highest quality 3s. 10d. per gallon.

KEROSENE, ditto 3s. 10d.

WILLIAM S. BURTON.

A POLLINARIS WATER.

"Laurum domusque Apollinaris."—Hercules, Book IV. Ode 2.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

ANNUAL SALE, 6,000,000.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 12, Regent-street, London, S.W.

"SANITAS" and DISINFECTANT. The Fine

Forest Home. The SANITAS PREPARATIONS are in use in more than 200 Hospitals of Health Resorts, &c. Non-poisonous, stainless, agreeable and beautiful. Disinfecting Fluids, Powders, and Household Soaps. Toilet Soaps and Fluids. Tooth and Nursery Powders. Of all Chemists, or of the Sanitas Company, Limited, Medical Green, London E. Testimonials of highest Medical and Sanitary Authorities free. Of universal accuracy as the most perfect Purifier and Disinfectant.

LOTS 110 and 111.—Lot 110, very soft OLD PALE SHERBY, at 30s., and LOT 111, very soft OLD OROLOGO SHERBY, pale gold at 34s. per dozen SHERBY of the old style, much loved by age, very soft and entirely free from the Nervous which has been so detrimental to the consumption of Sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realization and are offered to the Public while on the special Lot List at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction.—THE LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adelphi, W.C. (removed from 48, Strand).

M. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON DENTIST,

57, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.

Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Magnesia as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-ACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

TO CONSUMPTIVES of ALL DEGREES.

Read how a Working Man (W. Saunders, Devonshire Cottage, York-square, London, E.) was cured of Hereditary Consumption by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS. See small books of thousands of cures, to be had of all Agents, price 6d.

Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS give instant relief, and taste pleasantly.

Sold by all Druggists, at 1s. 1½d. per box.

Now ready, price 6s.

THE GENERAL INDEX

TO THE

FIFTH SERIES

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII. 1874 to 1879.

(TWO VOLS. IN EACH YEAR.)

MR. THOMS has kindly contributed the following Preface:—

"If there be any truth in the old proverb, 'Practice makes perfect,' this ought to be a capital Preface, inasmuch as it is the Fifth to an Index of a twelve-volume Series of dear old NOTES AND QUERIES which I have been called upon to write.

"The first three it was my duty to prepare, as I was responsible for the several collections of literary material to which they were the keys. I was urged to undertake the Fourth because to a certain extent the various articles to which it referred had been garnered under my superintendence. But now that I have neither the responsibility nor the credit for the store of varied, useful, and amusing information here fully sorted and labelled ready for use, to be compelled by the importunity, not to say tyranny, of my successor to repeat an old story, and so expose myself to the risk of being taunted by some captious critic with the profanity of Jack Falstaff, and told 'Oh, thou hast damnable iteration!' is a little hard upon an Editor who has 'retired from business.'

"I must, however, run the risk, inasmuch as by so doing I shall put myself in a position to make an acknowledgment which I ought to have made long since. My distinguished and warm-hearted friend Lord Brougham (who, I may here say, had on more than one occasion furnished me with some interesting Replies), speaking to me of the great value and utility of this Journal, was pleased to add that 'that value and utility were increased tenfold by its capital Indexes.' Lord Brougham was right; and if the critic in the Saturday Review who declared of 'that little farrago of learning, oddities, absurdities, and shrewdnesses, NOTES AND QUERIES,' that it was perhaps the only weekly newspaper that would be 'consulted three hundred years hence,' should also prove to be right, I do not hesitate to declare my belief that these Indexes will have greatly contributed to that success.

"What a pleasant retribution it is for one who has for years been so mercilessly quizzed and jeered for exposure of pretended Centenarians to think that he should be credited with the merit of having called to existence a something that shall be continuing its useful existence some three centuries hence!

"But let that pass. I have on more than one occasion expressed my sense of how much these Indexes owe to the care, intelligence, and experience of their original compiler, the late Mr. James Yeowell, as these owe to his successor in this important department. I have not, however, in any of these Prefaces acknowledged as I ought to have done that their existence is due to the suggestion of another highly esteemed friend, one of the earliest contributors to 'N. & Q.,' Mr. William Bernard Mac Cabe, the learned author of 'Catholic History of England.' It was he who, when some few volumes had appeared, urged upon me the advantage of taking stock of the information recorded in them by the publication of a General Index, and the advisability of doing so at stated intervals. The suggestion was one so full of common sense that I did not hesitate to adopt it. I am pleased to avail myself of the opportunity which is thus afforded me of doing justice to my old friend. Readers who share my regret at not seeing his name so frequently as they were met in these pages may feel assured that it is from no diminished attachment to NOTES AND QUERIES, but from the fact that he is, like the original Editor, conscious of increasing years, but, unlike him, careful not to trespass too much on the good nature of the Public."

BOOKS TO TAKE TO THE SEASIDE.

BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work can be had separately, neatly bound and well printed, price 6s. of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

NEW AND POPULAR EDITION, in crown 8vo. price 6s.

PROBATION. By the Author of 'The First Violin.'

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD.

EAST LYNNE. (95th Thousand.)
THE CHANNINGS. (35th Thousand.)
MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES.
THE MASTER OF GREYLANDS.
VERNER'S PRIDE.
WITHIN THE MAZE.
LADY ADELAIDE.
BESSY RANE.
ROLAND YORKE.
LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS.
SHADOW OF ASHLYDYAT.
OSWALD CRAY.
DENE HOLLOW.
GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL.
TREVLYN HOLD.
MILDRED ARKELL.
ST. MARTIN'S EVE.
ELSTER'S FOLLY.
ANNE HEREFORD.
A LIFE'S SECRET.
RED COURT FARM.
ORVILLE COLLEGE.
PARKWATER.
EDINA.
POMEROY ABBEY.

By Miss AUSTEN.

(The only Complete Edition.)

SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.
EMMA.
PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY and PERSUASION.
LADY SUSAN and THE WATSONS.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE THREE CLERKS.

By ANONYMOUS AUTHORS.

THE FIRST VIOLIN.
JOHNNY LUDLOW.

By Mrs. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

A SISTER'S STORY.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

JOAN.
NANCY.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
NOT WISELY BUT TOO WELL.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE HERITAGE OF LANGDALE.
HER DEAREST FOE.
THE WOOLING O'T.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

LEAH: A WOMAN OF FASHION.
OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
SUSAN FIELDING.
STEVEN LAWRENCE: YEOMAN.

By HAWLEY SMART.

BREEZIE LANGTON.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.
CHERRY RIPE.

By Mrs. NOTLEY.

OLIVE VARCOE.

By MARCUS CLARKE.

FOR THE TERM OF HIS NATURAL LIFE.

By Baroness TAUTPHCEUS.

THE INITIALS.
QUITS.
CYRILLA.

By Lady G. FULLERTON.

CONSTANCE SHERWOOD.
TOO STRANGE NOT TO BE TRUE.
LADYBIRD.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS: AND HOW HE WON IT.
UNDER A CHARM.

SECOND THOUGHTS. The New Novel by RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of 'Nancy,' 'Red as a Rose is She,' 'Good-bye, Sweetheart!' &c.

SPOTLIGHT.

"Miss Broughton sets forth in a pleasant and persuasive manner the advantages of beginning with a little aversion. All the personages of the slight but carefully written story are entertaining. A charming freshness pervades the book, and Miss Broughton's ridicule of the 'excessive culture' school is very amusing indeed. Women have in this case, as in almost all cases, the power of solving the social question."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by R. J. FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANCIS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents: For Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn, and Mr. John Macrae, Edinburgh;—for LANCASHIRE, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, July 10, 1880.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

PRICE
15 CENTS PER COPY
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

Products of Forecasts, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, Etc.

BAEDEKER'S TOURISTS' GUIDE-BOOKS.

Norway and Sweden. With 15 Maps and 3 Plans. 10s.

Belgium and Holland. With 6 Maps and 16 Plans. Fifth Edition. 6s.

The Rhine from Rotterdam to Constance (the Seven Mountains, Valley of the Ahr, Niederwald, Moselle, Volcanic Rife, Vosges Mountains, Palatinate, Black Forest, &c.). With 23 Maps and 10 Plans. Seventh Edition. 6s.

Northern Germany. With 15 Maps and 27 Plans. Sixth Edition. 6s.

Southern Germany, Austria, Hungary, and TRANSYLVANIA. With 18 Maps and 24 Plans. Fourth Edition. 6s.

Southern Germany: The Eastern Alps, including the Bavarian Highlands, the Tyrol, the Salzkammergut, Styria, and Carinthia. With 30 Maps, 10 Plans, and 7 Panoramas. Fourth Edition. 6s.

London and its Environs. With 4 Maps and 15 Plans. 6s.

Switzerland, and the adjacent Portions of Italy, Savoy, and the Tyrol. With 34 Maps, 10 Plans, and 9 Panoramas. Eighth Edition. 7s.

Paris and its Environs. With 11 Maps and 16 Plans. Sixth Edition. 6s.

Northern Italy, including Leghorn, Florence, Ravenna, and the Island of Corsica, and Routes through France, Switzerland, and Austria. With 5 Maps and 22 Plans. Fifth Edition. 6s.

Central Italy and Rome. With 7 Maps, 27 Plans, and a Panorama of Rome. Sixth Edition. 6s.

Southern Italy and Sicily. With Excursions to the Lipari Islands, Malta, Ferdinand, Tunisia, and Corfu. With 8 Maps and 12 Plans. Seventh Edition. 7s.

Lower Egypt, with the Fayum and the Peninsula of Sinai. With 16 Maps, 10 Plans, 7 Views, and 76 Vignettes. 15s.

Palestine and Syria. Handbook for Travellers. With 15 Maps, 43 Plans, a Panorama of Jerusalem, and 10 Views. 11s.

The Traveller's Manual of Conversation. In English, German, French, and Italian. Twenty-third Edition. 3s.

DULAU & Co. 37, Soho-square.

THE CLARENDON PRESS LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. By William EDWARD HALL, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. cloth, 31s.

The CONSTRUCTION of HEALTHY DWELLINGS; namely, Houses, Hospitals, Barracks, Asylums, &c. By DOUGLAS GALTON, late Royal Engineer, C.B. F.R.S., &c. Demy 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH PLANT NAMES from the TENTH to the FIFTEENTH CENTURY. By J. EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. Small fcap. cloth, 5s.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST of ENGLAND. By E. A. FREEMAN, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

An ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKEAT, M.A., Birkington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Cambridge. To be completed in Four Parts. Parts I.—III. 4to. 10s. 6d. each. Part IV. In the press.

Minion 8vo. on India paper, best morocco, with clasp, 21s.

The MEMORIAL EDITION of the OXFORD BIBLE for TEACHERS, as presented by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Superintendents of all the Schools represented at the great Sunday School Gathering at Lambeth Palace. This Edition has been specially printed to commemorate the Centenary of Sunday Schools.

Pearl 16mo. on India paper, Persian morocco, limp, 6s.

The CENTENARY EDITION of the OXFORD BIBLE for TEACHERS. This is the smallest Bible for Teachers ever printed. Its 1,416 pages measure barely an inch in thickness, and it weighs 12½ ounces, including binding. It corresponds page for page with the larger Editions, and contains all the additional matter which has made the Oxford Bible for Teachers so famous.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JULY contains:
Coffee Music Halls—Morris and his Critics—The Great Composers Spohr—Music of the Gipsies—The Lyrical Drama. By Professor Macfarren. The Handel Festival—The Opera—Richer and London Musical Society's Concerts—Reviews—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d., post free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JULY contains:
"Give thanks unto the Lord," Anthem (Alto Solo, and Chorus), by William Jackson, Jun. (Masham). Price, separately, 1d.
London: Novello, Ewer & Co. 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

GASWORKS and EXPLOSIONS.—See the BUILDER (4d.) or by post, 4d.) for Articles on the Construction of Gasworks, with View Plans, and Section of Trencher Wells Gasworks, and on the recent Explosion, Views of Jerusalem Lodges—House—Urban Architecture—Survey of Palestine—Brick and Tile Making—History of Stained Glass—Paris—Opening Museums on Sunday, &c.
4d., Catherine-street, and all Newsmen.

'JUDY'S' NEW SEASIDE VOLUME.

Now ready, price 1s.; post free, 1s. 2½d.

THE

HUSBANDS'

BOAT.

CONTAINING

RIGHT FULL-PAGE COLOURED PLATES,

And other Illustrations on every Page; and about

FORTY PAGES of HUMOROUS DESCRIPTIONS of POPULAR

SEASIDE RESORTS.

Judy Office, 80, Shoe-lane, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Second Edition, with Additions and a Glossary, small 8vo. 12s.

ZOOLOGICAL CLASSIFICATION: a Handbook of Reference. &c. By FRANCIS P. PASCOE, F.L.S., &c.
"A useful, portable, and trustworthy compendium of systematic zoology."—Ann. and Mag. Nat. Hist.
J. Van Nostrand, Paternoster-row

Just published, 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

CANON CHARLES CHOLMONDELEY. The PASSAGE of the FOUR TAP. A New Explanation of Romans 11. 11-16, with its bearing on the Internal and External Systems of Justification by Faith, and on the Pauline Views of the Tabernacle Critics and others.
Williams & Morgan, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

The following important Work—quite ready in Manuscript—will be put to press as soon as One Hundred Subscribers, at One Guinea per copy, shall have entered their Names. The price to be raised to One Guinea and a Half on publication.

AN ALPHABETICAL INDEX of the NAMES of all the EXHIBITORS of WORKS of ART who have contributed to the GALLERIES of the INCORPORATED SOCIETY of ARTISTS (1753–1780).

The FREE SOCIETY of ARTISTS (1780–1830); and

The ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS (1767–1859).

Giving the Names in full when they are known, with References to Dates, and the Numbers of the Pictures, &c. as indicated by the Catalogues of the Exhibitions.

By GEORGE W. REID, F.S.A., of the British Museum. Intending Subscribers are requested to send their Name early as possible to Messrs. Trebbear & Co.

London: Trebbear & Co. Ludgate-hill.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY AND THE SEASIDE.

BOXES and PARCELS of the best and newest BOOKS are forwarded Daily from MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY to every part of the Kingdom.

REVISED LISTS of WORKS in CIRCULATION and CATALOGUE of SURPLUS COPIES WITHDRAWN for SALE at greatly Reduced Prices, are now ready, and may be obtained gratis and post free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET.

CURIOSITIES of the SEARCH-ROOM. A Collection of Serious and Whimsical Wills. By the Author of 'Flemish Interiors,' &c. Demy 8vo. 18s.

SOLDIERS of the VICTORIAN AGE. By C. R.

LOW. 2 vols. demy 8vo. 30s.

NEW NOVELS.

EROS: Four Stories. By Sarah Tytler, Hon. Lewis

WINGFIELD, Miss B. M. BUTT, and Miss G. BUTT. 2 vols.

THERE'S RUE for YOU. By Mrs. Arthur Kennard.

2 vols. Second Edition.

The DUKE'S CHILDREN. By Anthony Trollope.

3 vols.

CHAPMAN & HALL (Limited), 193, Piccadilly.

JUST published, price 4d., LETTER to the Right Hon. W. B. GLADSTONE, M.P., on the SPEEDY EXTINCTION of the NATIONAL DEBT. London: E. W. Allen, 11 Ave Maria-lane, E.C.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.; royal 32mo. cloth, 3s.

THE DAILY ROUND. Meditation, Prayer, and Praise, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year. London: J. Whitaker, 12, Warwick-lane.

Ninth Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT O. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.L., &c. 5, Balustrade-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.
London: C. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Eighty-eighth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A DEVICE to a MOTHER on the MANAGEMENT of her CHILDREN, and on the Treatment of the Manner of some of their more prevailing Illnesses and Accidents. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.

J. & A. Churchill, London, and all Booksellers.

One Hundredth Thousand, fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A DEVICE to a WIFE on the MANAGEMENT of her own HEALTH, and on the Treatment of some of the Complaints incidental to Pregnancy, Labour, and Suckling. By F. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S.

J. & A. Churchill, London, and all Booksellers.

Now ready, in 1 vol. cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of the YOUTH of ARTHUR: a First Trilogy of Music Drama. 1 The Advent of Merlin. 2 The Twelfth Battle. 3 The Vow of Revereal. By J. H. STUART-GLENNIE, M.A.

London: Saunders & Co. 22, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

1 vol. crown 8vo. 104 pages, price 5s.

THE CITY of DREADFUL NIGHT, and other Poems. By JAMES THOMSON ("R. V."). "It is at least ten years since a real unmistakable poet has revealed himself in England."—Vide "A New Poet," in Fortnightly Review, July 1869.

London: Reeves & Turner, 138, Strand, W.C.

Ready, in 3 handsome vols. (1 200 pp.) 12s. 6d.

THE LIFE, TIMES, and CORRESPONDENCE of BISHOP DOYLE (J. K. L.), long out of print, but now greatly enlarged and enriched with striking Revelations. By W. J. FITZPATRICK, M.R.I.A. See Athenæum of Jan. 31, 1880, on its "Interest and Importance."

J. Duffy & Son, 1, Paternoster-row; and Dublin.

Now ready, in 1 vol. demy 8vo. with 145 Woodcuts, 15s.

THE PAST in the PRESENT: WHAT is CIVILIZATION? Being the Rhind Lectures in Archaeology delivered in 1876 and 1878. By ARTHUR MITCHELL, M.D. LL.D., &c., Secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

Edinburgh: David Douglas, and all Booksellers.

THE BLANK-PAGED BIBLE.—The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, with copious References to Parallel and Illustrative Passages, and the alternate Pages ruled for MS. Notes. 8vo. cloth, 11s. Turkey morocco, plain 11s. 6d. The great feature of this edition is that the ruled page is always on the right-hand side, thus facilitating the entry of MS. Notes.

S. Bagster & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, London.

Now ready, royal 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ALCOHOL TABLES, giving for all Specific Gravities, 1.00000 to 0.70000, the Percentages of Absolute Alcohol, by Weight and by Volume, and of Proof Spirit. Founded upon the Tables of Fowles and Drinkwater, and calculated.

By OTTER HEINER, F.C.S., F.I.C., One of the Council of the Society of Public Analysts, Public Analyst for the Isle of Wight, and the Boroughs of Dorset and Hyde.

J. & A. Churchill, New Burlington-street.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' BOOKS.

AN EASTERN AFTERGLOW;

Or, Present Aspects of Sacred Scenery.

By W. S. WOOD, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
Demy 8vo. with Illustrations, 16s.
(Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & Co.)

LECTURES AND LESSONS ON ART;

Being an Introduction to a Practical and Comprehensive Education.

By F. W. MOODY, Instructor in Decorative Art at South Kensington Museum.
With Diagrams to illustrate Composition and other matters.
Third Edition, Revised. Demy 8vo. 4s. 6d.

CHANGE-RINGING DISENTANGLED.

With Hints on the Direction of Belfries, on the Management of Bells, &c.

By the Rev. WOOLMORE WIGRAM, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of St. Andrew, with St. Nicholas and St. Mary, Hertford.
Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo. 3s.

THE GOLDEN HIND:

A TALE OF THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA.

(The scene chiefly laid at Studland, Poole, and on the Dorset Coast.)

THESSALE, and other Poems.

By C. E. ROBINSON, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, Author of 'The Cruise of the Widgeon.'
Fcap. 8vo. price 7s. 6d.

BALLADS OF HELLAS.

By Rev. W. H. MILLS, M.A., Head Master of Ruthin Grammar School.
Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Price 3s.

THE AUTOMATIC CALCULATOR.

For cwts., qrs., lbs., at per lb., supplying the Cost of any Weight at any Price up to 11s. 11d.

By JOHN SAWYER.

Price 4s., 2s. 6d., or 1s. 6d., according to size and scope,

THE AUTOMATIC MULTIPLIER.

For performing Multiplication without Calculation, and without writing down any figures except the answer.

By JOHN SAWYER.

BOTANICAL WORKS.

SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY.

Containing a Description and Life-size Coloured Drawing of every British Plant. Edited by T. BOSWELL (late SYME), LL.D. F.L.S., &c. 11 vols. 22s. 6s.; or in 83 Parts, 5s. each.

THE COTTAGE GARDENERS' DICTIONARY.

With a Supplement, containing all the New Plants and Varieties down to the Year 1868. Edited by G. W. JOHNSON. Post 8vo. 6s. 6d.

MY GARDEN: its Plan and Culture.

Together with a General Description of its Geology, Botany, and Natural History. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S. Illustrated with more than 1,500 Engravings on Wood. Fourth Thousand. Imperial 8vo. 21s.

THE BOTANISTS' POCKET BOOK.

By W. R. HAYWARD. Containing, arranged in a tabulated form, the Botanical Name, Common Name, Soil and Situation, Colour, Growth, and Time of Flowering of every Plant, arranged under its own Order. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. limp cover, 4s. 6d.

RAMBLES IN SEARCH OF WILD

FLOWERS, and HOW TO DISTINGUISH THEM. By MARGARET PLUES, Author of 'Rambles in Search of Flowerless Plants,' 'British Grasses,' &c. With 96 Coloured Figures and numerous Cuts. Third Edition. Large post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York-street, Covent-garden.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

Fifth Edition, greatly Enlarged, post 8vo. with Geological Map printed in Colours, and numerous Additions, Illustrations of Fossils, Sections, and Landscapes, 15s.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D. F.R.S.

Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom.

"No better introduction to the principles of Geology could possibly be recommended to the English reader. It is a work of the highest value, and one worthy to take a foremost place among popular manuals of science."—Nature.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

GEOLOGICAL MAP OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

Scale, 12 miles to an inch, also, 26 inches by 42. In sheet, 25s.; mounted on linen, in case, 30s.; on roller, varnished, 35s.

Large post 8vo. with Illustrations and 21 Maps, cloth, 15s.

PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, POLITICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY.

By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S.

Editor of the 'Africa' Volume in 'Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel'; late Leader of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition.

"It is a text-book of geography, revealing in its every page the author's thorough knowledge of the subject he deals with. It can be warmly recommended for the use of schools, and may be perused with profit and pleasure also by those whose school-days are passed and whose knowledge of geography has grown somewhat misty and antiquated, but who, for those very reasons, are desirous of refreshing their memories, and of obtaining, within the limited time at their command a general idea of the extent to which we are at present acquainted with the earth's surface features. Very ample details are given of the natural and industrial productions, and a set of maps very much enhances the interest of these descriptions, and conveys at a glance what even pages of letter-press would fail to render equally clear."—Academy.

Crown 8vo. 270 pp. cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD, IN ARTS, AGRICULTURE, COMMERCE, MANUFACTURES, INSTRUCTION, RAILWAYS, AND PUBLIC WEALTH, SINCE THE BEGINNING OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By MICHAEL G. MUELLER, F.R.S.

Author of 'The English in South America,' 'Handbook to the River Plate Republics,' 'Handbook to Brazil,' &c.

"The work must have cost Mr. Mueller a vast amount of research, for there is scarcely any department of industry upon which he has not touched. The various classes of statistics are so strung together by the author's own remarks as to render the book extremely interesting and instructive reading. The work, as a whole, seems to us to be remarkably impressive and full of instruction, and probably illustrates as no other method could the almost incredible progress of the world as a whole since the beginning of the present century."—Times.

Second Edition, crown 8vo. with 11 Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY OF NATURAL SCIENCE,

AND OF THE PROGRESS OF DISCOVERY FROM THE TIME OF THE GREEKS TO THE PRESENT DAY

For the Use of Schools and Young Persons.

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY,

Author of 'The Fairy-land of Science,' 'Botanical Tables for the Use of Junior Students.'

"It is an admirable book, written with a fulness and accuracy which is rarely to be found in compendiums of this sort. Any one who reads carefully to the end will have got a fair general notion of the vastness of physical science, and the means of pursuing more completely any special region of it which may be desired. It is an excellent book for young people, and one not to be despised by their elders."—Guardian.

Second Edition, Revised, demy 8vo. with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 2s.

THE GREAT ICE AGE,

AND ITS RELATION TO THE ANTIQUITY OF MAN.

By JAMES GEIKIE, LL.D. F.R.S., &c.,

Of H.M. Geological Survey of Scotland.

"The book shows everywhere the marks of acute observation, wide research, and sound reasoning. It presents in a readable form the chief features of the Great Ice Age, and illustrates them very amply from those great tracts of Scotland in which glaciation has left its most distinct and most enduring marks."—Spectator.

London:

EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

In crown 8vo. price 4s. 6d.

A LATIN GRAMMAR for SCHOOLS.

By H. J. ROBY, M.A., Author of 'A Grammar of the Latin Language from Plautus to Suetonius.'

[Next week]

THEOCRITUS, BION, and

MOSCHUS. Done into English, with an Essay on Theocritus and his Age. By ANDREW LANG, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.

"In the general translation, and in the essay which precedes it, the English reader will find the virtue of Theocritus and his fellow-writers excellently expressed. ... As far as any translation can ever supply the want of acquaintance with the original, Mr. Lang's will, we think, supply it."—Daily News.

TRIAL and DEATH of SOCRATES; being the Euthyphron, Apology, Crito, and Phaedo of Plato. Translated into English by F. J. CHURCH. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

"Readers not learned in the Greek language will hail with satisfaction the opportunity now placed in their way of becoming acquainted with the little that is generally known about the man who, if the paradox may be allowed, was undoubtedly the greatest Christian before Christ. ... We shall be glad if our good word may serve to promote the popularity of this little book, which contains one of the most pathetic and, if read aright, edifying books in our history."—Examiner.

MARTIAL.—SELECT EPIGRAMS.

Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., Head Master of St. Peter's School, York. Fcap. 8vo. 6s. "Macmillan's Classical Series."

MARTIAL—SELECT EPIGRAMS for

ENGLISH READERS. Translated by W. T. WEBB, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

"We welcome an attempt to make Martial more familiar to English readers, the more so when the attempt is so careful and meritorious as the volume before us. Mr. Webb deserves much credit for the industry and success with which he has applied himself to the interpretation of the text."—Spectator.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

HORACE.—SATIRES and EPISTLES.

Selected and Edited by the Rev. W. J. F. V. BAKER, M.A., Assistant-Master at Marlborough College. 18mo. 1s. 6d. [This day.]

Fifth Edition, Revised, 8vo. 7s. 6d.

HULSEAN LECTURES, 1845-46.

By R. C. TRENCH, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. [Next week.]

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MORLEY. New Volume:—

POPE. By LESLIE STEPHEN. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"The writer's eminent qualities as a critic, his judgment, his wit, his abundant knowledge of eighteenth-century literature, and his keen enjoyment of literary form, have equipped him handsomely for the task he has undertaken. Readers who have made Pope a study and found his poetry a delight are not likely to accept all the terse and incisive criticisms scattered through these pages. Every reader, however, will acknowledge that an extremely difficult task has been well accomplished."—St. James's Gazette.

NEW NOVEL.—ENGA. By the Author of 'The Harbour Bar.' 3 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"This tale is one of Scottish life and character, and its charm of nationality is maintained with genuine feeling and an unaffected homeliness of diction full of heart and purity. That detestable tone of deliberately assumed vulgarity which enters into the modern love-making of the novel of artificial society does not taint a sentence of this graceful tale."—Daily Telegraph.

"The charm of 'Enga' consists in the richness of its local colour, and in the rare insight and dramatic perception with which the author portrays widely different types of feminine character."—Scotsman.

On ANEURISM; especially of the Thorax and the Root of the Neck. By R. BARWELL, F.R.C.S., Surgeon to and Lecturer on Surgery at Charing Cross Hospital. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

FROM GENERATION to GENERATION. By Lady AUGUSTA NOEL. Crown 8vo. 6s. [This day.]

SANITARY and SOCIAL ESSAYS.

By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Being Vol. XVIII. of the Collected Edition of his Works, now publishing in Monthly Volumes, crown 8vo. 6s.

MACMILLAN & Co. London.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MISS BROUGHTON'S NEW NOVEL.
SECOND THOUGHTS. By Rhoda
BROUGHTON. Author of 'Cometh Up as a Flower,'
'Joan,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

LADY M MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.
FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret
MAJENDIE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.
THE VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha
THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story. In studies of character her book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel writing."
Athenæum.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'ROBIN ADAIR.'
ALAN DERING. By the Hon. Mrs.
FETHERSTONHAUGH. Author of 'Kilcorran,' 'Robin
Adair,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY GRIZEL.'
IN HER MAJESTY'S KEEPING.
By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD. Author of 'My Lord of Straggs,' 'Lady Grizel,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"With a rare discretion and consummate art Mr Wingfield has produced a novel of thrilling interest."
Morning Post.
"Mr. Wingfield has given us a novel that surpasses any of his former efforts, and that is saying a great deal."
Graphic.

Also, immediately,
PIOUS FRAUDS. By Albany de
PONBLANQUE. Author of 'Cut Adrift,' 'A Tangled
Skein,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

THE NEW AND POPULAR EDITION.
At all Booksellers' price 6s.
PROBATION. By the Author of
'The First Violin.' Crown 8vo.

INGOLDSBY LEGENDS;
or,
MIRTH AND MARVELS.

The VICTORIA EDITION.
A Pocket Edition, in fcap. 8vo. with Frontispiece, 2s. cloth.

The (New) POPULAR EDITION.
In crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. cloth.

The EDINBURGH EDITION.
In large type, with 22 Illustrations by Cruikshank, Leech, Tenny, and Du Maurier, especially Re-engraved for this Edition by George Peckham. In crown 8vo. 6s.

The CARMINE EDITION.
In large crown 8vo. With a Carmine border line around each page. 17 Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leech. Gilt edges and bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.

The ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
With 66 Illustrations by Cruikshank, Leech, and Tenniel; and Cover designed by John Leighton, F.R.S. Crown 8vo. cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 21s.

The ANNOTATED EDITION.
A Library Edition, with a History of each Legend, and other Notes. Edited by the Rev. RICHARD DALTON BARNHAM. In 3 vols. demy 8vo. with an Original Frontispiece by George Cruikshank; and all the Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leech 24s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work and the inherent romance of the stories it embodies, will ensure it a widespread popularity. Many of the papers possess an engrossing and popular interest, while all of them may be read with pleasure and profit."
Examiner.

"There are few readers who will not bear testimony to the fascination of these family legends. Nearly fifty stories of English, Scottish and Irish families are narrated in these interesting volumes with such careful reference to authority as the writer a practical biographical historian, is accustomed to pursue."
Daily Telegraph.

"All these tales are deeply interesting and amusing. We strongly recommend the book. It ought to have a place in every library as a standard work."
Court Journal.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE
LIFE (1797-1872). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. [Just ready.]

THE VILLAGE OF PALACES; or,
CHRONICLES OF CHELSEA. By the Rev. A. G. LESTERMAN. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 11s.

"This work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting portion of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit."
Post.

"Mr. Lesterman tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."
Advertiser.

CHEAP EDITION OF SIR GIBBIE.
By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 6s. bound.

THE NEW NOVELS.
FORESTALLED. By M.
BETHAM-EDWARDS. Author of 'Remy,' 'Bridges,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.
G. LINNAEUS BANKS. Author of 'The Manchester Man' 3 vols.
"Woolers and Winners" will add to Mrs. Banks's literary fame. The characters are original, she goes to the very heart of the matter, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting."
Court Journal.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.
3 vols.

"A Modern Greek Heroine" is one of the most clever and original works of fiction of the year. Its freshness and unconventionality are very attractive."
Post.

"This book is thoroughly readable and amusing. The heroine is one of the most charming creations in recent fiction."
Advertiser.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DESART. Author of 'Kilcorran,' &c. 3 vols.

"Lord Desart shows his accustomed liveliness in description, which is never prolonged so as to become wearisome."
Advertiser.

"A bright, lively story, full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volume."
Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.
MOLESWORTH. Author of 'Hathor Court Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.

"One of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one will lay it down unaltered."
Post.

"A very charming story. In these delightful volumes Mrs. Molesworth has produced a capital book."
Graphic.

POET and PEER. By Hamilton
AIDR. 3 vols. Dedicated to Lord Lytton.

"A novel of unusual merit, the work of a cultivated man of the world. It will interest and amuse every reader who takes it up."
Athenæum.

The TENTH EARL. By John Berwick HARWOOD. Author of 'Lady Elvina,' 'Young Lord Penrith,' &c. 3 vols.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each work complete in 1 vol. price 3s. (any of which can be had separately), handsomely printed and bound, and illustrated by Mr. J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDS, R. HUGHES, SANDHORN, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam. Rieck's Nature and Human Nature. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

Barham's History. By Amelia H. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Alce Forster. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Dixon's New America. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Robert Falconer. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Anna's Eventful Life. By O. W. Howells, LL.D.

David Elmhurst. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

John Halifax. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Kannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Sam Rieck's Americans at Home. The Legend Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

A Man in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.

My Little Lady. By F. Francis.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Life of Marie Antoinette. By Sir G. Elliot.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

"Interesting and valuable little volume."

Saturday Review.

"The author treats cookery from two points of view, the hygienic and the artistic, and he writes of it with knowledge and feeling."

St. James's Gazette.

In crown 8vo. price 2s. 6d. cloth gilt.

FOOD and FEEDING.

Sir HENRY THOMPSON, F.R.C.S.

"It is full of useful hints; one can fancy the delight with which friend Catus would have carried off 'Food and Feeding' to his chambers and devoured it in private."
Graphic.

"Every page of the book contains valuable—it would be more correct, perhaps, to say invaluable—knowledge; the work, moreover, is not only a guide to health, for many welcome hints and recipes for agreeable dishes are given."

Sporting and Dramatic News.

"Under the author's regimen we may fare sumptuously every day, with the consciousness that we have partaken of nothing injurious, provided that our food has been chosen and cooked in accordance with the instructions so clearly given."

Court Journal.

"There is not a page in this excellent volume that should be skipped; the menus given for every month in the year will be read with great interest."

Sunday Times.

"So wide is Sir Henry Thompson's fame among Englishmen, that the book on the title-page of which his name figures as the author is certain to achieve a success."
Lloyd's.

"The author has condescended to do a great work in writing this book and no one should be without a copy: it is worth a dozen books of recipes."
Weekly Times.

"Go far to exhaust the subject without ceasing to be popular."
British Mail.

"Quite a fund of information is also afforded on the materials at man's command suitable for food, and of the best means of preparation of the same."

Brighton Gazette.

"On the whole the volume is an excellent cookery-book in the highest and most scientific sense of the word."
Hereford Times.

"It is really a cookery-book that deserves study from the housewife, and demands it from the dyspeptic, the weakly, and from those who are sensible of a failure in their enjoyment of the gifts of nature."
Ipworth Journal.

"The book should be absent from no household, and we are sure that wherever it enters it will soon pay its way."
Edinburgh Review.

HANDY INFORMATION BOOKS.

In crown 8vo. price 2s. 6d. each, cloth gilt.

OUR SONS: How to Start them in Life. By ARTHUR KING

HOW WE ARE GOVERNED; or, the Crown, the Senate, and the House. Thirteenth Edition.

MANNERS and TONE of GOOD SOCIETY; or, Politeness to be Avoided. Fifth Edition.

SOCIETY SMALL-TALK; or, What to Say and When to Say It. Third Edition.

SERVANTS' PRACTICAL GUIDE; for the Use

London:
FREDERICK WARNE & CO.
Bedford-street, Strand.

SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1880.

LISTS.

FURNESSE'S EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE	71
MANAFF'S HISTORY OF GREEK LITERATURE	72
THE SCOTCH EXCHAMBER BOLLS	73
GRAVES'S SONGS AND BALLADS	75
THE PRIZE RING	76
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	77
THEOLOGICAL BOOKS—SCHOOL-BOOKS	78-79
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	80-81
DOY A. FERNANDEZ DE LOS RIOS, THREE UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF HIS ISAAC NEWTON; SALE; MR. TOM TAYLOR	81-82
LITERARY Gossip	83
SCIENCE—LARGE ON THE MANUFACTURE OF SULPHURIC ACID AND ALKALI; LIBRARY TABLE; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS; Gossip	84-85
FINE ARTS—AUDLEY AND BOWEN OF KERICAMIC ART IN JAPAN; LIBRARY TABLE, SALES; Gossip	87-89
MUSIC—THE WEEK; Gossip	90-91
DRAMA—THE WEEK; Gossip	91-92

LITERATURE

A New Variorum Edition of Shakespeares.
 Edited by Howard Furness, Ph.D.—
 Vol. V. King Lear. (Lippincott & Co.)

SLOWLY but surely the great task undertaken by America of providing an edition of Shakespeare authoritative as regards text and exhaustive in respect of comment advances. Five volumes, comprising the four tragedies of 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Macbeth,' 'Hamlet,' and 'King Lear,' have been seen through the press, and Dr. Furness is now, we may safely assume, at work upon 'Othello.' Nine years have elapsed since the first instalment appeared. It is in the very nature of things that a task of this description shall furnish uncomfortable reflections upon the vanity of human effort, since, apart from other conditions, there can be few subscribers to the volumes who can hope to see the completed book grace their shelves. Work of this class can, moreover, never be final, since the very appearance of a new volume of a variorum Shakespeare may furnish occasion for criticism which merits and will obtain a place in following editions. It must not, however, be assumed that future progress will always be at the rate already indicated. When once 'Othello' has seen the light the task of the editor will be easier, since the remaining plays, with the exception of three or four, have provoked less abundant comment and call for less arduous reading.

The system adopted in 'King Lear' is the same as in the previous volumes, with the exception of the first, in which Dr. Furness took as the basis of his text or as the "point of departure" the Variorum Edition of 1821, a course he subsequently abandoned. Following virtually the text of the first folio, which, with all its defects, is immeasurably better than the quartos, Dr. Furness supplies in foot-notes on the same page the various readings "from the earliest quarto to the latest critical edition of the play." When the folio is defective the assistance of the quartos is called in, and the scenes and portions of scenes which do not appear in the first folio are of course given. In such cases, however, the portion of the text not to be found in the folio is marked by asterisks at the commencement of each line. To the "modern Manicheism, the worship of the printer's devil," Dr. Furness claims to have made no absolute surrender. He retains, however, such words as "moe," "and" (when equivalent to if), "vilde," "strook," &c., when they occur in the folio. "It" in place of its and the abbreviation "th" for the are also preserved. That "than" is substituted for the then of the folio is a matter of regret to the editor, who promises that such concession to slovenly readers shall not be made in future.

This method of treatment Dr. Furness justifies on the ground that we do not modernize Spenser. "Is Shakespeare's text," he asks, "worthy of less reverence?" Now we are not going to join issue with the editor upon the course he has adopted. Still it may be pointed out that the analogy between Spenser and Shakespeare which he indicates does not exist. Spenser's phraseology is intentionally antiquated. With a deliberate purpose he stuffs his text with archaisms, and he affects a style of spelling which is a portion of his method in art. There is every reason to suppose that most poems of Spenser underwent the author's personal revision; there is something little short of certainty that no line of Shakespeare's plays enjoyed any such advantage. That the folios did not is obvious, since the earliest bears date long after his death. The spelling, then, of that edition which is held to possess most authority, the first folio, is that either of Heminge and Condell, by whom it was given to the world, or more probably of the printers. What special sanctity attaches to this may not easily be seen. How careless in matters of orthography were most writers of the seventeenth century is, of course, known to students. A single instance which we recall may make this evident to all. We have seen the word "beauty," when it occurred twice in the same line of a drama, spelled so differently that there were only two letters, the b and the t, similarly placed in the two words. If we remember rightly, the line ran the spelling, for which assumably the printer was responsible, suggesting a charge of venality against the fair sex which the author did not intend to bring.

When bewty cherished butie.

It may then be assumed that, although it may be, and probably is, expedient in the case of works intended for scholars to preserve the spelling which comes nearest to that the author was likely to employ, there is no call for slavish reverence of the orthography. The attempt, in editions intended for general circulation, to perplex the reader by needless difficulties is mere folly or perversity.

Where no help to the method of pronunciation is afforded Dr. Furness modernizes the text as boldly as his predecessors. How slight and unimportant are practically the changes that are made may be seen by comparing the text of Dr. Furness with that of Dyce's third edition, known to scholarly readers for its entire trustworthiness. We take a passage with which all readers are familiar. Lear speaks to Cordelia, both of them being prisoners:—

No, no, no, no. Come, let's away to prison:
 We two alone will sing like birds i' th' cage.
 When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down
 And ask of thee forgiveness. So we'll live,

And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
 At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
 Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
 Who loses and who wins, who's in, who's out;
 And take upon's the mystery of things,
 As if we were God's spies, &c.

Thus far Dr. Furness. Dyce gives the same lines:—

No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:
 We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:
 When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
 And ask of thee forgiveness: so we'll live,
 And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
 At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
 Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,—
 Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out;—
 And take upon's the mystery of things,
 As if we were God's spies: &c.

Except as regards punctuation, in which respect Dr. Furness's edition is better than Dyce's as simpler, the difference between these two versions is as slight as may be. In the first folio meanwhile the lines run thus:—

No, no, no, no: come let's away to prison,
 We two alone will sing like Birds i' th' Cage:
 When thou dost aske me blessing, Ile kneele downe
 And aske of thee forgiveness: So weel' live,
 And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
 At gilded Butterflies: and heere (poore Rogues)
 Talks of Court newes, and weel' talke with them too,
 Who looses, and who wins; who's in, who's out;
 And take upon's the mystery of things
 As if we were Gods spies: &c.

As the final s in such words as "aske" and "heere" and "talke," unlike that which occurs in Chaucer, is of no metrical value, and as it has no more significance than the substitution of e for a or cies versed, it would be preposterous to retain it. In Act iii. sc. 4, Dr. Furness reverts unnecessarily to the reading of the folio. He prints thus two lines spoken by Edgar:—

Pillcock sat on Pillcock-hill, Alow; alow, loo, loo, stating in a foot-note, "I see no reason why in nondescript words we should desert the spelling of the original texts, and change 'alow' into Halloo. In such words it is more likely than not that the compositors 'followed copy.'" This is possible, no doubt. If, however, it were the custom in editions without notes to print the lines as now given, there are but few readers who would arrive at an idea of their meaning. The ordinary acceptance of the speech of Gloucester, Act iii. sc. 3, "There is part of a power already footed," that there is a power on foot, is simpler and more authoritative than the explanation advanced on the authority of Schmidt, that "footed" means "landed"—an assertion which appears to rest on no other authority than the fact that the quartos employed the word "landed" in place of "footed."

Apropos of the phrase "last and least," used by Lear (Act i. sc. 1) when addressing Cordelia, a warm controversy has been waged, commentators down to the time of Dyce holding that the words should be "last, not least." Dr. Furness, with White and Hudson, thinks there is a special reference intended to the fact that Cordelia was diminutive compared with her sisters, a creature to be petted. This is plausible enough. It is, however, more probable that the allusion was suggested by the stature of the boy who played Cordelia. Many cases occur in Shakespeare in which a similar allusion springs from a similar cause. See the quarrel between Hermia and Helena in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' and mark the allusion by Hamlet to the increasing stature and more manly appearance of the boy who took female parts in the company of players: "What, my young lady and mistress! By 'r Lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last by the altitude of a chopine. Pray God your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring." It is possible that viragoes like Regan and Goneril were played by members of the company who, though still young, were not mere boys. It would be, indeed, a matter of interest to ascertain how many youths formed part of a company in the time of Shakspeare.

In the difficult speech spoken by Cordelia (Act i. sc. 1), in which she asks her father to tell France and Burgundy that

It is no vicious blot, murder or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonoured step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favour,

the editor makes a desperate plunge, printing in his text the emendation of Mr. Collier, "It is no vicious blot nor other foulness." In defence of this course he has a note commencing, "If ever emendation be necessary, here seems to be the occasion. Rather than suppose Cordelia could be accused of murder, I would adopt Walker's far-fetched 'umber' or Keightley's prosaic 'misdeed.' Instead, we have what is to me an emendatio certissima, restoring the rhythm, according with the ductus literarum, and offering no violence to the consistency of Cordelia's character." This is all very well. When, however, the text affords a meaning which is clear and distinct, all emendation, however certain it may appear to an individual, is to be avoided. The phrase "restoring the rhythm" is surely misapplied, since the line as it stands in the play is perfectly rhythmical. Of emendations it may almost be said, as of derivations, that the most plausible are the most dangerous. Cordelia may well employ the word "murder," holding that her suitors France and Burgundy will suppose the offence visited by so extreme a punishment must indeed be terrible.

In opposition to the view generally maintained, Dr. Furness holds with White that the Fool in 'Lear' is not a boy, but a man—"one of the shrewdest, tenderest of men, whom long life had made shrewd, and whom afflictions had made tender; his wisdom is too deep for any boy, and could be found only in a man removed by not more than a score of years from the king's age." He seems to forget that to speak sharp things has been a portion of the training of a fool, and that one promoted to the office had doubtless natural qualifications. A share in the burden of humanity is doubtless the lot of the old, but is not their exclusive possession. The wisdom of the Fool and his devotion are both preparations for his early death: "Whom the gods love die young." The constant use by Lear of such phrases as "my pretty knave," "my boy," and the like, is not to be explained away. In a note on "seven stars," Act i. sc. 5, Dr. Furness asks if the Fool may not refer to the "Great Bear, whose seven stars are the most conspicuous group in the circle of perpetual apposition in the northern hemisphere." More probably the allusion is to the mystic affinity assigned the more brilliant of the celestial luminaries—an affinity indicated by Chaucer in the prologue of the 'Chauncounes Yemens Tale,' 272-6:—

The bodies seven, eek, lo hem heer anon.
Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe;
Mars yren, Mercurie quykalver we clepe;
Saturnus leed, and Jubitur is tyn,
And Venus coper, by my fader kyn.

The interpretation of two lines on p. 119, Act ii. sc. 2—

EDMUND. How now! What's the matter! (Parting them.)

KENT. With you, Goodman boy, if you please; come, I'll flesh ye; come on, young master—will seem easier if with the form of address there employed is compared that of Macbeth to Donalbain ('Macbeth,' Act ii. sc. 3):—

DON. What is amiss?

MACB. You are, and do not know't.

A further instance of accepting a suggested reading when the first editions are intelligible is supplied at p. 137. Act ii. sc. 3, Edgar speaks

Of Bedlam beggars who with roaring voices
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; &c.

For the word "strike" in the second of these lines, which is the reading of all the early editions, Dr. Furness, acting on the suggestion of Walker, substitutes "stick." The line becomes then easier to modern comprehension. If, however, in the case of Milton's 'Ode on the Nativity' it were suggested to read instead of the two lines,
And waving wide her myrtle wand
She strikes an universal peace through sea and land, she "signs" an universal peace, &c., would Dr. Furness have accepted the reading? It is only in the case of Shakspeare that the debauch of emendation finds acceptance.

Here we must draw the line in our comments, though but a small portion of the play has been investigated. The subject, however, is practically inexhaustible. It is pleasant to have in one volume the utterances of men like Coleridge, Johnson, Lamb, and other critics and commentators upon Lear, together with a full record of the views that have been taken by actors like Kean or Devrient. Everything that can well be said concerning Lear has now been said. It seems worth while, however, to notice how full-blooded and high-mettled old men habitually are in Shakspeare. 'Romeo and Juliet' is supposed to be one of the earliest of the tragedies and 'King Lear' one of the latest. Who, however, can fail to see in old Capulet a species of prototype of Lear, equally hot-blooded and violent, and equally ready when his paternal wishes are disobeyed to turn upon the daughter whom he loves?

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die i' the streets.

The language and the temper are analogous to what we find in Lear when he speaks of Cordelia as Unfriended, new adopted to our hate,

Dower'd with our curse and stranger'd with our oath.

The same kind of impetuosity, though there is more cause and justification for it, distinguishes Leonato and Antonio in 'Much Ado about Nothing' when they challenge Claudio and Don Pedro, and it is ready to break out in Brabantio. So common is it, indeed, in Shakspeare that the very play before us supplies two instances in addition to Lear. Gloucester's readiness to accept against Edgar the word of Edmund, who seeks to supplant him, and the violence of his language and actions are intended to set off Lear's kindred behaviour. Kent, too, is as impetuous as Lear, and the manner in which he treats Oswald shows what fire still burns within his frame. That such mettle-someness was more current when each man had in his time followed the profession of arms than now it is may, of course, be assumed. Shakspeare seems, however, to have always had a respect for age greater than is displayed by any of his contemporaries. It is Lear himself who, with the magnificent adjuration to the heavens—

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old—urges them to espouse the cause of old age.

A History of Classical Greek Literature. By the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, M.A. 2 vols. (Longmans & Co.)

Few books have been more wanted of late years by students of the classics than a brief encyclopædic manual, giving a careful résumé of the most recent biographical and critical work, and at the same time indicating characteristic passages of the less known authors. Mr. Crutwell last year supplied the want for Roman literature, but Prof. Mahaffy's volumes are the more opportune as the mass of Greek literature and its bibliography are larger than those of Latin. Admirable works, it is true, already existed on the same subject in English, but their information on many important topics is now out of date, they are rather too voluminous for students worried by the stress of impending examinations, and, besides, a prejudice has arisen in this fastidious generation against the literary criticism of a colonel and against any criticism whatever by the late Dr. Donaldson. Except Prof. Jebb, perhaps no writer could be named who would so well discharge the manifold duties of a guide to Greek literature as Mr. Mahaffy. An excellent scholar, a practised littérateur, a traveller, and a man of very large general culture, he writes with full knowledge of his subject and with enthusiasm still untainted by the pedantry that too often clings to the collegiate cap and gown. His book, in fact, apart from its intrinsic value as a history, is excessively entertaining. Its pages are everywhere enlivened by the author's well-known omniscience, as, for instance, where he compares the metaphysical abstruseness of Plato's 'Phædon' with the contrapuntal difficulties in the 'Requiem' of the dying Mozart, or where, in discoursing of Aristotle's tendency to digression, he remarks in a note that he knows of no great discoverer who puts his points so neatly and formally as Champollion in his 'Précis du Système Hiéroglyphique.' Nor is the piquancy of such information at all spoiled to the humorous reader by uneasy doubts "how one small brain could hold all he knew," for Prof. Mahaffy's illustrations are always such as no one would care to verify. The incidental egoistic gossip is still more amusing, and undergraduates will be pleased to learn that Prof. Mahaffy was once presented with a photograph by the Earl of Leicester, and to observe that he has been to Syracuse and Colonos, and that a man of his parts disdains to be identified with "the critics." We have called attention to these points in order to show how eminently readable the book is, and to make it so was the more difficult because in a short treatise on so vast a subject there was obviously little room for originality of thought or brilliancy of style.

By "literature" Prof. Mahaffy means artistic writing, in which the form is of importance apart from the matter, and by "classical" Greek literature he means, practically, works produced before about 250 B.C. Consequently he does not profess to discuss the science or philosophy of Greece or to give any account of such late authors as Polybius, Plutarch, or Lucian. He devotes his first volume to poetry, the second to prose, and in each the authors are treated in their chronological order, the only exceptions worth noting being that Apollonius is taken immediately after the Homeric hymns and Theocritus is discussed parenthetically, after the account of Sicilian mimes and before the history of Attic comedy. When this is said, nothing remains to be done, within the scope of this article, but to run hastily through the two crowded volumes, noting here and there the author's original views upon special topics, which, indeed, are not inconspicuously labelled, or his general opinion of a writer, which is usually more covertly expressed. Prof. Mahaffy's belief on the subject of Homer may be summarized shortly as follows. He holds that there was a famous rhapsode called Homer, who lived about 800 B.C. near Smyrna, "and in contact with both Æolic and Ionic legends." The poems of this Homer being in especial favour, certain later rhapsodes enlarged them into the Iliad, the plot of which was in the main suggested by an older epic on the subject of Meleager, alluded to by Phoenix in Il., ix. 529, sqq. The minutiae of the story, however, could not have been elaborated without the assistance of writing, and it is probable from the evidence that writing was in considerable use about 700 B.C. The success of the Iliad suggested the Odyssey, which was constructed later out of older stories about Odysseus and Telemachus. It will be seen that this theory differs in some important respects from every other, but has most general resemblance to Grote's and most antagonism to Mr. Paley's. Criticism here would, of course, be out of place, but it may be of some practical use to remark that Prof. Mahaffy does not collect all the evidence obtainable for the antiquity of writing, as he omits a very strong argument which may be derived from the history of the Latin alphabet. It is part of the author's theory of the development of Greek poetry "that each species of composition was thoroughly exhausted when the next in order sprang up," and that the new species is merely the result of "a periodical return to folk-song." Hence he sees nothing specially remarkable in the sudden outburst of lyric poetry after the epic age. But this easy-going theory ignores the real difficulty, which is that the rhapsode, who seems to have been little more than a strolling reciter, suddenly gives way to poets, who claim to be endowed with more divine insight and more passionate susceptibilities than ordinary mortals; and this fact must clearly have suggested itself to Prof. Mahaffy when he speaks of "lyrical" and "personal" poetry as convertible terms. We can suggest no other link between these two phases of poetry among the Greeks than this, that the later rhapsodes aspired to win fame by the number and vividness of their similes, and so acquired a personal reputation apart from that of their répertoire; and our theory, if it be true, would account also for that excess of similes in the Iliad which Mr. Mahaffy himself notices. After a rather depreciatory account of Pindar the reader comes to the history of tragedy, and here it may be observed that our author gives his intellectual esteem to Sophocles, his awe to Æschylus, but his closest and warmest sympathy to Euripides. Comedy is then discussed, but nothing calls for further mention, except that Prof. Mahaffy is of opinion that the reputation of Menander is exaggerated, and that the greatest loss to Greek literature is that of the older lyrists, such as Alcæus, Sappho, and Mimnermus. Before dismissing this volume it seems worth while to suggest that some account of the Greek dialects, and of their relative dignity in ancient times, might well have been inserted. It is surely somewhat surprising that an Attic tragedian should condescend to express his most fervent thoughts in Doric, whereas in other countries one dialect, e.g., the Latin in Italy, the East Midland in English, the Parisian in France, the Castilian in Spain, has become the invariable literary tongue. The second volume commences with the customary notice of the old codes and the logographers, and then proceeds to treat of the prose writers from Herodotus to Aristotle in strict chronological order. There is little to remark on this portion of the work, except that the author is decidedly of opinion that Thucydides' logical power and the consequent value of his speeches as expositions of policy have been grossly overrated, and is rather inclined to depreciate both the morality and the critical power of Aristotle. It is manifestly impossible within the limits of our space to do anything like justice to Prof. Mahaffy's learning or to the ability with which he has compressed his facts into a narrow and convenient compass. Of his merits his book itself is the best and the only possible advertisement. Were the criticism as bad as could be, the paragraphs on bibliography would redeem it and make the work valuable; but the criticism is good and honest and happily expressed, and may be recommended with the heartiest approbation. In conclusion it should be added that the first volume is enriched by Mr. Sayce with a remarkably neat essay on Homeric diction, where the intermixture of various dialects and of real and spurious archaisms is admirably dissected.

The Erchequer Rolls of Scotland, A.D. 1264-1408. 3 vols. Edited by George Burnett. Text of Vol. I. edited by Dr. John Stuart. (Treasury Publications.)

To the popular mind the history of Scotland is little more than a series of romantic biographies; nevertheless, it is tolerably obvious that Scotsmen no more than the inhabitants of other countries could live on sword blades, and if they did win and maintain their independence, they had not merely to shed their blood, but also to pay heavy dues, and sometimes even to starve. The three portly volumes before us present the dismal side, and contain a tragedy of finance. From the Treaty of Northampton till hard upon the close of the fourteenth century the hands of England were scarcely ever well off the revenues of her northern neighbour. There was, first of all, the penalty of 20,000*l.* to be raised after 1328. Quick on Randolph's death came the seizure of the crown by Balliol, immediately followed by the disastrous battle of Halidon Hill, and by an almost total absence of revenue during the young king's residence in France. Within a few years after his return, the battle of Durham threw Scotland again into a state of disorganization, from which she was only relieved in 1357 by a contract to pay 100,000 marks for the ransom of her gallant and spendthrift sovereign. These volumes are lightened by few gleams of quiet prosperity, and the voice of the nation is heard crying from under its burden, even in these dry accounts, till at last, towards the close of the fourteenth century, the back of Scottish commerce cracks under the strain of taxation. In addition to this pressure there was the terrible famine of 1340, when cannibalism is said to have existed in Scotland; and there were pestilences during the next decade and afterwards which utterly destroyed the poultry and more than decimated the people. Pathetic enough is the following entry in the account rendered by the two propositi of Cullen in 1340:—

"To a chaplain ministering in the church of Cullen for the souls of the king and queen..... et ex nunc nihil quoad hoc, quousque Deus dederit tempora prosperiora."

Mr. Burnett deserves thanks for presenting to us these valuable records. They cover a few years of the reign of Alexander III., a period which Scottish chroniclers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries looked back upon as "the good old times"; the years 1288-1290; and thereafter, with some gaps, from 1326 to 1406, when the reign of the lame, imbecile, and broken-hearted Robert III. had its pitiful close. A great part of the material is already familiar to students of Scottish history through the 'Compta Camerariorum Scotie,' edited by Thomas Thomson, but these volumes will certainly displace that rare and costly work because of their several merits—their extraordinary cheapness, the fact of their being printed without contractions, their elaborate indexes, the addition of many valuable rolls, and the extensive and acute prefaces furnished by their editor. Of the fifty-five rolls in the third volume, as many as twenty-eight have been brought to light since the appearance of Thomson's 'Compta,' eight of which, containing accounts by the Chamberlains, Sir John Lyon and Robert, Duke of Albany, were discovered "in private custody." By the way, Mr. Burnett omits to mention the former depository of these national muniments, and whether they have been recovered for the public by being placed in the Register House in Edinburgh.

To give an idea of the value of these records, we must premise that the office of Chamberlain in Scotland, which was not hereditary, was of higher dignity than in England, and that, until the distribution of his duties and power by James I. in 1424, the entire revenues of the Crown were under his control. It will thus be obvious how wide a field is covered by the accounts of the Chamberlain and the subordinate collectors, and how broad is the light thrown by them on the condition of the country at large as well as on the domestic habits of the sovereign.

"The ordinary sources of the royal revenue may be described generally as consisting of the rents of the Crown lands, with the payments due from the thanages, the casualties of ward, marriage, relief, and non-entry, exigible from time to time from the Crown vassals, the fines imposed by the judiciary and sheriffs, the escheat of attainted persons, the fermes or mails of the royal burghs, and the customs on merchandise, with occasional compositions for letters of gift, remissions, and legitimations, and castle wards.....Taxation was an extraordinary source of income, to which the king was not expected to have recourse except on the occurrence of great national emergencies. Out of the revenues in his hands the Chamberlain had to provide for all the different branches of public expenditure, including the charges of the royal household, and such military expenses as were not covered by the obligation under which the community lay to defend their country. He further exercised a jurisdiction over burghs: it was one of his duties to hold a yearly ayre or circuit, for the purpose of regulating all that related to their trade and good government."

In these volumes there is, of course, a large amount of material for the genealogist, the local annalist, the student of ecclesiastical institutions, and not a little by the way of lighter gossip to amuse those who are interested in royal scandal, in the boots, books, cooks, and tombstones of kings, and in their birthdays, playing, joustings, hunting, and other festive occasions and occupations. But all these are parerga; the great subjects are the revenue of the country, and the condition of the people as revealed by the accounts of the sheriffs, customars, and bailies.

These local officers were not only collectors, they were also direct payers of charges against the Crown; hence it will be easily understood that the Chamberlain's own accounts, as presented to the auditors appointed by the sovereign, do not exhibit anything like the entire revenue, but merely the surplus from those local payments, his own expenditure out of his receipts, and, finally, the balance of the entire revenue. The total revenue is to be obtained by summing up the amounts collected by the various officers throughout the country. By means of tables giving the entire revenue and expenditure, always separating the returns from the burghs and the returns from other quarters, we should have an easy mode of ascertaining the progress of the country. Mr. Burnett has preferred to be discursive; and, if the idea ever occurred to him of the importance of a clear and systematic presentation of such results, he may have been driven from the task by the extreme paucity of sheriffs' accounts. Were there space for such discussion, we might present a series of summaries of Chamberlains' accounts, showing fluctuations of income and expenditure of quite an astounding character; and, further, we should discover the changes in the source of revenue, from the time when it was mainly derived from the Crown lands till, consequent on their dilapidation, it was almost wholly drawn from the customs of the burghs. The Chamberlain of Alexander III. presented his account at Martinmas, 1264 (accounts were generally presented annually, at the close or in the early months of the year, from December to April); and for a period apparently covering the three preceding terms his receipts were over 5,300*l.*, out of which 2,224*l.* went for household expenses, 795*l.* for the queen's pin-money, while the other payments, for national as well as domestic purposes, more than swallowed the remainder. The Chamberlain's receipts from June, 1328, to August, 1329, amounted to more than 12,000*l.*, yet there was a deficit of more than 1,000*l.* In reference to David's sojourn in France, Mr. Burnett writes:—

"The King and Queen of Scots," says Froissart, 'had everything that they wanted delivered to them, for but little came from Scotland to support their state'; an assertion hardly corroborated by the accounts. That the King of France was generous and hospitable is true; also that he sent material aid to Scotland in the way of ships and men at arms. In addition to 1,000*l.* given him before setting out, it appears that David received from Philip at various times during his stay in France sums amounting in all to 2,200*l.* It is, however, surprising to find poor distracted Scotland managing to remit for the expenses of the kingly household between May, 1334, and January, 1339, 40, sums amounting to 4,333*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, in addition to which continual supplies of salted salmon from Aberdeen and elsewhere were provided for the royal table."

It is puzzling to know how Mr. Burnett gets the sum, 4,333*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*; and the salmon, we fear, were not in addition to the receipts of the Chamberlain stated in money, but were actually valued and entered in the account according to that estimate. The doubling, trebling, and quadrupling of the customs, with the other means of raising the revenue adopted later in David's reign, proved insufficient to meet the instalments of the ransom due to England; and the absorption by the king of the revenue allotted for this end is believed by Mr. Burnett to afford in itself an adequate explanation of the rebellion of Douglas and the Steward in 1363. He shows that the rebellion was not preceded by David's proposal to the Parliament that, in case of his failing to have male issue, an English prince should be placed on the Scottish throne; and in the preface to vol. iii. he maintains, in opposition to the common opinion (which he had himself adopted in the preface to vol. ii.), that 24,000 marks of the ransom were never paid. The Chamberlain's account presented in February, 1370/1, showing receipts of 15,359*l.*, is a flagrant example of misapplication of special funds; for with this ample revenue only a portion of the instalment due was set apart. In this year we find the sum of 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* devoted to the payment of the expenses of Agnes of Dunbar, who, although the daughter of a heroine well known in Scottish story, does not appear to have been altogether a saint. After David's death the Chamberlain's receipts dwindled down so low as to become little more than 1,000*l.*

The strictness of the audits is strikingly apparent throughout the various volumes, and it may sometimes be observed that the rights of the country as against the Crown were watched with jealousy. Although King David had granted certain remissions, the auditors in 1359 order the sheriff to distrain for the second tithes on behalf of the prior of Restennet, "quia dominus noster rex nihil remittit nisi quod suum est"; and in 1387 it is stated of Robert II. that "fecit levare usus suos indebite per suggestionem quorundam." The name of John Barbour, author of 'The Bruce,' frequently appears in the second and third volumes as an auditor and clerk of audit, and in connexion with pensions he received from the Crown. A list of the Chamberlains down to 1406 is furnished by Mr. Burnett in vol. ii. It is scarcely necessary to state that much information will be found regarding the fees of the chief officers of state, and regarding the lesser officers of the royal household and the subordinate officials throughout the country.

It would be impossible even to mention in an adequate way the leading events and persons on which and whom these records cast more or less light. With such points as the battle of Largs and the subsequent negotiations with the King of Man, the rebellion of the father and grandfather of King Robert Bruce, the marriage and divorce of Margaret Drummond, commonly known as Margaret of Logie, mistress and wife of David II., and the alleged murder of the Duke of Rothesay, Mr. Burnett has dealt at considerable length. But there are few subjects of those which suggest themselves when we think of mediæval Scotland that are not in some way alluded to in these records. Things so different as guns and frying-pans will be found here almost side by side; the problems about waiting, thanages, and abthameries thrust themselves among our notes on eels (in later days abhorred in Scotland), herrings, salmon, porpoises, and other articles of food. We find minstrels and jesters relieving the monotonous labours of the auditors, and doubtless pleasant for advocates of women's rights to learn, women acting as bailies and customars at the close of the fourteenth century, about the same period that 13*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* was expended by the Crown for making an enclosure on the Inch of Perth for the famous duel of two Highland clans. Strangely enough, these records are not without touches of humour or pathos, e.g., in the pungent and ironical "Responsiones" of Adam of Buthirgask, the judiciary and previously chamberlain-depute, to the charges advanced against him by Reginald More, Chamberlain to David II., and a man of somewhat questionable integrity, or in the close of More's account in 1340—"In factura scaccarii, cum panno, co-opertorio, et percameno, xxs. Et clerico scribenti rotulos, duplicando, xxs." to which is appended the clerk's lament:—

"Et memorandum, quod dictus Reginaldus nihil solvit adhuc de feodo predicto, sibi allocato in compoto suo pro scriptura rotulorum; et sic in vanum laboravit clericus supradictus."

Mr. Burnett will pardon us for calling his attention to the following statement:—

"While Bower and the 'Extracts o variis Cronis Scotie' place the murder [of Sir John Lyon] among the events of 1382, and Crawford among those of 1383, it is shown by the rolls to have occurred on the 4th of November, 1381."

The rolls distinctly place it in 1382 (iii. 657), and Lyon actually rendered an account, contained in this same volume, in March, 1381/2. The sum of 30,000*l.* (i. cv) should be 30,000 marks. How does Mr. Burnett know that Eugène de Garancières accidentally burned a house or houses in Aberdeen (i. exlviii)? About that time many inhabitants of Aberdeen, where the act was committed, attached themselves to the English. The editor has rightly judged it best to treat patronymics as surnames; but it seems strange that John Gibson, bailie of Bute, doubtless the person who assisted the young Steward in escaping with his family muniments from Bute to Dumbarton, should appear in the index as "Gilbert's son" and "son of Gilbert," and that Robert Davidson, customar of Aberdeen and the well-known hero of Harlaw, with his probable ancestor, William Davidson, should become "David's son." The abbey of Cupar is certainly not in Fifeshire. The discovery of Bruce's tomb (should not Mr. Burnett, notwithstanding the jubilation of the time and the wondrous waste of pitch, have written "the supposed discovery"?) took place in 1818, not in 1821. Appropos of Bruce, Mr. Burnett tells us that "various references occur in the accounts to a lion, which appears to have been a pet of the warrior king." Perhaps the lion might soon be found disporting itself in our popular histories if this statement were allowed to pass as true; and it may be as well to observe that there is no ground for asserting that Robert Bruce even saw the lion which Mr. Burnett supposes to have been a favourite, for the first mention of it occurs in an account of the customars of Perth beginning two months after the king's decease. When the editor informs his readers that "St. Monan is understood to have been one of a company of Hungarian missionaries to the Picts in the end of the eighth century, who suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Danes in the island of May," he seems unaware that this is simply a myth, the origin of which is an interesting but quite solvable historical puzzle.

Irish Songs and Ballads. By Alfred Perceval Graves. (Manchester, Ireland & Co.)

SINCE the author of 'Songs of Killarney' seems to have set before himself as the goal of his ambition the reproduction of the peasant poetry of his native land, with as much of the national maîsoté, fancy, and artlessness as he can command or is by nature gifted with, he has reason to regret that his lot was not cast in the beginning of the present century, rather than in its fourth quarter. He would then have been well-nigh first in the field, and stood in a different position with respect to Irish literature from that he is now likely to occupy. As it is, the ground has been cut from under his feet. Such a number of writers of the Sam Lover stamp have familiarized us with the saucy, fanciful, or facetious prattlings of Pat about his colleen, Mary or Moll, his pig, his praties, and his priest,—prattlings already more than half lyrical as one hears them from the cabin door or along the roadway,—that we would rather refer to the 'Cabinet of Irish Literature' of the late Mr. Read, recently finished by Mr. T. P. O'Connor, than attempt any enumeration of these bards. Mr. Graves, when he is not an echo of some one of them, is generally an industrious gatherer of the crumbs which they have left. In the present volume he gives not only the words, but the melodies also to which he has set them in a musical appendix, and invites by so doing a comparison with Moore, wherein he stands at a considerable disadvantage. He has, as he says in an introduction, taken only such melodies as were untouched by Moore. These he found mainly in Bunting's collection, side by side with those which he was bound to look on as fair but forbidden fruit. Some others are culled from Petrie's and Hoffmann's later collections. Moore probably made a fair selection of the gems of Irish melody; few of those presented here have more than the average quality of Hibernian tunes. They lose, doubtless, sometimes through not being harmonized. But for singing the lyrics which Mr. Graves has adapted to these melodies are often of quite disproportionate length, and, unless mercifully curtailed by the singer, must have the effect of long yarns chanted to a monotonously recurring rhythm.

On the whole, it is perhaps a pity that Mr. Graves did not give greater prominence to the musical part of his book, printing the tunes in full with the words under them, as, upon Voltaire's principle that what is too silly to be said may be sung, some of his songs might perhaps acquire through the music a value which in themselves they do not possess. Anything more inane than most of those which he has grouped under the head of "Songs and Ballads," and intended for music, it would be difficult to find even in poetry of this class. In a vocal rendering a spirited "Ochone!" at the beginning and a prolonged Irish howl at the end of every verse may be made to cover many a failing, but seriously printed the thing affects us differently, and no amount of such ad libitum refrains as "Shoheen sho lo! Shoheen hoo lo!" can conceal the nothingness of such a piece, for instance, as 'Hush Song.'

A ridiculous ballad called 'Katie Mooney,' as sung by the late Mr. Blewitt, used to be a diverting performance; but taken as a literary production few things could be found more audaciously approaching nonsense than the following:—

I courted Katie Mooney dear,
A girl so nice and cosy,
Her eyes they were so shining bright,
Her lips so red and rosy.
I bought a pig to live wid us,
And I bought a stick to mind him;
'Twas a clever pig, but like the rest
He carried his tail behind him.
Och! Hubbaboo. Och! Philaleo, &c.

Yet low in the scale of sense as such stuff as this must be ranked, it almost compares favourably with verses which Mr. Graves, of course, intends seriously:—

I would hush my lovely ladde
In the green arbutus shadow,
O'er the fragrant flowering meadow,
In the smiling spring tize.
Shoheen sho lo,
Shoheen hoo lo!

I'd hush my boy beside the fountain,
By the soothing, silvery fountain,
On the pleasant, purple mountain,
In the sultry summer.
Shoheen sho lo,
Shoheen hoo lo!

I would smooth my darling's pillow,
By the blue Atlantic billow,
On the shores of Pankantia,
In the golden autumn.
Shoheen sho lo,
Shoheen hoo lo!

I would soothe my child to slumber,
By the rosy rustling ender,
Through the days of dark December
In the stormy winter.
Shoheen sho lo,
Shoheen hoo lo!

It will be noticed that Mr. Graves is not particular as to rhymes. In other places he rhymes "lesson" with "confessing," "shadows" with "meadows," "billows" with "swallows," "was it" with "opposite" (spelled "opposite"); while in a poem in which "beacon" (to be pronounced "bacon," we suppose) rhymes with "waken" he writes, speaking of girls:—

Yes, your charms into our arms
Yield whilst you can still be patrons,
Or too late you'll mourn your fate,
Poor could maids among the matrons.

In this instance he has sacrificed everything to the rhyme; but here was, at least, a strong argument, which need not have been weakened by defective expression. Indeed, he seems to think that homeliness and familiarity of subject and style warrant carelessness of every kind. Several of the pieces in his earlier volume showed, nevertheless, that he could work more conscientiously. His 'Spinning-wheel Song,' reprinted here in the musical appendix, is decidedly dainty and rhythmical. Yet the refrain,

Show me a sight
Bates for delight

An ould Irish wheel wid a young Irish girl at it.

Oh, no;
Nothing you'll show

Aquels her sittin' and takin' a twirl at it, seems to contain a reminiscence of Dr. Waller's 'Kitty Neil':—

Search the world round from the sky to the ground,
No such sight can be found as an Irish lass dancing.

Is this accidental? Dr. Waller, who is also, we believe, a Kerryman, has, moreover, himself written a pretty rhythmical 'Spinning-wheel Song.'

Mr. Graves shows in his "notes" that many of the poems in the volume are founded upon or suggested by native originals of greater or less antiquity. Were all the flaws and irregularities we have indicated to be traced to these sources, they would be none the less inexcusable. The true poet or artist, in working with rude or elementary materials, does not reproduce the crudeness or grotesqueness, nor imitate the laxity of rough craftsmen, who had no artistic standards to guide them. He harmonizes and combines, taking the gold only. In a song presented to us as an antiquarian curiosity we may accept without question such conceits as

I once loved a boy, and I trusted him true,
And I built him a bower in my breast;

but the instinct of a modern poet would lead him to avoid anything so strained and false. Yet so smitten is Mr. Graves with this particular fancy that he immediately reproduces it in another poem, in which he has no excuse for it. He seems to revel in such words as "sunburst," which he does not explain; and, allowing even for extravagance, what is the meaning of "O sweet sea-spice"?

After finding so much fault, it is pleasant to be able to say that in this volume, along with a great deal that is singularly weak and blundering, there are some good things. Indeed, the bad and the good are thrown together with an apparent want of perception which is surprising. We can quote with pleasure the following:—

We have dark lovely looks on the shores where the Spanish

From their gay ships come gallantly forth,
And the sweet shrinking violets sooner will vanish
Than modest blue eyes from our north;
But oh! if the fairest of fair-daughtered Erin Gathered round at her golden request,
There's not one of them all that she'd think worth comparing [!]

With Nancy, the pride of the west.

You'd suspect her the statue the Greek fell in love with,

If you chanced on her musing alone,
Or some goddess great Jove was offended above with,
And chilled to a sculpture of stone;
But you'd think her no colourless classical statue
When she turned from her pensive repose,
With her glowing grey eyes glancing timidly at you,
And the blush of a beautiful rose.

Have you heard Nancy sigh? then you've caught the sad echo

From the wind harp enchantingly borne,
Have you heard the girl laugh? then you've heard the first cuckoo

Carol summer's delightful return,
And the songs that poor ignorant country folk fancy
The lark's liquid raptures on high
Are just old Irish airs from the sweet lips of Nancy,
Flowing up and refreshing the sky.

And though her foot dances so soft from the heather
To the dew-twinkling tussocks of grass,
It but warns the bright drops to slip closer together
To image the exquisite lass;

We've no men left among us, so lost to emotion,
Or scornful, or cold to her sex,
Who'd resist her, if Nancy once took up the notion
To set that soft foot on their necks.

Yet for all that the bee flies for honey-dew fragrant
To the half-opened flower of her lips,
And the butterfly pauses, the purple-eyed vagrant,
To play with her pink finger-tips;
For all human lovers she locks up the treasure
A thousand are starving to taste,
And the fairies alone know the magical measure
Of the ravishing round of her waist.

The following song indicates a higher and purer faculty than the author himself has perhaps become aware of:—

Some go smiling through the grey time,
Under naked, songless bowers.

Some go mourning all the May time,
Mid the laughing leaves and flowers.

Why is this,
Rosalind?

Comes to kiss Winter grey?
Why, ah! why

Doth Sorrow sigh
On the lap of lovely May?

Happy Love with song and smiling,
Through the withered woodland goes:

Hapless Love hath no beguiling
From the redbreast or the rose.

This is why

Woods may sigh,
Flowers die and hearts be gay:

This alas!

The piteous pass
That leaves us mourning all the May.

Of quite another kind, 'Father O'Flynn's' is less original than it is humorous and spirited; but it will have many admirers.
On the other hand, 'The Fairy Branch,' an attempted rendering of some length in blank verse of a Celtic tale, shows the weakness of a hand inexperienced in that form of poetic expression.

*Pugilistica: being One Hundred and Forty-four Years of the History of British Boxing,
&c.* By Henry Downes Miles. Vol. I.
(Weldon & Co.)

Mr. MILES is obviously well equipped by inclination and exceptional qualifications to become the historian of the ring. His acquaintance with its doings and his personal knowledge of the professors of pugilism "extend over a retrospect of more than forty years," for a considerable period of which he was a reporter of prize-fights for Bell's Life in London and other journals.

Such a vocation would not be voluntarily chosen by many men with his ability; but
Mr. Miles found pleasure in his work, and devoted his attention to the "noble art" of self-defence and all that concerned it. His work may be accepted as the most elaborate and interesting on the subject treated, and, considering the condition and prospects of pugilism, it will probably be the last. The scheme is logical and methodical. After an introduction, which deals with boxing in its various forms among the ancients, and the revival of the art in Italy, when Torrigiano, doubling his fist, gave such a violent blow to the nose of Michael Angelo Buonarroti that he felt the cartilages yield "as if they had been made of paste," we are presented with a series of biographies of the principal English boxers, grouped chronologically in periods, the first of which extends from the championship of Fig to the appearance of Daniel Mendoza (1719-1791), and the last will reach from the appearance of Tom Sayers to the decisive battle of Heenan and King (1856-1863). In addition there is a bibliography of boxing and a list of the champions of England from Fig to Tom King, who is still alive, amusing himself in "taking prizes as a floriculturist at horticultural shows."

Mr. Miles would not seek to revive "the glory" of the ring. That, he thinks, is past. The "misconduct of its members and the degeneracy and dishonesty of its followers led," he freely admits, to its extinction. Still, he is of opinion that the ring had its "glory." We fail to see it.
It is true prizefighters were once favoured by people of rank and tolerated by the general public. It was thought that the ability to batter and be battered till, as in the case of poor Sayers, nose, arm, and every rib in the body were in turn broken fostered in some way the manly qualities, and the most eminent professors of the practice were applauded from a spirit of patriotism. Majesty itself, in the person of King George IV., was a patron, and on the day of his coronation Tom Cribb and Tom Spring and other prizefighters, dressed as pages, guarded the entrance of Westminster Hall; and Mr. Miles relates with pride that his gracious Majesty, in passing down the Hall during the procession to the Abbey, "cast a pleasing glance upon the person of Mr. Jackson by way of recognition, which convinced the commander-in-chief of the P.R. that he still lived in the memory of his beloved sovereign and former patron." At this period pugilists had their portraits painted by Royal Academicians, their praises sung by Byron, and their fights described by Haslitt. This was the golden age of the ring. It must be confessed, however, that we have been unable to discover at any time during its prosperity that respectability which Mr. Miles claims for it and its supporters. The rough element was in its prime even more rough than in its decline, while "the misconduct of its members" and "the dishonesty of its followers" at the most recent fight were more than equalled in its earliest years. The gallery of portraits here presented to us is an elaborate monument to what was an ugly ulcer in the body politic.

Mr. Miles has, of course, a friendly feeling for his heroes, whose vices he would have us suppose leaned to virtue's side. He seems especially desirous to keep well in view their manly and their gentlemanly conduct. So far as an unprejudiced reader can discover from the materials before him, the heroes exhibited their gentility only in a negative way. As a rule the successful pugilist became a publican, and in this position he had unusual opportunities of showing his gentlemanly nature "by refusing to sponge on his customers." Jack Randall, than whom "the prize ring in its palmiest day never exhibited a more accomplished boxer," and who acquired the sobriquet of "the Nonpareil," was perhaps an exception. He opened the Hole in the Wall, Chancery Lane, where "his constitution—he was a persistent drinker of ardent spirits—gave way." He was a martyr to gout, "complicated with a disorganization of the liver and a fatty degeneration of the heart," and, as "he never possessed the moral courage to say 'No' to a drop with every customer," he was carried off at the early age of thirty-four years. Cribb was a different sort of man. He refused to sponge —at least more than he could help. He, moreover, on various occasions "showed traits of a feeling, humane, and charitable disposition." Once, during his residence in the north of Scotland, he was accosted by a woman in distress:—

"Her story affected him, and the emotions of his heart became evident in the muscles of his face. He gave her all the silver he had in his pocket."

It is right to add that he was then living with the renowned Capt. Barclay at Ury, from whom we have the story and he probably had the silver.

George Maddox, who fought more battles than any other man of his time (1792-1809), was another hero who possessed many amiable qualities:—

"He never had a spark of resentment in his composition. His hardihood and resolution in the battle were not more remarkable than the coolness, almost stoical, with which he spoke of victory or defeat."

Indeed,

"George Maddox was as modest and independent as he was courageous. He never hung about sporting public-houses or low tap-rooms, and never sponged upon gentlemen, nor sought the patronage of the great. After a memorable fight he sunk into his desired obscurity, following his humble occupation, and content with his moderate earnings, as an industrious coster-monger, a calling much more lucrative and numerous than in our times."

Champions and would-be champions, as might be expected, have for the most part been of the lowest class, mentally and socially. But there have been exceptions.
Jackson, for instance, was the son of a builder, "by whom the arch was thrown over the Old Fleet Ditch, near the mouth of the River Fleet." He was "one of nature's gentlemen," and

"took a higher position in the social scale than any boxer who preceded or followed him, no less from the firmness and urbanity of his manners, than the high requisites he possessed for shining as an athlete."

Mr. John Gully was another of "nature's gentlemen"; so much so that Mr. Miles expresses his inability to conclude a sketch of his life without remarking that,

"with the knowledge of the world, he united the manners of a well-bred man; intelligent and quick of observation, he united with those qualifications, when moving in a less elevated sphere, that proper sense of his own capabilities which generally attends intelligence and merit."

Mr. Gully became a publican; but, after for a few years earning general respect and some money, he retired from business, and was returned by Pontefract to the first Reform Parliament.

Would the reader like to read an extract from an account of a set-to in the palmy days of the ring before its degeneracy had begun? Here is a description, conceived and executed in the style familiar to our fathers, of the final rounds of the famous fight in September, 1811, between Tom Cribb and Molineaux the Black:—

"9. Lombard Street to a China orange. Molineaux was dead beat, and only stood up to encounter Cribb's ponderous blows. He ran in, Cribb met him with his left hand; the blow was tremendous, being doubled in force by the black's impetuous rush. Molineaux's jaw was fractured, and he fell like a log. He did not come to time within the half minute, but Cribb, wishing to show his superiority, gave away this chance, dancing a hornpipe about the stage, until—10. With great difficulty Molineaux got off his second's knees, only for fresh punishment. His rush was desperate, but equally unsuccessful, and he fell evidently from distress. 11. Here ended the contest. Cribb gave away another chance in the time. Molineaux's senses, however, were absolutely hit out of him; he was perfectly unable to stand, and a Scotch reel by Gully and Cribb announced the victory, while the very walkin echoed with applause."

No one will wonder at the result when one learns that while Cribb was under the care of Capt. Barclay, the first trainer in the country, Molineaux was "left to the government of Tom Belcher and Richmond, who made him an instrument of getting money, by carrying him round the country to exhibit sparring, and, to keep him in good temper and pliable to their wishes, allowing him to drink stout and ale by gallons. It is said that on the morning of the fight he bolted a boiled fowl, an apple pie, and a tankard of porter for his breakfast."

There are supposed to be some points of resemblance between this account and the first report, furnished by Homer, of a prize-fight at the funeral of Patroclus, which, according to Mr. Miles, "came off 1184 years B.C., in the last year of the siege of Troy, anno mundi 3530." The learned reader curious in parallels may refer to the twenty-third book of the Iliad.

Mr. Miles has collected a vast mass of collateral information which serves to make his work valuable to others besides the admirers of the extinct ring. He is undoubtedly the most industrious historian of British boxing.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

A Modern Greek Heroine. 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Clear Shining after Rain. By C. G. Hamilton. 2 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

Strangers Yet. By Sarah Doudney. (Isbister & Co.)

Memories of Troublous Times: being the History of Dame Alicia Chamberlayne of Ravensholme, Gloucestershire. By Emma Marshall. (Seeley, Jackson & Halliday.)

Le Forgeron. Par Jules de Glouvet. (Paris, Calmann Lévy.)

Ines Parker. Par Mario Uchard. (Same publisher.)

The author of 'A Modern Greek Heroine' has chosen an attractive title for a very attractive story, but, with every desire to give full latitude to a writer who is capable of excellent work, we cannot admit the claim of such a story to such a title. It is needless to say what kind of thing would naturally be expected in a romance or an historical narrative dealing with the acts and fortunes of a modern Greek heroine. The reader who sees a three-volume novel announced with this name looks forward, perhaps, to a story based on an episode of the revolutionary war, or to a pure fiction with an historical setting, or, at least, to a fiction possessing the local colour and tone of modern Greek life. If he sends for the book to the circulating library, and finds a couplet on the title-page from a Cretan poem—"Bourbachokatzouli with the long tresses, who fought bravely though she was but a girl,"—and, glancing through the volumes, perceives that Bourbachokatzouli is indeed the name of the heroine, his first expectations are strengthened, and he sits down with definite anticipations. His disappointment is justified when he discovers that the story is, after all, thoroughly English; that Bourbachokatzouli's experiences are gained amongst English and French people, clergymen and artists; that the narrative clings to England all through; and that the only approach to a modern Greek colouring, beyond the name of the heroine, is an occasional scrap of Greek, a Greek song in English dress, and a remote allusion or two to the land of Greece. So much it is necessary to say, if only because it would be unfair to the author to leave a false impression on the mind of any one who might turn to his book for what is not to be found there. But it would be equally unfair not to add that this romance is quite strong enough to stand on its merits, without any assistance from its title, and also (which is more to the purpose) that Miss Valettas is carefully drawn after an ideal which has several distinctly Greek characteristics. She is subtle, ingenious, full of resource, large-hearted in adversity; she is insincere, untruthful when it serves her turn, a schemer, and an actress—yet frank and candid at intervals, and especially with those whom she likes. Whether sincere or insincere, her creator moulds her in such form that the reader loves her throughout, and admires her even more than he loves. The author may be congratulated on a pretty and clever story, which, if it be a first essay in fiction, is unusually successful. It is the work of a refined and perhaps scholarly mind, and is carried out with considerable skill.

"A great peace fell upon Lucia's spirit after she had despatched her letters to Aline and Henry." Lucia, the heroine of Mr. (?) Hamilton's story, is a singer in the opera at Berlin, and has a very sorrowful past.

"Like some odorous plant bowed to the earth with the weight of its own flowers, saturated with night-dew, Lucia had been crushed; now the drooping tendrils were raised, and twined around their strong support. She leant as of old upon her guardian, reposed as calmly as a child in its mother's arms."

This is the exordium of an impassioned and religious love story, made up of heavy rain and ardent sunshine, and, to pursue the metaphor a step further, of stout umbrellas and dainty parasols. In the first few pages we learn that Henry loves Lucia, that Aline loves Henry, that Rivers loves Aline, and that Aline is Lucia's sister. This is the framework of the plot, and the perversity of Henry gives rise to a good deal of complicated weaving. Lucia, who begins by returning Henry's love, sets herself heroically to divert his affections from herself to her sister, who had a prior claim upon him. How she succeeded, with what result to Aline and to her own heart, the author tells quite well enough to make 'Clear Shining after Rain' a passable story. To its pages, therefore, the curious reader may be referred, and if he can overcome a certain notion of incongruity in the strong expressions of sensuous and of spiritual exaltation, he will find sufficient in these two volumes to reward him.

Miss Doudney's story, that of a wife who conceals her humble parentage from her husband, from an unworthy fear of his pride being greater than his love, is better told than tales of the semi-religious kind often are. In the sharp-tempered Dissenting sister, who mingles with her jealousy of her sister's advancement in marrying Canon Charter indignation at the "heaven-dishonouring, soul-destroying pride of these clergy," we have an excellent sketch of character. Through the benign influence of Emily's own "pastor" and husband, the externally bitter rind is removed from what is at bottom an honest and not unloving nature, and Emily is reconciled, though not united, with her sister's family. Madeline is less satisfactory. There is so little of her altogether that a purely repulsive portrait seems inartistic. Winifred, the heroine, is well matched with her clergyman. For the rest, the descriptive passages are good, especially of the fen district round Ely, and the illustrations pretty.

Mrs. Marshall has written many works of fiction, we cannot at the present moment call to mind how many. Such of them as we have read do not seem calculated for any large measure of success among the novel-reading public. They are too homelike and their realism of far too quiet a nature to suit the excitable brains which require the strong stimulant of the sensation novel. There are, however, people who, all moral considerations apart, do really prefer tales wherein domestic life is made, on the whole, to seem the lovely thing which it usually is among good people rather than to have it pictured to them as a fierce tempest. Villainy is, after all, rare and virtue not uncommon, and it is not to be expected that what Mr. Henry Kenelm

Digby called the "common things in relation to beauty, virtue, and truth" should be entirely unrepresented in literature. Mrs. Marshall usually does this with a fair measure of success. The book before us certainly does not reach the high standard of her 'Christabel Kingscote,' but it is nevertheless a very pretty tale. The times are those of Charles I. and the Commonwealth, and the manners are very fairly represented. Of course, people did not speak then in the sort of sentences which Mrs. Marshall has constructed for her characters, but a similar objection applies to every work of fiction which deals with by-gone times. A far greater error than any blunder in mere verbal costume has been avoided: there is no violent political or religious partisanship. Mrs. Marshall thinks the act of putting the king to death evil, and she has some sympathy with the early members of the Society of Friends, but further than this it would not be easy to extract from her tale any of her personal opinions. The account of the siege of Gloucester is well done. There are some illustrations, too, which do not detract from the value of the book.

M. de Glouvet is to be congratulated upon having hit on a very fresh subject and having treated it with no little skill. Only in some of the earlier and happier efforts of Paul Féval has the forest life of the great woods which stretch westwards from the Beauce and the Orléanais towards Brittany and Maine been handled so lovingly, while not even there has it been set forth with such elaborate precision. M. de Glouvet is a realist in so far as this elaborate description goes, and for once it is completely in place. Except Mr. Jefferies, we know no living writer either in France or in England who has treated the wild life which is still possible in civilized countries with such minuteness, and at the same time with so artistic a touch. 'Le Forestier' has, moreover, a central interest of character sufficient to give to it unity and narrative interest, and to take it out of the class of mere collections of pages and naturalist sketches. The figure of Jean Renaud, woodman and poacher—the latter because of a natural hunting instinct, not because of any sordid love of illicit gain—does the author nearly as much credit as his drawings of the forest and of the beasts that inhabit it, though the latter are vivid enough to remind one of M. Iançon's sketches. The account of a wild boar hunt, with which the book opens, is particularly attractive to English readers because of the unfamiliar nature of the sport. In the sketch of Besnard, the libertine timber merchant, M. de Glouvet has perhaps permitted himself some rather corrupt followings of M. Zola; but, after all, these traits are fairly connected with the general story and with the fate which, in the war of 1870, befalls the "king of the forest," who sacrifices himself for his enemy the ranger. Good work as has already been done in the way of working up the endless diversities of local colour in the vast country called France, there is room for much more. Nor have we lately seen a better specimen of such work than M. de Glouvet's book.

The admirable Paul de Florac somewhere suggests that it is a mistake to adopt the moral institutions of another country d demi.

M. Uchard's novel may be said to illustrate this sagacious dictum. Marcel Chabal, his hero, is a very Parisian young man, and Inès Parker, his heroine, is an exceedingly American young lady. Without venturing to pronounce positively on American manners, we should say that even in that country of liberty it would be thought odd for a young man and a young woman to make a two days' trip by railway without chaperon or dragon. At any rate, M. Chabal fails to adjust himself to the situation and is famously punished, though of course things come right in the end. M. Uchard has managed his story with some skill and some power. The hero must, indeed, be pronounced rather a shabby person, not so much by reason of the unlucky slip already alluded to as because he avowedly tries to get out of what he thinks may be a compromising affair, and then avowedly returns to his allegiance, having in the interval ruined himself by gambling, and having heard that the fair Inès is an heiress. Also, M. Uchard, in trying to be knowing in things English, has made some very ludicrous blunders. For instance, Inès, in one of her caprices, arrays herself in male aquatic garments. Then says her biographer, "On eût dit quelque joli fellow échappé d'Oxford ou de Cambridge en costume de yachting." Where, we wonder, did M. Uchard get the notion that personal beauty was a sine qua non for a fellowship? The prettiness of Dons is certainly a delightful imagination, and their escape from the rigid proprieties of the universities "en costume de yachting" is also sufficiently pleasing. It is much to be feared that some wicked person has been hoaxing the guileless M. Uchard.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

The Imitation of Christ. Being the Autograph Manuscript of Thomas à Kempis reproduced in Fac-simile. (Elliot Stock.)—This is a reproduction in fac-simile of the well-known manuscript of the very famous book 'De Imitatione Christi,' in the autograph of Thomas à Kempis. The whole volume, which is entirely in the same handwriting, is not given—only that portion at the beginning which contains the four books of the 'Imitation'; nine other short devotional treatises follow it. The original volume is small, about four inches and a half by three and a half; with the exception of a few leaves on vellum, the material is paper. The handwriting is good and generally clear; the character that of a practised, if not of a professional, transcriber. Originally the manuscript belonged to the monastery of Mount St. Agnes, near Zwolle, which Thomas à Kempis entered as a novice in his twenty-first year, and he lived there all his life. He was employed in their Scriptorium, for other manuscripts are known to have been transcribed by him for the use of the community, some of which have been destroyed or lost sight of, among them especially a Bible and a Missal, to which were appended the same kind of notes as at the end of this manuscript, that they were "finished by the hand of brother Thomas à Kempis." About the year 1570, during the troubles in the Netherlands, the monastery was destroyed and many of the brethren took refuge at Louvain. Their visitor-general, Johannes Latomus, carried the present volume away with him to Antwerp, giving it in 1578 to Jean Bellière, one of the chief printers in that city. This Bellière had two sons, who were members of the Society of Jesus, and, probably under their influence or advice, he gave it to their house at Antwerp, whence it passed, on the suppression of the order, into the Burgundian Library at Brussels, and there it is now preserved. The history of the manuscript is, therefore, certain, and few books of the same date can show so good a pedigree. In June, 1877, we reviewed a trashy book, written by a Mr. Kettlewell, on "the authorship of the 'De Imitatione.'" His object was to prove the claim of Thomas à Kempis; and the impression left by the author was not merely that he utterly failed in the attempt, but that, if he could be said to have proved anything at all, it was against, instead of in behalf of, his client. This fac-simile is preceded by a short introduction by Mr. Charles Ruelens, Keeper of the Manuscripts in the Royal Library at Brussels. Naturally Mr. Ruelens insists upon the fact that the 'Imitation' was written, not as a mere transcriber, but as the author, by Thomas à Kempis. The manuscript is important from its date, even if he were only the copyist; but if he could be proved to have been the author, the interest and value of the book would be increased a thousandfold. Few libraries in the world could show a more desirable possession. And, in its degree, the same increase of interest would attach itself to the fac-simile published by Mr. Stock. Of course, nobody pretends that this is the first copy of the 'Imitation,' the first draft of it from the hand of the author. That it is a mere transcript is beyond all doubt or dispute. Still, if à Kempis were the author, there would be an equal interest and an equal authority given to the text which would be given to a play of Shakespeare, fairly copied in his later years by his own hand, without erasures or corrections. The same kind of reckless assertion is to be observed in this preface or introduction as in Mr. Kettlewell's book. For example, Mr. Ruelens tells us that "a controversy arose in 1604" about the authorship of the 'Imitation,' as if it were then for the first time called in question. Yet every one knows, who has ever heard anything about it, that even before the death of à Kempis himself the claim of John Gerson had spread widely abroad. Again, we are assured that "the last embers of the controversy are dying out," and that "the attempts of those who still try to rekindle the fire are powerless." But there is not a single new argument, even of the lightest weight, proposed to support all this unqualified assertion. In fact, the manuscript is insisted on, and nothing more. The signature at the end, common enough in mediæval manuscripts, is nothing new; "Finitus et completus per manus fratris thome Kempis" suggests no argument which would not equally prove the transcriber to have been the original author of the Bible. We would repeat what was said in our review of Mr. Kettlewell's inquiry, that where so much difficulty and obscurity exists, we are disposed to believe in the claim of John Gerson rather than that of Thomas à Kempis; and we cannot reasonably account for the existence of copies of the 'Imitation,' published during the lifetime of à Kempis, which bear Gerson's name as the undoubted author, unless there had been good grounds at the time for knowing it. And—much more than this—the book has internal evidence, over and over again, that the author must have had large experience of life in the world and amongst men and women. That a mere monk, who entered a monastery in his youth and never left its walls, could have written the 'Imitation' cannot possibly be accounted for by any amount of natural abilities or personal piety; inspiration alone could have supplied the power. Nevertheless, though we regard à Kempis as nothing more than the copyist of the 'Imitation,' our hearty thanks are due to the publisher of the fac-simile and to M. Louis Alvin, the chief librarian of the Brussels Library, by whose permission this celebrated manuscript has been reproduced. Nothing can be more praiseworthy than the care and accuracy which have been spent upon it; the ink and paper are ex-collet, so good that we may almost suppose we have the original in our hands. So far as accuracy is concerned, photography adds the assurance that there can be no possible error of transcription. A pretty and suitable style of binding (taken from a contemporary Dutch Horn) completes the merits of a very charming and desirable little volume. One omission alone is to be regretted, viz., the inscription at the end. A fac-simile of this, "per manus fratris thome Kempis," &c., might easily have been given in the preface.

Le Pasteur d'Hermas: Analyse accompagnée d'une Notice, d'Extraits et de Notes, par M. C., comes to us from Messrs. Fischbacher, of Paris. A great impetus was given to the study of the apostolic fathers by the labours of Von Tischendorf, Dresse, Hilgenfeld, and especially by the exhaustive edition elaborated by De Gebhardt, Harnack, and Zahn. In England, since Bishop Jacobson's now antiquated work, Bishop Lightfoot has made some contributions, and Dr. Donaldson has traversed the whole field with a competent knowledge of its varied contents. The French work bearing the initials "M. C." is confined to the Shepherd of Hermas. Without giving the text either in Greek or Latin, it produces large extracts in French and subjoins notes. The editor's object is the production of Hermas's views of religion and morals, the picture he gives of the Roman Church, A.D. 130-150, the conduct of its members, and its theology so far as Hermas reflects it. The subject is well handled, the opinions of the Roman writer being clearly and fully shown. Hence the treatise forms a supplement to the editions of De Gebhardt and Hilgenfeld, which are chiefly occupied with the restoration of the Greek and Latin texts. The commentary founded on the latest edition is good and valuable. Whoever wishes to know the state of opinion and practice in the Roman Church at the close of Hadrian's reign will derive much information from its pages. The picture of the Roman Church here presented is a dark one. Society was corrupt. Bad men belonged to it, not merely such as were heretical in doctrine, but those whose conduct was disgraceful. Vicious men dishonoured the Christian name. The Church had lost its original purity and integrity. Some critics think that Hermas presents an exaggerated description of the community, and that his view is gloomier than the facts could have warranted. They find it difficult to believe that there was so much deterioration and corruption in the Church towards the middle of the second century. It is impossible to determine the accuracy of the author's statements on this head, just as it is impossible to say whether his theological belief was the prevailing one. It is well known that the Shepherd of Hermas is divided into three parts, consisting of visions, commandments, and similitudes. It is, in fact, an Apocalypse, a series of revelations made to Hermas by celestial beings. The fact is worthy of notice that some of the fathers whose authority in settling a canon of the New Testament was not small cited the work of Hermas as Scripture. It was extensively read in churches during the second half of the second century, and often classed with the canonical productions. No distinct line was drawn between it and them. This is a sufficient proof of the absence of critical sagacity in the men who took the initiative in forming a canonical list. Another noticeable fact is the omission of all express quotation of the New Testament, and the citation of an apocryphal production called 'Eldad and Modad.' We may conjecture that Hermas was acquainted with the gospels and St. Paul's epistles; but it can hardly be proved that he was. Nor can it well be asserted that his work exhibits any clear token of his having used the epistles of Peter, though Zahn confidently affirms it. Instead of familiarity with the New Testament, he leans upon the Old and upon Jewish Apocalypses. A good deal of space is given in 'Le Pasteur d'Hermas' to the point that Hermas's belief is purely monotheistic, and that he betrays no knowledge of the doctrine of the Trinity. The notes A, B, C, discuss this topic not only with reference to Hermas, but to the New Testament and the early fathers. Here the commentator is doctrinal and partly controversial. But he is evidently master of the subject, and brings together appropriate testimonies. Another point which receives full examination is the early episcopate of Rome. It is easy to show the non-existence of an episcopate there in the time of Hermas. One bishop did not preside over the church of the metropolis when this work was written. There were presbyters striving for mastery, but a monarchical organization did not yet exist. On this matter the Shepherd's testimony is weighty, if the Muratorian fragment be correct in saying that Hermas was the brother of Bishop Pius. But it contradicts Irenæus's statement, and can hardly be reconciled with internal evidence furnished by the work itself. The little book of M. C. will amply repay perusal, and may be recommended not only to the scholar but the general reader. All who are interested in the progress of early ecclesiastical literature may read it with profit.

The Hibbert Lectures, 1879.—Lectures on the Growth and Origin of Religion as Illustrated by the Religion of Ancient Egypt. Delivered in May, 1879, by P. Le Page Renouf. (Williams & Norgate.)—The Hibbert Lectures as hitherto treated must be considered a philosophical inquiry into religions of different kinds, and the result of the investigations has not been tested by theologians. As yet few religious systems have been examined, and a large crop of faiths remains behind to complete the curriculum of comparative religion. The religion, or, as it is called in common parlance, mythology, of Egypt has properly been taken early. It is probably the oldest form of religious thought that existed amongst the different nations of the Asiatic world, and is only rivalled by Chaldean myths. The mythology of Egypt has lately received much attention from the Egyptologists, but hitherto different opinions have prevailed, and to the plurality of gods is added the diversity of theories. The general principle which has been adopted appears to be to examine all the texts on the subject and deduce from them a general view of Egyptian religion or mythology. There is another mode of investigation yet to be tried, the examination by periods, the careful consideration of the religious ideas developed during the earlier and later periods of the Egyptian monarchy, and the changes due to different ages and various schools, the rise and fall of ideas introduced by Semitic or other influences, and the monotheism of a later age, also the esoteric ideas of a falling faith. To supply the reader with a knowledge of the subject, Mr. Renouf has gone over a deal of extraneous, but probably necessary, matter, which forms an introduction to the subject. There is, no doubt, great difficulty in determining the exact meaning of abstract terms or metaphysical ideas in Egyptian, and accordingly Mr. Renouf has devoted considerable research to finding the philological origin and exact meaning of the word water or god. This he supposes meant "power" or "force," and he maintains that in the ethical treatises it means the sole or universal Being, and that under the polytheism lay perdu the monotheistic idea of one god. He follows in this respect the ideas of the late De Rouge. In the contemporaneous monuments, however, gods swarm over the sculptures. It must not, however, be supposed that Mr. Renouf has not treated on the gods in detail, as he discusses such questions as the Triads, Enneads, local deities, the anthropomorphic nature of the gods, and the esoteric explanations of certain deities, their genealogy, and functions.

Some of the esoteric explanations of the types of the Pantheon are of the oldest period; others of the more recent age of the Greek and Roman dominion, when explanation was deemed an apology against adverse faiths. Connected with the mythology was the idea of the soul, its nature and destiny. Mr. Renouf has touched on these points, especially the principal ones, but the scenes of the Egyptian Hell would require another series of lectures, and research into the rise and fall of the dogmas relating to the soul, the future judgment, the metempsychosis, and the changes undergone by the soul itself in the future state. Mr. Renouf has pointed out that no Egyptian ideas of any importance are to be discovered in Greek, Roman, or Hebrew literature; yet there can hardly be a doubt that Neo-Platonism derives to some extent developments from Egyptian ideas. Altogether the work of Mr. Renouf is an excellent contribution to the subject, for, without degenerating into a mere exposition of details, it grasps the entire subject; and the general inquirer will find enough to suit his purpose and give him a sound comprehension of the condition of investigation into the mythology and the mystical and leading doctrines found in Egyptian texts. No point of interest has been omitted, and several are admirably elucidated. In fact, it is the last word on the subject, and, like most last words, is the best, as it does not embody, but rejects, the errors of its predecessors.

RECOMMENDED

A Manual of English Composition, with copious Illustrations and Practical Exercises. By T. D. Hall, M.A. (Murray.)

MR. HALL is scarcely justified in assuming that there was no such thing in existence as "a really serviceable class-book of English composition" when he undertook to prepare one. At the same time it must be admitted that his work is fairly entitled to be so described. It contains a larger number of exercises than are intended to be written by any one student, each being left to make his own selection from them. This is a good feature, as is also the abundance of hints for the assistance of the young writer. More than a third of the volume is occupied by "Various Practical Rules and Suggestions," which consist in a great measure of warnings against prevalent erroneous forms of expression, with numerous illustrative extracts, the faults of which are pointed out, as also the various modes in which they might be avoided. It may be questioned whether it was necessary to devote so much space to the exposure of faults which are obvious to any one properly grounded in the principles of grammar. Mr. Hall rightly says: "Style, it cannot be too strongly urged, is no mere mechanical thing"; but the prominence he gives to the mechanical structure of sentences in this portion of the work is likely to excite in the mind of the reader the very idea against which he so strongly protests.

Class-Book of French Composition. By L. P. Blouet, B.A. (Hachette & Co.)

THE English which M. Blouet gives to be translated into French consists of amusing anecdotes and interesting extracts from standard authors and periodical literature. These are accompanied by notes containing proper renderings of technical words and idiomatic phrases. As a means of acquiring skill in writing French for ordinary purposes the work is all that could be desired; but its value would have been still greater if it had contained a larger proportion of passages in a higher literary style.

Das Wirthshaus im Speessart von W. Hauff. Edited, with Notes, by A. Schlottmann, Ph.D. (Cambridge Warehouse.)

THIS is a great improvement on the German reading books with which teachers are familiar. It consists of a main story, complete in itself, and serving as a thread to which four or five subordinate ones are attached at various points. There is an abundance of exciting interest and romantic adventure, with a larger preponderance of the supernatural element than is likely to suit grown-up readers, though it may be rather a recommendation to the youthful class for whom the book is intended. The moral teaching is healthy, but occasionally too apparent. The German is remarkable for its easy flow and vivid force, while it has for English readers the further advantage of abounding in conversational and idiomatic expressions. These are admirably rendered in the notes, which give correct explanations of the origin and meaning of words, with frequent references to cognate words and corresponding phrases in old and modern English, and at the same time convey much useful grammatical knowledge. Both the work itself and the manner in which it is edited are worthy of all praise.

Simple English Poems.—English Literature for Junior Classes in Four Parts. Edited by H. C. Bowen, M.A. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)
Choice Poems and Lyrics for Study and Delight. Edited, with Notes and a Preface, by J. T. Ashby. (Relfe Brothers.)

POETRY has not generally received the attention it deserves in schools. It has too often been treated as a mere amusement, or at best an accessory study, which young people may be left to pursue for themselves or not, as they feel inclined, rather than an indispensable element of good education, requiring the guidance and assistance of a qualified instructor. Mr. Bowen, rightly regarding it as fairly entitled to form part of regular school work, has done a kindness to both teachers and scholars by preparing an admirable selection of poems, admirably edited, in a cheap and convenient form, which would be still better if the covers were stouter. His notes, like the poems, are judiciously adapted for young readers, and not only supply every sort of information necessary to render the text perfectly understood—including a correct and adequate explanation of the origin and proper meaning of words—but call their attention to special features of thought and style, thus enabling them to appreciate the excellence and enjoy the beauty of the poetry, as well as thoroughly enter into its meaning. In this way the intellect is strengthened, the taste formed, and the character improved. Mr. Bowen has added to the value of his publication by prefixing to each volume some excellent suggestions to teachers with regard to the mode of using it. He says the poems are not intended to be committed to memory, but it is highly desirable that this should be done as much as possible (after they have been thoroughly studied) as a means of strengthening the memory and storing the mind with beautiful thought and language. We have noticed one or two slight inaccuracies in Mr. Bowen's brief but admirable biographical and critical accounts of the various poets. Thus, in that of Tennyson, it is stated that "on the death of Wordsworth in 1851" he became Laureate, though in that of Wordsworth the true date, 1850, is given. Again, Mr. Longfellow is said to be still Professor of Modern Languages at Harvard University, the fact being that he was succeeded in that office by Mr. Lowell in 1855.

Mr. Ashby's work is in every way inferior to Mr. Bowen's. The poems, though more numerous and varied, are far less deserving of the title prefixed to them, being rarely remarkable for excellence either of substance or form. Mr. Ashby has shown an undue preference to American poets, and allowed minor English poets to occupy too large a space. He has also too often given mere fragments instead of entire poems, sometimes without any indication of omission. The few explanatory notes and brief accounts of the writers are good so far as they go.

Elementary Notions of Logic: being the Logic of the First Figures, designed as Prolegomena to the Study of Geometry. By Alfred Milnes, M.A. (Sonnenchein & Allen.)

THIS little book may be recommended to those who for any reason are in want of a clear and careful introduction to the more elementary parts of logic. Its compiler entertains the opinion that in all subjects teaching is made more effective if at the beginning the elementary notions are extracted and treated completely than if the whole of a subject is taken in hand from the first. Accordingly he limits himself in logic to the logic of the first figure. This portion of the subject, he thinks, may also serve as prolegomena to the study of geometry. Both the design and the execution of this little manual seem to be good, but there are several respects in which it is susceptible of improvement. In the first place, the boundaries of the portion of the subject which the writer has chosen have not been consistently kept in view. This danger was indicated clearly enough by the title, which implies that the logic of the first figure is sufficient, by way of prolegomena, for the study of geometry. It may be so to an accomplished logician, but certainly is not to a beginner. And this conclusion is confirmed by an inspection of the contents of the manual, for under the logic of the first figure we find treated, inter alia, hypothetical syllogisms constructive and destructive, reasoning a fortiori, and reductio ad absurdum—all very necessary as prolegomena to the study of geometry, but not in any intelligible sense parts of the logic of the first figure. The chapter on "Oppositions and Conversations," again, is crude, and might be rewritten with advantage. For instance, the reader is there told that the two propositions, "All Japanese are not-Europeans" and "No Japanese are Europeans," i.e., an indeterminate universal affirmative and a universal negative proposition, have the same meaning, and may, therefore, be treated as identical, although he is repeatedly told that logic has to consider the form only, and although it would follow that it makes no difference whether the negative particle belongs to the copula or the predicate. The term "opposite," too, which is used to designate the first of these two propositions, relatively to the corresponding A proposition, is an ideally bad one, having already another and a much wider meaning. Other blots in the book may be removed with less trouble, e.g., on p. 20 the writer is evidently unaware that a "specific difference" is a difference constituting an "infima species," and is not a mere equivalent for "differentia." There are signs, too, of a bad habit, imperfectly overcome, of using the technical words of logic in non-technical senses, e.g., the diagrams which illustrate propositions and syllogisms are spoken of as "figures" (p. 47), and, again, the expression "a particular proposition" is used (p. 45) in the non-logical and very colloquial sense of "any proposition," propositions of the type of A and E being immediately quoted as instances of such "particular propositions." Notwithstanding these faults, however, the manual is a careful piece of useful if unpretending work.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

THOUGH in her Six Life Studies of Famous Women (Griffith & Farran) Miss M. Betham-Edwards expresses a wish "that critics were often.....authoritatively silenced once and for all," yet we venture to offer some remarks on this book; and perhaps even Miss Edwards would rather have her book noticed than neglected. She tells her readers "that a brief biography, to be read at a sitting without fatigue, yet so comprehensive as to embrace the leading features of life and character, is one of the most attractive forms of popular literature." And she adds that "the object of the present work.....is rather to popularize less known memories of remarkable persons than to abridge those already famous." The design thus stated has been fairly, but only fairly, carried out. No fault can be found with the memoirs on the score of undue length, and in most of them one or two new or little known details are told of the persons of whose lives they treat. The book may serve to occupy the leisure half-hours of intelligent or ambitious girls. But in no one case do the memoirs give a full and clear picture, even in the merest outline, of the persons whom they represent. Nor is this failure entirely due to the small amount of space which the writer has allowed herself; for she has found room for numerous though short accounts of matters which have but little connexion with her subject. For example, in the memoir of Alexandrine Tinné, the African explorer, she indulges in a brief but general account of African exploration, including the discoveries made by Stanley, by Cameron, and others long after Miss Tinné's death, and also makes comparatively long extracts, descriptive of African scenery, &c., from the writings of Dr. Heughlin, only because he was one of Miss Tinné's companions. This space would have been more suitably occupied with a rather more full account of Miss Tinné's own adventures. The women whose lives are told in this book are Fernán Caballero, the Spanish novelist, of whom no biography was ever before written; Alexandrine Tinné, of whom we shall have a word to say presently; Caroline Herschel, astronomer and mathematician; Marie Pape-Carpentier, who may be regarded as one of the founders of elementary education as it at present exists in France; Elizabeth Carter, the translator of Epictetus; and Matilda Betham, whose only claim to be a "famous woman" seem to be that she had certain famous friends, and was the aunt and godmother of the writer of this book. The memoir of Miss Tinné is disappointing and in some matters inaccurate. For example, Miss Tinné was born on the 17th of October, 1835, and not, as Miss Edwards says, in 1839; and her father was not "an English merchant long resident in Holland," but a Dutch merchant long resident in Demerara, who, after the cession of that colony to the English, was naturalized in England and took up his residence at Liverpool. Again, the murder of Miss Tinné, on the 1st of August, 1869, was even more tragic than is represented in Miss Edwards's account. The murderers were not all Touaregs. One of her own attendants—Mohammed, a Tunisian—conspired with certain Touaregs to rob and murder her. She was actually cut down by a Touareg at the door of her tent; and she lay slowly dying for twenty-four hours, no one daring to approach her. For the satisfaction of the readers of Miss Edwards's book, it may be added that Mohammed and four of his accomplices were captured, and after a trial which lasted for several months were condemned to imprisonment for life. The murder seems to have been partly due to greed, partly to fanaticism. The life of this strange woman and bold explorer would make a capital story, but Miss Edwards has not turned the opportunity to account. Against one feature in Miss Edwards's book it is necessary to protest. She too frequently introduces herself, as when she says that "the present writer" saw a bull-fight, and "the present writer" did various other things; and she has an odd habit of advertising her own books previously published. For instance, happening to write of Spain, she advises her readers to "see the present writer's 'Through Spain' for an account of an easy and pleasant journey performed by two ladies some years ago." We may conclude with two good stories told by Miss Edwards, these being not new, but probably little known. Elizabeth Carter, having translated Epictetus, and being advised to prefix a life of that author to her translation, answered that "whoever that somebody or other is who is to write the life of Epictetus, seeing that I have a dozen shirts to make, I opine.....that it cannot be I." And Matilda Betham wrote, "I was sent to school as a child to learn sewing, and to prevent my too strict application to books."

We have on our table three college calendars, —that of the University of St. Andrews, published by Messrs. Blackwood, which contains, besides the usual matter, the examination papers set for the L.A. certificate granted to women; that of the University College of Wales, which seems still to impose too many subjects on its professors (how can one man teach all the "ologies"?); and that of the University of Tokio, from which we gather that young Japan is expected to know "the nature and incidents of the Roman Patria Potestas."

We have received from Calmann Lévy, of Paris, an excellent work by "Henri Rivière," apparently a captain in the French navy, entitled Souvenirs de la Nouvelle Calédonie, which gives a very picturesque description of the islands and of the recent Kanaka insurrection.

We have on our table The Resources of Queensland, by J. Bonwick (Silver), —Phonetic Method of learning French, by D. Smith (Haughton), —An Elementary Grammar for Standard II, by J. B. Whicker (Bideford, E. H. Ridley), —Studies for Candidates in Select Plays of Shakespeare: 'Hamlet' and 'King Henry V.' by the Rev. John Hunter (Longmans), —Melody Piece Book, compiled by Rev. W. J. Denman (Murby), —On the Classification of Languages, by G. Oppert (Trübner), —The Geological Antiquity of Insects, by H. Goss (Van Voorst), —Proceedings on Laying the Memorial Stone of Wilson Hall of the University of Melbourne by the Hon. Sir S. Wilson (Melbourne, Stillwell & Co.), —Bicycles and Tricycles of the Year 1879-80, by H. H. Griffin ('The Bazaar Office'), —Destruction of Life by Snakes, Hydrophobia, in Western India, by an Ex-Commissioner (Allen), —A System of Moral Science, by L. P. Hickok (Boston, U.S., Ginn & Heath), —The Scientific Structure of the Universe, by J. A. Moncrieff (Marcus Ward), —The Potato Disease and How to Prevent It, by F. Bravender ('Farm Journal' Office), —The Secret of a Good Memory, by J. Mortimer-Granville (Bogue), —Politics and Art, by T. H. H. Caine (Liverpool, Notes and Queries Society), —Working and Living Essays, by J. Crompton (Dundee, J. Long), —The Spell-bound Fiddler, by K. Janson (Trübner), —Through Prairie and Forest, by J. S. C. Abbott (Ward, Lock & Co.), —and Rodman the Keeper, by C. F. Woolson (New York, Appleton & Co.).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Adams' (W.) The Nature of the Atonement, 18mo. 2/6 cl.
Brodie's (F.) Revelation viewed by the Light of the Old Testament Scriptures, 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Green's (B. G.) Notes for Lessons in Gospel History for Sunday-School Teachers, Part I, 8vo. 3s. cl. 1p.
Solomon's (G.) The Jesus of History and the Jesus of Tradition Identified, 8vo. 7/6 cl.
Tanner's (Rev. J. G.) Sevenfold Blessing, or Perfect Salvation through the Blood of Christ, 8vo. 2/6 cl.
Taylor's (W. M.) The Gospel Miracles in their Relation to Christ and Christianity, 8vo. 5/ cl.
Whately's (B. J.) Clear the Way, or Hindrances to Mission Work Considered, 8vo. 5/6 cl.
Willie's (Rev. E. F.) Worship of the Old Covenant, considered more especially in Relation to that of the New, 4to.

- Andrews (E. W.) and Stoney's (A. B.) Supreme Court of Judicature Act, and the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, 8vo. 7/6 cl.
Elli's (W. E.) International Law, demy 8vo. 21/ cl.
Walspole's (C. G.) Review of the Common Law, 8vo. 14/ cl.

Fine Art.

- Cripps's (W. J.) Old French Plate, 8vo. 6/6 cl.
Illustrated Biographies of Great Artists: Sir Edwin Landseer, by F. G. Stephens, Sir Joshua Reynolds, by F. J. Pulling, 8vo. 3/6 each, cl.

Poetry.

- Robinson's (C.) The Golden Hind, and other Poems, 7/6 cl.
Stuart-Glanville's (J.) Romance of the Youth of Arthur, 10/6

History and Biography.

- Banquet's (J. A.) History of Political Economy in Europe, translated by E. J. Leonard, with Preface by D. A. Wells, 8vo. 12/ cl.
Cooper's (C. H.) Memorials of Cambridge, greatly enlarged from the work of J. Le Keux, 8vo. 25/ cl.
Freeman's (E. A.) Short History of the Norman Conquest of England, 18mo. 2/6 cl.

Geography and Travel.

- Boddeley's (M. J. B.) Thorough Guide to the English Lake District, with Map, 12mo. 5/ cl.
Brown's (R.) Notes on the Northern Atlantic, for the Use of Travellers, with a Map, 8vo. 4/6 cl.

Philology.

- Earle's (J.) English Plant Names from the Tenth to the Fifteenth Century, 18mo. 5/ cl.
Gentil's (Rev. P. J. F.) Metemata, Select Latin Passages in Prose and Verse for unprepared Translation, 8vo. 4/6 cl.
M. Tullii Cicero's de Natura Deorum, Libri Tres, by J. B. Mayor and J. H. Swainson, Vol. 1, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Mason's (P. H.) Key to the Examples for Practice and Reading Lessons in the Easy Introductory Hebrew Grammar, 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Xenophon's Cyropædia (Books 1 to 3), literally translated by E. Mangan, 12mo. 8wd. 2/

Science.

- Galton's (D.) Observations on the Construction of Healthy Dwellings, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Jackson's (L. D. A.) Pocket Logarithms and other Tables, 2/6
Patterson's (R. L.) Birds, Fishes, and Cetacea commonly frequenting Belfast Lough, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Rodd's (E. H.) Birds of Cornwall and the Scilly Islands, edited by J. E. Harting, with Portrait and Map, 14 cl.
Spence's Encyclopædia of the Industrial Arts, Manufactures, and Commercial Products, Div. 2, roy. 8vo. 13/6 cl.

General Literature.

- Abiet's (W. H.) Stock-Keeping for Amateurs, 8vo. 5/ cl.
Christian World Pulpit, Vol. 17, January to June, 1880, 5/ cl.
Davies's (G. C.) Practical Boat-Sailing for Amateurs, 4/ cl.
Edwards's (M. B.) Forestalled, or the Life Quest, 2 vols. 21/
Indermaur's (J.) Self-Preparation for the Intermediate Examination, 8vo. 5/6 cl. limp.
Lavigne's (E. A.) Female Nihilist, translated from the French by G. Sutherland Edwards, 8vo. 9/ cl.
Lennox's (Lord W. P.) Lord of Himself, a Novel, 3 vols. 21/
Oldcastle's (J.) Journals and Journalism, 3/6 vellum.
Wale's (J. H.) The Horse, in the Stable and in the Field, illustrated, 8vo. 12/6 cl.

THEOLOGY.

- Floury: Histoire de l'Église de Genève, 2 vols., 10fr.
Wieseler (K.): Zur Geschichte der Neutestamenten, Schrift. u. d. Urchristenthums, 8m.

Drama.

- Birch-Pfeiffer (Charlotte) Gesammelte dramatische Werke, Vol. 22, 4m.
Noël (E.) and Stoullig (E.): Les Annales du Théâtre, 8th year, 8fr. 50.

History and Biography.

- Denicke (H.): Die Hansestädte, Dänemark u. Norwegen von 1200 bis 1376, 7m.
Floury (M.): Les Drapens Français, 60c.
Herrmann (E.): Zeitgenössische Berichte zur Geschichte Russlands, Vol. 2, 8m. 40.
Kopp: Geschichte der Elbgenossenschaft Bände, second edition, Vol. 4, Part 2, 16m.
Mühlbacher: Regesta Imperii nach J. P. Böhmner neu bearbeitet, Part 1, 6m.
Werusky (E.): Kaiser Karl IV. u. seine Zeit, Vol. 1, 1216-1346, 10m.

Philology.

- Demattio (F.): Grammatica della Lingua Provenzale, 3m. 20.
Tudell Cornelli Opera, interpretatus est J. C. Orellius, 2nd edition, curaverunt Schweizer-Mäder, Andreas, Meiser, Parts 2 and 3, 7m. 50 each.

Science.

- Ahlfeld (F.): Die Missbildungen d. Menschen, Part 1, 24m.
Henle (J.): Grundriss der Anatomie d. Menschen, Part 2, 14m.
Schmidt (O.): Die Spongien d. Meeres v. Mexico, 10m.

DON A. FERNANDEZ DE LOS RIOS.

DON ANSEL FERNANDEZ DE LOS RIOS, whose death in Paris (on the 18th June last) was lately recorded, and whose mortal remains have found their last resting-place in the closely packed cemetery of La Corte, was born at Madrid in 1821. Like many of Spain's greatest publicists, he commenced his literary life as a political writer, and made his début early in 1844. In 1848 we find him proprietor and editor of the now forgotten Seminario Pintoresco, which under his direction reached a circulation of 3,500 copies, having previously circulated some 400. Between that date (1848) and 1860 he founded and edited three or four daily papers with more or less of success.

In 1860 he became editor of La Iberia, and during the three years he occupied the editorial chair penned no less than four hundred leading articles of a political or social character.

Between 1864 and 1866 he founded and directed La Soberanía Nacional, the fearless anti-dynastic articles in which resulted in the suppression of the paper and the destruction of the material (in June, 1866). After founding and directing for a short period Los Sucesos, he was compelled to emigrate, returning again to Spain until 1875, when he finally settled in Paris.

During his literary life he founded and edited no less than eight journals, and acted as correspondent for thirty others, penning political, historical, biographical, and critical reviews, as well as light social articles and novels. His purely literary labours comprised (between 1845 and 1878) a picturesque itinerary from Madrid to Paris, 'Las Perances de la Vida,' and other works more or less popular, besides translations from Goldsmith, Eugene Sue, Lamartine, Karr, and Laurent.

His more important works are 'El Estudio Político y Biográfico sobre Olozoga,' 'La Guía de Madrid,' 'Mi Misión en Portugal,' and 'Las Luchas Políticas en la España del Siglo Diez y nueve.'

The 'Guía de Madrid' and 'Madrid Futuro' have been widely circulated, and will hand down Los Rios's name to posterity, while his journalistic work will cease to be remembered. In his preface to 'Madrid Futuro' he writes: "We have penned this work with a view to place in strong relief abuses, and to propose improvements and reforms in this early period of the revolution." Of this work a friendly critic observes: "The reforms he advocated with so much force and conviction were on one side material and local, and on the other political, administrative, economical, and national"; while he attacked monarchies, believing his mission to be to create institutions which he considered to be indispensable.

Los Rios lived and died a consistent Republican. His character was unsullied, and he was essentially, in act and feeling, an Hidalgo of unblemished reputation, having the courage of his opinions. F. W. O.

THREE UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF SIR ISAAC NEWTON.

Library, British Museum.

SIR DAVID BREWSTER, in his 'Memoirs of the Life of Sir Isaac Newton,' Edinburgh, 1885, publishes a letter, dated January 16th, 1727/8, from Mr. Nicholas Wickins, son of John Wickins, the early and dear friend of Newton, in which the following passage occurs:—

"I guess from a small book I found among my father's papers that he had a design to collect into one all that he had of Sir Isaac's writing; but he went no farther than transcribing three short letters he received from him and a Common Place of his, part of which I find under Sir Isaac's own hand; the rest, with the original of these three letters, is lost."

The "small book" here referred to has been recently placed in my hands by Capt. Verney, R.N., of Rhanva, in whose library it was found. The three letters of Sir Isaac spoken of were not published by Brewster, nor, so far as I am aware, have they ever been printed; and as I cannot but think that any unpublished record, however slight, of so great a man must be of interest, I beg leave, with the kind permission of Capt. Verney, to send a transcript of the letters for publication in the Athenæum.

W. R. WILSON.

Copies of some Letters from my Chamber-fellow Mr. Isaac Newton when I was at Monmouth.

Cambridge.

As for my dispute with y^e Leige Jesuits [see Brewster, vol. i. chap. iv.]; when I had printed a sheet or two I unhappily burnt all my papers about it. And upon writing for new copies of their Letters they sent me false ones. Whereupon I sent 'em an answer to the substance of their letters & laid open their shuffling tricks, & so I think I have made an end of the business without printing.

A Glass-grinder in London had this spring undertaken to make a two foot Telescope after my way, but meeting with Mr. Hook & some other of that sort of virtuosi they dissuaded him from attempting it. So Cooper & I are going to work. Mr. Cooper hath a tool made & we are going to cast y^e metal to polish. Since you are so near y^e Iron mines pray do me y^e favour to send me two or 3 pounds of Iron Stone. If there be several sorts pray send me about two pound of a sort. If there be any transparent stones growing upon y^e Iron Stones like y^e spar w^h is found in lead-mines or any other remarkable & ponderous stones found in y^e Iron mines, pray send me 4 pound or a pound of each. Mr. Arrowsmith hath sent you what news w^h a combination wherein you are concerned & so I shall add no more but that I am Yo' very loving Chamber-fellow Is: NEWTON.

Mr. Wickins.—After a silence w^h you will think too long, I begin with y^r latter part of y^r Letter wherein you ask my ideas about y^r Fathers. Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Origen against Celsus & Clemens Alexandrinus are y^r chief of the Ante-Nicene Fathers. To these you may add Tertullian and Cyprian. Erasmus's & the Basil editions are usually y^r best. Usher's edition of Ignatius's Epistles London 1647 is best. Feuillet's edition of Irenæus is fullest but scarce so faithful as that of Erasmus. For the times of those first 300 years, Eusebius is the only historian. In Bibl. Gr. Patr. there are things of good note. You may add St. Augustine De Civitate Dei. The History of y^r 4th & part of the 5th century is best done by Socrates. If you would have all ecclesiastical History collected into one volume, consult y^r Historia Magdeburgensis. Salvan in his Book de Providentia Dei hath excellently described y^r manners of the fifth century.

I think not of y^r Telescope. Mr. Lucas plays y^r Sophist more & more & I intend to lay him open. My Act is long since past & forgotten. I moved y^r Bp. of Salisbury to intercede with my Lord of Hereford for a Licence for you but have not yet heard with what effect. Dr. Dove went out D^r this Comencom^t. Our Library hath gone on well hitherto, what it will do for y^r Future I know not. And this is y^r summe of what at present occurs to Yo' affectionate Chamber-fellow
Cambridge, July 19, 1677. Is: NEWTON.

Mr. Wickins.—At the opening of your last letter I expected to have met with a chide for my deferring so long to write to you. I will not stand to excuse it, though in one point 't was hard for me to write you an answer, & that is about buying Books; for what pleases me may not after perusal please you & then they will be but lumber to you. But however I'll venture to give you the best advice I can. If you have a mind to look into Ecclesiastical History, the ground work is Eusebius's History with Socrates, Sozomon, Theodoret and some other Fragments bound up with them in Valesius's edition. The price about £3. But in Socrates, Sozomon & Theodoret there is little to be confided in besides the Letters & Edicts recorded by them. If you would see the state & temper of y^r Primitive Church; All y^r Ante-Nicene Fathers are good, chiefly Justin Martyr, Irenæus & the Epistles of Clemens, Barnabas & Ignatius, if you can have those last of Vossius edition. Then Cyprian & for variety of learning Clemens Alexandrinus & Origen ag^t Celsus. If you would be guided in understanding the Scriptures I will commend Erasmus's Paraphrase of the New Testament, & next the Criticks, not Poole's Synopsis, but the former edition w^h were it not for the price I would commend to you in y^r first place, for (if I mistake not) it will cost about £10. Irenæus of Feuillet's edition (though he be a very hot Papist) is best & easiest to be had. After all those Jerome is worth having for his Learning though not for his Religion, & St. Austin De Civitate Dei. Chrysostom followed Origen much in interpreting the Scriptures, & so is the best Interpreter of those times extant & accounted useful for a Preacher because his writings are in the way of Sermons, but I doubt he is too voluminous for you.

I do not find in my Book y^r I paid Goodwife Tyne's son, but now you put me in mind of it, I'll send for him. So w^h my Service to all w^h you I rest
Yo' ever loving Chamber-fellow
T. C. C., Aug. 19, 1682. Is: NEWTON.

SALE.

SOME time ago we mentioned that Messrs. Puttick & Simpson were going to sell by auction an extraordinary collection of books and MSS. relating to Spanish America, formed by the late Don José Ramirez. The sale has been finished this week, and many of the lots realized exceedingly high prices. Mr. Quaritch was a particularly large buyer. Libros de las Actas del Cabildo de Mexico, an important collection of municipal documents dating from 1529 to 1564, some of which have been printed in the 'Boletín Municipal de Mexico,' 140l. Beristan, Biblioteca Española, with MS. additions, 4 vols. folio, 80l. Cabeça de Vaca, Relacion y Comentarios de Alvar Nuñez, printed in Valladolid, 1555, 32l. 10s. Noticias de la Nueva California, a collection of MS. reports of missionaries made in the last century, 3 vols. folio, 65l. Documentos Historicos sobre Durango, MSS. collected by Señor Ramirez, 30l. 10s. Gamson (J.), Tripartito del Christianismo Doctor, Mexico, por Juan Cromberger, 1544, 54l. Guillevis, El Pelegrino de la Vida Humana, Toloma, 1490, 90l. A Collection of Documents relating to the Inquisition of Mexico, from 1571 to 1802, 76l. Instituta Ordinis B. Francisci, Mexico, por A. de Spinoza, 1567, 37l. Documents relating to the Jesuits in Mexico, 1640-1747, 31l. History of Jesuit Missions in Mexico, 55l. Documents relating to the History of the Jesuits in Mexico, MSS., 7 vols., 115l. MSS. relating to the maltreatment of the Indians, 53l. Manual para Administrar los Sacramentos, second edition, Mexico, por P. Ocharte, 1568, 35l. 10s. Peter Martyr de Orbe Novo, first edition, Compluti, 1630, 51l. Mexican Paintings, 56l. Vocabulary in Spanish, Latin, and Mexican, MS. of the sixteenth century, 38l. Misale Romanum, Mexico, por A. de Espinoza, 1561, 155l. Molina's Works in the Mexican Tongue, 1555-1578, 141l. Ordenanzas y Copilacion de Leyes, Mexico, por Juan Pablos, 1548, 55l. Ordenanzas de las Indias (1543-1612), 100l. Ordinarium Sacri Ordinis Heremitorum Sancti Augustini, Mexico, 1556, 76l. Ortega, Descripcion de las Islas Californias, MS., 24 ll. folio, 52l. Reales Cédulas, in 24 vols., 76l. Relacion y Descripcion de la Provincia del Sancto Evangelio que es de la Orden de S. Francisco en la Nueva España, &c., MSS. of the sixteenth century, 150 leaves, 90l. Ruckel, Compendio Breve, &c., Mexico, Juan Cromberger, 1544, 41l. Sermones en Mexicano, an original MS. of the sixteenth century, on paper made by the Indians from the agave, with notes by the Jesuit Father Sahagun, 210l. Viages Apostolicos en California de los Religiosos de Propaganda Fide por Frntes Serra y Crespi, MSS., 317 leaves, 71l. Gilberti, Doctrina Christiana en la Lengua de Michuacá, Mexico, Juan Pablos, 1559, 91l. Gilberti, Thesoro Spiritual en Lengua de Michuacá, Mexico, por A. de Spinoza, 1575, 57l. Lombardo, Arte de la Lengua Teguinna, Mexico, 1702, 40l. Spanish Documents relating to Texas, 43l. Guerra de Mexico contra Texas, a series of official and other documents, 106l. Veracruz, Recognitio Summularum, with the Dialectica Resolutio, Mexico, por Juan Pablos, 1554, 71l. Veracruz, Physica Speculatio, Mexico, Juan Pablos, 1557, 75l. Vigo Libro o Practica en Cirurgia, and two other rare Spanish books on medicine, 1547-8, 50l. Misiones del Norte y de Yucatan, a series of MS. Jesuit narratives, &c., relating to the northern provinces of Mexico in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, 135l. Cordova, Arte en Lengua Zapoteca, Mexico, P. Balli, 1578, 50l. Zumarraga, Doctrina Breve, first edition, Mexico, 1543-1544, 84l. Zumarraga, Doctrina Christiana, Mexico, 1546, 52l. Zumarraga, Doctrina Christiana, a later edition, Mexico, Juan Pablos, 1548, 50l. Zumarraga, Regla Christiana Breve, Mexico, 1547, 42l. The whole of the Ramirez collection, numbering 934 lots, realized 6,395l. 5s.

MEMORIAL

THE death of Mr. Tom Taylor deprives literature of an industrious journalist and a prolific dramatist. During close upon forty years Mr. Taylor has been before the London public, and in the course of that time he has carried off not a few journalistic prizes and won more reputation than usually falls to the lot of those the major portion of whose work is unsigned. As a dramatist he is best known. In that capacity he has supplied the stage with many of the most conspicuously successful pieces of modern times, and has extorted recognition from some who were not too ready to accord it. The gift of dramatic perception was his in a remarkable degree, and he had in addition a knowledge of stage requirements and a power of supplying dialogue which was forcible, telling, and free from all appearance of strain. In invention he stood no higher than his rivals, and there are comparatively few of his plays which do not owe a portion of their plot or incidents to the works of others. Most successful in those plays in which he had the collaboration of Mr. Charles Reade, who brought to the partnership those qualities exactly which Mr. Taylor lacked, or in which he took as basis a story supplied him by M. Victor Hugo or other French dramatists, he contrived in those pieces in the composition of which he was unaided to hit the public taste rather than to satisfy the requirements of criticism. 'Our American Cousin,' written for Mr. Jefferson, and subsequently altered for Mr. Sothorn, may claim to have been the most remunerative of his plays. It is certainly one of the worst. 'Plot and Passion,' 'Lady Clancarty,' 'Masks and Faces,' 'New Men and Old Acres,' 'Still Waters Run Deep,' and 'An Unequal Match' retain a position as acting comedies, and 'The Fool's Revenge,' 'Twixt Axe and Crown,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'Anne Boleyn' have won acceptance as historical dramas. Questions as to the extent to which indebtedness to previous sources calls for acknowledgment caused some animated discussions between Mr. Taylor and the critics, and led to the publication in the Athenæum of a letter protesting against the charges brought against him, and explaining his views upon originality in dramatic art. In regard to this matter Mr. Taylor was to some extent sinned against, as he lived in a period when awkward questions were for the first time put, and was the scapegoat of a system he transmitted and perpetuated, but did not invent. Mr. Taylor had a hand in more than a hundred dramas, some of them, like 'The Ticket-of-Leave Man,' little more than translations, others, like 'Henry Dunbar' and 'Arkwright's Wife,' very creditable specimens of adaptation. What plays are wholly original, in the sense of being free from extraneous aid, it is not easy positively to declare. As an art critic Mr. Taylor was a hard worker. The merit of the few dramatic notes, chiefly concerning French plays, which he supplied is, however, less likely to be contested than that of his opinions upon painting or sculpture. His connexion with French was close and honourable, and his death severs the last link which binds that periodical to its past. The facts concerning his life which deserve to be chronicled are few. They speak, however, of constant and arduous labour, and tell of well-merited success. Born in 1817 in Sunderland, he went first, according to information supplied, assumably by himself, to 'Men of the Time,' to the Grange School of that town, and afterwards to Glasgow University. In 1837 he was at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow. For two years previously to his being called to the bar of the Inner Temple in 1845, he held the professorship of English Language and Literature at University College. Assistant-Secretary and then Secretary to the Board of Health, then Secretary to the Local Government Acts Office, he retired after twenty-one years' service with a pension. Two years later, in 1874, he succeeded Shirley Brooks as editor of Punch. Mr. Taylor edited the 'Autobiography of B. R. Haydon,' London, 1852, and the 'Autobiography and Correspondence of C. R. Leslie, R.A.' (1859), and completed Leslie's unfinished 'Life and Times of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' 1868. Mr. Taylor was a staunch advocate of a School of Historic Art. He never failed to accord a generous and loyal support to any attempt to revive upon the stage the plays of Shakespeare.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON have been instructed by the Duke of Marlborough to sell by auction during the ensuing season the whole of the important collection of books known as the Sunderland Library, formed by Charles, third Earl of Sunderland, during the reigns of Queen Anne and George I. This most valuable library consists of some 30,000 volumes, and is celebrated for its magnificent collection of first and early editions of the Greek and Latin classics. It includes, besides the first and other rare editions of the great Italian authors (amongst which is the famous Valdarfer Boccaccio), a superb collection of early printed Bibles in all languages (including a beautiful copy on vellum of the first Latin Bible with a date); many extremely rare works relating to America; a series of Spanish and Portuguese chronicles; valuable English county histories; first and early editions of the chief French poets and prose writers; an extraordinary series of French and English pamphlets relating to the Reformation and the political events of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; a large number of early printed French chronicles and memoirs; splendid books of prints; a few precious ancient manuscripts; collections of councils, histories, lives of saints, bodies of laws, &c. A goodly number of the books are printed on vellum, and many are extremely fine large-paper copies. They are chiefly in fine old morocco bindings, and the whole of the library is generally in splendid condition.

UNDER the heading 'Travellers' Tales,' Mr. Frederick Boyle, author of 'Chronicles of Nomansland,' 'Camp Notes,' &c., is about to publish in All the Year Round a series of stories attaching to different curiosities in his possession. The first of them will appear in August.

WE are glad to learn that there is at last some prospect of an exhaustive work on the life and writings of David Hume. Prof. A. C. Fraser, the editor of Berkeley, has in view this important undertaking after the completion of his work on Locke.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish almost immediately a biography of Étienne Dolet, the unfortunate scholar, poet, and printer of Lyons, who was burned as an atheist in 1546. The author, Mr. Richard Copley Christie, Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester, has devoted many years to the preparation of this work, and has added both from MSS. and printed sources to what has hitherto been known of Dolet and his fate. Mr. Christie has given much attention to the bibliography of Dolet, and has been fortunate enough to discover a certain number of books printed by him which were previously unknown. The most comprehensive list hitherto published of the books which issued from Dolet's press—that given by M. Boulmier—included only fifty-five. Mr. Christie has brought the number up to eighty-three.

MR. J. P. ANDERSON, of the Museum Library, is about to publish a work which has occupied his leisure for the last eighteen years. It is called 'The Book of British Topography: a Classified Catalogue of the Topographical Books in the Library of the British Museum relating to Great Britain and Ireland.' Mr. Satchell will be the publisher.

Messrs. MACMILLAN will publish in August a new novel entitled 'The Head of Medusa,' by 'George Fleming,' author of 'A Nile Novel' and 'Mirage.' The scene is laid in Rome.

MR. H. G. REID has just completed a new and corrected edition of the 'Dictionary of Commerce,' an important work compiled by his late relative, Mr. Ramsey McCulloch, the head of the Stationery Office. Mr. Reid has written a third supplement to the dictionary, tracing the progress of British commercial legislation down to the present time.

AT the last meeting of the Council of the Folk-lore Society, Lord Beauchamp presiding, the appointment of a committee to consider and report to the Council upon the best means of collecting, arranging, proving, and comparing the proverbs and proverbial sayings of all countries, both ancient and modern, was decided upon. The members of the Committee are the Rev. Canon Hume, the Rev. J. Long, the Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrna, Dr. A. Laing, and Messrs. Curtis, Pfondes, Solly, Coats, Vaux, and Gomme, and they will have their first meeting at an early date. Some important papers have been sent to the Council from India by Lieut. Carnac-Temple.

WE believe that the German Teachership at the Taylor Institution, Oxford, will shortly become vacant. Dr. Hamann, the present teacher, having accepted, according to a Berlin paper, a similar post at Berlin.

THE 'German Reader' which has been entrusted by the Delegates of the Clarendon Press, as we stated a fortnight ago, to the editorship of Dr. Hamann, will consist of selections used by Prof. Max Müller in his 'German Classics,' issued some years ago and now out of print.

'THE Praise of Books, as Said and Sung by English Writers,' is the title of a work by Dr. J. A. Langford, which will shortly be published. The introduction will consist of an essay on books by the compiler of the work.

THE Hon. Albion W. Tourjee, of Denver, Colorado, is the author of the work 'A Fool's Errand,' by One of the Fools, which has had an enormous circulation in the United States and has been reviewed in this journal. The author is now engaged on a new work, which will probably be entitled 'Pictures in Black and White,' and will further illustrate life in the Southern States.

MR. GEORGE BANCROFT hopes to complete in October his 'History of the United States,' begun in 1825. Mr. Bancroft lives in Washington, and though eighty years of age might easily pass for a man of sixty.

Messrs. MACMILLAN announce for immediate publication Mr. Roby's long-expected 'School Latin Grammar,' and will bring out during the coming vacation the following educational works: 'Progressive French Course, Third Year,' and 'Progressive French Readers, First and Second Years,' by E. E. Fasnacht; 'First Lessons in Greek,' by Prof. John Williams White; Xenophon's 'Anabasis,' Books I.-IV, edited by Profs. W. W. Goodwin and J. W. White; 'Select Poems of Propertius,' edited by Mr. J. P. Postgate, M.A.; 'The Story of Achilles,' from Homer's Iliad, edited by Mr. J. H. Pratt, M.A., and Mr. Walter Leaf, M.A.; and Pliny's 'Letters,' Book III., edited by Prof. J. E. B. Mayor. These volumes will form part of the 'Classical Series,' while in the 'Elementary Classics' will appear 'Scenes in the Hannibalian War,' adapted for schools from the twenty-first and twenty-second books of Livy by Mr. G. C. Macaulay, M.A., and 'Selections from the Greek Elegiac Poets,' by the Rev. H. Kynaston, M.A.

DR. LUTJOHANN, of Kiel, is preparing a revised edition of the works of Apollinaris Sidonius for the 'Monumenta Germanica.' This edition may be considered definitive, Dr. Lütjohann having collated the MSS. of the Escorial Library, and those in the libraries in the United Kingdom and at Paris.

A second and enlarged edition of Jaffé's 'Regesta Pontificum Romanorum ab Condita Ecclesia ad Annum post Christum Natum MCMXIII.' will appear, under the editorship of Prof. W. Wattenbach.

MR. ROACH SMITH, in his 'Collectanea Antiqua,' publishes an interesting notice of the late Thomas Wright, from which the following is an extract:—

"Wright's physical strength and buoyant spirits helped him to make some long pedestrian excursions; and several of his more popular works are the result of personal observations. When the vast amount of his successful literary labours is considered, as well as the time they consumed in close research and confinement, it is remarkable that he should have been able to accomplish so much in the open field as a relaxation. His amduity and perseverance were extraordinary. He was seldom in bed after three or four o'clock in the summer, and five or six in the winter; and worked all day with only slight intervals at meals. The 'Wanderings of an Antiquary' will show how he turned relaxation to literary profit; 'Uriconium' sprang from his excavations at Wroxeter. It was for The Archaeological Album he and Fairholt visited Richborough and Reculver. Fairholt, who was not so robust as our friend, used to relate, with the most serious emphasis, the difficulties they experienced in walking from the comforts of Mr. Rolfe's house at Sandwich to Reculver. The road is long, and anything but easy; while heavy rain made it, in parts, laborious. By the time they reached Reculver they were soaked to the skin; and then, as there were no vacant beds at the inn, they had to walk on to Herne Bay, three miles farther; and there to go to bed immediately while their clothes were being dried. 'I thought it would have killed me,' added Fairholt; 'and even now I shudder in thinking of the horrors of that walk! As for Wright, he only laughed, and really seemed to enjoy it.' . . . Wright's buoyant and even spirits, his extensive knowledge, and unassuming manners, made him an agreeable companion; but few, alas! now survive, who shared in his wanderings. To the site of the Roman potteries on the Medway, he was introduced by me, or, rather, by my old friend Mr. Humphrey Wickham, who procured for us Mr. Hulkes's yacht; and Mr. Henry Coulter as steersman, who, when in after years I came to reside near Strood, proved a constant and valuable friend, whose loss I shall ever lament. Strood was our place of meeting over night. On one occasion, to save the tide, we had to rise about five o'clock on a summer's morning. Jerdan, who was with us, gravely inquired if it would be light? The late Alfred J. Dunkin, on this occasion, sent a half-serious, half-jocular, account of the excursion to one of the papers, which was copied and reprinted in town and country; and, after a long time, came back to us in a French dress, in Galignani's Messenger."

THE Rev. M. J. Savage, of Boston, U.S., author of 'The Religion of Evolution,' is in London, where a new work from his pen on the ethical bearings of Evolution will be published by Messrs. Trübner.

Our Florentine Correspondent in writing to us mentions three new publications of importance. One of these is the 'Appressamento della Morte,' a youthful production of Leopardi's, the discovery of which among some family papers we lately mentioned. We shall shortly review the book, of which a copy lies on our table. Another work, says Prof. de Gubernatis,

"is creditable to the instruction in Italian literary history which is given at the Istituto di Studi Superiori by Prof. Adolfo Bertoli. He has trained a number of the students to make important investigations in his favourite subject. One of his pupils, Dr. Guido Biagi, has just issued an excellent dissertation on the 'Fonti del Novellino,' that is to say, on the sources of that ancient collection of Italian stories. The monograph is full of erudition, and inspired by a critical spirit that speaks well both for the school and the scholar."

Prof. de Gubernatis then proceeds to speak of another work already announced in these columns, Mr. Fagan's edition of the 'Lettere ad Antonio Panizzi di Uomini Illustri e di Amici Italiani (1823-1870)':—

"One of his correspondents styled Panizzi the advocate-general of the affairs of Italy in England. In fact, Panizzi, single-handed, did more for his country at London than all the ambassadors and ministers of Sardinia put together, by his numerous and influential friendships, the personal consideration he merited, by his intelligence, his rectitude, his good sense, and the zeal he displayed in anything that he undertook. A good adviser and a good patriot, he was entirely trusted. An exile, he had no disposition to come to terms with the tyrants of his country; a unitarian with Mazzini, he was a monarchist with Cavour; he checked the impatience of some and stimulated the efforts of others. In the first years he toiled for the resurrection of Italy along with Santa Rosa, Ugo Foscolo, and Giuseppe Pecchio, years which prepared the movements of 1848-49, when he listened to the noble confidences of the exiled M. Amari, whose admirable character is revealed in a series of vivid letters of Giovanni Berchet, who, after having inveighed in verse against the oppressors, showed exceptional wisdom and political foresight, and of Gabrio Casati, the ex-president of the provisional government of Milan. The third series of the correspondence comprises letters addressed to Panizzi by Cavour, Azeglio, Minghetti, Farini, Poerio, Settembrini—for whose deliverance Panizzi worked so perseveringly,—Massari, Bertani, and other Italian statesmen, who all regarded Panizzi as the man best fitted to excite the sympathy of England. The notes are well drawn up and much to the point."

SCIENCE

A Theoretical and Practical Treatise on the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid and Alkali, with the Collateral Branches. By George Lunge, Ph.D. 2 vols. (Van Voorst.)

It was natural enough that when the alchemist, busy with furnace and alembic, succeeded in distilling from green vitriol an oily acid liquid, or "spirit," he should give to this fuming liquid the name of oil of vitriol or spiritus vitrioli. The preparation of the acid by this process is clearly described by Basil Valentin in the alchemical treatise which he wrote under the fanciful title of 'Curus Triumphalis Antimonii.' In this work he also states that a peculiar acid may be obtained by burning brimstone with saltpetre—an acid which is, in truth, merely oil of vitriol, though Basil Valentin does not appear to have recognized its identity with the acid distilled from copperas. It is curious to note that after the lapse of more than four centuries we still carry on the manufacture of vitriolic acid by a modification of the brimstone-and-saltpetre process. True, the sulphur is usually displaced by pyrites, yet the principle on which the manufacture rests remains the same as in the days of the alchemists, the acid being still prepared by the oxidation of sulphurous acid by means of nitrous vapours. But how marvellous the development of the manufacture! In fact, the growth of our chemical industries has led to so enormous a demand for oil of vitriol—or, as we generally call it nowadays, sulphuric acid—that its preparation becomes a matter of national importance. Liebig, mindful of its manifold uses, declared long ago that the progress of a nation in the path of civilization might be fairly measured by the quantity of sulphuric acid which it consumed.

One of the principal demands for sulphuric acid is in the manufacture of "alkali," by which term commercial chemists always designate carbonate of soda. For such important industries as glass-making and soap-making, prodigious quantities of common salt are every week converted into carbonate of soda by a method known as Leblanc's process. Nicholas Leblanc, a native of Issoudun in Central France, who has the undoubted merit of having originated the prosperous industry for which our great alkali works have been erected, had the ill luck to fall upon stormy days, and received but a sorry reward for his ingenuity. Stimulated by the chance of securing a large prize offered by the French Academy of Sciences in 1775 for the best method of making soda from salt, he set to work and devised the process which has since become so famous. With the aid of the Duke of Orleans he established alkali works at St. Denis; but the Revolution came, and his chances of success were lost. When his patron the duke—Citoyen Egalité—was guillotined, the works were confiscated. Nor was Leblanc allowed to retain his patent rights, for, by a decree published on the 12th Pluviose in the year II., he was compelled to give up his process to a commission appointed by the Comité du Salut Public. Afterwards, to be sure, he received some pecuniary satisfaction, but nevertheless he was soon reduced to poverty; and we find that the man who has since enabled so many English manufacturers to make their fortunes was in the year 1806 so broken in body and in spirit that at last he could not resist the temptation to put an end to his life with his own hands.

The manufacture of sulphuric acid and of alkali lies at the very root of all our chemical activity, and hence it is that Dr. Lunge has treated the subject in so detailed a manner that his treatise already forms two portly volumes of nearly fourteen hundred pages. Although the author is now Professor of Technical Chemistry at Zurich, he was practically engaged for eleven years in alkali works in the north of England. He is, therefore, thoroughly familiar with the details of English manufacture, and he has moreover acquired so complete a mastery over our language that his treatise is written in admirable English. With perseverance characteristically Teutonic, he has gathered together a vast body of information bearing upon both the scientific and the technological aspect of his subject. The exhaustive treatise which he has produced is consequently valuable not only to the student, who will find in it a full exposition of the scientific principles upon which the preparation of sulphuric acid and alkali is based, but also—and we would say especially—to the manufacturer, who may turn with confidence to its pages for copious descriptions of the various processes and of the apparatus employed. It should be added that much of the matter which Dr. Lunge has introduced into this treatise has not been previously published. Finally, we may remark that the value of the treatise is greatly enhanced by its excellent illustrations, which are mostly drawn to scale from actual working drawings.

Steel: its History, Manufacture, Properties, and Uses. By J. S. Jeans. (Spon.)

STEEL is usually described as a variety of iron containing a small definite proportion of carbon. Iron containing no carbon, or which contains but a very small quantity of that element, is known as "wrought iron," whereas iron containing a larger proportion of carbon is termed "cast iron." The differences between these three varieties of metal are well known, and it must be admitted that they are in every respect remarkable. That a slight difference in the percentages of charcoal should produce such results in the physical condition of iron could not be arrived at by any a priori reasoning. Yet this has been proved to be the case by the so-called Bessemer process, and by other processes by which the native carbon is expelled from the molten crude iron, and resupplied by a carbonaceous mixture of known composition. The present work deals with steel only; yet so unsettled is the author's knowledge of the real nature of this metal that above eight hundred pages of closely printed matter are filled with the examination of its chemical and physical nature and a statement of its applications. Then our author writes:—"Much might have been added. The more the subject of the manufacture and application of steel is inquired into, the more does it seem incapable of exhaustion. Great things have been accomplished in the past, but much yet remains in the future. The manufacture of steel is far from finality." Mr. Jeans has, it must be admitted, with great industry collected almost everything that has been written on steel. His book is, therefore, a useful handbook, to which any one might refer with the certainty of finding all ordinary published information. He has steadily traced out every new process, down to the one introduced last year, by which the phosphorus and sulphur are eliminated, and the ores of Cleveland, contaminated with phosphorus, are rendered available for the production of high-class steel. With all this painstaking research, for which the author deserves the thanks of one class of readers for whom this book is intended, there is a fatal blot upon its pages. Mr. Jeans has evidently no practical acquaintance with steel or with its manufacture. Consequently we do not find a single original remark in this thick volume betraying the slightest knowledge of the rationale of the processes which are described. It is a compilation from all the sources of information available to the author, and but a limited amount of judgment has been brought to bear upon the selection which he has made. The author, indeed, admits in his introduction that "the present work does not claim to be regarded as a purely metallurgical treatise. It is intended to aid the general reader, the statistician, and the user of steel, as much as the manufacturer; and if its main value should be found to lie in its historical qualities, such a result would only accord with its original design." It is some satisfaction to discover that the result of a cautious examination of each of its twenty-nine chapters fully satisfies us that, notwithstanding the frequent discussions into treatises of science which have been made, they have failed to impress the author's mind, and invariably he returns to his "original design."

Nature's Hygiene: a Series of Essays on Popular Scientific Subjects, with Special Reference to the Chemistry and Hygiene of the Eucalyptus and the Pine. By C. T. Kingzett, F.C.S. (Bailière, Tindall & Cox.)

"Nothing like Eucalyptus" should be the motto of this book, and if we only change the name of the chemical agent, the same words might form the title of any other treatise on some special antiseptic or disinfectant. Mr. Kingzett extols with good reason the virtues of the Australian gum-tree, of turpentine, and of "Sanitas." He dwells upon Rame's great discovery of the fever-destroying properties of a plantation of Eucalypti. The planting of a few thousand of these trees in malarious districts in Algiers, the Campagna, and the south of France has effectually rendered the neighbourhood healthy in all three cases, and the same satisfactory result has been obtained as far north as the Scheldt. It is doubtful whether the Australian gum-tree will ever thrive in England, but the use of that tree in the tropics and the warmer temperate regions will, we trust, never be overlooked by those who are interested in the welfare of our colonies.

MR. H. BELLIS BAILDON has mistaken his vocation in turning from the strict cultivation of the thankless Muse to the production of his highly imaginative essays on The Spirit of Nature (Churchill). Mr. Baildon's object is the laudable one of "attacking and, if possible, demolishing that materialistic and atheistic system for whose bricks Darwin himself has but supplied the stubble." For this purpose he presents us with two hundred pages of really tolerable verse, disguised as prose, and thinly masked under a faint pretence of argumentative reasoning. The book is pretty enough, and its style has often genuine merit, but its logic is not of the proper calibre for the demolition of Darwinism. "Wilt thou slay me with that paper pellet?" asks the giant of our childhood; and Mr. Baildon's paper pellet will certainly fail to overthrow the giant of Evolution. A competent knowledge of science would probably prove more useful than a fertile imagination to a scientific disputant; otherwise there is nothing to say against this pleasantly written and cultivated little book.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

THE unexpected death of Dr. Paul Broca is, perhaps, the heaviest loss which anthropology could at the present time sustain. His admirable skill, his inspiring energy, his brilliant originality, gave a new impetus to anthropological studies, not alone in his own country, but in this country and all over Europe. The writer of this note is more disposed, in the first shock of the sad news, to dwell upon the high personal qualities of the man, to recall the gracious courtesy with which he made the student free of his laboratory and the charms of his correspondence on scientific subjects, than to enumerate his published works or to recount his services to science. These were, it will be remembered, rewarded recently by the unique distinction of his election as a member of the French Senate. His answer to a letter of congratulation addressed to him on that occasion on behalf of the Anthropological Club may be of interest:—"Paris, 12 février, 1880. Mon cher collègue, je suis très touché des félicitations que vous me faites l'honneur de m'adresser, au nom de l'Anthropological Club, à l'occasion de ma nomination de Sénateur. En choisissant pour la première fois leur candidat en dehors du monde politique, les gauches du Sénat ont voulu manifester leurs bonnes dispositions pour les sciences, et si je suis heureux d'avoir été choisi à ce titre, je suis heureux surtout que l'anthropologie ait acquis dans l'opinion publique assez d'importance pour être appelée à avoir son représentant dans le Sénat. La lutte—à laquelle je suis resté complètement étranger—a été très vive. Elle s'est produite dans des circonstances politiques graves, à la suite d'une scission qui menaçait de déplacer la majorité dans le Sénat, au profit du parti clérical. Ce n'est donc pas l'anthropologie seule qui a eu l'honneur de soulever un orage parmi les patres conscripti; mais c'est elle du moins qui a été la 'tête de turc' sur laquelle on a frappé à coups redoublés. Elle a été attaquée sous toutes les formes, pendant quinze jours, par les journaux de la droite. Elle peut donc réclamer pour elle une bonne part du succès. Je vous prie d'être, auprès de l'Anthropological Club, l'interprète de toute ma gratitude, et je vous remercie personnellement, cher collègue et ami, de la forme trop bienveillante que vous avez donnée à votre lettre de félicitations. Veuillez croire à mes sentiments affectueux. P. BROCA." To say that he was founder and director of the Revue d'Anthropologie, founder and general secretary from the beginning until his death of the Anthropological Society of Paris, founder and professor at the School of Anthropology or Anthropological Institute of France, is but faintly to indicate the kind of services he rendered to anthropological science. They will doubtless receive a worthy record from some of his distinguished colleagues in Paris.

MR. G. CARRICK STEET has published in the St. George's Hospital Reports a paper on the development of boys between thirteen and twenty years of age, giving statistics of the height, weight, chest measurement, and strength of 3,695 candidates for employment as telegraph messengers, &c.—a valuable addition to the collections of anthropometric statistics now being systematically made in public schools and other quarters, and tending to confirm the law of growth laid down by Dr. Bowditch and Mr. Charles Roberts.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

Messrs. CHURCHILL will publish in the autumn 'The Ocean as a Health-Resort: a Handbook for the Use of Tourists and Invalids,' by Mr. W. S. Wilson, I.R.C.P. The author has endeavoured first to give practical information as to routes, shipping lines, outfit, and other preliminary matters. Next, he has tried to present a faithful picture of life at sea, and of what is to be expected in the way of accommodation, food, and amusement during a long voyage; and he has also described the climate and weather usually experienced during a passage to and from Australia, and has given some hints as to the management of the health, especially in the tropics. A chapter has been devoted to the various objects of interest that are met with at sea. Lastly, some account has been given of Australia and South Africa, with special reference to climate and the localities most suitable as a residence for invalids who, having made the voyage to either of those regions, intend to remain there for a longer or shorter time. A track-chart accompanies this volume.

Signor Romolo Gessi, in a letter addressed to the editor of L'Esploratore, states that the powerful Nyam-Nyam chiefs Mdaranu, Mbio, and Mofio have acknowledged the supremacy of the Egyptian Government. Mdaranu visited him at Dem Suleiman, attended by a suite of fifty persons. He is about thirty-five years of age, has intelligent features, and is of colossal stature, being over two metres in height. He declined the gorgeous Arab dresses which were offered him, and begged to be attired in the Frankish style instead. He brought with him an acceptable offering of ivory, and promised to forward 700 muskets, which his people had taken in their successful skirmishes with Arab traders. The ivory was accepted, but Gessi advised him to keep the muskets, as they might prove of use to him. By the submission of these chiefs an extensive territory, hitherto closed against explorers and traders, is thrown open, and Dr. Junker is the first European traveller who will profit by the new order of things. The military events on the Upper Nile have apparently exercised an unfavourable influence upon the ivory trade. The exports of ivory in 1879 were less than in any previous year since 1856, having only amounted to 160,000 pounds, as compared with 410,000 pounds in 1878.

It is not often that reports presented to the Legislature of the State of New York have so much general interest as that On the Preservation of the Scenery of Niagara Falls. The volume in which it is contained abounds in appropriate illustrations. There is a reproduction of the first picture of the Falls given in Father Hennepin's work, and published in 1698. Other plates show the Falls in their present state, and one depicts the American rapids in the ideal condition which it is the design of this Report to promote. In few places of natural interest has the tourist more to suffer than at Niagara. Not only is he importuned at every corner to buy something, but he is hindered from seeing the sights at all unless he pay toll repeatedly. The Commissioners admit in their Report that "at no other notable pleasure resort of Europe or America is the stay of travellers so short." Indeed, the traveller who goes to Niagara in order to enjoy the marvellous scenery there soon finds existence so great a burden that he is glad to get away. Manufactories are springing up and adding new blots on the landscape. Mr. Gardiner, the Director of the State Survey, writes:—"The Falls themselves man cannot touch; but he is fast destroying their beautiful frame of foliage, and throwing around them an artificial setting of manufactories and bazaars that rouse in the intelligent visitor deep feelings of regret, and even of resentment." Very little now remains of the wild beauties which impressed Father Hennepin. The exception is Goat Island, whereon there still stands a part of the primeval forest. Sir Joseph Hooker says of this island that he found on it a greater variety of vegetation within a given space than anywhere in Europe or east of the Sierras, in America. This island owes its preservation to having remained in the possession of one family. It is about to change hands, and it is proposed to cut down the wood and make a race-course on the site, or to cut a canal through it and erect a row of cheese factories. We hope that the Legislature of the State of New York may be influenced by the statements in this admirable volume to take the steps proposed (which are easy and would involve little outlay) for saving Niagara Falls and their surroundings from further desecration.

The Victorian Year-Book for 1878 is creditable to the industry of its compiler, Mr. H. H. Hayter, the Government statist of the colony. Its statistical summaries are far more ample than those given in the 'Abstracts' published by the Board of Trade, and they are accompanied, moreover, by explanatory notes, which considerably enhance the value of the work, for mere arrays of figures are frequently misleading. An examination of the Year-Book shows Victoria to be a prosperous community. With a population of 879,449 in 1878, its imports exceed sixteen, its exports nearly reach fifteen, million pounds; the thirteen banks have a paid-up capital of nine millions, and about a million and a half is deposited in savings banks. Moral interests are attended to no less than material ones. Melbourne University is attended by 258 students; there are 2,266 public and private schools, attended by 286,251 scholars, besides two schools of mines and twenty schools of art and design. The public library at Melbourne contains 101,035 volumes, 168 smaller libraries contain 323,647, and the National Gallery, Industrial and Natural History Museums are annually increasing in importance, schools of painting, chemistry, and engineering having been established in connexion with them. A religious census is regularly taken in Victoria, as in most of our colonies. It has been suggested that an inquiry into the number of persons attending divine worship would answer every practical object, but a glance at the Victorian statistics conclusively shows the fallacy of this opinion. Taking the Roman Catholics, we find that they only amounted to 21 per cent. of the church-goers throughout the colony, although the census showed them to form 24 per cent. of the total population. The statistics of the colony show very conclusively that these Catholics, or, what is pretty much the same, the Irish, are poorer than their fellow citizens, and come more frequently into conflict with the law. Though numbering only 24 per cent. of the total population, 43 per cent. of the persons arrested in 1878, 30 per cent. of those committed for trial, and 33 per cent. of the inmates of lunatic asylums and other charitable institutions were Roman Catholics. Curiously enough it is the "pagans" of Victoria who give least trouble to the police.

Mr. Stanford sends us the sixth issue of the London Guide, a very useful guide to people going about London.

Messrs. Ward & Lock send us two popular Illustrated Guides, one to Edinburgh and the other a guide to the Channel Islands; but they would be better without the illustrations. An odd mistake occurs in the Edinburgh Guide: Cromwell is said to have encamped at Musselburgh eight years after the battle of Carberry Hill. There are other slips. The Duke of Buccleuch began his works at Granton long before 1860.

Bartholomew's Reduced Ordnance Map of Oban and Loch Awe District (Edinburgh, Black) is opportunely published immediately after the opening of the new railway through the Western Highlands. Tourists could not wish for a more trustworthy guide, for all the details of the one-inch Ordnance map are given, excepting only the hills. This, of course, is a serious omission, and the utility of Mr. Bartholomew's set of maps would be greatly enhanced if he could be induced to sketch in the hill features, either in chalk or by some other not too obtrusive method.

Johnston's First Steps in Geography (Edinburgh, Johnston) consists of little more than a collection of definitions, with "exercises for memory or transcription" attached thereto. The little book abounds in statements to which we feel bound to take exception. How is it possible to describe England and Scotland as peninsulas or the Isle of Thanet as an island? "Coast" and "beach" are assumed to be synonymous terms. "Where the sky seems to touch the land," we are told, "it is called horizon; where it appears to touch the sea it is called offing." "Plateaus are mountains whose tops are flat." On a fancy sketch illustrative of the little handbook the delta of a river which discharges itself into an "inland sea" is described as a "Mediterranean Delta." This is curious, to say the least of it.

SOCIETIES.

ASIANIC.—July 5.—Sir H. C. Rawlinson, President, in the chair.—Mr. G. Crawshaw was elected a Resident Member, and Messrs. W. R. Phillips and E. Setow Non-resident Members.—Mr. E. L. Branderth read the second part of a paper 'On a Comparison between the Gaurian and the Romance Languages,' the former meaning the modern Sanscrit languages, Hindi, Bengali, &c., and the main object of the paper was to show that there was a remarkable resemblance in the changes by which Sanscrit had become Gaurian, and Latin Romance. In the course of it Sindhi was compared with Italian and Hindi with French. The first part of the paper (published in the last volume of the Society's Journal) dealt chiefly with phonology, and showed that the letter-changes in the two groups were nearly identical. In part II. it was shown that the neuter gender had generally disappeared, and that the final s or m had usually gone too. The plural in both groups was still distinguished by flexion. The loss of case-endings was supplied by particles in Gaurian, postpositions, as generally derived from the locative case; whereas in Romance prepositions most frequently became case-particles. Diminutive forms prevailed extensively; adjectives were declined like substantives; the personal pronouns preserved an oblique case; while in the numerals the ordinals appear in all the languages to be derived directly from the Sanscrit and the Latin. The only original tenses preserved in both groups are the present indicative and the imperative, the remaining tenses being periphrastic formations. The paper concluded with a brief examination of the syntax.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—July 7.—J. Haynes, Esq., in the chair.—Sir P. de Colquhoun read a paper 'On the Pelagi and Albanians,' in which he maintained the view that the latter, who call themselves "Skipetari," are the lineal descendants of the semi-mythical Pelagi, who, he considered, derived this name from the Greeks around them, with the general name of "neighbours." The derivation of the name from any supposed "King Pelagius" he held to be an absurdity, the government in the earliest days, as now, being in the hand of tribal chieftains, elected when necessary. Plenty of such examples may be found, those of Agamemnon and Casarvelmus being exactly to the point. Mr. Patrick considered the evidence of antiquity to be clearly in favour of the common origin (though at a very remote date) of both Pelagi and Greeks, the main distinction between them being that, while the Pelagi admitted no affiliation from without, the Greeks largely incorporated foreign races. Most of the Greek deities, it is admitted, were of Pelagian origin. The Pelagi were and remained simple warriors, the Greeks, after a high cultivation of art, became effeminate, and were thus exterminated. The Pelagi were naturally pushed back into their mountains by the spread of the Hellenic race; but there they have remained through all time. The strength of Alexander's Macedonian phalanx was, the writer believed, due to the large number of Pelagi or Skipetari who served in it.

STATISTICAL.—June 30.—Anniversary Meeting.—T. Brassey, Esq., President, in the chair.—The Report submitted by the Council stated that the financial condition of the Society was satisfactory. Great progress had been made during the last decade, the number of Fellows having been nearly doubled, while the income and amount invested have been more than doubled in that time.—The following were elected to be the President, Council, and Officers for the ensuing year, viz. President, J. Caird, Esq.; Council, A. H. Bailey, Dr. T. G. Balfour, A. E. Bateman, G. P. Bevan, E. Bourne, E. W. Brabrook, Sir G. Campbell, J. O. Chadwick, A. Hamilton, H. Chubb, Hyde Clarke, J. L. Cohen, Major P. G. Craigie, J. Davares, R. Giffen, P. Hindrichs, Noel A. Humphreys, Prof. W. B. Jevons, R. Lawson, Prof. Leone Levi, J. H. Martin, R. Biddulph Martin, F. J. Mount, F. G. P. Newson, R. H. Patterson, H. D. Pochin, F. Purdy, Sir R. W. Rawson, T. A. Welton, and C. Walford; Treasurer, R. B. Martin; Secretaries, H. Chubb, H. Giffen, and J. B. Martin; Foreign Secretary, F. J. Mount.

PHILOLOGICAL.—July 9.—Special Meeting.—A. J. Ellis, Esq., President, in the chair.—Mr. H. Sweet read his 'Notes on the Partial Correction of English Spellings,' which he had drawn up by the Council's request as a basis for discussion by the meeting, preliminary to the Society's issue of recommendations for a partial reform of English spelling. After much discussion the meeting adopted as the basis of an immediate partial reform: 1. The omission of silent, etymologically useless letters, whenever it does not involve further disputed changes. This would apply to such reforms as slaid for island; form for foreign; rein for reign; but would leave the g in sign, because its substitute, sine, sein, sain, cannot yet be agreed on. 2. Restore older spellings when now phonetic, as feld for field, ake for arch. 3. Eliminate orthographic irregularities and unphonetic spellings by extending forms and principles already in use, as ov for of, traveller for traveler. The details of the changes to be made in a spellings were then decided on, as ar for are, giv for give, cum for come, du for due, loht for looked, tugd for tugged, er for ere (center, &c.), driven for driven, premia for premier, forfet for forfeit, hikt for height, u or a for on, as gamen, jepardy, pyple. The meeting was adjourned to Friday, July 16th, and the final decision on the whole matter put off till the next session in November.

INDEX SOCIETY.—July 9.—Annual Meeting.—Mr. J. R. Lowell, the American Minister, is the chair.—"It was pleasant," said the Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, "to be associated with those present, and to preside at a meeting like that, for it enabled him to recognize the cosmopolitanism of the republic of letters and to express before the world the good feeling which he loved to cherish between two countries that should have no rivalry, except in common pride of ancestry and in competition in good works. He hoped the Americans would assist a society whose usefulness was much narrowed by lack of funds."—The Report, besides enumerating what work the Society has done in the past, and which has been already noticed in these columns, referred to future work. Feeling bound to consider the wants of the practical man as well as of the student, the Society is making arrangements for indexes on technical subjects, such as the water supply and public charities. An index, also, of the names of persons interred in London cemeteries is proposed, a volume being devoted to each cemetery. Mr. Alderman Hanson had promised a list of the aldermen of the ward of Billingsgate, an example which the Council hope will be followed by other zealous citizens.—A dry discussion on the subject of Roman remains in Great Britain ended in a resolution recommending the Council to appoint a committee for the collection of information on the subject, with a view to making an index of all places in the kingdom where such remains have been found. Another resolution referred to the Council the question of the advisability of opening an office where materials for a universal index might be arranged and a library of indexes formed.

MEETINGS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK

Feb. Quaker: Microscopical, &c.—Annual Meeting.
Sat. Botanical, &c.—Election of Fellows.

Science Society.

THE friends of the late Prof. Alfred Henry Garrod, F.R.S., being desirous of possessing some memorial of him, it has been agreed that this object will be best affected by the republication in a collected form of all his separate memoirs and papers, both zoological and physiological, prefaced by a biographical notice and portrait of the author. A committee has been formed to carry out this object. It is estimated that Prof. Garrod's collected papers will form a volume of about 800 pages, royal octavo, illustrated by twenty-five plates and numerous woodcuts.

THE planet Jupiter now rises between ten and eleven o'clock in the evening. It is in the constellation Pisces, and will soon be favourably situated for renewed study of its surface.

THE Council of Melbourne University have decided to admit ladies as students, except as regards the classes for medicine. Three ladies have already enrolled themselves as students, and at the matriculation examinations in December no fewer than one hundred and forty females went up.

AN interesting paper has been published by Prof. Klinkerfues, of Göttingen, on the great comet discovered by Dr. Gould at Cordoba last February and its supposed previous appearances. Its object is to point out that the probable identity of this comet with those seen in 1843 and 1868 need not be rejected because it does not appear to have been seen, although so conspicuous an object, between those years. So nearly does it approach the sun (within, indeed, about 100,000 miles of its surface) that the resistance to its motion when at perihelion is likely to be sufficient to produce a very considerable diminution in its periodic time, the case being, in fact, one of resistance from the sun's atmosphere itself, and not merely, as has been conjectured in the case of Encke's comet, from an ethereal medium presumed to exist within the orbits of at least some of the planets. Hence there is nothing extravagant in the supposition that the resistance of the part of the corona within which the comet passes (many of the prominences which, under the old name of red flames, played so important a part in the history of solar eclipses, extend to more than double the distance from the sun's surface within which the comet comes at perihelion) may be quite sufficient to diminish its period of revolution from 175 years to 37 years. Carrying this view still further back, Prof. Klinkerfues contends that it is probable the same comet may be identical with one seen and described by Aristotle in the year B.C. 371, when that philosopher was only thirteen years old and still living in his birthplace, Stagira. He considers it likely that whilst the period of revolution from B.C. 371 to A.D. 1668 was 2039 years, it was diminished, by the resistance of the sun's atmosphere, first to 175 and then to 37 years; and further, that it has at the late passage through perihelion been again decreased to 17 years, so that, if this view be correct, we may expect to see another return of the comet in the autumn of 1897.

THE Danish zoologist, Prof. P. W. Lund, died at Laguna Santo, in Brazil, on the 25th of May last, but the news has only just reached his friends. The deceased scientist was in his seventy-ninth year, but notwithstanding his great age he was pursuing his investigations into the habits of tropical insects at the time of his death. His collections are bequeathed to the Natural History Museum of Copenhagen.

MR. CLEMENT L. WEAVER is establishing, with the permission of Col. Bromley Davenport, a meteorological station on the Beacon Scarp, Weaver Hills, the highest point in Staffordshire.

MR. GRAHAM BELL has been recommended, by the Commission appointed in 1876 to consider the distribution of the 2,000*l.* decreed by the French Government, to the Minister of Instruction as worthy of receiving this prize for the invention of his articulating magneto-electric telephone. M. Gramme is also recommended for a prize of 800*l.* for his magneto-electric machine.

M. CHANCEL was elected, at the Séance of June 7th, by the Académie des Sciences to replace M. Favre as correspondent for the section of Chemistry; and on June 14th M. Stas was elected correspondent to the same section to replace M. Zinin.

THE Minister of Public Instruction has transmitted to the Académie des Sciences a letter from the French consul at Charleston on the discovery of sircon in the environs of Asheville, in the mountains of South Carolina.

M. JEAN MOTHEUX GAUGAIN, whose fine work on electricity was encouraged by the Académie des Sciences and recompensed by the Gégner prize, died after a long and painful illness on the 31st of May last.

DR. NOLTING succeeds Dr. Goppelsröder as Professor at the Ecole de Chimie of Mulhouse.

WE have received the Indian Meteorological Memoirs, Vol. I. Part IV., which is devoted to a consideration of the winds of Kurrahee by Fred. Chambers, Meteorological Reporter for Western India.

FINE ARTS

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE NINETY-SEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION will close on Saturday, July 18th, at 4 P.M. Last Room, from Ten till Six.—Admission, 1*d.* to Children, 6*d.* ALFRED D. FAIRY, Secretary.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN BLACK and WHITE. Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, consisting of Drawings, Etchings, and Engravings. OPEN DAILY from Ten till Six.—Admission, 1*d.*, Children, 6*d.* R. P. M'NAB, Sec.

DOUGLAS'S GREAT WORKS.—CHRIST LEAVING THE PRETORIUM, CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM, and THE RAZAN RESCUED (the latter just completed, each 25 by 31 feet, with 17000 of Plaster of Paris). Sold by the Gallery of the City of the Christian, "Keeper of the Gallery," at the DOME GALLERY, 55, New Bond Street, daily, Ten till Six.—1*d.*

Ceramic Art of Japan. By G. A. Audsley and J. L. Bowes. (Liverpool, published by the Authors; London, Sotheman & Co.)

FIVE years ago we mentioned the appearance of the first part of this work. The introductory essay gives a general sketch of our knowledge of Japanese art, and discusses some of the characteristics of this branch of design. None of these is more obvious than careful avoidance of anything approaching symmetrical repetition of forms, and even of the arrangement of forms. In this respect there is a radical difference between Japanese and classical or Gothic design. The latter two find symmetry in repetition, the former rejects everything of the sort, and is even fanatically averse to it. While a Western designer affects a conventional manner of representation, and at least duplication of features, and treats nature herself systematically, the Japanese rejects conventionalities of workmanship. He is a realist of the highest order in execution; he depicts details with an incomparable charm of handicraft, and will have nothing to do with conventional generalization. On the other hand, these details are generally disposed with extreme tact, so that a slight acquaintance with the subject shows that even the vagaries of the painters are directed, and to a great extent controlled, by a sense of order and even of proportion.

To vitalize Japanese decoration invention and a fresh feeling for nature and skill are needed. With the energy of childhood, their artists do wonders; but, as they reject system altogether, they have never advanced beyond childishness in art; they have developed nothing more than exquisite feeling for elegance of details. They draw flowers and leaves as they were never drawn elsewhere, not even in China or India; but, while thus transcendently gifted, they have never depicted a whole tree in a pictorial manner and infused sentiment into its representation; their landscapes are puerile; their figures, though full of energy and passionate expression, are but caricatures. Before us stand cups of fine white porcelain, to the contours of which the potter gave delicacy of form, moulding their outlines with his fingers, till a Greek would envy the subtlety of the curves; he next covered them with a deep orange semi-transparent film, and in the latter, with the end of a little stick only, the decorator drew blades of grass, flowers, and leaves so wonderfully that not Da Vinci, not Holbein, not Raphael could have surpassed them in finish or style. And yet they are but ordinarily fine things, unquestionably drawn with the end of a little stick, which, so to say, wiped out the loveliness of the natural forms by a series of ineffably skilful strokes. In short, the Japanese and their neighbours the Chinese have reached the acme of graphic delineation of floral and vegetable details, and also of fish and small birds. But they stop there. As to colour, their career is similar. Thus there appear to be two wonders in the history of Japanese art, 1, its incomparable success within narrow limits, and 2, its perfect insensibility to whatever constitutes mental activity, its apparent incapacity for development beyond the level of the primary stage of decorative design. The only analogous display—we cannot call it development—of artistic labour is that of the French Renaissance, which is a most curious example of retrogression in design, the perfect instance of æsthetic negation. With far inferior sense of beauty, there is something Japanese in the works or warms of B. Palissy.

In their introductory essay, which is clearly and carefully written, our authors are so Japanese as to enter on a large number of details, and yet not add much to our knowledge of the principles or of the history of art. They illustrate the application of the craftsman's skill to all sorts of subjects, such as diapers of quaint device and beautiful enrichment, the best of which assimilate themselves with good Gothic art. The authors show charming specimens of floral application in lacquer work, ivory, metals, and ceramics, and they enumerate the trees, flowers, birds, fish, and monsters. When we compare Japanese art with the technique of other nations, it is evident that the highest phase of the former is illustrated by the wonderful theatrical masks which abound in fine collections, and next in the sculptured figures of ivory and bronze in respect to which the artists surpass the Chinese. These objects do not properly come within the range of the studies of MM. Audsley and Bowes, and are therefore but briefly touched on. Some of the legends, humorous, personal, and religious, which are associated with the subjects of Japanese design are neatly told, and help to brighten a book which is further enlivened by the charming illustrations on Plates A. to M.

The highest application of Japanese pictorial design seems to be in the humorous subjects. Next to this the grotesques are most enjoyable, among which we include astounding pictures of direful combats by sea and land between men and monsters of all kinds and characters. In grotesques and energy nothing surpasses these things, and yet, after all, it must be admitted that one soon tires of them. To turn to another point of view, one fact astonishes every critic who has technical skill enough to appreciate it, and that is the amazing facility, the inexhaustible tact of Japanese painters. Our authors remark:—

"The most truly artistic efforts of the Japanese artists are those which display the simplest modes of delineation, and are generally executed in Indian ink only. Many descriptions have been given by those who have had the opportunity of watching the natives at work, and all bear witness to the remarkable quickness of imagination and execution they display. A traveller in the country relates how on one occasion he had the pleasure of observing a screen-painter at work in his studio, which consisted of a portion of the house, screened off from the rest by his own finished productions, but open to the street. Being struck with his great freedom of hand, he requested him to draw a bunch of grapes. This was given as a difficult task and test of skill, for the traveller had in his mind the laboured works of his own country, and naturally expected that, from the time required to depict the fruit, the artist would laugh and shake his head. Judge of his surprise when the artist seized a piece of screen-paper, and, dipping the point of his thumb into a dish of Indian ink, proceeded to make a number of softly-shaded crescent-like forms close together. Thinking he must have been misunderstood, but saying nothing, he watched with growing interest the rapid movements of his artistic friend. The crescent forms being finished, his first finger and thumb were together dipped into the ink and transferred to the paper, and with a few rapid movements produced two shaded forms of irregular outline. With his thumb-nail he added three dark lines and sundry other trifling touches, and politely handed the finished sketch, which displayed a bunch of plump round grapes, with leaves and stalks complete. This is by no means a bad illustration of the ready methods resorted to by the Japanese artists in representing simple objects, for which they are justly celebrated. We have one illustration in a Japanese book which shows an artist seated on a stool opposite a screen, which he is painting with no fewer than five brushes, one held in each foot, one in each hand, and one in his mouth. This is doubtless an exaggeration. Another humorous sketch on the same page shows the artist to be of such a transcendent genius, and the horse he had been painting proved so lifelike, that it became endowed with vitality and ran away from the paper. The amazement of the artist is cleverly expressed."

The last sentence represents admirably one of the marked peculiarities of Japanese design, an intensely energetic and perspicuous sense of humour, the manifestations of which are thoroughly like those of Gothic art; than this there is no higher praise. In Gothic and in Japanese art immeasurably more humour is to be found than in all the other æsthetic developments put together. Some of the noblest modes of art are devoid of humour; and, generally speaking, the most popular of them, the later Renaissance, exhibits ignoble humour only, and has no notion of that exquisite freakishness which disports itself in grotesque, in diables, in sculpture, and in painting on the walls of Roman villas and Gothic churches, and, most abundantly, in Japanese design.

Speaking of forms persistently, if not constantly, introduced in Japanese delineation, our authors do not, of course, neglect to call attention to the countless views of the sacred mount Fusi-yama, which figures in all moods of design, because the people adore

The mount,
As over many a land of theirs its large
Calm front of snow like a triumphal target
Is reared.

There are here some curious pictures of it, including one with the bare outline of a breaking wave, the energy of which is so astonishingly expressive as to be worthy of the peak at the foot of which it is thundering. The draughtsmanship of this wave-form is a masterpiece.

About the mythologic art of Japan Messrs. Audaley and Bowes have nothing new to say; indeed they borrow from a popular American writer not a few of the impressions of his inner consciousness. It is true that without special researches, which are beyond the range of this book, no new matter was to be looked for on this subject. It is sufficient that what we have is clear and, so far as present knowledge extends, to the purpose. Messrs. Audaley and Bowes have borrowed wisely from their forerunners, whose range is, by the way, exceptionally short, and does not embrace a greater space of time than that which has elapsed since 1799, when Dr. Hoffmann, of Leyden, translated part of a Japanese encyclopædia. Siebold and Kämpfer contributed to our knowledge, but in a popular and unscientific way. The Japanese themselves have not aided much in giving knowledge of the ceramic art of their country to the western nations. Much is, however, to be expected on the completion of the work of M. N. Noritane, of Tokio, of which a French translation is in progress of publication, unknown, so far as we have observed, to Messrs. Audaley and Bowes. The great collections of ceramic works of Japan recently made for the South Kensington Museum—to say nothing of the magnificent collection lent by Mr. Franks to the Museum at Bethnal Green, which he intends to give to the nation—are the finest gatherings in this country. They offer plenty of opportunities for comparison and study, but unfortunately our ignorance of the history of the art is so considerable that we do not know if even these collections are truly and completely representative. The Exhibition at Philadelphia, following that of Paris in 1867, was, of course, all too late for our authors; and yet the official report which accompanied it, and which was used by Mr. Franks while cataloguing his own acquisitions, offers much precious and precise information. The Japanese have a provoking custom of copying their own older wares with characteristic skill, and even reproducing Chinese pottery and porcelain and Korean painted wares. Great confusion is the result. The best place for studying Japanese ceramics is the museum at Bethnal Green, where the examples have been systematically arranged by Mr. Franks.

The distinctive feature of this splendid book is the large series of illustrations, which were drawn with the most exquisite skill and care by the draughtsmen and printers in chromo-lithography of MM. Didot frères, of Paris. These transcripts are gorgeous in colours and gildings, beautifully drawn, and masterpieces in their way; they are so fine that the greater number approach, but only approach, the pottery and porcelain which they reproduce. The greatest delicacy has been displayed in the reproduction of the forms and tints, the lustre, light, and shadow of the coloured examples. In short, these are crowning specimens of chromo-lithography; on the whole, very nearly the best of their kind. The success of this great venture, from an artistic point of view, promises well for the merit and value of a companion publication the authors have in hand on the 'Cloisonné Enamels of Japan,' reproducing in a mode similar to that employed for the 'Ceramic Art' some of the finest and most representative enamels.

So sumptuous are the ceramic works here depicted that the connoisseur lingers over them with complete satisfaction. Among the most happy reproductions is plate i., a vase of Hizen ware from the collection at Dresden, and well known as a royal piece of its class, here admirably given in light and shade and colour. Another good but less successful reproduction is Mr. G. Rae's superb Hizen dish, on plate iv.; it comes a great way short of the original, which the present owner bought for a guinea or two at York in the good old days when those who knew what they were about could pick up bargains such as never occur now. Its design certainly supports a suggestion of the authors, that the work was made for the Dutch market, with a leaning to patterns foreign to the painters. Plate vi. shows a noble and yet rather quaint Hizen jar, the property of Mr. J. L. Bowes, the decoration of which is exceptionally like Chinese design of flowers in crimson and gold. Plates of the same, i.e., the so-called hawthorn pattern, and a jar of the same are happily copied on plate viii. from examples belonging to Mr. W. Dunlop, and they illustrate a strange exaggerated fashion in collecting such examples, which are very rare in Europe, at prices which almost equal the preposterous sums given for Oiron ware. Some choice and rich specimens of Satsuma from the collection of Mr. J. Beck appear on plate xi. Few instances of this kind surpass the superbly delicate piece of Satsuma ware represented by plate xii., and belonging to Mr. J. L. Bowes. It is a fascinating specimen, of which the very chromo-lithograph is charming. It shows a peacock, all proper, on a tree, depicted with sumptuousness on the characteristic cream-coloured ground of this lovely, if almost too luscious, ware of Satsuma. Very pretty and attractive are the vases of late Satsuma ware which reappear on plate xiii., from the cabinet of Lieut.-Col. J. Pilkington. Most rich and brilliant is Mr. A. B. Walker's Satsuma vase, plate xv., with religious subjects depicted on its body. The distinctive qualities of the decoration of Ise ware are shown on plate xxv. The vivid pure red of Kaga ware is illustrated at its best in the large vase on plate xxvi., which has Greekish contours. Of the reproductions few surpass the red and gold Kaga bowls of plate xxvii., the originals of which belong to the Duke of Edinburgh. The next plate depicts vases of the same faience, which very closely approach the works of Satsuma. No copy is truer or more brilliant than those from two Kaga plates with raised white flowers on the true ruddy ground of that faience, which are given in plate xxx.

It would be difficult to represent by printing in colours a specimen of pottery more happily than a Kaga cup of red and gold on white (C. of plate xxxi.), which is exceptionally brilliant and pure in colour. The vessel itself bears the maker's name, "Seikan in Kutani," and verses in minute character on the interior. The next group of reproductions give with great spirit, delicacy, and truth vases of Kioto ware. To our taste this class of Japanese ceramics is the most interesting, if not likewise the most beautiful and artistic, of all. On plate xxxviii., Division 3, C. represents a vase of a very rare kind, of old Kioto manufacture, of a bold scroll in gold in relief on a dark green enamel ground, exactly of the pattern and general character which has puzzled more than one collector who noticed certain vessels, and declared them to be Italian Gothic, English Gothic, and antique Roman: they are scarce even in Japan, and must have been brought to Europe long ago. Modern imitations have degraded these wares more than any others, and the dishes on plate xxxix., belonging to Mr. Bowes, are unfortunate examples of this. Owari, remarkable for the depth and richness of its blue colour and the splendour of its white enamels, and the somewhat finikin and frivolous Owagi, are illustrated in turn in these splendid prints.

The work deals fully with the different classes of wares, Hizen, Satsuma, Ise, Kaga, Kioto, and Owari—names of provinces rather than of manufactories where the ceramic art has flourished in Japan. These chapters are historical and anecdotic, and well worth reading. A section on marks and monograms concludes the book. It is a work which no collector who can afford to buy it, or has courage to steal it, should be without.

The Great Artists.—Michelangelo. By C. Clément. Horace Vernet and Paul Delaroche. (Sampson Low & Co.)—Here are two additional numbers of the series of popular biographies of which we have already noticed several examples. The former volume is a translation from the well-known biography and criticism of which we last week reviewed another translation by Miss Corkran; in fact, the two are so nearly alike that it would be safer to say that one is merely a version of the other with a few additions and corrections, and some notes from later authorities. There is, too, a larger number of woodcuts, of no great pretensions or considerable merits, but sufficient in number and quality for the occasion. Apart from these facts we need only refer to what we have already written about M. Clément's book. The second volume, which deals with the two famous French painters, is confessedly a compilation from ordinary sources, and therefore calls for no particular comment beyond what is due to the tact and judgment displayed in criticizing the works of Delaroche. We do not rate that painter so low as the compiler has done, nor have we so high an opinion of Vernet. Most of the woodcuts are very bad indeed.

Instances of Accessory Art, Original Designs, and Suggestive Examples of Ornament, with Practical and Critical Notes. By L. F. Day. (Botsford.)—Mr. Day has drawn a considerable number of decorative designs in a manner intended to illustrate what he calls the "accessory nature" of ornament. The term is unhappy. Mr. Day disclaims the intention to work out any connected theory of design, the examples being chosen "because they illustrate some characteristic practice or sound principle, or because they suggested some train of thought that seemed worth following." He nevertheless believes that they embody principles which he unconsciously follows in his own daily work, and he declares that, even if one of the examples may seem opposed to another, they probably are not really so, but represent two sides of the same thought or two ways of looking at it. Apart from his disclaimer of the conscious possession of principles, there are numerous instances in this collection which prove that Mr. Day does himself no injustice, and that he has no decorative principles. He draws nicely, he has much good taste, he is full of sympathy for many beautiful forms and arrangements of lines and masses—as to his probable taste for colour there is no evidence before us; but as to convictions about what is best in decoration—Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Gothic, Japanese, realistic, or rococo, or even semi-barbarous baroque of the base French Renaissance—it appears that he has not even predilections, but will take one after the other indifferently. This is something remote from eclecticism; it is proof that, clever as he is, all artistic things are to him "matters of taste." And true taste, which is anything but a "matter" of this kind, must have but weak influence on the mind of a man who puts forth such a work as "Door Decoration," where a large spray is depicted on a door, or rather on its panels, as if the styles overlaid the foliage, which is in itself graceful and spirited enough. Not even an intention to be free and out of the common can justify such a violation of taste as this, for we take it that, except in diapers, decorations should always be complete within their enclosures, if they do not absolutely spring out of and define the margins of the same. A second similar example, called "Quarry Decoration," shows how Pyrus Japonica may be maltreated on the same principle, or want of principle. Notwithstanding Mr. Lewis's dictum to that effect, we fail to see that he has liberty to do these things. Art is exercised in overcoming difficulties, not in ignoring them. Nearly every other example in the book proves the fallacies of these two. We prefer to turn to finer instances, and freely enjoy such works as the border which gives a rich and harmonious disposition of apple and mistletoe—a composition which has much realism in its detail, no obvious repetition of forms, and a happy composition of masses, the floral forms existing as a dominant in a border of which the minor elements are rather conventional. This last feature is frequent in fine productions of the true and pure Renaissance, where beauty is never sacrificed to strangeness, and—unlike French Renaissance works—the bizarre is abhorred. The cabinet front, to be executed in tarsia work of wood, designed in the manner of the Adams, is pretty and, without severity, chaste enough. "Styleless Ornament," centre compartment, is, as Mr. Day acutely says, as much Gothic as Japanese. He has recognized the closeness of the likeness between examples of the nobler manner of the latter class of works and the masterpieces of the former. The fact is that this instance is pure Gothic of a late manifestation. When he quaintly made a diaper of moths with outspread wings, he was unconsciously working in the spirit of old Venetian point lace, with an additional formality which would comfort the soul of Mr. Owen Jones. In paying homage of a qualified nature to this reformer of our taste in decoration we are at one with Mr. Day. His influence was beneficial, not only because it was pure, but because its principles, although somewhat narrow, were self-consistent and thoroughly logical. We heartily agree with much of our designer's admiration for Japanese decorative art of the finer kind; but he ought to have insisted on the fact that a very great proportion of Japanese art is, aesthetically speaking, unmitigated foolery; the rest is fine, not because it is Japanese, and therefore free, but because it is beautiful in style and details and logical in principle. On the whole, this book is worth reading, because the author possesses an independent judgment and the courage to use it. What he says of the draughtsmanship of the Japanese is perfectly just:—"There are few Europeans who can at all approach them." Again, "There is probably no other form of art [than theirs], which is in some sense conventional, that is so little stereotyped in its character." We conclude with an excellent maxim from the same essay, which supplies the last sentence:—"So far as decoration is concerned, I am convinced that what cannot be told simply and without apparent effort had better be left unsaid."

We have received from M. Leroux, of Paris, the illustrated edition of M. E. Soudi's interesting essay L'Art Égyptien d'après les dernières Découvertes, originally published in L'Art. It is a lively, concise, and popular exposition of many valuable theories on the origin and nature of antique sculptural art, especially treating of Greek works in their dependence on Egyptian and Assyrian productions and canons, and of primitive Egyptian pictures, to say nothing of such as those found in the tomb of Ti at Sakkarah, which represent scenes the painter himself saw, and afford glimpses into the life of Egyptians of the first Pharaonic dynasty. Bronze castings, sculptures in wood and stone, due to the researches of Mariette Bey and his forerunners, receive due consideration from our author, who discusses the carved statuettes of the first dynasty, the most ancient known of their kind, which are now preserved in the museum at Mérida. M. Soudi has chosen examples to show the prevalence of Semitic influence on the art of the Nile valley. From the paintings in the tomb of Ti he has derived materials for illustrating the Egyptian practice of employing a canon of proportion. One of these groups displays sculptors carving a statue, another shows artists applying such a canon in exact measurements. The employment of iron tools, so far as relates to the Egyptian of remoter ages, is discussed by M. Soudi, who produces strong reasons for believing that chisels of steel (outils en acier) were used; those reasons are, let us say, more applicable to the later than the older sculptures. Altogether this brochure is extremely well worth studying.

SALES.

On Saturday last Messrs. Christie, Manson & Woods sold the following pictures and water-colour drawings by continental artists from the collection of Mr. P. L. Everard. Pictures: J. Coomans, Une Arrestation, 299*l.*; Needful Ablutions, 117*l.* C. Troyon, The Sheep Market, 787*l.* J. L. Gérôme, La Danse des Almées, 147*l.* E. Verboeckhoven, Sheep in the Highlands, 178*l.* Marchetti, Departure for the Honeymoon, 168*l.* A. Piot, The First Loss, 173*l.* Drawing: E. Verboeckhoven, The Repose of the Flock, 50*l.* The same firm also sold on the previous day an engraving, after Sir E. Landseer, Hunters at Grass, by C. G. Lewis, for 69*l.*

Just-Not Grassy.

THE whole of the wooden sheds which have for many years filled the colonnades of the wings of the façade of the British Museum have been removed, and the sculptures they contained deposited elsewhere. Considerable additions are shortly to be made to the sculpture galleries in Bloomsbury, involving changes in the accommodation of the Departments of Natural History and of Prints and Drawings. In a few years the latter will, with the Secretary's office, be housed in a new structure to be erected in the Secretary's garden.

We regret to read in the reports of discussions as to the Civil Service estimates that, on Monday evening last, Mr. Adam stated he thought that to re-erect the colonnade removed from Burlington House to Battersea Park would be a doubtful piece of expenditure. Surely the trifling outlay required for this purpose would be well returned, and the real waste consists in allowing so fine a work as this colonnade to lie wrecked on the earth. The stones of Temple Bar are still in the same condition as the frustra of the much more beautiful work of Kent or the Earl of Burlington. If any patriots have more money than they know what to do with, let them offer to remove the statue of Wellington from Hyde Park Corner and re-erect the colonnade and the Bar. This would be much better work than the shifting of Egyptian obelisks.

THE Institute of Art has issued cards of invitation for a private view of the special exhibition, of three days, at the galleries in Conduit Street, beginning to-day (Saturday).

ANTIQUARIAN will learn with much gratification that, as we mentioned some weeks ago was to be done, one of the magnificent pavements of the great Roman villa at Woodchester has been again laid open to view. This pavement has been carefully depicted by Lyons, under whose care it was first opened in 1793. It was afterwards recovered, as were all the others, since it was found impossible to preserve them in any other way, owing to the cost of raising suitable roofing and buildings. The clearance recently effected has been due to the exertions of the Rev. F. Smith, the newly appointed rector of Woodchester, aided by a small grant from the Bristol and Gloucester Archaeological Society. A visit will be paid to the remains one day next week by this Society, and, according to present arrangements, the pavement will remain open for public inspection at a small charge until the 5th of August, after which it is proposed to recover it again with earth; but it is greatly to be hoped that funds may be forthcoming to erect a protecting building and roof over this one pavement and ensure its being always open for public inspection, that visitors to Woodchester may be able to see at least one pavement as a specimen of the others, which it may hardly be possible to roof over in consequence of the vast extent of the villa. The colours of the pavement prove to be but little if at all injured by the length of time that has elapsed since its discovery.

THE St. Petersburg Herald of the 5th of July contains an elaborate article by Prof. A. Sayce on the age of the objects discovered by Dr. Schliemann at Mycenæ. Prof. Sayce's object is to refute step by step the theory of Prof. Stephani and Dr. Ernst Schulze that those objects are by no means relics of monuments of a prehistoric epoch, as is believed by most Western scholars, but that they belonged to the Heruli on the shores of the Sea of Azov, and are consequently of the third century A.D. At the end of the article Prof. Sayce remarks that these theories of the two Russian scholars are not new; Mr. A. S. Murray (who, however, gave them up later) and Mr. Hodder Westropp fought for nearly the same paradox.

THE opponents of restoration will be rejoiced to hear their opinions are making way on the Continent. A Swiss Society for the Conservation of Historic Monuments was founded on the 20th ult. The president of the new society is M. Th. de Saussure, Director of the Rath Museum at Geneva.

M. CARAMEL has given, says the Chronique des Arts, his picture of a 'Phédre,' which was in the last Salon, to the Musée at Montpellier.

WE have received from M. Quantin, of Paris, the first two numbers of his Revue des Arts Décoratifs, an illustrated monthly journal, comprising an introduction by M. de Chennevières, and other contributions by various writers on current topics, especially the subjects indicated by the title. The tone of the magazine is popular and intelligent. Some of the illustrations, those reproduced from photographs, are capital.

THE Berlin Academy of Arts proposes to follow the fashion and issue an illustrated catalogue of its next exhibition, that of 1881.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Madame Gerster.
ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—Benefit Night.
CRYSTAL PALACE.—Concert of the Pupils of the Royal Normal College for the Blind.
ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. Leslie's Choir.

THE extraordinary interest which has been aroused by Signor Boito's 'Mefistofele' is no more than its due as a work of genius, and speaks well for the intelligence of our musical public. Attention has been so fully absorbed by the production of this opera that the other performances at Her Majesty's Theatre have of late passed almost unnoticed. Madame Gerster has sung in 'Le Sonnambula,' 'Lucia,' 'Linda di Chamouni,' and 'I Puritani,' and is advertised to appear on Monday as Gilda in 'Rigoletto,' the best character in her repertoire. She still manifests to an unusual degree a command of vocal agility suitable for light soprano parts, and also very marked dramatic intelligence. But she is no longer so liberal in the use of the extreme upper notes, and occasionally during the performance there have been symptoms of fatigue, perhaps a lingering result of recent indisposition. Into the circumstances which induced Mr. Mans to decline appearing as Edgardo there is no occasion to enter. His determination led to the sudden engagement of Signor Ravelli, a tenor with a powerful but hard and metallic voice and a tolerably good method. The success of 'Mefistofele' has occasioned the prolongation of the season for a fortnight, and the theatre is now advertised to close this day week.

There has been nothing worthy of notice in the recent performances at Covent Garden. To-night will see the end of the season, the past week having been devoted to the benefits of the leading prima donnas. Our remarks upon the general results at both houses are postponed until next week.

In the large majority of cases a few lines of record suffice for the notice of pupils' concerts; but that which was given last Saturday afternoon at the Crystal Palace by the pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind was, for more than one reason, of such exceptional interest as to deserve a more detailed criticism in these columns. The letter of Dr. Armitage, which appeared most opportunely in this paper last week, with every word of which we cordially agree, gives our readers some information as to the working of the school, and the concert of Saturday furnished a commentary on his statements of the most practical kind. In the first place, the programme, selected, we presume, by Mr. F. J. Campbell, the principal of the school, was noteworthy for the very high character of the music performed; but, besides this, the rendering was distinguished not only by remarkable mechanical accuracy, but by an amount of taste and feeling which is rare indeed with performers still in the state of pupillage. The concert opened with Bach's well-known Organ Fugue in a minor, well played by Mr. Arthur Stricker, a few slips which were noticeable being apparently due to nervousness. Dr. Macfarren's Overture to 'Chevy Chase' followed, being played by the Crystal Palace band under the direction of Mr. Manns. The performance of Leslie's trio, 'O Memory,' by Miss Dick, Miss Carson, and Mr. A. Wilmot, was, in our opinion, one of the gems of the concert. The exquisite taste and feeling with which this melodious little piece was given can scarcely be overpraised. Other remarkable performances among the solo numbers were Mr. J. West's singing of 'It is enough,' from 'Elijah,' and Miss Reece's rendering of 'Che farò,' from Gluck's 'Orfeo.' Both performers have good and excellently trained voices, and both sing with an amount of genuine feeling which recalled Beethoven's dictum, 'That which comes from the heart goes to the heart.' The two soprano singers, Miss Dick and Miss Campbell, also deserve praise, while the choir of the institution, consisting of some thirty voices, sang two part-songs by Smart and Bennett and the Reapers' Chorus from Liszt's 'Prometheus' most admirably. In the unaccompanied part-songs the gradations of light and shade and the unity of style and phrasing of the whole choir were particularly striking. Two pianists appeared, Mr. W. F. Schrier and Master Alfred Hollins. The former took the pianoforte obbligato part in Gade's Symphony in D minor (No. 5), a very interesting and beautiful work, which had not been heard at the Crystal Palace since 1860. The combination of the piano with the orchestra is, of course, a familiar one when the former is employed in a concerto as a solo instrument. In Gade's symphony, however, we find an instance, so far as we know unique, of the use of the piano simply as an orchestral instrument—just as the harp is frequently used. It is only occasionally that it comes into prominence, but united with other instruments several novel effects of colouring are produced in the quieter parts of the music. In a fortissimo it would, of course, be overpowered by the orchestra. Mr. Schrier performed his part of the symphony in a most artistic manner, though it is probable that he would have been heard to even more advantage in a solo. It is not unlikely that the selection of the symphony may have been designed to prove what some people have doubted—the possibility of a blind pianist playing with the orchestra with absolute precision, though of course unable to be guided by the conductor's beat. If this were the object, it was undoubtedly fully attained. Master Hollins, a lad of only fourteen years of age, gave a truly admirable performance of a Prelude and Fugue by Bach and a showy piece ('Tour à Cheval') of Raff's; the playing of the latter was especially remarkable on account of the frequent skips for the hands, which would not be easy even for a pianist who could see the keys, but which were nevertheless taken with faultless accuracy.

We have dealt more largely than is our custom in superlatives in speaking of this concert, because it is the simple truth that we have seldom, if ever, listened to a performance given by pupils of such a high average of merit from an artistic point of view. The excellent teaching of the various professors at the Normal School has, of course, much to do with this; but there can be no doubt whatever in the mind of any one qualified to form an opinion that quite as much, if not more, is due to the artistic influences brought to bear on the pupils, and especially to the musical performances at the Crystal Palace, at which they are constant visitors. For this reason we join most heartily with Dr. Armitage in deprecating the proposed removal of the school to Windsor. Such a course appears to have absolutely nothing to recommend it, while it would take away from the pupils the almost unrivalled advantages for their artistic development which they at present enjoy.

It may be accepted as an unprecedented occurrence in the history of music that an association in the fulness of its life and vigour, and enjoying unabated favour and confidence with the public, should voluntarily elect to terminate its own existence, and this example is one which it is not desirable should be followed. Of that, however, there is fortunately little likelihood, and no fears on the subject need be entertained. Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir has for the space of a quarter of a century occupied a position difficult to assail, and truly representative of a branch of music perhaps more typically English than any other. In a manifesto recently issued by the conductor we are informed that the idea of the choir originated with Mr. Joseph Heming in 1855, when a nucleus of thirty to forty voices was formed. The numbers afterwards increased steadily to 240, and the performances became celebrated as displaying the very highest culture and refinement in unaccompanied part-singing, both sacred and secular. It may be interesting to mention that several musicians now occupying a foremost position were once members of this body, among whom may be named Mr. Joseph Barnby, Mr. Maas, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Madame Patey, and Miss Orridge. The programmes of the concerts have always won the most approval when composed in the main of excerpts of the old madrigalian school, which Mr. Leslie has done much to keep alive, unaccompanied motets of Bach, Wesley, and others, and choice examples of modern part-songs. When the choir has departed from its beaten track the result has, happily, not been encouraging as a rule, though an exception must be made in favour of Mendelssohn's 'Antigone,' which has deservedly been a popular item in the répertoire. There may have been a vague idea in the mind of the conductor that, the scope of the association being limited, the opportunities for seeking fresh fields and pastures new and of gaining fresh glories had become exhausted. But the fact, which has made itself increasingly apparent of late, that the choir consists to a considerable extent of veterans, ripe for retirement but not easy to replace, seems to have had weight in causing Mr. Leslie to abandon the enterprise before decay had really set in. Whatever the cause, amateurs cannot fail to regret the necessity for bidding farewell to one of the most enjoyable of the musical institutions of London which cater for public patronage. Last Monday afternoon, at St. James's Hall, the final concert took place, in presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and a crowded and fashionable audience. The programme was very properly composed in the main of attractive items from the past repertory of the society, and included examples of various schools and epochs. From the domain of sacred music were selected Wesley's splendid motet, 'In exitu Israel,' Gounod's sentimental 'Ave Verum,' and Mendelssohn's 43rd Psalm, 'Judge me, O God,' which has ever maintained a higher place in public favour than its companions. Among the madrigals and part-songs were Pearse's 'Sir Patrick Spens,' Mendelssohn's 'Departure,' Bennett's 'Come live with me,' Gaul's 'The Silent Land,' and a new part-song, 'The Golden Year,' by Mr. Leslie, from Mr. Cousins's collection of Tennyson's songs. The words of this are suggestive and poetical, but for musical purposes they are rather vague and unsatisfactory, and Mr. Leslie's setting is, to say the least, discursive and wanting in symmetry, though cleverly written. The soloists were Madame Trebelli, Mr. Maas, and Mr. Charles Halle. In consequence of the increased prices and the fact of its being a morning concert, there was less demonstrativeness than would otherwise have been the case, and some pieces accustomed to the doubtful honour of an encore were even coldly received. At the conclusion of the concert, Sir Thomas Gladstone, as locum tenens for the Duke of Westminster, presented Mr. Leslie with a testimonial consisting of a diamond ring and a purse containing 300 guineas. In his reply to this well-deserved proof of public appreciation of his services to art, Mr. Leslie referred to the causes which had brought about the dissolution of the institution, and the tendency of his remarks forbade any hopes being entertained that the choir will maintain a corporate existence. But some of its members will be drafted into the Guild of Amateur Musicians, of which Mr. Leslie is conductor, and of which little has been heard since its production of Handel's 'Hercules' two years ago; while others have been invited to take part in the autumnal performances of Berlioz's 'Faust,' to be given under Mr. Charles Halle's direction at St. James's Hall.

Musical Society.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN has, under medical advice, resigned the conductorship of the orchestral and choral rehearsals at the Royal Academy of Music, and Mr. Shakespeare has been appointed his successor.

It is announced that Fraulein Anna Mehlig has married a rich merchant of Antwerp, and will in consequence retire from the profession.

THE Neue Zeitschrift für Musik states that Wagner is, during his present stay at Naples, working at the instrumentation of his 'Parsifal,' which he hopes to complete by the end of this year.

THE death is announced from Paris of Louis Guymard, for twenty years one of the most distinguished tenors of the Opera. He was born in 1822, studied music first at Lyons and afterwards at the Paris Conservatoire, and made his debut at the Opera in 1848, in 'Robert le Diable.' His most successful parts were Arnold in 'Guillaume Tell' and Raoul in 'Les Huguenots.' He left the stage rather suddenly in 1868, and from that time until his death lived in complete retirement on an estate he had bought at Corbeil.

'LA FÉE DES BRUYÈRES,' an opéra comique in three acts, by M. Samuel David, was produced in Paris last Wednesday week, at the Théâtre du Château d'Eau, with moderate success. The work had been originally brought out in Brussels, in February, 1878, and it failed there, chiefly owing to an indifferent libretto.

THE series of performances of Belgian operas at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, was inaugurated last Wednesday week with Grétry's 'Richard Cœur de Lion.'

MR. FREDERICK CORDER has been appointed conductor of the music at the Brighton Aquarium.

HERR JEAN BECKER, the leader of the so-called "Florentine Quartet," has lately been giving concerts in Germany with three of his children, Jeanne, Hans, and Hugo. The ensemble of their quartet playing is highly spoken of.

HERR WILHELMJ gave his last concert in America at New York on the 22nd ult., and will shortly return to Germany, after two years' absence.

DRAMA

LYCEUM THEATRE. SOLE LEASER and MANAGER, MR. HENRY IRVING. Every Evening (except Saturdays), at 7 1/2. The MERCHANT of VENICE. 3rd time (terminating with the Trial scene). MR. IRVING. PORTIA. MISS ELLEN TERREY. Concluding with IOLANDE. MISS ELLEN TERREY and MR. IRVING. Saturday Evening July 17th and 24th at 7 1/2. The HELIX. Last Two Performances. MR. IRVING. and IOLANDE. MR. IRVING. and MISS ELLEN TERREY. Last Two Morning Performances of The MERCHANT of VENICE. Saturdays, July 11th and 24th, at 2 o'clock. MR. IRVING. PORTIA. MISS ELLEN TERREY. Boxes—Mr. Irving, open 11 to 3. MR. IRVING'S ANNUAL BENEFIT and last night of the Season. Saturday Evening July 31st.

THE WEEK

GAIETY.—'La Revue.'
BAILLON'S WALLS.—'Otto,' a Three-Act Comedy-Drama. By F. Maraden.

SOME interest might seem to attach itself to the production of 'La Revue Trop Tôt,' which with an abbreviated title was given at the Gaiety during the later part of the past and the earlier portion of the present week. No revue had previously found its way across the Channel, and the one or two imitations which were supplied by Mr. Planché thirty or forty years ago fail to convey a full idea of the class of composition. It is in a sense unfortunate that the first specimen that has been set before the English public has been so attenuated and emasculated it can scarcely be regarded as more representative than the imitations in question. Of the subjects which gave 'La Revue Trop Tôt' its hold upon the Parisian public almost all have disappeared. On one side of the piece, as representative of British officialism and British prudery, has stood the censor of plays; on the other, to guard against the possible outrage of a public not too familiar with Parisian life, has stood the stage manager. Turn by turn have they proceeded, this cutting out here an obscene allusion, that blotting out there an indecent suggestion, until between the two the poor revue has all but disappeared. Like the middle-aged husband of two wives whom Æsop depicts, it has seen the grey hairs plucked out on the one side and the black hairs on the other until it stands "bald as a coot," whatever amount of calvity that familiar illustration may indicate. What is most curious, moreover, is that both the self-appointed expurgators have failed in their task, and the piece remains obscure and indecent. It is in the very nature of things that indecency should be too volatile an essence to be caught in the censorial alembic, while the empire of dulness "great Anarch" is not to be limited by human effort. A passage in 'Lolotte' which is passed by the censure and spoken by Madame Chaumont indicates by means of banter a species of power an actress like Madame Chaumont possesses. "On nous apporte," says Mdlle. Lolotte through her representative, Madame Chaumont, "des couplets où il n'y a rien, et l'on nous dit d'y mettre des intentions... Tenez... il y a un de mes amis qui m'a apporté ça..."

Ma p'tit' sœur jou' du trombone,
Mon grand frèr' jou' du piston;
Quant à moi, l'on n'me trou'v' bonne
Qu'à manger du mirotin.

Qu'est-ce que ça veut dire? lui ai-je demandé... Ca ne veut rien dire du tout, mais en y mettant des intentions... Et j'y ai mis des intentions, ma foi... j'ai cligné de l'œil, j'ai baissé les yeux, j'ai pris un temps sur le mirotin... Et l'on a compris... Et le vieux marquis de la Rochebar-dièrre m'a dit: Sapristi, c'est bien joli ce que vous nous avez chanté là, mais c'est un peu vil."

On peu vil, under the delivery of Palais Royal artists, becomes many a sentence apparently as innocent as that quoted, and English ladies at the performance of 'La Revue' have followed a French lead of laughter and applause, when had they comprehended what was said they might have quitted the theatre. Much of the performance fell flat. Allusions to the continual changes in Parisian street nomenclature are not especially exhilarating to an English public, and very little besides there was left. Those jokes concerning the decoration of actors, which provoked from M. Coquelin an explosion of wrath against MM. Siraudin and Toché, the authors, have disappeared. M. Geoffroy no longer visits the members of the Académie to solicit their votes for M. Labiche, and M. Lhéritier no longer imitates M. Sarcey attempting to give a conference in London. Neither of these actors, indeed, appears in the play, though a clever parody of the manner of the latter is given in the course of the imitations, which form the most attractive portion of the representation. Greatly abridged are these imitations, the best of those which are now supplied being the Mlle. Sarah Bernhardt of Mlle. Legault and the Madame Théo of Mlle. Marot. The "Conférence sur le Théâtre" of Madame Chaumont is an interpolation. It did not form part of the 'Revue Trop Tôt' when produced at the Palais Royal in September last, but was included in the 'Revue des Variétés' of the previous winter. It deals with the annoyance to actors which is caused by late comers to the theatre, and was delivered by Madame Chaumont in admirable style.

Mr. and Mrs. George S. Knight have appeared at Sadler's Wells in an entertainment of singing, dancing, and the like, such as we believe in the United States, whence the actors come, is called a "varieties entertainment." Some attempt has been made to give the whole a quasi-dramatic shape. This is, however, but moderately successful, the plot of the piece in which the début is made being the slightest and least original that can be easily conceived, and the characters having no hesitation in interrupting the action to introduce songs or recitations. One good sketch of character is supplied by Mr. Knight, who as a German acts creditably. Mrs. Knight's style of performance seems, however, suited to a music-hall rather than the stage. The company as a whole is new to London.

Grammatical Gossip.

To the long list of pieces which have incurred the prohibition of our censure has now to be added 'Le Ménage Popincourt,' a one-act vaudeville of MM. Hippolyte Raymond and Maxime Boucheron. This is one of the latest additions to the repertory of the Palais Royal, since its first performance dates back only to the 12th of last March. So poor a piece is it that were not the entire notion of a censorship of plays preposterous, we might submit in silence to its banishment from the bills. In the interest of those who wish to respect the law it is only just that an Index Expurgatorius should be issued from the Lord Chamberlain's office.

At the Vaudeville Theatre in Paris, now in the hands of a summer company, two pieces by M. Ernest Voss have been presented. The first is a one-act comedy entitled 'Un Début,' and the second a three-act vaudeville, without couplets, called 'Pétillard et Ménégaud.'

The cessation of performances in the Parisian theatres is as general as in those in London. After its trip to London, however, the Palais Royal company will reappear on the 20th of August in a new piece by M. Meilhac or one by M. Sardou. A large portion of the company of the Gymnase, under the direction of M. Landrol, is travelling in Switzerland and the east of France.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—A. W. M.—F. A. C.—W. H. C.—J. E.—T. C. I.—A. R.—F. O.—received.
J. H.—17, Bloomsbury Square.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO'S NEW LIST.

THE NEW VOLUMES IN THE ILLUSTRATED BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT ARTISTS ARE

SIR EDWIN LANDSEER. By F. G. STEPHENS, Author of Celebrated Flemish and French Pictures, &c. Illustrated with 16 Fac-similes of Etchings, including Irish Greyhounds, 'The Rabbit Warren,' the plates of 'The Mothers,' and the 12 small Etchings of the 'Woman Lame-born.' Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Now ready,

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By F. S. PULLING, M.A. Oxford. Illustrated with Reproductions of 16 of his most celebrated Paintings, including 'The Duchess of Devonshire,' 'Penelope Boothby,' 'Age of Innocence,' 'The Strawberry Girl,' 'Mrs. Siddons,' &c. Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Now ready, price 1s Part IV of SUNRISE; a Story of these Times.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

Now ready, small post 8vo. cloth extra, 4s. 6d.

NOTES on the NORTHERN ATLANTIC, for the USE of TRAVELLERS. Compiled from Authentic Sources by RICHARD BROWN, F.R.S. F.R.G.S. With a Map.
Passengers by the Atlantic steamers will find this little work a valuable companion on the voyage.

Just published, large 8vo. price 2s.

NORWEGIAN ANTIQUITIES.
Arranged and Explained by Professor O. RYGH, of the Christiania University. Norway with French and Norwegian Text, and numerous Illustrations. Part 1 price 21s. To be completed in Two Parts.

GIOTTO. By Harry Quilter, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. Illustrated with Photographs of the Frescoes in the Cappella d'Arca, Padua, a Fac-simile in Colour of a Madonna in the lower Church of Assisi, and Engravings from the fresco-tiles of the Giotto Campanile at Florence. Small 8vo. handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt top, price 15s. [Now ready.]

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS OF ART EDUCATION.

Edited by EDWARD J. POYNTER, R.A.

Each volume contains numerous illustrations, and is strongly bound for the use of Students. Price 5s.

The Volumes now ready are
PAINTING.

CLASSIC and ITALIAN. By EDWARD J. POYNTER, R.A.; and PERCY R. KEAD, Lincoln College, Oxford. Upwards of 50 Full-Page and other illustrations. Bound in extra cloth limp, 5s. [Ready.]

"This Volume contains an Introductory Preface on Art Education by Mr. Poynter, who also contributes a Chapter on Egyptian Art, and succinct notices of the various Italian schools, &c."

ARCHITECTURE.

GOTHIC and RENAISSANCE. By T. ROGER SMITH, F.R.I.B.A. 120 illustrations. Cloth limp, 5s. [Ready.]

"This Volume treats of the history of Architecture from the rise of the Gothic style to the present day, and with oversight the Renaissance style at the close of the eighteenth century."

THE STORY of an HONEST MAN.
By EDMOND ABOUT. 3 vols. price 31s. 6d. [At all Libraries.]

"A fresh view of the French character.... Messrs. Low & Co. have well advised in publishing an English version of this novel." [Full Mail Review.]

A PHYSICAL TREATISE on ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By J. E. H. GORDON, R.A., Cambridge Assistant-Secretary of the British Association. 3 vols. demy 8vo. cloth extra, 8s.

"Perhaps the best text-book ever done."—Family Fair.

A RIDE in PETTICOATS and SLIPPERS from FEE to the ALGERIAN FRONTIER. By Captain R. E. COLVILLE, of the Grenadier Guards. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 12s.

LEAVES from the ASH. "Igdrasil," is not every leaf of it a biography?" By MARGARET FIELD. Small 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

EPISODES of FRENCH HISTORY.

1. CHARLEMAGNE and the CARLOVINGIANS. [Ready.]
2. LOUIS IX. and the CRUSADES. [Nearly ready.]
Edited, with Notes, Genealogical, Historical, and other Tables, by GUSTAVE MARSON, R.A.

"Other Volumes in preparation."

The above Series is based upon M. Guizot's 'History of France,' the volumes are choice illustrations, with Maps, printed and bound in a handy form, price 2s. 6d. each.

WAIT a YEAR: a Novel. By HARMET BOWEN. Author of 'Redlands,' 'A Young Wife's Story,' &c. 3 vols. 91s. 6d.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON.

BICKERS & SON'S STANDARD GIFT-BOOKS.

Suitable for School Prizes and Presents.

"A New Catalogue of over 2,000 elegantly bound Books in all departments of Literature, by post free on application."

ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS OF STANDARD GIFT-BOOKS.

Demy 8vo. in extra cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.; in calf, extra gilt, marbled edges, 12s. 6d.; or in morocco, extra gilt, 15s.

The GIRLHOOD of SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES. A Series of Fifteen Tales. By MARY COWDEN CLARKE. Re-tailed by her sister KATHARINE KNOVELL. Illustrated with 9 Photographs from paintings by T. F. Dickson and W. S. Heick.

COOK'S VOYAGES ROUND the WORLD. With an Account of his Life, by A. KIPPIS, D.D. Illustrated with 12 Plates. Reproduced in exact fac-simile from Drawings made during the Voyages.

The LIFE of NELSON. By Robert BOUTHERY. Illustrated with 12 Plates by Westall and others. Reproduced in Permanent Woodburytype. Fac-simile of Nelson's Handwriting and Plan of Battle of the Nile.

TALES from SHAKESPEARE. By CHARLES and MARY LAMB. Printed at the Chiswick Press on superfine paper. Illustrated with 12 Plates from the "Boydell Gallery." Reproduced in Permanent Woodburytype.

The BEAUTIES of SHAKESPEARE. By the Rev. WILLIAM DODD, LL.D. Elegantly printed on fine paper. Illustrated with 12 Plates. Reproduced in permanent Woodburytype.

GOLDSMITH (OLIVER), The LIFE and TIMES of By JOHN FORSTER. Fifth Edition, with 40 Woodcuts. Demy 8vo. cloth elegant.

The NATURAL HISTORY and ANTIQUITIES of SELBORNE. By the Rev. GILBERT WHITE, M.A. The Standard Edition by BENNETT. Thoroughly revised with additional Notes, by JAMES EDWARD HARTING. Illustrated with numerous Engravings by Thomas Bewick, Harvey, and others.

OUR SUMMER MIGRANTS: an Account of the Migratory Birds which pass the Summer in the British Islands. By J. E. HARTING, F.R.S. F.Z.S. Author of 'A Handbook of British Birds: a New Edition of Whittell's "Selborne," &c. Illustrated with 30 Illustrations on Wood, from Designs by Thomas Bewick.

THE HISTORICAL LIBRARY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. printed in a clear, legible type on ribbed paper, royal 8vo. in cloth binding, 2s.; in calf, extra gilt, marbled edges, each 12s. 6d.

MOTLEY'S (JOHN LOTHROP) RISE of the DUTCH REPUBLIC. A New Edition, in 1 vol. of 820 pages, large 8vo. beautifully printed and neatly bound.

PRESCOTT'S (W. H.) HISTORY of the CONQUEST of MEXICO. A New and Revised Edition, with the Author's latest Corrections and Additions. Edited by JOHN FORSTER KIRK. In 1 vol. large 8vo. of over 700 pages.

PRESCOTT'S HISTORY of the CONQUEST of PERU. A New and Revised Edition, with the Author's latest Corrections and Additions. Edited by JOHN FORSTER KIRK. Uniform with the above.

PRESCOTT'S HISTORY of the REIGN of FERDINAND and ISABELLA the CATHOLIC. A New and Revised Edition, with the Author's latest Corrections and Additions. Edited by JOHN FORSTER KIRK. Over 700 pages. Uniform with the above.

The CHRISTIAN YEAR. Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holydays throughout the Year. By JOHN KEBLE. Elegantly printed on toned paper, with elaborate borders around every page. Small 4to. cloth extra, with 12 illustrations by F. Overbeck, reproduced in Permanent Photograph, 11s. 6d.; marbled cloth, 10s.; morocco elegant, 12s. 6d.

ANOTHER EDITION In fcap. 8vo. with 12 Photographic Pictures by Overbeck, cloth gilt, 6s.; half antique, red edges, 12s.

The EARTH: a Descriptive History of the Phenomena of the Life of the Globe. By ELISE RECLUS. Translated by D. B. WOODWARD. Illustrated with 230 diagrams inserted in the Text, and 48 Page Maps printed in Colours. Thick 8vo. cloth, extra gilt, 12s. 6d.; or in calf extra, 15s.

The OCEAN, ATMOSPHERE, and LIFE. being the Second Series of a Descriptive History of the Life of the Globe. Illustrated with 250 Maps or Figures, and 27 Maps printed in Colours. 3 vols. large demy 8vo. cloth extra gilt, 12s. 6d.; or in calf extra, 15s.

THE BEST ONE-VOLUME EDITION

SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS and POEMS. A New and Handsome Edition, with the Text carefully Revised by Mr. and Mrs. COWDEN CLARKE, together with Introductory Essay, Life, and Glossary. Elegantly printed, complete in 1 vol. royal 8vo. cloth, 9s.; or calf extra, 12s.; or in morocco, extra gilt, 15s.

MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. New Edition. With Life by CHALMERS. Printed in a clear legible type, in library 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.; calf, extra gilt, 12s. 6d.

GRAY'S POEMS. Printed on superior bond paper, with beautiful Landscape Illustrations from Drawings by H. R. Foster in a neat cloth binding, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; calf, extra gilt, 5s. 6d.; morocco antique, lettered on side, 6s. 6d.

London: BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' PUBLICATIONS.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

The ODYSSEY of HOMER. Books I.-XII.
Translated into English Verse, with Notes and Parallel Passages. By Sir CHARLES DU CANGE, K.C.M.G. Large 8vo. 10s. 6d.
[This day.]

A HANDBOOK of DEER-STALKING. By ALEXANDER MACRAE, late Forester to Lord Henry-Bentley with Introduction by HORATIO ROSS, Esq. Fcap. 8vo. with 2 Photographs from Nature, price 3s. 6d.
[In a few days.]

TROUBLESOME DAUGHTERS. By L. B.
WALFORD, Author of 'Cousins.' Poetical. Mr. Smith: a Part of his Life, &c. 3 vols. post 8vo. 2s. 6d.

REATA: What's in a Name? By E. D.
GILKARD. 3 vols. post 8vo. 2s. 6d. Originally published in Blackwood's Magazine.

CAMPAIGNING in SOUTH AFRICA. Reminiscences of an Officer in 1878. By Captain W. R. MONTAGUE.
With Engravings. Author of 'Cavalry Memoirs,' &c. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

New Edition, Revised.
STUDIES in ROMAN LAW. With Comparative Views of the Laws of France, England, and Scotland. By LESLIE MACKENZIE, one of the Judges of the Court of Session in Scotland. Fifth Edition. Edited by JOHN KIRKPATRICK, Esq.,
M.A. Glasgow. 3s. 6d. Edinburgh, L.B. Edin., Advocates. 8vo. 15s.
[This day.]

Fifth Edition, Revised throughout and greatly Enlarged.
The MOOR and the LOCH. Containing Minute Instructions in all Highland Sports. With Wanderings over
Craig and Corrie, Flood and Fell. By JOHN COLQUHOUN. Fifth Edition. To which is added, RECOLLECTIONS of the ALTHORN EARLY LIFE. 2 vols. post 8vo. with 2 Portraits and other Illustrations, price 2s. 6d.

The LAND of GILEAD. By Laurence Ol-FRANT, Author of 'Piccadilly,' &c. In 1 vol. 8vo. with Illustrations. Shortly.

The LIFE of COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD
LYDE. Illustrated by Extracts from his Diary and Correspondence. By Lieutenant-General SHADWELL, C.B. In 2 vols. 8vo.
with Portrait, Map, and Plans. [In the press.]

THE VOLUME of THEOLOGY CLARIFIED FOR THE YOUNGER CLERGY.
Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

SAINT SIMON. By Clifton W. Collins, M.A.

The Volumes already published of this series are—

1. DANTS. By the Editor.
2. VOLTAIRE. By Major-General Sir E. B. Hamley, K.C.B.
3. PASCAL. By Principal Tulloch.
4. FETTERMAN. By Henry Moore.
5. GORTHE. By A. Hayward, Q.C.
6. MOLIÈRE. By the Editor and F. Turner, M.A.
7. MONTAIGNE. By the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M.A.
8. RABELAIS. By Walter Ross, M.A.
9. CALDERON. By E. J. Hasall.

Illustrated with Engravings.

DAVID ARMSTRONG; or, Before the Dawn.
3 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

New Edition, Revised, being the Seventh.

A BOOK ABOUT ROSES. By S. Reynolds
HOLE. With a Coloured Frontispiece by the Hon. Mrs. Franchin.
Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

New and Revised Edition.

The CHEMISTRY of COMMON LIFE. By the late Professor JOHNSTON. A New Edition, Revised and brought down to the Present Time. By ARTHUR HENDERSON LILLY, M.A.
Glasgow. Author of 'The Sources, Constitution and Uses of Plain Words about Water,' &c. Illustrated with Maps and Engravings on Wood, pp. 216. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the REIGN of QUEEN ANNE. By JOHN HILL BERTON, D.C.L., Historiographer-Royal to Scotland, Author of 'A History of Scotland,' &c. In 3 vols. 8vo.
2s.

The FIVE BOOKS of the PSALMS. With Marginal Notes. By the Rev. SAMUEL WARREN, Rector of Lather, Buryate Falls, Dean, and Divinity Lecturer, Wadham College,
Oxford. Crown 8vo. 3s.

HEINRICH HEINE'S POEMS and BAL-
LADS. Translated into English Verse. By Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.M.G. Printed on paper. Crown 8vo. 2s.

"Sir Theodore Martin, the accomplished translator of Goethe, has, to use his own expression, done into English verse those beautiful ballads, with that sweet and grace of diction which always distinguishes his work, and places him among the very first translators we possess."—Morning Post.

Third Edition, Revised.

The ART of POETRY of HORACE. Free and explanatory Translations in Verse and Prose. By the Very Rev.
Dean MAGOY, D.D. New Edition, printed on paper. Square
8vo. 6s.

A DREAMER. By Katharine Wylde. 3 vols.
post 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"Here is the unmistakable convincing touch of genuine feeling, with volumes of ingenuity and idiom of eloquence."—Spectator

A New and Enlarged Edition, being the Fourth.
WISE, WITTY, and TENDER SAYINGS, from the WORKS of GEORGE ELIOT. Selected by ALEXANDER MAIN. Contains Extracts from 'Daniel Deronda' and 'The Felixphus' &c. Fcap. 8vo. gilt cloth, 6s.

The ROMAN BREVIARY: Reformed by Order of the Holy (Ecclesiastical) Council of Trent. Published by Order of Pope St. Pius V. and Revised by Clement VIII. and Urban VIII. together with the Office since granted. Translated out of Latin into English by JOHN MARQUESS of BUTE, A.T.
In 2 vols. crown 8vo. cloth boards, edges smooth. Price Two Guineas.

LAYS of the SCOTTISH CAVALIERS; and other Poems. By W. EDMONDSTONE AYTON, D.C.L., Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Edinburgh.
Twenty-seventh Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

An ILLUSTRATED EDITION of the SAME. From Designs by Sir J. MORRIS PATON and W. H. PATON, R.S.A. Engraved by John Thomson, W. J. Linton, W. Thomas, W. W. Cooper, George Green, J. B. Fraser, &c. In small 8vo. printed on Toned Paper, bound in gilt cloth 7s.

PROFESSOR AYTON and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.
The BOOK of BALLADS. Edited by Bon GALLIER. Thirteenth Edition. With numerous Illustrations by Doyle, Leach, and Crowquill. Post 8vo. gilt cloth, 6s.

PHILOSOPHICAL CLARIFICATIONS FOR ENGLISH READERS.
The First Volume will shortly be published, containing DESCARTES. By Professor Mahaffy,
Dublin. Crown 8vo.

IMPRESSIONS of THEOPHRASTUS SUCH.
By GEORGE ELIOT. Fourth Edition. Post 8vo. 10s. 6d.

SONGS and VERSES: Social and Scientific.
By an Old Contributor to 'Maga.' (The Hon. LORD REAVER).
Fourth Edition, with Music of some of the Songs. Cloth extra, 6s.

The HISTORY of INDIA. From the Earliest
Period to the Present Time. By JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN,
C.B. Abridged from the Author's larger Work. New Edition,
Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo. 6s. 6d.

The MONKS of the WEST. By Count de MONTALEMBERT. Authorized Translation. Vols. VI. and VII. completing the Work, price 2s.

LIFE in a GERMAN VILLAGE. By the Hon. Mrs. HENRY WYLLAND CREWYN. Author of 'Neighbours and Friends,' 'Janie,' 'Mollie d'Estanville,' &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

TALES from 'BLACKWOOD.' New Series.

Containing 10 Tales of absorbing interest. In 32 Shilling Parts, each complete in itself. Or elegantly bound in 12 handy volumes, 12s. 6d. cloth 3s.

"The most engaging and unobtrusive of travelling companions."

"Ranging from grave to gay, from mystic to absurd, the stories are for all manner of moods and for every order of taste."—Athenæum.

The OPERATIONS of WAR EXPLAINED and ILLUSTRATED. By EDWARD REICHERT HANLEY, C.B.
Fourth Edition, Revised throughout. 6th. With numerous Illustrations. 3s.

MR. KINGLAKE'S NEW VOLUME OF
The INVASION of the CRIMEA. The Sixth—"WINTER TROUBLES." Pro. [Nearly ready.]

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each complete in 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth.

- ADAM REDE. By George Eliot. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
THE MILL on the PLAIN. By the same. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
VILIN HOULT. By the same. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
SCENES of UPLAND LIFE. By the same. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
NIGLAS MAWKE. By the same. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
ROMOLA. By the same. Frontispiece. 2s. 6d.
MIDDLEMARCH. By the same. Vignette. 7s. 6d.
DANIEL DERONDA. By the same. Vignette. 7s. 6d.
MINE is THINE. By Lieut. Col. L. W. M. Lockhart. 6s.
DOUBLES and QUITS. By the same. Illustrated. 6s.
FAIR to ME. By the same. 6s.
COUNTESS. By L. B. Walford. 6s.
PAULINE. By the same. 6s.
MR. SMITH: a Part of his Life. By the same. 2s. 6d.
JOHN-A-DREAMS a Tale. By Julian Sturge. 2s. 6d.
LINDA TREVELL. By Anthony Trollope. 2s. 6d.
NINA BALATKA. By the same. 2s. 6d.
THE MAID of KNER. By R. D. Blackmore. 7s. 6d.
DELICIA. By Beatrice May Hart, Author of 'Miss Molly,' &c. 7s. 6d.
GUILTY, or NOT GUILTY? By Major-General W. O. Hamley. 3s. 6d.
MARMORNE. The Story is told by Adolphus Scargrove. 6s.
TEN THOUSAND a YEAR. By Samuel Warren. 6s.
DIARY of a late PHYSICIAN. By the same. 2s. 6d.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE CLASS-BOOKS.

ZOOLOGY and PALEONTOLOGY.

By HENRY ALLEYN NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc., &c., Professor of Natural History in the University of St. Andrews.

A MANUAL of ZOOLOGY, for the Use of STUDENTS. With a General Introduction on the Principles of Zoology. Fifth Edition, Revised and greatly Enlarged, pp. 616, with 266 Engravings, 16s.

TEXT-BOOK of ZOOLOGY, for the Use of SCHOOLS. Third Edition, Enlarged. With 186 Engravings, 6s.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of ZOOLOGY, for the Use of Junior Classes. Fourth Edition. With 156 Engravings, 2s.

OUTLINES of NATURAL HISTORY for BE-GINNERS, being Descriptions of a Progressive Series of Zoological Types. Second Edition. With 32 Engravings, 1s. 6d.

A MANUAL of PALEONTOLOGY for the Use of STUDENTS. With a General Introduction on the Principles of Paleontology. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 3 vols.
8vo. with upwards of 700 Engravings, 42s.

The ANCIENT LIFE HISTORY of the EARTH.
An Outline of the Principles and Leading Facts of Paleontological Science. With a Glossary and Index. With 250 Engravings, 10s. 6d.

GEOLOGY and PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.
By DAVID PAGE, LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., &c.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY.
With Illustrations and Glossarial Index. Eleventh Edition, 2s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY.
Descriptive and Industrial. With Engravings and Glossary of Scientific Terms. Ninth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, 7s. 6d.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. With Sketch-Maps and Illustrations. Ninth Edition, 2s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. With Engravings. Second Edition, 6s.

ELEMENTS of PHYSIOGRAPHY and PHYSI-CAL GEOGRAPHY. With express reference to the recently issued by the Science and Art Department. By the Rev. ALAN MACKAY, LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Fifteenth
Thousand, pp. 150, 1s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHICAL TEXT-BOOKS. By the Rev. ALAN MACKAY, LL.D., F.R.G.S.

MANUAL of MODERN GEOGRAPHY, Mathematical, Physical, and Political, on a New Plan. 8th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 603, 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. 42nd
Thousand, Revised. 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. 122nd
Thousand, Revised. Pp. 112, 1s.

The INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY. Intended as an Intermediate Book between the author's 'Outlines of Geography' and 'Elements of Geography.' Fifth Edition, Revised.
Pp. 22, 2s.

FIRST STEPS in GEOGRAPHY. 69th Thous. d.
Revised. 1p. 2d. second, 2d., in cloth, 6d.

AGRICULTURE.

CATECHISM of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE.
By HENRY STEPHENS, F.R.S. &c. Author of 'The Book of the Farm.' 10th Thousand. With Engravings, 1s.

PROFESSOR JOHNSTON'S CATECHISM of AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY. A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged by CHARLES A. CAMERON, M.D. F.R.C.S.I., &c.
7th Thousand. With Engravings, 1s.

PROFESSOR JOHNSTON'S ELEMENTS of AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY and GEOLOGY. Eleventh Edition, Revised and brought down to the Present Time, by CHARLES A. CAMERON, M.D. F.R.C.S.I., &c. Pp. 60, 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

ENGLISH PROSE COMPOSITION: a Practical
Manual for Use in Schools. By JAMES CURRIE, LL.D. 32nd Thousand, 1s. 6d.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL and PRONOUNCING
DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
Including a very copious Selection of Aesthetic Technical and other Terms and Phrases. Designed for Use in Schools and Colleges. By the Rev. JAMES YERGEN, M.A. The pronunciation carefully Revised by the Rev. V. R. PHILLIPS, M.A. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Pp. 726, 7s. 6d.

The SCHOOL ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY
and WORD-BOOK. By the same. Pp. 604, 2s.

CLASSICAL TEXT-BOOKS.

ADITUS FACILIORES: an Easy Latin Constructing Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By A. W. INYER,
M.A. LL.D., and the Rev. C. DANNIELL, M.A. Fifth Edition,
2s. 6d.

ADITUS FACILIORES GRAECI: an Easy Greek Constructing Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By the same authors. Second Edition, 2s.

A PARALLEL SYNTAX. Greek and Latin for Beginners, with Reviews and a Greek Vocabulary. By the Rev.
HERBERT W. KEYD-ATINNESLEY, LL.M. Crown 8vo. 3s.

A MANUAL of BOTANY, Anatomical and Physiological. For the Use of Students. By ROBERT BROWN,
M.A. F.R.S. &c. With numerous Illustrations, 12s. 6d.

PRIMER of GEOMETRY. An Easy Introduction of the Propositions of Euclid. By FRANCIS CUTH-BERTSON, M.A. LL.D. Third Edition, 1s. 6d.

12mo. cloth, price 6s.

THE THOROUGH GUIDE TO THE ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT containing an original Description of all the Localities, Carriage Drives, Footpaths, Mountains, Acacia within the District, a full account of the various Approaches, Tables showing cost of Tourist's Tickets, &c. Illustrated with 13 Maps. By M. J. B. RADDLEBY, E.A. The Maps engraved by J. Bartholomew, F.R.C.S., Edinburgh.

Dulau & Co. 27, Soho-square.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

M. T. CICERONIS DE NATURA DEORUM LIBRI TRE.

With Introduction and Commentary by JOSEPH B. MAYOR, M.A., Professor of Classical Literature at King's College, London.

Together with a New Collation of several of the English Manuscripts, By J. H. SWAINSON, M.A., Formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 8vo. Vol. I. price 16s. 6d.

THEODORE OF MOPSUESTIA'S COMMENTARY ON THE MINOR EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL.

The LATIN VERSION, with the GREEK FRAGMENTS. Edited from the Manuscripts, with Notes and an Introduction, By H. R. SWETE, D.D., Rector of Amherst, Essex, and late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge.

In 3 vols.—Vol. I containing the INTRODUCTION and the COMMENTARY upon GALATIANS—COLOSSIANS. Demy 8vo. 12s.

London: Cambridge Warehouse, 17, Paternoster-row.

KERBY & ENDEAN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE REGENERATION OF ROUMANIA. By KALIXT WOLSKI. From the Original by T. L. OXLEY, Author of 'From Calais to Karlsruhe.' Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE WAIF: a Poem. By FRANÇOIS COPPÉE. Edited by M. MOUNET-SULLY at the General Assembly of the Society for Saving the Shipwrecked, May 19, 1880. Crown 8vo. 6d.

ON PRESERVATION OF HEALTH IN INDIA: a Lecture addressed to the Royal Engineering College at Roorkee's Hill. By Sir JOSEPH FAYRE, K.C.B. LL.D. M.D. F.R.S. Demy 8vo. Second Edition, 1s.

THE BEST COOKERY BOOKS OF THE DAY

DINNERS at HOME: How to Order, Cook, and Serve Them. By SHORT. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s. "Delicious recipes, really excellent; appetizing; menus most useful." See Key-words.

BREAKFASTS and LUNCHEONS at HOME. By SHORT. Author of 'Dinners at Home.' Crown 8vo. cloth. 2s. 6d. Second Edition. With these books no housekeeper can fail to supply a household in a comfortable style most economically as to cost. Kerby & Endean, 180, Oxford-street.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.

Threadneedle-street, E.C. 4, Charing Cross, S.W.

Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street, W.

Home and Foreign Insurances effected.

Sum insured in 1879, £28,463,463.

FRANCIS D. BELTON, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,

79, Pall Mall.

For LIVES ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1807.

Accumulated Funds £3,043,542

Also a Subscribed Capital of more than £1,500,000

Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.

GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

Fleet-street, London.

The Right Honourable BARON CAMPBELL.
The Right Honourable VISCOUNT GRANVILLE.
The Right Honourable LORD JUSTICE THORNTON.
The Honourable VICE-CHANCELLOR Sir CHARLES HALL.
WILLIAM FRANKLIN WIGGINS, Esq.
EDMOND ROBERT TURNER, Esq.

DIRECTORS.

Edward Bailey, Esq.
Francis Thomas Bircham, Esq.
The Hon. Hallyburton O. Campbell.
John Clerk, Esq. Q.C.
Frederick George Davidson, Esq.
John Deane, Esq.
William James Farrer, Esq.
Henry Ray Freshfield, Esq.
Sir Farrer Herschell, Q.C. M.P.
William Frederick Hignett, Esq.
Grosvenor Hodgkinson, Esq.
Holdsworth Hunt, Esq.

John James Johnson, Esq. Q.C.
William Rolfe Malcolm, Esq.
Richard Nicholson, Esq.
Charles Manley Smith, Esq.
John St. John, Esq.
The Right Honourable Lord Justice Thorneycroft.
Edward Tompkins, Esq.
Sir William Henry Watson.
Arnold William White, Esq.
Isaiah Thomas Wood, Esq.

Invested assets on 31st December, 1879, £5,807,791.
Income for the year 1879, £74,534.
Amount paid in claims to 31st December last, £12,879,407.
Reversionary Bonus allotted for the five years ended 31st December last, £73,832.

Appropriate Reversionary Bonus hitherto allotted, £198,001.
The Expenses of Management (including commission) are under 4 per cent. of the annual income.
Attention is specially directed to the revised Prospectus of the Society, to the new rates of Premium, which are materially lower for young lives than heretofore, to the new conditions as to extended limits of free travel and residence, and to the reduced rates of extra Premium. Loans are granted on security of Life Insurance and Mortgages in connection with policies of insurance.
Prospectus and Form of Proposal will be sent on application.

GRIFFITH DAVIES, Actuary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.

And may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company. Right Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.

Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.

ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE EGOIST: a Comedy in Narrative.

By GEORGE MEREDITH, Author of 'The Ordeal of Richard Feverel,' &c.

With Frontispiece, crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

"There is no reason to question but 'The Egoist' is a piece of imaginative work as solid and rich as any that the century has seen, and that it is with 'Richard Feverel' not only one of its author's masterpieces, but one of the strongest and most individual productions of modern literature."—Athenæum.

"One of the most striking works of our time.... Of extraordinary merit.... It contains an abundance of fine wit and humour, remarkable insight into human motive and human character, an infinity of brilliant dramatic speech, a great many passages of reflection and analysis of very high order, and several characters that are among the best of Mr. Meredith's creations.... The work is so complete and elaborate as to be indescribable in the compass of a newspaper article. It must speak for itself."—Full Mail Gazette.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

ENGLISH LETTERS.

FOUR CENTURIES OF ENGLISH LETTERS.

A SELECTION OF 350 LETTERS BY 150 WRITERS, FROM THE PERIOD OF THE PASTON LETTERS TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Edited and Arranged by W. BAPTISTE SCOOONES.

Large crown 8vo. cloth, price 7s.

"No one who takes the slightest interest in English history, English literature, or in human nature can fail to receive increase of delight from the perusal of this volume.... Mr. Scoones's editorial apparatus is excellently calculated to assist the enjoyment of a singularly enjoyable book—a book that Chesterfield would, we think, have included among his ideal books for spare half-hours."—Full Mail Gazette.

"We do not hesitate to say that it would be hard to find among recent publications a volume of greater interest to persons of intelligence."—Academy.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, cloth boards, with very Copious Index,

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII.

FIFTH SERIES.

Containing, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects:—

English, Irish, and Scottish History.

The Dream and Death of Thomas, Lord Lyttelton—The Elective and Deposing Power of Parliament—Anne Boleyn—Scottish Titles—Burial-Place of Edmund, Duke of Somerset—Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce—Bondmen in England—Serfdom in Scotland—Graham, Viscount Dundee—A Jacobite Letter—Abbotsford in 1836—Compurgators—Bishop of Ross, Scotland, 1417—Knox's 'History of the Reformation'—Good Friday and Easter Sunday, temp. Charles II.—The Jews in England in the Thirteenth Century—Warrants for the Execution of Charles I.—The Plantagenets and Stewarts.

Biography.

T. Allington—William Boy—Caspar Hauser—Charles Owen of Warrington—Paolo Sarpi—The Descent of William Penn—William, Abbot of Ramsey—A. H. Bowan—George Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh—Matthew Smith, the first Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford—James Sayers, the Caricaturist—Jeremiah Horrocks.

Bibliography and Literary History.

Shakespeareans: The Authorship of Anonymous Works—Milton's 'L'Allegro'—Unpublished Letter of Macaulay—'Histoire des Médecins'—Juifs Anciens et Modernes—Barlet's 'Philology of the English Tongue'—Unpublished Poems by Burns—Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Norton—From Greenland's Icy Mountains—Chap-books—Lord Byron in Scotland—Welsh Language—Unpublished Letter of John Wesley—The Works of Thomas Fuller—The Welsh Testament—Borne's Ode on the American Civil War—Opus Questionum divi Augustini—Letter of Smollett—'The Pilgrim's Progress'—Development of the Press, 1824-1874—Books Written by Mrs. Olivia Berres: 'The Book'.

Popular Antiquities and Folk-Lore.

Ague Charms—Birds of Ill Omen—Candlemas Gills—Eggs and Drunkenness—Evil Eye—Jewish Superstitions—Hydrophobia prevented—Handkerchief thrown on Suicide's Coffin—Ladies and Lions—The Seven Whiskers.

Poetry, Ballads, and Drama.

The real Richelieu and Balzac's Richelieu—'The Irish Brigade'—Thomas Decker—Mrs. Siddons a Sculptor—Barham's Lines on Dean Ireland—Browning's 'Lost Leader'—The Lord Chamberlain's Inspection of Plays—Emma Isola—A Poem by W. M. Frazer—Goethe—Shelley—Henry VIII. as a Poet—The Australian Drama—Charles I. as a Poet—Sheridan and Sir John Burleigh—Oxfordshire Christmas Miracle-Play—Christmas Mummings in Dorsetshire—Dante and his Translators—The Christian Year.

Popular and Proverbial Sayings.

"You know who the Critics are?"—"You may put it in your eye and see none the worse for it."—Called Home—God's Church and the Devil's Chapel—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking—Tout vient à point—Wise after the event—La Parole à été donnée à l'homme—Robbing Peter to Pay Paul—The End justifies the Means—The English seizes a Fool and is a Fool.

Philology.

Carr-Carne—Keel Taps—"Bloody"—Spurring—Nor for Than—Vagaries of Spelling—Spelling Reforms—Survey Provincialisms—Quadragesimalis—E & Z—English Words compared with the Icelandic—Gingham—The Termination Y in Place-Names—Calonel—Yeux—Carnee—Hall, Wych, and Salt Works—Shadddongate—Shakspere's Name.

Genealogy and Heraldry.

The Insignia of the Knights of the Garter—Arms—Hungary—Daring Roll of Arms—Unsettled Baronetcies—The Arms of Sir Francis Drake—The Arms of English Sees—Bar Sinister—Strawberry Leaves on Coronets—Byron Arms—F. E. R. T. in the Savoy Arms—Seal of Prince of Livenia—The Temple and Hospitaliers.

Fine Arts.

Portraits of Dr. Johnson—Marks on Porcelain—Italian Works of Art at Paris in 1815—Sir Joshua Reynolds—Miss Day; Mrs. Day—Portrait of Barber—Church Plate—Various Paintings and Engravings.

Ecclesiastical Matters.

Altar Rails, Covered—Liddell v. Westerton—Ecclesiastical Vestments—Funeral Garlands—The Custom of "Preter John" and the Arms of the See of Winchester—Penance in the Church of England—Lord's Service Book—Epitaph of Cardinal Howard at Rome—St. Outhbert's Burial-place—Old Northern English MS. Psalter—Berbegia Church—Sacred Vessels—A Roman Catholic Visitation in 1799—Episcopal Titles—St. George's Letters—Registration Sacramentarium—Communion Tokens—Fast-day Communion in the Church of England—The Title of Reverend—Consecration of Church Plate—"Defender of the Faith"—The "Brooches" Bible.

Classical Subjects.

The Latin Version of Bacon's Essays—Greek Anthology—Martial's Epigram xiii. 75—Lauretan Notelets—Medieval and Modern Latin and Greek Verse—Mithras in scot—Catusus: "Hoc ut dixit"—"Sandon" (Horace)—Cicero—Locus a non Lucendo.

Topography.

Bridewich Islands—Origin of the Names of the American States—Arthur's Oven on the Carron—Scottish History—The Yard of Oak—Hart Hall, Oxford—Old Kensington—Traveling in Italy Forty Years ago—The Equestrian Statue in Hyde Park—Arthurian Localities; Scotland—The Sacred Lotus—St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row.

Miscellaneous.

Christian Names—Pillar Poets—Hanging in Chains and Irons—George III. and the Pig—The Rikenny Cats—The Waterloo and Peninsular Medals—The Clerical a healthy Profession—Unlawful Games of the Middle Ages—Itinerant Empirics—Sunday Newspapers—Gipsies The Worldworth—Double Returns in Parliamentary Elections—Curiosities of Corporation Records—Spiritual Apparitions—The "Dig" System of Telegraphy—Professor Becker's "Gallus"—Skating Literature—Cricket—London Companies, or Guilds—A Travelling Tutor of the Olden Time—Gunpowder Plot—Baths in the Middle Ages—The Little Summer—Whitewash—Michaelmas—Christmas Contrasts.

Published by JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

R. & J. BECK have REMOVED to 68, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

 Enlarged Illustrated CATALOGUE of MICROSCOPES, &c., sent post free on application.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published, 2 vols. demy 8vo. 32s.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.

With Illustrations and Maps.

DRAMATIC IDYLS. Second Series.

Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

By ROBERT BROWNING.

PASSAGES FROM THE PROSE WRITINGS OF MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Contents: 1. LITERATURE.—2. POLITICS and SOCIETY.—3. PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION.

NEW AND OLD: a Volume of Verse.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.

Author of 'Renaissance in Italy,' &c.

Crown 8vo. 9s.

ENGLISH TREES AND TREE PLANTING.

By WILLIAM H. ABLETT.

Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

RENAISSANCE IN ITALY: Age of the Despots.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.

Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 16s.

London. SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

Early in August, price 2s., cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF

B A R B A R A :

HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.

By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

NEW ROMANCE OF LONDON LIFE.

On July 20, price 2s., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE ORANGE GIRL.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

On July 20, price 2s., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE KING'S PAGE: a Love Story.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE. The New Novel.

By the AUTHOR of 'SOPHIE CREWE,' &c.

"A wild, rattling, exciting story, full of matter."—Athenæum.

London: J. & R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

E P P S ' S C O C O A.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & Co. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON.

MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE JULIUBES.—Sold in Labelled Boxes only.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET
and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. HIGGINSFIELD, Secretary.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO.

BANKERS,

30 and 40, MARK-LANE, LONDON.

(Established 1808.)

CLEARING BANKERS—The BANK of ENGLAND.

DEPOSITS of 100. and upwards received and Receipt issued—

	On demand	Seven Days Notice	14 Days Notice	30 Days Notice	3 Months Notice Interest 4 4 4 4 4 per cent. per annum. 4 4 4 4 4

An Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit Twelve complete Months.
Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.

255, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUARY WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

INEXPENSIVE BOOKCASES, Oak or Mahogany, with Movable Shelves, 4 in. deep, Embossed Leather under Fronts. 11. 1s. 6d. to 30. Forty Bookcases, Thirty Library Tables, in Stock to select from. Price Lists, post free. BIRCH, SMITH & Co., 307 and 308, Tottenham Court-road, and 1, Chancery-street, W.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The Original, Best, and most Liberal.
Cash Prices.

No extra charge for time given.
Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 10, 20, and 21, Moirwell-street, W.C. Established 1807.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been Rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites from 8. 6s. to 50 Guineas.
Drawing-room Suites from 12. 10s. to 45 Guineas.
Dining-room Suites from 11. 1s. to 40 Guineas.
And all other Goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 10, 20, and 21, Moirwell-street, W.C. Established 1807.

A POLLINARIS WATER.

"Laurel demandus Apollinari."—Hercor, Book iv. Ode 2.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

ANNUAL SALE, 8,000,000.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 19, Regent-street, London, S.W.

LOTS 110 and 111. LOT 110, very soft OLD FALE SHERRY at 30s. and LOT 111, very soft OLD DOLORO SOLEMA pale gold at 35s. per dozen. SHERRIES of the old style, mellowed by age, very soft, and entirely free from the teryness which has been so detrimental to the consumption of Sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realisation and are offered to the Public, while on the special Lot List, at greatly reduced prices instead of being sold by Auction.—The LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adelphi, W.C. (removed from 440, Strand).

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.

RIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES:—

- Are in 48—SEVEN
- Are free from Sulphur
- Are non-inflammable
- Are non-toxic
- Are non-corrosive
- Are in 48—SEVEN
- Are in 48—SEVEN
- Are in 48—SEVEN

RIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

M. R. G. H. J. O. N. E. S.

SUBROCK DENTIST,

57, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.
Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of the Pure Magnesia as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, BRANCHED, HEAD-ACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and as the safest Agent for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

"SANITAS" and DISINFECTION.—The Pine Forest at Home.—The SANITAS PREPARATION is in use in more than 30 Hospitals of Health, Hospitals, etc. Non-poisonous, stainless, agreeable and healthful. Disinfecting Fluids, Powders, and Household Soaps. Toilet Soaps and Fluids. Tooth and Nursery Powders. Of all Chemists or of the Sanitas Company, Limited, Bethnal Green, London E. Testimonials of highest Medical and Sanitary Authorities. Of universal necessity as the most perfect Purifier and Disinfectant.

At 39, Oxford-street; 1, 1a, 2, 3, and 4, Newman-street; 4, 5, and 6, Perry's-place; and 1, Newman-yard, London, W.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1880.

These Lectures, or any of them, are open to Students of either sex, on payment of the usual Fee.—For particulars, apply to
 R. D. BARNISHWIRE, 25, George-street, Manchester, } Man. Socy.
 H. INFIELD DOWSON, One Corn, Manchester, }

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY.

The AUGUST Number, Part IV of the New Volume, will be ready on the 31st instant.

F. WARNE & CO. Bedford-street, Strand.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

The MIDSUMMER HOLIDAY SCRIBNER will be the Grandest Number of a Shilling Magazine ever published. The custom of making the August issue of Scribner's Monthly a Special Midsummer Number has now become a recognised feature of the Magazine.

F. WARNE & CO. Bedford-street, Strand.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

In the AUGUST Number Philip Gilbert Hamerton will have an interesting Paper on 'Seymour Haden,' fully illustrated with Reproductions of Dr. Haden's Etchings, a Portrait, &c. There will be an Article on 'Savonarola,' with Pictures by Van Schaick. The First of a Series on the LOCALITIES of DICKENS will be given in this Number, illustrated by Mr. Charles A. Vanderhooff—an illustrated Paper descriptive of American Advertising—an Article by John Burroughs on 'Our River,' with Pictures by Mary Mallock Foote—the concluding Paper of the Series on Canada—an interesting and well-illustrated instalment of 'Peter the Great'—a Paper by Charles Dudley Warner—and an Original Comic Operetta, 'The Sweet of the Year,' Words by Feltie G. Cone and Music by E. C. Phelps, will be some of the other features of this Number.

F. WARNE & CO. Bedford-street, Strand.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY.

The AUGUST Number will contain Twenty-five distinct Articles and upwards of Sixty High-Class Illustrations.

F. WARNE & CO. Bedford-street, Strand.

NOW READY,

16 pages, 8vo. price 2d. No. 1. for JULY, of the

SPELLING REFORMER

AND

JOURNAL OF THE ENGLISH SPELLING REFORM ASSOCIATION.

CONTENTS.

1. The EDITOR to the READER.
2. The PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY and SPELLING REFORM. Communicated by Dr J. A. H. MURRAY.
3. A WORD on SPELLING REFORM. By Professor SAYCE.
4. TEACHING to READ. By Dr. J. H. GLADSTONE.
5. The HISTORICAL VALUE of PHONETIC SPELLING already EXISTING in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE By F. G. FLEAY, M.A.

No. II. for AUGUST, will contain—

1. The PROBLEM of SPELLING REFORM. By the EDITOR.
2. VAGARIES of ORDINARY SPELLING. By A. J. ELLIS, F.R.S.
3. The MECHANICAL ASPECTS of SPELLING REFORM. By W. R. EVANS.
4. SPELLING REFORM in GERMANY. By F. A. SCHWARZENBERG.
5. PARTIAL CORRECTIONS of ENGLISH SPELLING. A Report of Mr Sweet's Proposals to the Philological Society.
6. The HISTORICAL VALUE of PHONETIC SPELLING already EXISTING in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE By F. G. FLEAY, M.A.
7. BIBLIOGRAPHY of SPELLING REFORM.

London: F. PITMAN, 20, Paternoster-row, E.C.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE.—LECTURES

delivered at the ROYAL INSTITUTION. By Rev. A. H. SAYCE, M.A. Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. Author of 'An Assyrian Grammar,' 'The Principles of Comparative Philology,' &c. Demy 8vo. cloth, 4s.

"Those who would know more of the Libraries of Babylon and their wonderful contents must refer to Mr. Sayce's book in which most of what is known of them at present is summed up. —Times.

London: S. Bagster & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row.

Just published, 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

CANON CHARLES HOLMONDELEY.—The PASSAGE of the FOUR P.A.P. A New Explanation of Romans ch. 11-16, with its bearing on the Intrinsic and Extrinsic Systems of Justification by Faith, and on the Pauline Views of the Tubingen Critics and others.

Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

R. & J. BECK have REMOVED to 68, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

 Enlarged Illustrated CATALOGUE of MICROSCOPES, &c., sent post free on application.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

The special attention of the Reading Public is called to the fact that the Grosvenor Gallery Library allows TWO VOLUMES of the NEWEST BOOKS for a Subscription of ONE GUINEA per Annum.

N.B.—SETS OF BOOKS ARE DIVIDED TO MEET THE CONVENIENCE OF SUBSCRIBERS. COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS ARE RECEIVED ON ESPECIALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TERMS. THE PUBLIC ARE INVITED TO INSPECT THE READING AND WRITING ROOMS, THE LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM, AND THE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW BOND-STREET.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842, in order to meet the demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate Terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries.

From its commencement the original purpose of the Library has been kept steadily in view. The best Books of every shade of opinion, on all subjects of general interest, have been taken in large numbers—Hundreds, and in some instances Thousands, of Copies of the Leading Works of every Season having been placed in Circulation.

Great care has always been taken in the selection of Books to study the wishes of Subscribers, and to make the Library not only "Select," but comprehensive.

More than One Million Volumes have been added since 1874.

Additional Copies of all the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear.

First-Class Subscription, One Guinea per annum,

COMMENCING AT ANY DATE.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS AND UPWARDS,

ACCORDING TO THE NUMBER OF VOLUMES REQUIRED.

Book Societies and Literary Institutions Supplied on Liberal Terms.

 Revised Lists of Works recently added, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET.

CITY OFFICE:—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

TINSLEY BROTHERS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Next week will be published, price One Shilling.
The Summer Number of TINSLEY'S MAGAZINE,

ENTITLED SEASIDE MAIDENS.

By G. A. HENTY.

With 10 pages of Illustrations by HARRY FURNISS.

MEMOIRS of a CYNIC. By William GILBERT, Author of 'Shirley Hall Asylum,' &c. 3 vols.
"True pictures of real life."—Illustrated London News.

LONDON TOWN. By Marcus Fall. With Illustrations by Harry Furniss. 2 vols. crown 8vo.
"Many pleasant hours may be spent in the perusal of the book."—Court Journal.

In KENT with CHARLES DICKENS. By THOMAS FROST, Author of 'The Life of Lord Lytton,' 'Secret Societies,' &c. 1 vol.
"We are grateful to Mr Frost for his 'In Kent with Charles Dickens.'"—Graphic.

DAYS and NIGHTS in LONDON: Studies in Black and Gray. By J. EWING RITCHIE, Author of 'The Night Side of London,' &c. 1 vol.
"A well-written and thoughtful book."—Morning Post.

RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS by an OLD ACTOR. By F. BELTON. 1 vol. 8vo.
"One of the most amusing books we ever came across."—Picaro.

The SPORT of FATE. By Richard DOWLING, Author of 'The Weird Sisters,' 'The Mystery of Killard,' &c. 3 vols. [This day.]

MANY LOVES. By B. H. BURTON, Author of 'Jennie of "The Prince's,"' 'Well-On and Off the Stage,' &c. 3 vols.
"We predict a great success for 'Many Loves.'"—Court Journal.

INNOCENCE at PLAY. By Jean MIDDLEMASS, Author of 'Sealed by a Kiss,' 'Wild Georgie,' &c. 3 vols.
"A really vivacious, amusing, and variegated Society Novel."—Society.

A CRUEL SECRET: a New Novel by a New Author. 3 vols.
"An interesting novel."—York House Papers.

WINGED WORDS. By Henry Spicer, Author of 'Old Styles's,' 'Judicial Dramas,' &c. 2 vols.

WHAT WILL SOCIETY SAY? By MERVYN MERRITON, Author of 'The Ringwoods of Ringwood,' &c. 3 vols. [Immediately.]

A PEAL of MERRY BELLS. By LEOPOLD LEWIS, Author of the Drama of 'The Bells.' 3 vols. [Immediately.]

POOR WISDOM'S CHANCE. By Mrs. H. LOVETT CAMERON, Author of 'Juliet's Guardian,' &c. 3 vols.
"Full of thrilling interest from first to last."—Graphic.

TINSLEY BROTHERS, 8, Catherine-street, Strand.

THE CLARENDON PRESS LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. By William EDWARD HALL, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. cloth, 21s.

The CONSTRUCTION of HEALTHY DWELLINGS; namely, Houses, Hospitals, Barracks, Asylums, &c. By DOUGLAS GALTON, late Royal Engineer, C.B. F.R.S., &c. Demy 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH PLANT NAMES from the TENTH to the FIFTEENTH CENTURY By J. EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. Small fcap. cloth, 5s.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST of ENGLAND. By E. A. FREEMAN, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKERT, M.A., Birkington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Cambridge. To be completed in Four Parts. Parts I.—III. 4to. 10s. 8d. each.

Part IV. In the press.

HOMER.—A COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the ODYSSEY and HYMNS of HOMER; to which is added a Concordance to the Parallel Passages in the Iliad, Odyssey, and Hymns. By HENRY DUNBAR, M.D., Member of the General Council, University of Edinburgh. 4to. cloth, 11. 1s.

HERODOTUS, SELECTIONS from. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and a Map, by W. W. MERRY, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Lincoln College. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

BUNYAN.—The PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, GRACE ABOUNDING, RELATION of the IMPRISONMENT of Mr. JOHN BUNYAN. Edited, with Biographical Introduction and Notes, by E. YENABLES, M.A. 1879. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 6s.

The ELEMENTS of JURISPRUDENCE. By THOMAS ERSKINE HOLLAND, D.C.L., Chichele Professor of International Law and Diplomacy, and Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. 1880. Demy 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

GEODESY. By Colonel Alexander ROSS CLARKE, C.B. R.E. 8vo. cloth, 11s. 6d.

The SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

Vol. IV. The ZEND-AVESTA. Part I. The Vendidad. Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

Vol. V. PAHLAVI TEXTS. Part I. The Bundahish, Bahman Yast, and Shâyest-î-Shâyest. Translated by E. W. WEST. 8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

Vol. VII. The INSTITUTES of VISHNU. Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

ST. AUGUSTINE.—SELECT ANTI-PELAGIAN TREATISES, and the ACTS of the SECOND COUNCIL of ORANGE With an Introduction by WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.

The NEW TESTAMENT in ENGLISH. According to the Version by JOHN WYCLIFFE, about A.D. 1380, and Revised by JOHN PURVEY, about A.D. 1398. Reprinted from the above. With Introduction and Glossary by W. W. SKERT, M.A. 1879. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 6s.

ITALY and her INVADERS, A.D. 376-476. By T. HODGKIN, Fellow of University College, London. Illustrated with Plates and Maps. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, 11. 12s.

The CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND, in its Origin and Development. By WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History. Library Edition. 3 vols. demy 8vo. cloth, 21. 8s.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

J. C. NIMMO & BAIN, 14, KING WILLIAM-STREET, STRAND.

THE MODERN FOREIGN LIBRARY. A SELECTION OF THE BEST NOVELS OF ALL FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Edited by HENRI VAN LAUN.

PROSPECTUS.

It is the Intention of the Publishers to place before the Public Translations of the best Foreign Novels, at such a price as will bring them within the easy reach of every class of the community. These Novels will be selected from all Languages, contain subjects of the highest and most varied interest, and be rich in promise of engrossing narrative and picturesque descriptions. Care will be taken that nothing objectionable shall be found in them, so that they may be suitable for the domestic circle and for perusal among the family, whilst at the same time they shall possess sufficient literary worth to be appreciated by the scholar and student of foreign tongues. In this manner the intellectual food of different nationalities will be thrown open to many who, until now, have been prevented from enjoying it.

These Translations, printed in an attractive and serviceable form, will make a handsome addition to the library-shelves. They will be Edited by M. HENRI VAN LAUN, the Translator of Molière's Dramatic Works, assisted by some of the most experienced Translators of the present day. Each Novel is published with the sanction of the Author, and almost simultaneously with the Original Work, or as soon as possible as the Translation can be made. These Reproductions are also authorized by the International Literary Association—a Society of eminent literary men of England, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Portugal, the United States, Denmark, Holland, &c., formed for maintaining the rights of intellectual property.

The RIVAL DOCTORS. From the French of A. LAPOINTE. By HENRI VAN LAUN. [Ready.]

The SERGEANT'S LEGACY. From the French of E. BERTHELOT. By GILBERT VENABLES. [Ready.]

A SHEEP in WOLF'S CLOTHING. From the French of C. DEBANS. By EVELYN JERROLD. [August 2.]

The COUNT of TALAVERA. From the Dutch of J. VAN LENNEP. By A. ARNOLD.

A NEW GENERATION. From the German of GOLO RAIMUND. By H. E. GOLDSCHMIDT.

The CHASE. A Tale of the Southern States. From the French of J. LERMINA. By A. SERGEANT.

BEWARE of the FIRE. From the Polish of J. KRASZEWSKI.

A HUNGARIAN NABOB. From the Hungarian of M. TOKAL.

A MODERN BARON. From the French of C. DEBANS.

The BANKER'S SON. From the German of E. V. KONIG.

A GIRL'S DOWER. From the Italian of SALVATORE FARINA.

The GIPSY. From the French of Jules CLARETIE.

Price in French Paper Cover, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, 3s. 6d.

J. C. NIMMO & BAIN, 14, King William-street, Strand, London, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY MISS BROUGHTON.
SECOND THOUGHTS. By Rhoda Broughton, Author of 'Nancy,' 'Good-bye, Sweetheart,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.
FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret Majendie. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.
The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha Thomas. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story. In studies of character her book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel writing."
Advertiser.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'ROBIN ADAIR.'
ALAN DERING. By the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh, Author of 'Kilcorran,' 'Robin Adair,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY GRIZEL.'
IN HER MAJESTY'S KEEPING. By the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, Author of 'My Lords of Stragga,' 'Lady Grizel,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIFF.'
PIOUS FRAUDS. By Albany de Ponblanque, Author of 'Cut Adriff,' 'A Tangled Skein,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW ADDITION TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.
In crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s. with an Illustration.
PROBATION. By the Author of 'The First Violin.'

REPRINT OF 'CHERRY RIPE!'
At all Booksellers, in crown 8vo.
CHERRY RIPE! by the Author of 'Comin' Thro' the Rye.' Now ready, price 6s.

TWO NEW BOOKS, NEXT WEEK,
Price 3s. 6d. each.
I. FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND. By Miss de Ponblanque. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

II. NIGH UNTO THE END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy, now in Course of Translation into History, considered by the Rev J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
"Already the Eastern sky is aglow with the reddening rays of its Advent glory, and by all the signs of which himself hath spoken, 'the master cometh.'"
—From a Charge by the late Bishop of Winchester

STANDARD WORKS ON COOKERY.
FRANCATELLI'S "MODERN COOK." Containing 1,500 Recipes and 40 Illustrations. In demy 8vo. price 12s.

FRANCATELLI'S "COOK'S GUIDE." Containing 40 Illustrations and 1,000 Recipes. In crown 8vo. price 6s.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE COLD MUTTON. In imp. 8vo. price 2s.

On July 12th, price One Shilling.
THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

ADAM AND EVE. (Continued)
LETTERS TO AND FROM H. C. ANDERSEN.
THE YOUTH OF QUEEN HENRI.
THE RETURN OF APHRODITE.
A TRIP AND WHAT FOLLOWED.
ADVENTURES IN THE
ROMANCE OF LITERARY DISCOVERY
THE PORTRAIT OF A PAINTER BY HIMSELF Part III.
A SCANDALOUS ROMANCE.
THE REBEL OF THE FAMILY By Mrs. Lynn Linton. (Continued.)

*. Once for binding the volumes of Temple Bar can be obtained at all Booksellers, price One Shilling each

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, Now Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 3 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.
"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it embodies, will ensure it a widespread popularity. Many of the papers possess an economy and popular interest, while all of them may be read with pleasure and profit."
—Economist
"There are few readers who will not bear testimony to the fascination of these family legends. Nearly fifty stories of English, Scottish and Irish families are narrated in these interesting volumes with such careful reference to authority as the writer, a practiced biographical historian, is accustomed to pursue."
—Daily Telegraph

MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE
LIFE (1787-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s. (Just out.)

THE VILLAGE OF PALACES; or, CHRONICLES OF CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. O. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"This work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting portion of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit."
—Post
"Mr. L'Estrange tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."
—Advertiser

CHEAP EDITION OF SIR GIBBIE.
By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 1s. bound.

THE NEW NOVELS.
FORESTALLED. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridget,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols.

The TENTH EARL. By John Berwick Harwood, Author of 'Lady Fanny,' &c. 2 vols.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs. G. LINNÆUS BAKER, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.
"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome story. The story is interesting and well told."
—John Bull
"Woolers and Winners will add to Mrs. Baker's literary fame. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting."
—Contemporary

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.
"The author may be congratulated on a very attractive and clever story which, if it be a first effort in fiction, is unusually successful. It is the work of a refined mind, and is carried out with considerable skill."
—Advertiser
"One of the most clever and original works of fiction of the year. Its freshness and unconventionality are very attractive."
—John Bull
"A bright, lively story, full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volume."
—Sunday Times

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DESART, Author of 'Kavendish,' &c. 3 vols.

"Lord Desart shows his accustomed liveliness in description, which is never prone to become wearisome."
—John Bull
"A bright, lively story, full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volume."
—Sunday Times

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs. MOLSEWORTH, Author of 'Bathurst Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.
"One of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one will lay it down unfinished."
—Post
"A very charming story."
—Obituary

POET and PEEB. By Hamilton ALDE. 3 vols. Dedicated to Lord Lytton.
"A novel of unusual merit."
—Advertiser

A VERY OPAL. By C. T. PIRKIS, Author of 'The World of His Own,' &c. 3 vols. (Just ready.)

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.
Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 4s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. SILBERT, WILLIAMS, RUNT, LEBCH, FOYSTER, THOMAS, RANDY, R. ROGERS, SAMPOUR, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.
Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.
John Halliwell, Gentleman. Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
The Greenleaf and the Cross. By E. Edwards.
Nathalie. By Mrs. Kavanagh. Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.' No Church.
Adam Grainger. By Mrs. Oliphant. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Sam Slick's Wise Words. A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Cardinal Wiseman's Pagan. A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Story of a New American. Robert Falconer. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Laird Hunt's Old Court Favourite. The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Margaret and her Bridegroom. The Valley of a Hundred Firs. Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dumas, D.C.L.
Sam Slick's Americans at Home. A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Laird of Marlow. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. David Highland. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Frederick's Life of Madame d'Albret. A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Valley of a Hundred Firs. Marguerite. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Purke's Romance of the Furze. Sam Slick's Americans at Home. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Adam Grainger. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Laird of Marlow. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. David Highland. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Frederick's Life of Madame d'Albret. A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Valley of a Hundred Firs. Marguerite. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Purke's Romance of the Furze. Sam Slick's Americans at Home. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Adam Grainger. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Laird of Marlow. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. David Highland. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Sam Slick's Americans at Home. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Adam Grainger. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Laird of Marlow. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. David Highland. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Frederick's Life of Madame d'Albret. A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Valley of a Hundred Firs. Marguerite. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Purke's Romance of the Furze. Sam Slick's Americans at Home. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
Adam Grainger. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'
The Laird of Marlow. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy. David Highland. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

ROUND ABOUT a GREAT ESTATE.
By RICHARD JEFFERIES.
Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' 'Grosvenor Park Farm,' 'Hodge and His Master,' &c.
Crown 8vo. 8s. (Early in August.)

Just published, 2 vols. demy 8vo. 12s.
LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDENSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.
With Illustrations and Maps.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING. DRAMATIC IDYLS.

Second Series. Fcap. 8vo. 4s.
By ROBERT BROWNING.

PASSAGES from the PROSE
WRITINGS of MATTHEW ARNOLD. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
Contents: 1. Literature. 2. Politics and Society. 3. Philosophy and Religion.

MIXED ESSAYS. By Matthew Arnold.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s.
Contents: Democracy—Equality—Irish Catholics and British Liberalism—Pope's Essay on Criticism—A Guide to English Literature—Fakland—A French Critic on Milton—A French Critic on Goethe—George Sand.

NEW and OLD: a Volume of Verse.
By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A., Author of 'Renaissance in Italy,' &c. Crown 8vo. 8s.

ENGLISH TREES and TREE
PLANTING. By WILLIAM H. ARLETT. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.
"To country gentlemen the book will be invaluable."
—Examiner
"Calculated to be of great service to such as need a practical guide to English forestry."
—Lee Stock Journal

A SELECTION from the POETRY of ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. Second Series, uniform with the First Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d., gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

A SELECTION from the POETICAL
WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING. Second Series, uniform with the First Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d., gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Age of the Doga. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 12s.

The POWER of SOUND. By Edmund GURNIE, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo. (Shortly.)

NEW NOVEL. BEAUTY'S DAUGHTERS.

By the Author of 'Molly Bawn,' 'A Very Fairy Lillan,' 'Phyllis,' &c.
3 vols. post 8vo.

"Another triumph for an author who still prefers to remain unknown. Of the success of the story there can hardly be any doubt."
—Contemporary
"One of the most delightful novels of the present season."
—Whitehall Review

On July 31 (One Shilling), No. 368.
THE CORNELL MAGAZINE,

For AUGUST
With Illustrations by George De Munnich and W. Small.
Contents.

WASHINGTON SQUARE. By Henry James, jun. (With an Illustration.) Chaps 13-18.
WHY DID SHAKESPEARE WRITE TRAGEDIES?
ENGLISH SCULPTURE in 1500.
MINUTS.

The SWARTING RICKETTES. By Alex. Charles Howland.
FOREIGN TITLES.

FAUSTUS and HELENA. Notes on the Supernatural in Art. By Vernon Lee.
"The SHIP OF FOOLS."
The CARVER and the CALIPH. By Austin Dobson.
WHITE WINGS: a Yachting Romance (With an Illustration.) Chap. 41. Backward Thoughts. 42. A Trust. 43. Expectations.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co, 15, Waterloo-place.

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1880.

CONTENTS.

	Page
SIR F. GOLDSMID'S LIFE OF OUTRAM	103
JOEL ON THE DUTY OF A COMRADE	106
SIMPSON'S DOCUMENTS RELATING TO ST. PAUL'S CASTLE-DEAL	106
INGRAM'S LIFE OF FOX	107
FIVE MONTHS AT CAIRO	109
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	109
SELECTIONS FROM THE POETS	110
ORIENTAL LITERATURE	111
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	112-113
THE IMITATION OF CHRIST; MR. HERBY JAMES, SEN.; "THE MELLANCHOLY JAMIES", PROF. MEMMING'S LIBRARY	113-115
LITERARY Gossip	115
SCIENCE—BOTANICAL SCHOOL-BOOKS; NOTES ON ANTHROPOLOGY, NOTES FROM HAYLES, GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES, MR. W. A. LLOYD, SOCIETIES Gossip	117-118
FIVE ARTS—GORDON'S ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST; LIBRARY TABLE, TROUSDALE MUSEUM, GALL; Gossip	119-121
MUSIC—THE WEEK; Gossip	122
DRAMA—THE WEEK; A GREEK DRAMA IN ENGLISH DRAMA; Gossip	123-124

LITERATURE

James Outram: a Biography. By Major-General Sir F. J. Goldsmid, C.B. 2 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

OWING to his eminent public services and a private character of almost fabulous purity and chivalry, a peculiar interest will always attach to the name of Outram. His career was remarkable even in India, for he started with no adventitious advantages, and during the earlier part of his life he was almost continuously under the censure of some superior or another. His education, which he received first at private schools at and near Aberdeen and afterwards for a short time at Mariachal College in that city, was apparently not of a high order. Especially does he seem to have been destitute of any natural facility for using his pen. In physique, too, nature was niggardly to him, for at the age of sixteen he was only five feet one inch in height, and even when he had entered his twentieth year he is described by his brother Francis as "the smallest staff officer in the army." Subsequent growth to five feet eight inches he attributed to fever and sickness generally. Early bent on a military career, he at the age of sixteen, through the interest of one of his mother's friends, Capt. Gordon, member for Aberdeenshire, obtained a direct cadetship, and landing in Bombay in August, 1819, was gazetted to the 1st Bombay Grenadier N.I. Nevertheless he was first posted to the 1st battalion 4th N.I., with which he did duty for a few weeks. In December of the same year, however, he was appointed to the 1st battalion 12th N.I., and seven months later, when only seventeen years of age, became acting adjutant of that corps. In January, 1822, he was appointed permanently to the adjutancy, having apparently retained the acting adjutancy up to that time. Passing over his numerous attacks of illness, alternating with assiduous performance of regimental duty and countless hunting exploits, we come to his first experience of field service. At the close of 1824 it was found necessary to send a force into the Kittur country to put down some rather serious disturbances. James Outram, being on leave at Bombay, joined the expedition as a volunteer, and was attached to the 3rd N.I. as commander of the light company. In that capacity he volunteered to lead the storming party when it was resolved to carry the fort of Kittur by assault. The assault, however, did not take place, as the garrison surrendered at the last moment. In February, 1825, he rejoined his battalion, which had been lately converted into the 23rd Regiment. In April, disturbances having broken out in the western districts of Khandesh, and the rebels having established themselves in the hill fortress of Malair, Lieut. Outram on the 5th of April marched in command of 200 men of the 23rd and 24th N.I. to dislodge them. After a forced march, Outram received information which induced him to take on himself the responsibility of capturing the place by a coup de main before the strength of the insurgents had become consolidated. He sent 150 men to make at night a false attack in front, while with the remaining fifty, under his personal leadership, he fell by surprise on the rear. The enterprise was completely successful, the place was taken, the garrison driven out; and followed up closely by the sepoy and a few horsemen who had been collected by the civil officer, the insurgents fled to the hills, losing many men in their flight.

"As the infantry had now marched upwards of fifty miles in little more than thirty-six hours, Outram found it necessary to halt them soon after dawn. But the horsemen continued the pursuit so far as the nature of the ground permitted, scouts were despatched to ascertain the point of rendezvous selected by the scattered foe, and, at night, the chase was resumed. The insurgents were a second time surprised; many were slain, numbers were taken prisoners, and the rest, throwing down their arms, fled to their respective villages. A rebellion which had caused much anxiety to the authorities was thus crushed ere the troops intended for its suppression had been put in motion, and the plunder of Untapor was restored to its lawful owners."

This was his last exploit as a regimental officer, for he was at once placed at the disposal of the Political Officer in Khandesh for the purpose of raising and commanding a police battalion of Bhils. The Bhils, estimated at one-eighth of the population of the province, were divided into the comparatively civilized dwellers in the plains and the fierce, intractable robbers of the hills.

"One authority, admitting two sides to the picture, speaks of them in the following terms. 'Small in stature, lean and wiry, these Bhils are capable of great endurance, and from constant exercise their senses of sight and hearing are wonderfully acute. They seem, in their natural state, like the Bushmen of Africa, scarcely men, but rather a link between the human species and the wild creatures among whom they live. Robbers and marauders by natural descent, for long their hand was against every man and every man's hand against them. Hunting, varied by plundering and cattle-lifting, was their normal trade. There was something noble in them too; they were, in fact, the Rob Roys of India and, like our Rob Roy, they for a long time actually levied black mail from the inhabitants of the open country. Proscribed by Government and hunted down, they were killed by hundreds, but never subdued.' Of those who were essentially hill-men, it may be said that, prior to the formation of the British collectorate of Khandesh, no coercion or persuasion had, from time immemorial or according to any tradition extant, succeeded in drawing them from their mountain abodes and fastnesses."

The history of Outram's success in dealing with the Bhils is one of the most attractive chapters, not only in his own eventful life, but in the history of India. He began by first showing the Bhils the power of the British Government. He applied to the local authorities at Malegaon for troops, and failing, on his own responsibility led a detachment of thirty bayonets from an outlying quarter against a fastness where a large body of rebels had assembled. Surprising the enemy at daybreak, he so imposed upon them by his audacity and skilful dispositions that they fled in every direction. Following up the beaten foe promptly, he kept them on the move, and reinforcements having been obtained, the haunts of the Bhils were occupied and their strength for the time broken. Outram laid the foundation of the corps which he was ordered to raise through the medium of the prisoners taken in the skirmish above mentioned.

"I thus effected an intercourse with some of the leading Naicks, went alone with them into their jungles, gained their hearts by copious libations of brandy, and their confidence by living unguarded among them, until at last I persuaded five of the most adventurous to risk their fortunes with me, which small beginning I considered ensured ultimate success."

This was in May, 1825, and on July 1st, 1826, his battalion consisted of 306 men. In April, 1827, he had an opportunity of testing their value. A gang of marauding Bhils were doing much mischief, and endeavouring to draw together the disaffected. Without waiting for orders, Outram marched with twenty-seven of his men against the marauders, and, with the assistance of some friendly villagers, defeated and routed the enemy.

His sporting exploits whilst in the Bhil country explain to a great extent the wonderful ascendancy which he obtained over the wild people under his rule.

"In 1833, in the month of April, when encamped at Sirpur, the villagers gave Outram information of a tiger that had been marked down in the thorny jungle to the north of the village. The part of the country was plain, and there was no hill or ravine near. Outram started on foot, spear in hand, a follower carrying a rifle, and some six others bows and arrows. The tiger broke ground on their approach, Outram followed him up on foot for three miles, and eventually appeared him to death. This act, it is affirmed, has never been equalled, before or since, in Khandesh."

On another occasion a tiger having taken refuge in some bushes, Outram prepared to receive the beast's onset in the manner thus described by one of the party:—

"There he stood, spear in hand, like a gladiator in the arena of a Roman amphitheatre, ready for the throwing open of the wild beast's cage. The bushes were set fire to, and the tiger, by no means relishing the smoke, came puffing and blowing like a porpoise, every five or six seconds, to get a little fresh air; but scenting the elephant, he was always fain to retreat again. This sort of work went on for some time, and bush after bush blazed away without producing the desired effect. I could not have stood the suspense when life was at stake. At last there was a low angry growl, and a scuffling rustle in the passage. The tiger sprang out, and down descended the long lance into his neck, just behind the dexter ear. With one stroke of his powerful paw he smashed the spear close to the head. There was a pretty business. Mr. Tiger one step below, with the steel sticking in his neck, which by no means improved his temper, had gathered his huge hind quarters below him for a desperate spring and my friend, armed after the fashion of the South Sea Islanders, standing on a little mound, breathing defiance and brandishing his bamboo on high."

Eventually the tiger was shot by some of the party. Outram had some narrow escapes. Once, while pursuing a tiger on foot, his companion being on horseback, the animal charged, seized Outram, and rolled down the hill with him.

"Being released from the claws of the ferocious beast for a moment, Outram with great presence of mind drew a pistol he had with him, and shot the tiger dead. The Bhils, on seeing that he had been injured, were one and all loud in their grief and expressions of regret; but Outram quieted them with the remark, 'What do I care for the clawing of a cat!' This speech was rife among the Bhils for many years afterwards, and may be so until this day."

In 1835 Capt. Outram was transferred as Political Officer to the Mahi Kanta, a district of Gujrat, where he remained two and three-quarter years.

On the whole he secured the approbation of Government, though he was occasionally snubbed for being too energetic, warlike, and plain-spoken. His next field of action was Scinde and Afghanistan, whither he proceeded at the commencement of the first Afghan war as extra side-de-camp to Sir John Keane. Though ostensibly only on the personal staff of that general, he in reality acted as a political officer from the first, and rendered valuable service in the collection of transport and supplies. He was nevertheless, as was his custom, always to the front when any fighting was going on. His romantic and energetic chase of Dost Mahomed was unsuccessful, but only owing to the treachery of the Afghan chief accompanying him. When on the eve of entering Bamian, where Dost Mahomed was supposed to be with two hundred staunch adherents, a sort of informal council of war was held, and the following extract from his journal shows what was decided on:—

"It was resolved that on the Ameer turning to oppose us, of which, on our overtaking him to-morrow, as we expect to do, there can be no doubt, the thirteen British officers who are present with this force, shall charge in the centre of the little band, every one directing his individual efforts against the person of Dost Muhammad Khan, whose fall must thus be rendered next to certain. It being evident that all the Afghans on both sides will turn against us, unless we are immediately successful, this plan of attack appears to afford the only chance of escape to those who may survive; and it is an object of paramount importance to effect the destruction of the Ameer, rather than to permit his escape."

Placed temporarily at the disposal of the envoy, he made a successful expedition into the Ghilzai country at the head of a mixed column of the Shah's troops. As a volunteer on the personal staff of General Willshire he distinguished himself at the capture of Kelat. After its fall he carried, by the direct road through the Kelat country to Sonmiani on the Arabian Sea, duplicate despatches. This idea was suggested by himself. Disguised as an Afghan, and with only five native attendants, he accomplished the distance of 355 miles in eight days, escaping many perils, and only saving his life by the rapidity with which he travelled. He got nothing for Ghuzni, but obtained a brevet majority for Kelat. Appointed Political Agent in Lower Scinde, at the beginning of 1840 he arrived in Scinde to take up his appointment, and during the three following years he was engaged in the most arduous and responsible work, part of it performed in Southern Afghanistan. General Nott, who was on the outbreak at Cabul entrusted with supreme political power, treated him with dry discourtesy, and Lord Ellenborough hated soldier politicians. His only reward therefore for his untiring activity and undeniably great services was a cold, formal letter of thanks and remand to regimental duty. For some years after he was more or less under a cloud as regarded the Supreme Government. Sir Charles Napier, however, thought and reported highly of him, and at Sir Charles's request he was promptly sent back to Scinde as commissioner for the arrangement of a treaty with the Ameers. He was on the point of starting for England, but, ever ready to sacrifice private considerations and wounded pride to duty, he at once rejoined Sir Charles Napier. The most memorable incident in this part of Outram's career was the defence of the Hyderabad Residency. Major Outram was senior officer present, and to him the credit of the defence was assuredly due. With, however, his usual generosity, he desired Capt. Conway, the officer in command of the escort, to write the despatch. Sir Charles Napier returned it, and ordered Outram to write one, on the ground that as his "diplomatic functions had ceased with the first shot fired, it was his duty to report as senior officer present." Outram, while loyally carrying out Sir Charles Napier's instructions, did not conceal from the latter his conviction that the treatment of the Ameer was harsh, unjust, and impolitic. Sir Charles at the time respected Outram's scruples, and was on the most cordial terms with him. A paper war, however, afterwards arose, in which Sir Charles displayed the utmost bitterness. How sincere Outram was is proved by the fact that he distributed the whole of his large share of the Scinde prize money, nearly 3,000*l.*, among various charitable institutions. In the spring of 1843, after an ovation at Bombay, he went to England on leave; but the autumn of 1845 found him in Lord Ellenborough's camp in the North-West. Lord Ellenborough refused to grant him an interview unless he specified its object, but soon after offered him the political and revenue charge of Nimar, an appendage to Indore. This appointment, though vastly inferior to the offices he had lately held, he had the good sense to accept. Six months later he resigned his appointment, and was at Bombay on his way home when disturbances broke out in the Southern Mahratta country. Outram volunteered his services, and he was ordered to join the force sent to put down the revolt. After spending a fortnight in camp, he was appointed Political Agent in the Southern Mahratta country. He declined, pleading the treatment he had received, and expressing his intention to resume the career of a regimental officer. On this Col. Ovens was appointed in his stead. That officer was, however, captured by the rebels, and Outram was, therefore, obliged to continue his functions of special political officer.

It is of a part with his whole life that he urged Col. Ovens to propose that he should be released and Outram take his place. Col. Ovens, with equal nobility of character, declined to entertain the idea for a moment. For his political and military services during the campaign he was appointed Resident at Sattara. From 1845 till 1847 he remained at Sattara. The next three and a half years were spent as Resident at Baroda, with the exception of a few months' sick leave to Egypt. He was, unfortunately for himself, too honest and energetic to please the authorities, and eventually was ordered to resign. On this he took furlough to England. Succeeding to a great extent in vindicating himself before the Court of Directors, he returned to India, and, visiting Calcutta, was appointed by Lord Dalhousie Honorary A.D.C. to the Governor-General and re-appointed to the Residency at Baroda. This was a great triumph, and the more so as Lord Dalhousie intended him for Aden, and only sent him to formally assume office at Baroda in order to emphasize the opinion he entertained of Outram's conduct and services. After less than a year at Aden Outram was selected by Lord Dalhousie for the highest political office in India, viz., the Residency of Lucknow. In the letter in which he announced this intelligence to his mother, he renewed his entreaties—entreaties commenced many years before—that she would allow him to make her comfortable:—"I hope this will find you comfortably settled for the winter,but with a carriage and maid; this I must now assume the privilege of insisting on." Col. Outram arrived at Lucknow at a critical time, namely, on the eve of the annexation of Oude. In the instructions which accompanied his appointment he was ordered to inquire into the state of the country, in order that the Governor-General might decide whether repeated warnings had produced any effect, and whether annexation could, with justice to the inhabitants and due regard to our responsibilities, be any longer deferred. Col. Outram had only arrived at Lucknow on December 5th, 1854; in March, 1855, he submitted an exhaustive report. He wound it up by stating it to be his opinion that it was the duty of the Government to annex Oude. In the following February he was required to carry his recommendation into effect, and very tenderly, though firmly, did he perform the ungrateful task. In May, 1856, he proceeded to England in a very bad state of health; a little rest in England and the stimulus of the appointment to command the Persian expedition sufficiently revived him to render him capable of returning to Bombay before the close of the year. We shall not inflict on our readers any remarks concerning the somewhat uninteresting campaign which followed. We shall, therefore, confine ourselves to saying that by his conduct of it Sir James Outram—as he had now become—proved that he was as able a commander as he was a gallant soldier and efficient political officer. He thoroughly secured the devotion of all ranks, and he well merited their affection, for he was ever occupied with their comfort and welfare. Col. Haldane, late 64th Regiment, relates:—

"Soon after it fell dark, I was walking at the side of my regiment when a horseman rode up to me and inquired why I was not riding. I told him that my pony was carrying the blankets &c. of myself and a brother officer, and that I had no second horse. He then began questioning me as to how the men liked marching by night instead of by day, and on similar matters. When leaving me, he turned and said, "There is a spare horse of mine behind: if you like to ride it, you are very welcome." He then rode off. Seeing he was followed by a number of officers, I began to suspect that it was either the General (whom I had not seen before) or one of the Head Quarter Staff. The next instant Hudson our adjutant came up and asked me if I knew who had been talking to me, and told me then that it really was Outram himself. A few hours later we were attacked by the enemy. The General had a fall from his horse and was stunned; the battle of Khush-Ab took place, and it might well have been supposed that Sir James would scarcely remember his good-natured offer to one of the subalterns of his army. Yet one afternoon, about three weeks afterwards, I was walking with Capt. Morphy through the camp at Bushire, when we met the General, who stopped to speak to my companion, and presently turned to me, and said—"You never got that horse after all!" This proved that not only did he remember the offer made, but that he had actually taken the pains to find out if I had been able to avail myself of his kindness. It was such traits in his character that endeared him to all who had the honour and pleasure of serving under him."

Of his share in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny it is unnecessary to write, for the particulars are familiar to the public. In April, 1858, Sir James Outram left Lucknow for Calcutta, to take his seat as a member of the Governor-General's Council, where he remained till the end of July, 1860, when he quitted India for ever. The chapter which deals with his tenure of office as member of Council is particularly interesting, but we can do no more than mention some of the views which he advocated. He was opposed to a staff corps and in favour of a local European force. He urged the advisability of retaining Addiscombe on an enlarged scale as the Military College for India. He was opposed to the system of attaching young officers for the first six months to European corps. He pointed out the unadvisability of excluding from the amnesty any rebels except those who had murdered Europeans.

"He not only wished for the elevation to the Peerage, Knightage, and Baronetage of many native gentlemen, but he would like to see established by her Majesty a new 'Order of Victoria,' for which natives and Europeans, whether in her Majesty's service or not, should be eligible."

He was strongly opposed to the amalgamation of the Royal and Company's armies. He recommended that in competitions for commissions "proficiency in swimming, riding, fencing, and field-sketching should be a sine quid non." Returning to England after forty-two years' service with broken health, he died at Paris in 1863, and a public funeral in Westminster Abbey worthily closed his long and honourable career.

A Consul's Manual and Shipowner's and Shipmaster's Practical Guide in their Transactions Abroad. Compiled by L. Joel, of H.M.'s Consular Service. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE office of consul as existing at the present day, if we may rely on the accuracy of Mr. Joel's "introductory remarks," is essentially the offspring of modern commerce and modern requirements. It is true that there were in the Republic of Pisa, as early as the tenth century, magistrates called "consuls of navigation," whose duty it was to decide commercial questions; but there is no suggestion that these officers were entrusted with the performance of any duties beyond the limits of their own little community. Guy de Lusignan, however, is said to have allowed the Marseillais to have consuls in his possessions in Palestine, and about the same time Modena and Lucca had reciprocal consular establishments. There must have been some approach to the modern system on the shores of the Mediterranean in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, for we read that during that period, or part of it, the Lombards, Venetians, and Catalans had consuls in various places, whose general functions were to decide commercial questions, to look to the due observance of treaties and conventions, and to maintain the rights and privileges granted by the rulers of the states to which they were accredited to the merchants and other subjects of the states which sent them out. Mr. Joel's earliest mention of English consuls relates to the seventeenth century, when an author well informed on commercial matters wrote thus:—"The Pope doth, for trade sake, allow a gentleman at Civita Vecchia the title of consul for the English nation, to see that mariners, who are apt enough to give offence, be not wronged or abused." This statement is taken from 'The Merchant's Map of Commerce,' by Lewis Roberts, published in 1638; and we learn from the same source that the Levant Company maintained, and paid salary to, six consuls at six several places, and, "to wait upon these and their factors," the company "gave pay to forty janisaries and twenty druggermen or interpreters." These six officers, who were scarcely consuls in the present sense of the word, since they represented a company and not a sovereign state, resided respectively at Aleppo, Tripoli, Chios, Algiers, Tunis, and "Petrus in Morea," and were "strengthened with command from the fort and durano of the Grand Seigneur, not only for their peaceable living, but also for the quiet enjoying of their privileges granted unto them as afore said." At the same time the English, French, and Venetians had vice-consuls "at Cilicia, or Scanderoon." As an indication of the circumstances that were held to call for the presence of consular officers in Mohammedan countries, it may be mentioned that, by the terms of a treaty made between Great Britain and Tripoli in 1676, no subject of the King of Great Britain was permitted to "turn Turk or Moor (being induced thereto by any surpriſal whatsoever)," unless he voluntarily appeared before the dey or governor with the English consul's "druggerman" three times in twenty-four hours' space, and every time declared his resolution to "turn Turk or Moor."

The general custom among the maritime powers of Europe of appointing consuls inter se appears to date only from the eighteenth century, when the importance of such officers for the promotion of trade and the more effectual protection of persons and property seems first to have met with the common recognition of civilized nations. At the present day, in Turkey, Egypt, China, and Japan, the principal British consuls have judicial authority, and their functions and powers are defined by treaty; but in other countries this is not the case, and a consul's action is dependent, to a great extent, on his own judgment, while his ability to decide legal disputes and to aid his countrymen in various ways is only co-extensive with his powers of persuasion. We agree with Mr. Joel in thinking that the example of some other nations might be followed with advantage in respect of defining the international rights and functions of consuls by treaty. Many of their duties, however, require no international compact, having relation exclusively to British subjects and to official departments at home. Thus, a consul may give advice and assistance to his countrymen abroad, may marry them, register and report their births, marriages, and deaths, and represent their grievances to the British minister at the foreign capital, without requiring any special permission from a foreign court or legislature. To define these and other duties relating to British subjects and British property is the general scheme of Mr. Joel's work, and in some respects he has succeeded fairly enough. He has collected a good deal of scattered information relating to the various branches of his subject, and if there is not much that is original in his book, there is at least a convenient arrangement of existing materials. It may be added that the latter half is of much practical value, containing as it does a glossary of mercantile terms in five languages, a collection of merchant shipping and other forms, comparative tables of money, weights, and measures, and definitions of the most important legal terms relating, directly or indirectly, to the carrying on of trade by sea.

Having said thus much by way of praise, we regret that we are not able to speak of Mr. Joel's book in terms of unalloyed commendation. A compilation, to be really a creditable performance, should show clearly at every point the sources from which its various facts are gathered, but this is by no means the case with the book before us. This circumstance is the more remarkable that Mr. Joel, by his occasional allusions to Acts of Parliament and the like, shows that he is not unaware of the importance of reference to authority. Yet the reader may turn over his pages by the score without meeting with any such reference, and must, as a general rule, but for some antecedent knowledge of the subject, remain entirely ignorant as to the amount of weight that should be attached to the precepts laid down. Thus, at p. 35 it is stated that the consul is to transmit annually to the Secretary of State a true copy of all entries of marriages made during the preceding year, but there is nothing to show that this is, in fact, a provision of the Act 12 & 13 Vict. c. 68, though that Act is alluded to in the previous page. At p. 40 we find "Duties connected with the Royal Navy," accurately set forth very possibly, but without an attempt at a reference, and therefore without any means of verification. The same may be said of "Public and Private Correspondence," "Consular Officers to execute Instructions from Diplomatic Officers," and other titles too numerous to mention. In parts ii., iii., iv., v., forming nearly half the book, the reader will recognize, somewhat dwarfed and disguised, it is true, a very old acquaintance—the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, with its long train of amending Acts down to the present day; but it is only once in fifty pages or thereabouts that any Act is referred to, and then, as a rule, it is only mentioned as bearing on some special point. The greater part of this portion of the book is printed with inverted commas, as if quoted from some authoritative source, and it may be conjectured that it is merely a reprint of the "Instructions to Consuls" issued by the Board of Trade under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1855, s. 16, &c., but we have not succeeded in finding any statement to that effect. The particular subdivision of this part of the book which relates to naval courts is headed "General Instructions," but the reader is left to guess for himself who the instructor is. At p. 76 and p. 82 a certain "schedule to the Act" is mentioned, but we must pursue our researches elsewhere if we would know what Act is meant. There is, again, too much appearance of the materials having been gathered together in a heap and sent off to the press without very careful examination on the part of the author. If the reader should turn to "section 4, paragraph 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876," mentioned at p. 86 as providing that the Board of Trade shall prepare a book or books containing instructions for dispensing the medicines and medical stores on board ships, he will be rather surprised to find that there is nothing about medicines or medical stores in the Act referred to, which is the indirect outcome of Mr. Plimsoll's memorable efforts for the protection of British seamen, and relates almost entirely to the powers and duties of the Board of Trade in respect of unseaworthy vessels. At p. 214 occurs the title "Salvage by Her Majesty's Ships," but it is clear that the second and third paragraphs under that heading relate to other salvage also; and Mr. Joel might easily have ascertained that the last-mentioned paragraph is founded on section 497 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, which section in the Act itself comes under the title "Salvage (General)." At p. 29 it is stated that "the 20th section of the Consular Act, 1825," empowers consuls to perform notarial acts and to administer oaths and affirmations; but Mr. Joel would have done well to add that these powers are extended by 18 & 19 Vict., c. 42, to vice-consuls, acting consuls, pro-consuls, and consular agents, and that certain special provisions on the subject of oaths before consuls and vice-consuls are contained in the Crown Suits, &c., Act, 1865. Mr. Joel is a consul himself, and writes professedly for consuls, but it is difficult to suppose that he wishes to leave the junior members of the service in the dark! A little more attention to details, and a resolution to collect all the information that can be got at by research, and not merely to reissue that which comes ready to hand, would make Mr. Joel's handsome-looking volume a more practical and in every way a more satisfactory book.

Documents illustrating the History of St. Paul's Cathedral. Edited, for the most part from Original Sources, by W. Sparrow Simpson, D.D., F.S.A. (Camden Society.)

THE Council of the Camden Society have laid the student of English history under another debt by the publication of this carefully edited volume. The unique position which St. Paul's has always occupied among our institutions must needs give to its history an importance and significance which that of no other English cathedral can claim. Every other ecclesiastical edifice in England, not excepting Canterbury, has had a life apart, so to speak, from the life of the nation. We can conceive the great march of social, intellectual, or religious progress going on and leaving the fabric of Canterbury or York, or Lincoln or Norwich, scarcely at all affected by the struggles and storms and revolutions of the body politic. In point of fact all other English cathedrals are monuments of the existence of that imperium in imperio which was a standing menace to the nation's rulers, and whose glory and whose shame it was that it offered a perpetual inducement to the timid, the indolent, and the half-hearted to stand aloof from the great struggles for liberty which patriots dare not leave. But the very stones of St. Paul's are eloquent, the nation's history is stamped upon them. As the old order changes, so do the very form and fashion of St. Paul's change with it. With the fall of the monarchy the old cathedral crumbles to ruins; with the fall of episcopacy the bishop's palace disappears; with the Restoration and the beginning of a new era a new St. Paul's rises, the enormous débris of the structure that had passed away being incorporated, however, with the stupendous pile that another age was to look upon with fresh hope and pride. Thus for Englishmen every new discovery or any new fact that serves to make the history of St. Paul's more familiar to us, and helps us to connect the present more closely with the past, must always possess a peculiar interest. Dr. Sparrow Simpson's name is so well known, his opportunities for antiquarian research so favourable, and his industry so great that his readers might feel sure a labour of love like this would be executed in a scholarly way, and that his sagacity would unearth many things which even the scrutiny of practised students had hitherto overlooked. No one will be disappointed in the results arrived at. If Dr. Simpson has not succeeded in adding many new facts to our previous knowledge, he has, at any rate, furnished novel and valuable illustrations of much that still remains but imperfectly known, and he has rescued for the hearing ear and the seeing eye some of those hints and whispers, those light murmurs from the voices of the past, which often tell more than the louder and the bolder tongues that merely repeat the common tale which "everybody knows."

The documents in this volume consist of thirty-six articles of a very miscellaneous character, they extend over a period of five centuries, and they deal with matters as sublime as the life of a canonized saint and as lively as the tune of a street ballad. Dr. Simpson has thrown them together with little regard to method, but they fall roughly into three groups: 1. Those which are concerned with matters purely ecclesiastical or religious; 2. Those which serve to illustrate the political and constitutional history of England; 3. Those which have to do with the structural and architectural history of the fabric.

In the first group the reader is presented with a series of indulgences granted by various bishops and popes in favour of such as shall assist in the reparation or adornment of St. Paul's by their gifts or legacies. Dr. Simpson prints eight of these as specimens from a collection numbering no less than seventy-six, which are still preserved in the Muniment Room, and which were issued between the years 1201 and 1387. We could have wished that a brief abstract of all these indulgences had been given, for though there is no doubt that the learned editor has exercised a wise discretion in the choice of his materials, yet it is difficult to believe that there was not some peculiar circumstance or occasion which in most cases suggested the granting of these indulgences just at the time they were severally published. The document which Dr. Simpson prints as a Bull of Urban IV. is of no great interest. But is it a Bull, and not rather a Breve? In the latter case it is easy to see why it should not be found in the Bullarium Romanum.

In this first group of articles, too, the reader comes upon what Dr. Simpson himself would probably consider as his "great find." Students of early English liturgies know too well that few mysterious disappearances have been more complete than that of our old diocesan "Uses" or service books. There is good reason for believing that in minor points of ritual, and in such matters as special services, commemorations, collects, and litanies, there was far greater diversity and far more freedom in the several dioceses than is generally supposed, and that the same kind of liberty was allowed as exists among ourselves in the selection and use of the hymns and anthems we sing in our churches. The evil genius of ecclesiasticism, which is for ever encroaching in the direction of a hard and narrow uniformity, gradually but sternly repressed every tendency towards freedom of worship, and all that was peculiar in the diocesan service books was eliminated. Hence few things are rarer than such fragments of the older Uses as exhibit any distinctive features, and liturgiologists will therefore hail with exceeding joy the discovery of two offices, "the only known relics of the Ancient Use of St. Paul's Cathedral." They are but slight fragments, after all; but there are occasions when we must be thankful for small mercies, and the Office for the Commemoration of SS. Peter and Paul, together with the Office of St. Erkenwald, has certainly an interest and value of its own. The collection of collects, too, which Dr. Simpson gives, was well worth printing. It appears to have been transcribed by a certain Thomas Batmanson, a protégé of Bishop Bonner's, who was Vicar of Kensington in Queen Mary's time. The Office of Thomas of Lancaster is less noteworthy as a specimen of fourteenth century devotion than as affording us a remarkable instance of the way in which the clergy, in a time of profound irritation and discontent, lent themselves to the popular side, and threw their influence into the scale against the Crown. It is a suggestive document and deserved to be reprinted. Clearly clerical politicians were not to be trusted with the liberty of drawing up special services, when political capital might be made out of the "martyrdom" of some demagogue or charlatan whom the ecclesiastical party of the hour thought fit to support. As for Thomas of Lancaster, he was a sullen traitor, without patriotism or a policy or even ambition, and, as Prof. Stubbs puts it, "by every recorded act of his life he is shown to be cruel, unscrupulous, treacherous, and selfish." Yet when he got his deserts the clergy were not ashamed to give it forth that miracles were being wrought at St. Paul's in his honour, just as the very next year miracles were said to be wrought at Bristol in honour of Henry de Montfort and Henry Wylington, after they, too, had been hanged. Possibly a commemoration of these worthies may be found in the archives of a western diocese one of these days.

Under the second group of articles may be classed such matters as the Chronicle of St. Paul's, the Kalendar and List of Obits, and the curious "Ordinance for the Election of a new Priorress at St. Helen's, Bishopsgate," which dates at the beginning of the thirteenth century. With regard to the Chronicle, Dr. Simpson makes no mention of another Chronicle of St. Paul's, now in the possession of the Corporation of Ayrbridge. It would be well to know if any comparison of the two has been made, and wherein, if at all, they differ. Dr. Simpson's Chronicle illustrates very remarkably the audacious attitude of the Papacy towards the Crown of England during the shameful reign of Edward II., and the way in which the whole ecclesiastical patronage of the country was virtually taken out of the king's hands.

To the general public, however, as distinct from that inner circle of students who presumably form the majority of the subscribers to the Camden Society, by far the most attractive portion of Dr. Simpson's volume will be the latter half, in which the reader gains some insight into the vicissitudes in the history of the fabric of St. Paul's. Of the early conflagrations in the building there are only brief notices, and though the earthquake of 1382 evidently wrought very serious mischief, yet of that, too, there is no detailed account, and only brief and incidental allusions to it occur, as, e.g., in the indulgence issued by Archbishop Courtney in 1387. But Dr. Simpson has printed for the first time from Bishop Grindal's Register the official report upon the fire of 1561, and has, moreover, reprinted a most graphic account of that disastrous event, which was translated into French and Latin, and was widely circulated on the Continent; for the destruction of the old spire of St. Paul's was the destruction of one of the wonders of the world to the men of the sixteenth century, and as such was an event big with serious omen. Old St. Paul's never recovered the great fire of 1561, and Dr. Simpson's remaining articles enable us to trace the melancholy progress of decay. It is a deplorable story, and, though we read it here in a very fragmentary form, there is a pathos about these original documents and a reality which gives them an eloquence that the mere storyteller never seems to rise to. We want no padding to set off the picture of greed and rapacity which meets us in the discovery that, as early as 1577, the vaults under the choir were let by lease to one Justinian Kydde, and that "the sheds lately called Jesus Crowdes and other premises" had long before been "in the occupation of John Cawoods, stationer, deceased." Half a century goes by and things do not mend; on the contrary, a vault under the Chapter House had by this time been let by the Dean and Chapter to one Mr. Sands, "Keeper of the Green Dragon Tavern on the other side of the way"; while the minor canons, anxious to make the most of their rights, "had also let a vault belonging to them; a baker had constructed an oven in one of the buttresses. Houses had been built close under the church, imperilling its very walls"; and even the funds that were collected for the "restoration" of the venerable pile disappeared no one knew where. Clearly the Dean and Chapter had a great deal to answer for; the disgraceful profanation which had set in long before the Commonwealth times must have been the result of continued neglect and selfish apathy on the part of the authorities. Such a condition of affairs as that which the following extract reveals to us does not grow up in a day:—

"Upon Sundays and all festival dayes the boys and maids and children of the two neighbouring parishes presently after dinner come into the church; then they play in such manner as children use to do till dark night, and hence cometh principally that inordinate noise which many times suffereth not the preacher to be heard in the chour."

This was in 1631. Is it to be wondered at if ten years afterwards the order went forth that "the Bishop of London's house near St. Paul's" be used as a prison, or that the Deanery should be handed over to the notorious Dr. Burgess as a residence, or that—oh, the grim satisfaction!—Dr. Burgess himself should have found that even in his new abode things were not all that could be wished, inasmuch as Mr. William Parsons, a trunk-maker, had thought fit to erect two tenements upon the Deanery premises, and—malignant that he was—refused to pay rent for the same to Burgess or any one else?

A few months after this old St. Paul's was turned into a monstrous cavalry stable, and so continued to be used as late as 1651, when a proclamation printed by Dr. Simpson orders the soldiers "to forbear playing at nine pinnis and other sports, from the hour of nine of the clocke in the evening till six in the morning, that so persons that are weake and indisposed to rest may not be disturbed."

A hundred years after the conflagration of 1561 St. Paul's must have exhibited an enormous mass of ruins, though the huge excavations was almost as closely packed with habitations and as densely populated as the Roman amphitheatre of Nîmes was within the memory of men still living.

"Restoration" happily was out of the question, and when Charles II. laid the foundation stone of the present cathedral in 1675, with the self-same mallet as was used by the Prince of Wales so recently at Truro, a new St. Paul's began to rise like a phoenix from the ashes of that which had passed away.

Edgar Allan Poe: his Life, Letters, and Opinions. By John H. Ingram. 2 vols. (Hogg.)

A TASK which has been to Mr. Ingram something more than a duty or a labour of love, which has, indeed, had the solemnity of a mission, is now successfully accomplished. Six years ago an arduous portion was finished when an edition practically complete of the works of Edgar Allan Poe was given to the world. Far from answering the purpose of vindicating the fame of Poe was, however, the prefatory memoir Mr. Ingram was able to affix to that edition. Six further years have been necessary to investigate, co-ordinate, and arrange the information concerning the life of Poe, which has been drawn from all available sources, and those portions of his correspondence which survive and are accessible. Practically, then, the life of Poe now given to the world may be regarded as final and definitive. Little temptation is, indeed, offered to travel again over ground which Mr. Ingram has explored with conscientious fidelity and untiring perseverance, and has mapped out with accuracy so patient that, as Lamb says of Drayton's 'Polyolbion,' he "has not left a rivulet so narrow it may be stepped over without honourable mention." If one or two tracts remain concerning which nothing is known, these may be dismissed as inaccessible.

It is pleasant to congratulate Mr. Ingram upon the close of his labours. Seldom has a duty so arduous and so necessary been discharged with equal loyalty and zeal. If Griswold's poison is not now neutralized, an antidote is provided to which all may have recourse; the malignancy which prompted the most Judas-like of modern treacheries is exposed, and the full baseness of what Graham, the proprietor of Graham's Magazine, of which Poe was editor, calls "an immortal infamy" stands revealed.

Profoundly interesting from commencement to close is the biography now given to the world. It is marred by inelegancies of style and by oversights which will have to be corrected in a future edition. These are, however, wholly forgotten by the sympathetic reader, over whom the record of Poe's life exercises a measure of the strange fascination which belongs to his writings.

That Mr. Ingram should be free from that besetting weakness which no biographer probably, except Griswold, wholly escaped was not to be expected. It is in the very nature of things that Mr. Ingram's work should be a vindication as much as a memoir. When noticing the publication of the collected works, we gave some particulars of the misrepresentations to which Poe was subject. So short are, however, human memories, so quickly does a new generation spring up, and so unsafe is it to assume in the majority of readers the possession of special information, that it may be pardonable to give in the fewest possible words the particulars of the offence with which Griswold is charged. On the death of Poe on the 7th of October, 1849, his mother-in-law, his most devoted friend, placed in the hands of Rufus W. Griswold the whole of his papers. From these Griswold, animated by a malignancy which nothing could satisfy, extracted a life of Poe, which was published in 1850 with the third volume of Poe's works. This memoir, false and scurrilous in all respects, was circulated wherever a knowledge of the poet extended. Its statements were accepted as authoritative, and the memory of the poet was blackened throughout two continents. How powerless to uproot an opinion once formed were the protests of N. P. Willis and other friends of Poe may be supposed by those who know how swiftly a lie circulates and how slowly behind it travels the contradiction. An Englishman, Mr. Moy Thomas, appears to have been among the first to point out the necessity of a serious and enduring vindication of the memory of Poe from the slanders of Griswold; a second Englishman, Mr. Ingram, has now completed the task.

Under these circumstances it is perhaps pardonable that the biography of Poe now published should present a picture of its subject so highly coloured that the darker traits in his character have all but disappeared. It is none the less to be regretted that the memoir is less a rehabilitation than an apotheosis. The gloom and sorrow which overshadow at times the life of Poe, where they are not direct visitations of fate, seem a portion of the poet's inheritance.

We poets in our youth begin in gladness,
But thereof come in the end despondency and madness.

That any form of misconduct on the part of Poe conduced to this state of affairs is barely conceded. A more robust treatment of the subject would, on the whole, have been better. Such, while it left Poe's character free from the degrading and dishonouring accusations that have been brought against it, would have earned to the minds of not a few in whom doubt is begotten of revolt the conviction that in most respects of morality Poe stood above rather than below the level of civilized and cultivated humanity. This is all that is required. At what period Poe took to excess in drink, in opium, or in both is comparatively unimportant. That excess there was his warmest friends and admirers concede. His own plea is not more valuable or satisfactory than that ordinarily supplied in cases of similar misconduct. In a letter to Mrs. S. H. Whitman he states:—"I have absolutely no pleasure in the stimulants in which I sometimes so madly indulge. It has not been in the pursuit of pleasure that I have perilled life and reputation and reason. It has been in the desperate attempt to escape from torturing memories." If the desire to escape from torturing memories were a justification of excess, life, when a certain age was passed, would be one mad carnival. In a letter assumably subsequent he says: "I am constitutionally sensitive—nervous in a very unusual degree. I became insane, with long intervals of horrible sanity. During these fits of absolute unconsciousness I drank—God only knows how often or how much. As a matter of course, my enemies referred the insanity to the drink rather than the drink to the insanity." An unhelped-for cure, temporary of course, came, as he said, with the death of his wife, to a state of affairs for which the vicissitudes of her fatal illness were principally responsible.

In no Philistine spirit and with no want of consideration for Poe, but rather in the conviction that his character is strong enough to stand upright beneath the burdens it has to bear, we assert that the statement that he drank in "fits of absolute unconsciousness" can have no possible weight. A man in such a state knows nothing. The amount that he drinks he must subsequently learn from others, and it is not easy to believe that those near him, whether he were at home or abroad, would continue to supply him with stimulants. Few words ever spoken bear signs more obvious of the kind of casuistry men employ in defending before others their own actions. Sooner than admit a plea like this we would accept the characteristically subtle and whimsical defence of Baudelaire, that the best work of Poe required for its perfect development a renewal of the drunkenness in which it was begotten. So curious and ingenious, if preposterous, is this theory, we may be pardoned for transcribing from the prefatory memoir by Baudelaire to his translations from Poe the sentences in which it is enunciated:—

"Or il est incontestable que—semblable à ces impressions fugitives et frappantes, d'autant plus frappantes dans leurs retours qu'elles sont plus fugitives, qui suivent quelquefois un symptôme extérieur, une espèce d'avertissement comme un son de cloche, une note musicale ou un parfum oublié, et qui sont elles-mêmes suivies d'un événement semblable à un événement déjà connu et qui occupait la même place dans une chaîne antérieurement révélée,—semblables à ces singuliers rêves périodiques qui fréquentent nos sommeils,—il existe dans l'ivresse non-seulement des enchaînements de rêves, mais des séries de raisonnements, qui ont besoin, pour se reproduire, du milieu qui leur a donné naissance. Si le lecteur m'a suivi sans répugnance, il a déjà deviné ma conclusion: je crois que, dans beaucoup de cas, non pas certainement dans tous, l'ivrognerie de Poe était un moyen mnémotique, une méthode de travail, méthode énergique et mortelle, mais appropriée à sa nature passionnée. Le poète avait appris à boire, comme un littérateur soigneux s'exerce à faire des cahiers de notes. Il ne pouvait résister au désir de retrouver les visions merveilleuses ou effrayantes, les conceptions subtiles qu'il avait rencontrées dans une tempête précédente; c'étaient de vieilles connaissances qui l'attiraient impérieusement, et pour renouer avec elles, il prenait le chemin le plus dangereux, mais le plus direct. Une partie de ce qui fait aujourd'hui notre jouissance est ce qui l'a tué."—Œuvres Complètes de Baudelaire, tom. v. pp. 27-28.

If it were worth while, instead of regarding Poe as a man of whom, in spite of extravagances and weaknesses, we have cause to be proud rather than ashamed, an excuse could be suggested far better than any that has yet, so far as we are aware, been advanced. At a comparatively early age Poe commenced to take opium. The extent to which he indulged in this dangerous and seductive poison can only be surmised. In the early draft of Berenice a passage subsequently suppressed alludes to its hero's "immoderate use of opium." Subsequently Poe declared, à propos of De Quincey's Confessions of an English Opium-Eater, "There is yet room for a book on opium-eating which shall be the most profoundly interesting volume ever penned."

That De Quincey's work is incorrect and misleading, leaving out of sight what is most striking in the effects of opium, and substituting for it much that is purely imaginary, is not generally known. Its publication and the reputation of its author had the effect of discouraging inquiry, and the subject, from the physiological and psychological standpoint, has yet to be treated. There are few of the aberrations of Poe's later life that might not be explained by his use of opium. Especially characteristic of its influence is the kind of gloom of which he constantly complains.

The present is not the time in which to associate the irregularities of Poe's life with any theory whatever. It is better to look at the man as he stands before us in the light which is thrown upon him by his works, his correspondence, and the tardily gathered statements of his friends. Bright, sanguine, buoyant, and self-reliant, strong in his affections, impatient of whatever was outside the range of his sympathies, indiscreet to the extent of admitting strangers into what should be the arcanes and the sanctities of his soul, solicitous of appreciation and affection, refined and courteous in bearing, and, as he says, quixotic in his sense of the honourable, the chivalrous, he was, with all his faults upon his head, a fine specimen of our weak humanity. Strength, whether of continuous resolution or of endurance, or indeed of passion, though there is much talk of it, he does not seem in any conspicuous degree to have had. His experience of life was uncomfortable, and before the end bitter. After a youth which may be said in conventional phrase to have been "nursed in luxury," he was, through little or no fault of his own, thrown upon his own resources. The profession he adopted was one out of which a man could scarcely make a living, and he became in a portion of his career a bookseller's hack. Overworked and underpaid, he struggled on until, by means of hand-to-mouth work through which filtered a distinct genius, he won fame. By the time this was acquired he had practically succumbed in the struggle, and the crown that he wore for a short period was joyless. No unknown nor unprecedented fate is this, though it is inexpressibly sad. His married life was a poem. Difficult, indeed, is it to say whether the love of his child wife or that of her mother did more to illumine his career. His attempts after the death of his wife to win consolation or love from other women detract a little from the almost ethereal beauty of that central romance, in which love hallowed and brightened the depressing and terrible details of poverty. The loss of Virginia Poe left him rudderless, and his uncertain course ended in shipwreck.

Mr. Ingram suggests that his death in Baltimore might have been caused by his being "cooped," drugged by electioneering agents, and dragged about from poll to poll to vote. This might possibly have been; it matters little. Speculations of this kind are unblest as well as futile. What is known is that on the 7th of October he was brought insensible into the Washington University Hospital, having been found on a bench near a wharf, and that about midnight of the same day he died. How this sudden end was brought about no one knows, or knowing has dared to tell. It is probable that what ill treatment, self-inflicted or from the hands of others, he received did not greatly accelerate a death that he felt to be near at hand. He died respected and esteemed by those who knew him best, and with the love of good women attending him to the last. Here is an adequate response to the venomous accusations of Griswold, the slime of whose words is now wiped off for ever. In place of the joint epitaph over Poe and his mother-in-law, who rest side by side in the "ancestral grave" of General Poe, might be put the letter that the distracted woman wrote on hearing of his death. It is hard to say on which it reflects more credit. "Annie," she writes to her friend, "my Eddie is dead. He died in Baltimore yesterday. Annie, pray for me, your desolate friend." By this wail should be read Poe's sonnet to the writer, the closing lines of which are:—

My mother—my own mother who died early—
Was but the mother of myself; but you
Are mother to the one I loved so dearly,
And thus are dearer than the mother I knew
By that infinity with which my wife
Was dearer to my soul than its soul-life.

Before quitting the memoir of this wayward genius, it seems worth while to point out that, besides the comparisons to Marlowe, Chatterton, Byron, and Musset which suggest themselves, a less obvious kinship exists between Poe and Balzac. It would be easy to show the extent of this. At the close of a long notice one instance alone must suffice. When speaking of his 'Eureka' to Mr. Putnam, Poe told him with intense earnestness that "the book he had to propose was of momentous interest. Newton's discovery of gravitation was a mere incident compared with the discoveries revealed in this book. It would at once command such unusual and intense interest that the publisher might give up all other enterprises, and make this one book the business of his lifetime. An edition of fifty thousand copies might be sufficient to begin with, but it would be but a small beginning. No other scientific event in the history of the world approached in importance the original developments of the book."

Substitute for Poe Balzac, and for Putnam Werdet or some other French publisher, and then these sentences might pass for a quotation from Léon Gorlan concerning the author of 'Père Goriot.' Among errors to be rectified in a second edition are the quotation "Res auguste domi," vol. i. p. 145; "Parturient mountains have been fabulated to produce muscuspular abortions," p. 199; and "the animalcula with moustaches for antennæ," vol. ii. p. 79. Mr. Ingram's style would be greatly improved if he would avoid the practice of ending his sentences with prepositions or that of using such hyper-superlatives as "most extreme rarity." For the work he has done he deserves the thanks of all lovers of literature.

Cinq Mois au Caire et dans la Basse Égypte.
Par Gabriel Charmes. (Paris, Charpentier.)

If all the English tourists who have written books about Egypt had had the wit and the skill to treat their subject as M. Charmes has done! Such will probably be the exclamation of every English critic; and it is not that the author writes from any exceptional point of vantage, with any special or previous knowledge of his subject; on the contrary, all seems new and fresh to him, and the justness and accuracy in most instances of the conclusions he draws are as remarkable as the graceful and picturesque style in which his descriptions and reflections are alike conveyed. Many of the matters on which he discourses are naturally more familiar to the travelled Englishman than to the ordinary French reader, but the former will not enjoy them the less on that account. The author's interest and regard for everything Egyptian are partly due to the feeling common among Frenchmen, and expressed without reserve by our author, that France has certain prescriptive claims to superiority in Egypt, which, if mainly sentimental, are none the less exclusive. They date, not to mention St. Louis and his crusaders, from the days when "forty centuries" looked down from the Pyramids on the overthrow of the Mamelukes, and have since been cemented by the labours of the French servants, by the support of the dynasty of Mohammed Ali, as representing "Western ideas," and by the Suez Canal. The responsibility for such a system as that of the modern Egyptian Government seems to us a very doubtful subject for congratulation, and when M. Charmes says that "seule de toutes les nations musulmanes de l'Orient elle a voulu essayer de devenir une nation à civilisation européenne," he surely attributes to the Egyptian people an amount of initiative and of national self-consciousness which has no real existence. M. Charmes, however, is also keenly alive to the attraction, amounting almost to personal affection, which a first contact with "the East" often exercises on the European traveller; and the feeling finds eloquent expression throughout his pages. For him, under the flood of magic light and colouring shed by the sun of Egypt, the wide, level plains are never monotonous, the mud hovels never mean or sordid, nor the sand-hills insignificant. He testifies sadly to the rapid disappearance of the beautiful, if not very substantial, handiwork of the Arab builders under the apathy of their modern successors, whose glaring bad taste is further actively shown in their own constructive efforts, as well as in the reckless and profligate extravagance—a vulgar burlesque on the 'Thousand and One Nights,' which, with the grinding oppression it necessitates, is certainly the most prominent outcome of "Western civilization." One of the few redeeming results of this extravagance is the valuable collection of trees and plants from distant countries, chiefly tropical.

Not the least interesting part of the book is the analysis of Arab character and speculation on the causes of the rapid rise and subsequent decay of their power. Their failure the author attributes mainly to the absence from the Arab nature of all trace of a conservative spirit or of original creative power. The latter defect he illustrates especially, and fairly enough, by the character of their philosophy and also of their theology. We should be slow to admit his assertion that their architecture shows an equal want of original genius, and it is, perhaps, rather sweeping to attribute so general a lack of originality to a people whom he elsewhere describes as endowed with "tous les dons de l'imagination."

Mention has been made of certain recondite claims to superiority in Egypt which the author advances in favour of his countrymen. These unluckily bring him into collision with those of England, not, he says, that the French claims, which are rather of a moral nature, can, except by a mind of the "Manchester" order, be outweighed by the mere material magnitude of the English interests at stake. We should naturally like to stand well with so pleasant and cultivated a writer as M. Charmes, but if we do, he more than disassembles his love. There is no allusion to any archaeological labours in Egypt but those of his own countrymen. As for our efforts to put down the slave trade, they are downright cant. (It is curious, by the way, that intelligent Frenchmen, who profess to be governed par excellence by ideas, should be incapable of comprehending the idea of abstract philanthropy.) If we were in earnest, he says, we should have tried to put down such abominations as "la fabrication d'eunuques." As for the slave trade, if it is suppressed what is to become of the unfortunate captives in the negro wars? If there is no market for them, they will be eaten. Does England really think that cannibalism is a lesser evil than comfortable slavery? This seems to us rather unworthy fooling, for M. Charmes can hardly be ignorant how many of these wars are caused by the demand for slaves. But he loves us not. Speaking of "de grandes entreprises de culture qui tripleraient la richesse de l'Égypte si elles venaient à se généraliser," he adds, "Par malheur, ces agriculteurs sont fort rares; par malheur aussi, ils sont presque tous Anglais." And the English lady tourist, too, is sometimes seen standing where she ought not. As to the English officials in Egypt, their places are kept up for the benefit of the Anglo-Indian civilian, for whom the climate makes a valuable halting-place between the heats of India and his native fog; and the situation is doubly attractive for him when he has ten children, of whom five remain in India and five are at home. But a witty Frenchman on le perfide Albion is always fresh and amusing. It is also instructive to know what the "intelligent foreigner" writes of us, and this again is useful as a rough practical gauge of the amount of information, if not of the intelligence, of those for whom he primarily writes; so for the philosophical English reader those hard sayings may be an additional reason for taking up what is, in other respects, a pleasant and attractive book. We notice a number of typographical errors unusual in the productions of the best French publishers.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Troublesome Daughters. By L. B. Walford. 3 vols. (Blackwood & Sons.)

A Red Rose Chain. By Maggie Symington. (Clarke & Co.)

People She Knows. By an Old Maid. (Remington & Co.)

Under the Rose. By Mrs. Herbert Davy. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

If the story of 'Troublesome Daughters' were at all equal in merit to the author's delineation of character, the book would be one of the best as well as one of the most charming published of late. The story is not wanting in variety and movement, but it is very much wanting in interest. Love unrequited turned to hate, and prompting a low-bred man to tell his rival that the girl is touched with insanity, is not a probable state of things; but to make the real lover accept the statement, and run away from England without making any inquiry, is too harsh an improbability to force upon the reader. The misunderstandings which commonly in novels lead to the plot are often very small, and seem quite inadequate by reference to real life; but the mistake upon which depends almost the whole of the misery and separation—fortunately of no very agonising kind—in 'Troublesome Daughters' really seems utterly impossible, even under the circumstances which the author relates. Again, a break of five years in the middle of the story, and the gap filled by a monologue in which the important changes which have taken place in the interval are told, help to dull the reader's interest. Talk of that kind on the stage is often necessary to explain what is going on, but it has an air of unreality even there, and in writing, where it is quite unnecessary, it is still harder to make it appear natural. Of course, it is done to add vivacity, but Mrs. Walford's share of that excellent quality is so large and so genuine that she requires not to add an unreal appearance of it. The first volume of 'Troublesome Daughters' is delightful: it sparkles with gaiety; it is very original and very natural. One can only regret that the exigencies of the story have necessitated the introduction into the other two volumes of too great an amount of description, analysis, and explanation.

Miss Symington's story sets forth the iniquity of marrying for money. Hal Hamilton, being in love with a penniless young lady, jilts her for a certain Lady Ethel, who, at any rate, has the merit of a disinterested attachment for him. Lady Ethel certainly suffers severely for her error. Not only does her husband neglect and misuse her, but his brother, who disapproves of the marriage, thinks it well to show his scorn by rudeness to his brother's wife. So far is the author from disapproving of his conduct that a large portion of her story is taken up by the sufferings of this young gentleman, who lives in uncomfortable lodgings, and is cheated by his landlady, rather than be reconciled in the slightest degree to accepting the wages of iniquity. A still larger part of the book is filled up with nursery dongs, charades, and Christmas trees:—

"The presents were labelled with the names of their intended recipients" (surely an unusual feature in the programme of the evening), "and were taken down and distributed by the gentlemen of the party. Some of them were so apropos to the receivers that a good deal of merriment was created. Thus Miss Morton, the daughter of the head master of the grammar school in Burnham, a lady addicted to classical studies and to writing for various magazines, found herself the recipient of a little blue stocking; Mr. Franklin became the possessor of a pussy cat; Judith of a dunce's cap; Max, a bachelor's companion," &c.

With such harmless prattle does our author

while away our time, and the "patipising" of the father of the Christmas children—a clairvoyant whose assistance is invoked for various discoveries, among others to find the body of the luckless Hal—is the only original feature of this exceedingly commonplace story. So far as we have any preference among the characters, it is for the unfortunate lady who loses her fortune, wastes her affection, and is widowed in a tragic and sudden manner after a quarrel with the selfish scoundrel who causes her unhappiness.

With subjects of sufficient interest and an adequate gift of expression, an old maid should be in an exceptionally favourable position for the writing of a volume of romance. Indeed, it is no secret that a large part of our contemporary fiction is the work of single ladies, more or less fitted for their task in these two respects. Thus when "An Old Maid" announces herself as the author of a series of sketches of "people she knew," we only realize in its crudest form a fact which underlies, perhaps, three-fourths of all the novels produced by lady writers. Given an author with plenty of leisure on her hands, and an uneradicable desire to write, it would be difficult to supply her with wiser advice than this—that she should take her subject from her own experience, however limited it might have been, and make the best of materials which were fairly at her command. This is what the author of 'People She Knew' professes to have done, and there is internal evidence of her having drawn from the life. But at the same time it is abundantly manifest that she has supplied a great deal from her fancy. Actions that she has imagined and motives that she has imputed go to make up her picture of the people that she may have known; and there are consequently more than a few improbabilities in these eight sketches. The opening story of Leonard Vivian, which is rather two stories tacked into one, literally revels in wild impossibilities. It is interesting for those who may not have encountered the several incidents and situations before—the mysterious organist, the girl whom he secretly boards in his cottage, the squire on his stormy death-bed, the murder of a father by his runaway son, the discovery of the murderer in a cavity behind the wainscot, and all the rest of them—but many readers will lack the sense of freshness, candour, and fidelity to the commonplace, which ought to be the special characteristics of drawings from the life. The "Old Maid's" work has its interest and attractiveness, but the designs are a little too bold, and the colours are too crudely mixed.

Mrs. Davy's "Prose Idyll" is prettily imagined, and the plan of allowing "the rose" to tell the story of its mistress is a happy, if not quite an original, conception. A little bad grammar rather mars one's notion of the delicacy of flower language. "I stoop to no excuses. My conduct needs not such," is the rose's report of the language of the haughty baronet, whose base stratagem has severed fair Constance from her low-born swain. "There is no language strong enough to express my opprobrium," says the foolish squire, her father, seeking for words to express his disapprobation of a match with his huntsman's son. "Can it indeed be true what Aunt Hilda said last night?"

are the words which flow from the honeyed lips of the heroine. Through such imperfect utterances do we learn the lesson of Constance's woes and final happiness. In spite of bucolic mire and matchmaking aunt that happiness becomes complete when the high-born beauty weds the marvellous youth who has the triple endowment of artistic temperament, dark eyes, and political liberalism of a charming academic vagueness.

SELECTIONS FROM THE FORTH

Poems from Shelley. Selected and Arranged by Stopford A. Brooke. (Macmillan & Co.)

A Selection from the Poetry of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Second Series. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

A Selection from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning. Second Series. (Same publishers.)

MR. BROOKE'S volume, which belongs to the "Golden Treasury Series," includes the great majority of Shelley's lyrics, along with the moderately long poems 'Alastor', 'Julian and Maddalo', 'The Witch of Atlas', 'Epipsychidion', and 'Adonais', and a rather large sprinkling of extracts from other poems. Most of the compositions are arranged in groups, such as "Poems on Death," "Songs consecrated to Liberty," "Poems on Time and its Changes," and seven other headings. Mr. Brooke exercises the privileges of an editor somewhat wilfully, taking scraps out of long poems and bestowing fancy titles on them, making omissions from lyrics which one might expect to find complete, and so on. His notes and other indications suffice, however, to show where these processes occur. One item is named "The Zucca"; it is not the poem to which Shelley himself gave that title, but is an extract from his so-called "Unfinished Drama." The text is not always conformable to the latest and most authoritative editions. For instance, "Ye hasten to the dead" (p. 36) ought to be "Ye hasten to the grave," and "purer sentiment" (quoted in the preface from the 'Triumph of Life') ought to be "purer nutriment." Mr. Forman's arbitrary alteration in the 'Ode to Liberty'—the introduction of a colon at the close of the first line, whereby "vibrated" is changed from a transitive into an intransitive verb—is adopted, without, as we think, the slightest justification. It is apparent, however, that Mr. Brooke has felt sincere interest in his work and taken pains with it. His preface, occupying more than fifty pages, and his notes, which fill sixteen, show a sincere admiration for Shelley and proportionate critical acumen. He follows one or more of his predecessors in rating the 'Prometheus Unbound' highest among the long compositions, and the 'Ode to the West Wind' among the short ones. The passage analyzing the 'Triumph of Life' may be read with profit, also that in which the editor speaks of certain poems of Shelley as embodying the ideal approaches and ideal regret of love; and he is liberal-minded enough to allow that Shelley performed in the long run good service even to theology, not to mention poetry. Mr. Brooke is not right in speaking of the Demogorgon in 'Prometheus Unbound' as vaguely impersonating Shelley's conception of a central cause; Demogorgon proclaims himself to be Eternity, and that is, we apprehend, the true designation. It is also a mistake to say that Shelley was said to "come and go like a spirit" in "the house at Lerici," for this applied to the house at Pisa; and the statement that the influence of "Queen Mab" "was widely extended"—if relating, as would appear from the context, to a date prior to 1815—is decidedly erroneous, for the poem was at that time only privately printed, and had no circulation worth speaking of. The volume will serve to promote the advance which has of late been made in the appreciation of a great poet.

A second series of selections from the works of Mr. and Mrs. Browning cannot but be an important gain to the students of modern poetry; and these volumes are of great value as completing the good work of the first series. In each series the poems have been selected by Mr. Browning. Taken together, the four volumes comprise most of the poems by both authors, save those which of themselves are long substantive works. From such works no extracts have been made. This course seems to have been, on the whole, judicious, yet an exception might have been desirable in the case of 'Pippa Passes.' The magnificent scene between Ottima and Sebald, Mr. Browning's most splendid achievement in a line purely dramatic, being in itself complete, could well have been detached. There is, perhaps, no other instance in which an extract from a poem equally long would have been practicable.

Welcome as these new volumes will be to many who cannot afford to buy the collected works of either poet, not quite the same interest can attach to them as to those of the first series, for, rich as the second series is, the first naturally appropriated what in both writers was most memorable. Still, when we say that the present selection from Mrs. Browning contains 'The House of Clouds,' 'A Sea-side Walk,' 'A Vision of Poets,' 'De Profundis,' 'Loved Once,' 'A Denial,' 'Proof and Disproof,' 'Where's Agnes?' 'Summing Up in Italy,' 'The Forced Recruit,' and 'Cama Guidi Windows,' it is evident that ample material remained to warrant the issue of this volume. Among the sonnets in this series we note the one called 'Grief,' beginning,

I tell you hopeless grief is passionless.

There is hardly a sonnet in the language of more colossal grandeur than this. The second and the first volumes of Mrs. Browning's collected works are those most taxed in the present collection, which includes from the fourth volume, however, all the translations save one or two, besides ten other poems.

No collection of poems which perforce ignores his plays and such important works as 'Sordello' and 'Paracelsus' can adequately represent a genius so varied as Mr. Browning's. 'In a Balcony' is the most dramatic piece in the present volume. Surely nothing more pathetic in its way has ever been written; but how different is the pathos of 'Luria'! The pathos of the first lies in the conception of the desperate condition to which a passionate nature, furnished for want of common love, may be brought; while the pathos of the second consists in the opposition between a pure and primitive nature and the intricacies and craft of civilization. It is with surprise that we notice the omission of the 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' a poem too popular, as well as too good of its kind, to be left out. A greater loss still is that of 'Johannes Agricola,' a study remarkable alike for its splendour of imagery and its keenness of satire. It is, however, matter for rejoicing that this collection includes one poem, perhaps of all the short poems the most beautiful, 'Rudel to the Lady of Tripoli.' From volumes published during the last ten years judicious choice has been made, and lovers of good things will be especially glad to find in this second series "Amphibian," from 'Fifine at the Fair'; from the poems published with 'Pacchiarotto,' among others "Hervé Riel"; and from 'La Saisiaz' the exquisite fable of the bard and the cricket.

ORIENTAL LITERATURE.

Pali Miscellany. By V. Trenckner. Part I. (Williams & Norgate.)—Mr. Trenckner presents us in the first instalment of his 'Pali Miscellany' with the introductory portion of the 'Milindapāho' in romanized text (pp. 5-28), an English translation (pp. 29-54), and notes (pp. 55-84). In spite of the impetus which has been given of late years to the study of the sacred literature of the Southern Buddhists, Pali scholarship has not yet attained to that maturity which can afford to dispense with translations and other aids to a correct understanding of the texts. This need was fully recognized by Prof. Feussoll in his edition of 'Dhammapadam' and of various Jātaka stories, by the late R. C. Childers in his 'Khuddakapātha,' and more recently by Dr. Oldenberg in his 'Dipavamsa,' and by Prof. Pischel in his 'Amalāyanasutta,' all of whom paid much attention to textual criticism and a faithful rendering of the Pali original. The specimen just brought out by Mr. Trenckner of his forthcoming edition of 'Milindapāho' is not only eminently conspicuous in both of these respects, but still more so by the valuable matter—morphological, lexical, etymological, and grammatical—contained in the notes. These are a mine of wealth, the outcome evidently of many years' patient research, and betray such an intimate and critical acquaintance with the extensive collection of Pali manuscripts for which the Royal Library at Copenhagen is celebrated as no other Pali scholar in Europe, Prof. Feussoll himself scarcely excepted, can boast of. Indeed, in the five years which have elapsed since the appearance of Childers's Pali dictionary, no addition of greater importance has been made to Pali scholarship than is comprised within the unpretending little volume to which we have called attention. We hope the author may be induced by the favourable reception which the present instalment of his 'Pali Miscellany' is sure to meet with at the hands of his fellow students to relax somewhat in his fastidiousness when he comes to prepare for the press the subsequent fasciculi, which are to contain, amongst "further contributions towards illustrating several details of Pali philology," the Bhabra texts and the remains, preserved in the Nikāyas, of "the heretical dialect."

Assyrian Texts: being Extracts from the Annals of Sennacherib, and Assur-bani-pal. With Philological Notes. By Ernest A. Budge. (Trübner & Co.)—This is another volume of the series entitled the "Archaic Classics," of which Sayce's 'Elementary Assyrian Grammar' was the first, and has been brought out by the publishers in the same sumptuous and handy form. It is a proof of the rapid progress that Assyrian research has been making of late years, and of the recognition of Assyrian as an object of regular study. Indeed, no better evidence of this recognition could be found than in the fact that Mr. Budge styles himself on the title-page "Assyrian Exhibitioner of Christ's College, Cambridge." It is a welcome sign that the new study has so far won its way to acknowledgment as to be accepted by our older universities, which are apt to look shyly on novel branches of knowledge. The book consists of a number of texts selected from the Assyrian inscriptions, with explanatory notes at the end. The texts have been edited carefully, the author having gone through the originals and noted the variant readings. The philological notes will be found very useful by the learner; difficult words and grammatical forms are explained, and the roots in the kindred languages compared with them. If anything is wanted to make the book complete it is a vocabulary. We have observed only two misprints: "mie" for "mie," on p. 35, and "limnatio" for "limnatio," on p. 43. A reading-book of this sort was very much needed by both pupils and teachers.

We have received C. Friederici's Bibliotheca Orientalis for 1879. This is the fourth year of this most useful publication, which gives a complete list of all the books, papers, serials, and essays relating to Eastern literature published during the last year in England and the colonies, Germany, and France. It commences with general philology, comparative mythology, and general history, and then passes in review the various nations from China and Japan to Persia, Palestine, and Turkey. The latter portion also takes in Egypt, Algeria, and Central and South Africa.

We have also received from Calcutta a very useful book for Bengali students of English, Phrases and Idioms, by Krishna Chandra Roy. Three parts have been published, which go down to the end of C. The author takes English phrases in alphabetical order, for which he gives the most suitable Bengali translations he can find; he then adds some extracts from modern English classical writers to illustrate the use of the phrase in question. Sometimes the Bengali renderings are literal; but often they give the spirit of the English phrase in a thoroughly native dress, which is no doubt the better way. Native students in Government schools will find this little volume a great help in explaining English idioms, such as "to make the best of," "between ourselves," "to come in for," &c. We would only recommend the author in his future parts to endeavour, as far as possible, to find some idiomatic equivalent in good nervous Bengali for all his English phrases, instead of a literal paraphrase. Thus, for instance, "to build castles in the air" is not merely "to build a palace in empty space," sénya attalid nirma, nor even "to dream of a lakh of rupees," lakh tókár swapan; surely the true equivalent is that good old Hindu phrase found in the 'Mahābhārata' and the 'Rāmāyana,' "a city of the Gandharvas," gandharvanagara. Bengali is one of the richest languages in the world if it is only allowed to bring out its own latent resources.

Le Dix-septième Chapitre du Bhāratiya-Nāṭyaśāstra, intitulé Vāg-abhinaya. Publié par P. Regnaud. (Paris, E. Laroux.)—Though it is still a moot question whether in the drama the palm of antiquity has to be assigned to India or to Greece, the probability, leaving aside Hindu tradition, will be found to be in favour of the former country. Hindu literature is rich in treasures on alanakāra (i.e., poetry, rhetoric, and dramatic art) and the kindred sciences of sangita, or music and dancing. Many of the leading works, especially on alanakāra, have been published in India, and others are accessible in manuscript. An exposition, however, in a European language, of the various topics of which they treat, is still a desideratum. Prof. P. Regnaud, already favourably known as the author of a book on Hindu theology and philosophy as expounded in the Upanishads, and as the translator of Bhartrihari's 'Çatakas' and the drama 'Mrichhakatī,' is preparing an exhaustive work on alanakāra. While collecting materials his attention was obviously drawn to Bharata's 'Nāṭyaśāstra,' or dramaturgy, to which all Indian treatises on dramatic art refer as their ultimate source. Manuscripts of it are so scarce even in India that, till within a comparatively recent period, the original was supposed to be lost. In 1862 Dr. Hall was so fortunate as to secure a complete copy of the work, and he published four out of the thirty-six chapters of which it consists as an appendix to his edition of the 'Dakṛpa.' Some twelve years later Dr. Heymann began preparing an edition of the whole work from Dr. Hall's manuscript and from other materials which had since come to light; circumstances, however, prevented him from carrying out his project. Quite recently M. Regnaud has had the use of a palm-leaf MS., in Grantha characters, of Bharata's 'Institutes,' the property of the Royal Asiatic Society, and considerably differing from Dr. Hall's MS. With a view to showing what aid can be derived from it towards a trustworthy edition of the text, M. Regnaud has brought out as a specimen the seventeenth chapter, entitled "Vāg-abhinaya," i.e., on gestures as the accompaniments of vocal representation, and has added notes and emendations which testify alike to his critical acumen and his familiarity with the subject. Though we doubt, however, whether from the existing and available materials a satisfactory edition of Bharata's work can be produced, we have every confidence that at M. Regnaud's hands a comprehensive and lucid exposition of the Indian system of astronomy may be expected, in which also the results of his examination of the 'Bharatiya-Nāyakastra' shall be embodied.

In an essay on the peoples and languages of Africa contained in the elaborate introduction to his Nubian Grammar, which has just appeared in German, Prof. Lepsius maintains that the early Babylonian civilization was imported from Egypt. After having discussed the identity of the Kēfs on the Egyptian monuments with the Kēphēs and the Phōivēs of Greek authors, he quotes the well-known legend of the monster Oannes, which, according to Berceus, emerged from the Erythrean Sea on the coast of Babylon, and taught men the arts of writing, of building temples, agriculture, and many other useful things. Prof. Lepsius goes on to say:—"Thus the fishman (i.e. Oannes) was a shipman who landed in Babylonia from the Persian Gulf. Then Berceus went on to enumerate the first kings of the country, among whom there appeared from time to time other fishmen, resembling Oannes, from the Erythrean coast, one or more at a time, but all to carry out more completely what had been taught by Oannes. The tradition of the Babylonian priests that their country was one colonized and civilized from the south sea cannot be expressed in plainer language; and this alone overthrows the hypothesis, untenable in every respect, although still pretty commonly accepted, that the Babylonian mode of writing, together with all the higher civilization of Babylon resting thereon as well as the higher culture of its priests, is derived from a so-called Turanian people, from regions which at the time of the author of the genealogical tables [in Genesis] were still so unknown and barbarous that he excluded them from the civilized world. In the oldest times within the memory of men we know only of one advanced culture, of only one mode of writing, and of only one literary development, viz., those of Egypt; and we know of only one contemporary people which could have had knowledge of this culture, appropriated its results, and conveyed them to other nations—this was the Kushites, the masters of the Erythrean Sea to its furthest limits. It was by them that Babylonia was colonized and fertilized with Egyptian culture. And it is thus only that the thorough-going correspondence between Babylonian knowledge and institutions and the Egyptian ones becomes intelligible. The pictorial writing forming the basis of the cuneiform characters is unmistakably only a species of the hieroglyphics; the astronomy of Babylon is only a development of that of Egypt; its unit of measure, that is, the royal or architectural ell of 0.525 m., is completely identical with that of Egypt, which we find described on the walls up to the fourth millennium B.C.; its architecture, that is to say, its temples as well as its pyramids and obelisks, is an imperfect imitation of Egyptian originals; and so with the other arts. At every step we meet in Babylonia with the traces of the Egyptian models. . . . In any case we have to regard the Kushites as holding sway over the natives and as constituting the stem of the highly cultivated priestly caste of the Chaldeans. To what extent they were able to make their language prevail among the masses of the people has yet to be ascertained. This point can only be decided one day by a more profound study of the old Babylonian language, especially that portion of it which represents the higher elements of culture in this mixed speech, which we must suppose it to have been."

We have received Prof. Ascoli's monograph on some Hebrew epitaphs in Southern Italy, entitled Iscrizioni inedite o mal note, Greche, Latine, Ebraiche, di Antichi Sepolcri Giudaici del Napoletano. This is an extract from the Transactions of the Fourth International Congress of Orientalists, held at Florence in 1878. Having given a sketch of the most ancient Hebrew epitaphs found at Worms, Aden, and the Crimea, and spoken of the history of the settlement of the Jews in the provinces of Naples from the fourth to the tenth centuries, the author gives a brief description of the catacombs of Venosa, and then proceeds with the texts of the inscriptions themselves, found at Venosa, Brindisi, Trani, and elsewhere. At Venosa the earliest inscriptions are in Greek and Hebrew, nearly always accompanied by the emblem of the candelabra and the word Shalom. The earliest date occurring in these inscriptions is that of 810 A.D., but those of Venosa are no doubt much older. The memoir concludes with an interesting chapter, containing philological and chronological disquisitions relating to the language and the era of these epitaphs.

Two most valuable contributions to Syriac literature have just reached us:—1. Prof. Paul de Lagarde's edition of Bar Hebraeus's scholia to the Psalms, together with Elijah's (of Nisibis) Arabic-Syriac glossary. The latter work is taken from a MS. in the library of the India Office. 2. Syrisch-Römisches Rechtsbuch aus dem fünften Jahrhundert, texts with German translations and notes by Profs. W. G. Bruns and Ed. Sachau. In 1858 Prof. Land edited the same book, with a Latin translation, in the first volume of his 'Anecdota Syriaca,' but his text is less correct than the present one, and his translation is in some respects not quite trustworthy for the purpose of the history of ancient law; not being a student of law, he could not always give the true meaning of the words. Prof. Bruns points out that this law book was known in the East in the Middle Ages under the titles of 'Statuta Imperatorum,' 'Libri Basilicon,' and 'Leges Constantini, Theodosii, et Leonis,' a fact which was unknown to Dr. Land.

M. James Darmesteter has contributed to the Mémoires de la Société de Linguistique an interesting contribution to comparative mythology, with the title of Cabires, Béné Elohim et Dioscures. He comes to the following conclusions:—"1. Les Cabires ont été assimilés aux Dioscures parce qu'ils s'appelaient les 'fils de Dieu'; 2. La Bible connaît les Cabires, ce sont les Béné Elohim (Gen. vi. 2); 3. Le conte grec du massacre de Lemnos est une forme secondaire d'un mythe phénicien, appartenant au cycle d'Adonis, et dont les premiers mots sont restés dans le chapitre vi., verset 2, de la Genèse."

We have received Prof. Bernardino Peyron's Latin catalogue of the Hebrew MSS. preserved in the University Library of Turin. It contains 2,176 articles, and its method is nearly the same as that of the catalogue of Oriental MSS. made in Italy under the auspices of the Government. Excepting some minor mistakes, the description of the MSS. is, on the whole, satisfactory. The indices are also carefully elaborated.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Grains de Bon Sens, which Messrs. Calmann Lévy & Co. send us, is not, perhaps, quite so amusing as most of the volumes of newspaper articles on things in general which accumulate like stalagmites from the droppings of M. Alphonse Karr's ever productive pen. It is to a great extent political, and besides that M. Karr writes of politics very much as an amateur, it is precisely in his political writing that he makes his nearest approach to being dull. It need, however, hardly be said that there are ample compensations. There is, perhaps, some lack of modesty in the version of the old story by which the author describes himself as having received all the usual gifts from fairies in his cradle, with the neutralizing addition of "bon sens" from the invariably spiteful old fairy who comes last. But there is all his former sprightliness in the description of the fate of himself and other Mentors who will not agree with the populace as being in "la situation de quelqu'un qui va du Palais Royal à la Bourse à l'heure où la foule va de la Bourse au Palais Royal, c'est-à-dire qui a ses côtes nouées aux côtes de ses contemporains." Perhaps Englishmen will not take so gloomy a view of M. Karr's countrywomen as he himself does for their crime of shaking the hands of male beings "with a vigorous grasp." But when he tells us that though he only sticks pins into his enemies, "ces épingle, c'est de la monnaie de glaive," we must again acknowledge one of those palpable hits of phrase to which French lends itself better than any other language. The contrast of the Oriental system of harems with the system in vogue, in no matter what country, "d'avoir un harem éparpillé chez ses amis," is another felicitous audacity. Nor can the book be said to wind up unhappily with this mot (an unpublished one if we mistake not) of Balzac to the author: "Ça t'apprendra. Dieu s'est réservé de faire le bien; c'est défendu à l'homme," though it might have come better from some one who had endeavoured to infringe the Divine command rather oftener. With the reward of such occasional flashes as these it must be a severe person who will not let M. Karr talk about universal suffrage and the qualifications and duties of rulers, much more about the proper use to be made of orange trees, the impossibility of preserving rosebuds in any satisfactory manner, the urgent necessity of adopting Swiss railway carriages, the danger of matches which can be used for the purpose of poisoning, the folly of a Ministry of the Interior which does not teach the population at large to distinguish harmless from harmful fungi, and the capabilities of she-goats as feeding-bottles for infancy. A method of alimentation which produced Jupiter and M. Alphonse Karr (as the latter justly argues) must have something to be said for it. Let us hope that the existence of M. Karr's foster-mother reposes upon more solid proofs than that of Amalthea. It is, at any rate, certain that a very pretty myth about a goat which gave suck to a swarm of wasps might be made out of the facts.

We have noticed above the pleasant volumes of selections from the works of Mr. and Mrs. Browning. Another volume that ought to have attractions for all lovers of good reading is the Passages from the Prose Writings of Matthew Arnold, which Messrs. Smith & Elder have sent us. The extracts have been made with judgment, and will, we hope, induce many to study the books from which this Horilegium has been made.

To Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. we are indebted for a dainty edition of the Princes, which forms a worthy pendant to the edition of 'In Memoriam' the same firm lately published.

We have on our table With a Silken Thread, 3 vols., by Mrs. E. Lynn Lanton (Chatto & Windus);—The Boy's Country-Book, by W. Howitt (Nelson);—Time's Whisperings, by G. Barlow (Remington);—Congregational History, 1850-1880, by J. Waddington (Longmans);—Essays on the Church's Doctrinal Authority, by W. G. Ward (Burns & Oates);—Religious Life and Thought, by W. Horne (Williams & Norgate);—The Philosophy of Jesus Christ, by the Rev. R. Collins (Stock);—Three Christians (Hodder & Stoughton);—A Visitation Manual, by the Rev. W. E. Heygate (Smith);—Bethlehem to Olivet, by J. Palmer (Church of England Sunday School Institute);—The Criminal Code of the Jews, by P. B. Benny (Smith, Elder & Co.);—The Ober-Ammergau Passion Play, by J. P. Jackson (W. H. Smith);—Russische Literatur und Cultur, by J. J. Honegger (Leipzig, J. J. Weber);—Opere Inedite di Giacomo Leopardi, Vol. II., by G. Cugnoni (D. Nutt);—and Vita e Scritti di Carlo Bagnu, by G. Cadorna (Roma, E. Botta). Among New Editions we have Sir Gibbie, by G. Mac Donald (Hurst & Blackett);—A Golden Sorrow, by Mrs. C. How (LW);—Our Public Offices, by C. Marvin (Sonnenchein);—Conrad Life, by a Tick-of-Leave Man (Wyman);—British Decoration, by

Col. F. Brine, R.E. (Stanford).—Hay Fever, by C. H. Blackley (Baillière).—Vocal Music upon the Chert Method, by E. Andrade and G. W. Bullen (Moffatt & Paige).—and Corn and Chaff, or Double Acrostics (Pickering). Also the following Pamphlets: Linguistic Notes on some Obscure Prefixes in Greek and Latin, Part II, by Sigmas (Williams & Norgate).—Our Disestablished Parish, edited by W. P. Maunsell (Sampkin).—Notes on Prisons, by G. R. Vicars (Cambridge, Macmillan).—The United States of Europe, by J. B. Killen (Brook & Co.).—and Those Curs, a Satirical Brochure (Curtis Bros.).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS. ENGLISH.

Theology.
Christian World Pulpit, Vol. 17, January to June, 1880, 4/4
Goulburn's (Dean) Everlasting Puntishment, Lectures delivered at St. James Church, Piccadilly, or 8vo. 5/4.
Fussy's (Rev. E. B.) What is of Faith as to Everlasting Puntishment? 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Robinson's (Rev. K.) Manual of Theology, 8vo. 10/4 cl.
White's (G. C.) Discipline of Suffering, Nine Short Readings on the History of Job, 12mo. 2/4 cl.

Fine Art and Archaeology.
Anderson's (Mr. C. H. J.) Lincoln Pocket Guide, being a Short Account of the Churches and Antiquities of the County, 12mo. 3/4 cl.
Mackley's (W. J.) Handbook for Painters and Art Students on the Character and Use of Colours, 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Poetry.
Hamilton's (Janet) Poems, Romances, and Sketches, or 8vo. 4/4
Irwin's (T. C.) Pictures and Songs, 12mo. 3/6 cl.

History and Biography.
Libermann's (Yen. Francis Mary Paul) Life of, by Rev. P. Goepfert, or 8vo. 7/6 cl.
London, Past and Present, being Notices, Historical and Descriptive, of the Metropolis, 12mo. 2/6 cl.

Geography and Travel.
Marrin's (C.) Col. Grodekoff's Ride from Samarcand to Herat, or 8vo. 8/4 cl.
Narrative of the Second Arctic Expedition made by Charles F. Hall, edited by Prof. J. E. Nourse, 8vo. 28/4 cl.

Philology.
Homer's Odyssey, Books I.-XII., translated into English Verse, with Notes, &c., by Sir C. Du Cane, sm. 4to. 10/6
Palmer's (A.) Sex Proprietas Eligatam, Libri 4, 12mo. 5/4 cl.
Primer of Greek Grammar: Accidence, by E. Abbott and E. D. Mansfield, Syntax, by E. D. Mansfield, with Postface by J. Percival, or 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Roby's (R. J.) Latin Grammar for Schools, or 8vo. 4/6 cl.
Siddgick's (A.) First Greek Writer, 12mo. 3/6 cl.

Science.
A Movable Atlas, showing the Structure and Functions of the Brain, by Prof. G. J. Willoughby, M.D., the Text translated by T. B. Dowe, folio. 7/6 cl.
Austin's (W. F.) Mathematical Examination Papers set for Entrance to R.M.A., Woolwich, with Answers, 7/6 cl.
Brain and Nerve Exhaustion, "Neurasthenia," its Nature and Curative Treatment, by T. B. Dowe, M.D., 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Chronology of Medicine, Ancient, Medieval, and Modern, edited by J. M. Richards, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Cunningham's (D. J.) Director's Guide, Part 2, or 8vo. 6/8
Distribution of Rain over the British Isles during the Year 1879, compiled by G. J. Symonds, 8vo. 5/4 cl.
Journal of Physiology, by M. Foster, M.D., Vol. 3, Nos. 5 and 6, 8vo. 8/4 cl.
Lectures in Gynecology by W. Goodell, M.D., 8vo. 18/4 cl.
Therapeutics of Gynecology and Obstetrics, edited by W. B. Atkinson, M.D., 8vo. 18/4 cl.

General Literature.
Gibson's (C.) In Pastures Green, and other Stories, 10/6 cl.
Macrene's (A.) Handbook of Densitaking, with Introduction by H. Ross, 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Modern Wildfowling, by Wildfowler, 8vo. 2/4 cl.
Pemberton's (H. L. Child) The Story of Stella Peel, 16/6 cl.
Widewake Pleasure Book, Vol. 10, 4to. 7/4 cl.

FOREIGN.

Theology.
Dörner (J. A.): System der Christlichen Glaubenslehre, Vol. 2, Part 1, 8m.
Legende (F. de): Veteris Testamenti ab Origine recensiti Fragmenta apud Syros servata quinque, 15m.

History.
Pie (J. L.): Die Abstammung der Rumänen, 8m.
Schultze (H.): Europäische Geschichtskalender, 30th year, 10m.

Geography.
Kiepert (H.): Carte de l'Épire et de la Thessalie, corrected in 1880, 1m.

Science.
Hoffmann (O. K.): Untersuchungen ub. die Entwicklungs-geschichte der Hirndrüsen, 8m.
Jahresbericht ub. die Fortschritte in Anatomie u. Physiologie, edited by Aug. Hirsch and R. Virchow, 8m. 50.
Lipschitz (R.): Lehrbuch der Analysis, Vol. 2, Differential- u. Integral-rechnung, 19m.
Meinke (J.): Lehrbuch der Botanik, 12m.
Schmid (E. E.): Die Quarzreien Porphyre d. centralen Thüringer Wald, 18m.
Struckmann (C.): Die Weiden-Bildungen der Umgebung v. Hannover, 12m.
Thaibenberg (O.): Die Arten der Insectenordnung Suctoria, 7m.

General Literature.
Oelbert (H. R.): Notes de Voyage, Promenades et Camarades, 3fr. 50.
Favre (J.): Conférences et Mélanges, 3fr.
Hofen (H.): Kleine Leute, 3 Novellen, 5m.

'THE IMITATION OF CHRIST.'

52, Paternoster Row, July 19, 1880.

At the conclusion of the notice of the facsimile of the 'Imitation of Christ' which appeared in your last week's issue, your reviewer expresses a regret that the inscription "Finitus est completus anno domini mccccxli. per manus fratris thome Kempis in monte sancte Agnetis prope Zwollia," which occurs at the end of the original codex, is not reproduced in facsimile.

Feeling that this would have great interest for students of the book, I made several attempts to reproduce it by photography; the very faded and dirty state of the paper, however, entirely prevented this being carried out successfully. The next best course open was adopted, viz., to trace the inscription and signature of Thomas à Kempis by hand, and give them in letter-press, as they now appear in the preface by Mr. Ruelens.

ELLIOT STOCK.

MR. HENRY JAMES, SENIOR.

It is not usual to employ the work of a son as an introduction to that of his father, for the obvious reason that the father, if he be remarkable, is generally known before him. Yet in tracing the younger life to its natural source we may sometimes recognize their identity under conditions by which ordinary expectation would be baffled. It is not surprising that Henry James, jun., should be "accounted for" by his father, with whom it is time that the English public should be acquainted. But it is strange that the relation should assert itself through productions so different as the fictions which have appeared in London during the last few years and the philosophic discussions published in Boston in 1879. This is nevertheless the case. The same qualities are present in both series of work—the same subtlety of thought, the same precision of language, the same power of imaginative creation; but their results present themselves in an inverted form; and while the real becomes visionary in the mind of the son, the visionary becomes real in that of the father. The moral neutrality of Mr. James, jun., is a natural transformation of the philosophic judgment to which good and evil are only relative terms; and his scepticism, rather than cynical, implies scarcely even a reaction from the faith, no less elastic than it is ardent, which his father reveals in the series of letters entitled 'Society the Redeemed Form of Man.' It is not my purpose to insist on these facts of mental continuity, which have obviously no bearing on the intrinsic merits of the book; but they may help to enlist the interest and fix the attention of readers to whom the order of thought which it presents has become foreign and in some degree uncongenial. It is a complete system of religious metaphysics based on the teaching of Swedenborg, and supported by frequent reference to and occasional quotations from him.

How far the Swedish seer would recognize himself in his disciple it is also beyond my province to determine. The divorce of head and heart, or the intellectual and the spiritual, so essential to that form of Christianity, is enforced by Mr. James with a scientific precision which is a virtual denial of it; and the picturesque language which gives to his most abstract formula the value of an image has still less in common with the primitive symbolism in which Swedenborg has rendered viable the supposed mysteries of heaven and hell. Nor has the doctrine of the master outgrown itself only in the changed literary forms of the added 140 years. Mr. James has spontaneously, if not unconsciously, absorbed into it many currents both of ancient and modern thought. He has adopted positivism in his assertion that human destiny only fulfils itself in the race; pantheism in the doctrine that the human creation is but the objective aspect of the Creator; a modified theism in the imputing of conditions to His activity. He raises visions of a Buddhist heaven, while explicitly denying that he intends it, in an ideal of virtue which weans human consciousness from its only thinkable subject; and again gives hostages to the higher materialism in declaring that immortality is the Divine life which may be realized in time, and that "post-mortem experience" is no equivalent for it. He believes absolutely in the Christian revelation as a spiritual pledge of the Divine-natural manhood, which is the last word of creation, and proclaims in every key his indifference to its literal facts. These varied and often conflicting elements are fused together in the unity of a personal conviction which bears the strain of every form of restatement, and which draws the reader as by a magnet along a mental tight-rope, from which one conscious glance to the right or left would precipitate him. The practical result of the system is, however, easy to grasp.

God is infinite love, and His primary impulse is, therefore, self-communication. But to impart Himself absolutely would be to repeat Himself. Creation requires the hallucination of a natural existence against which, as on a temporary background, the Divine Essence may project itself; and its object is only attained when the Divine Essence has passed from the delusions of natural personality, through progressive social forms, into the Divine-natural universal manhood, in which consciousness of self is absorbed. Hence the title of the book. Personality, or "selfhood," is only given to be sloughed away in the growing sense of the solidarity of all men with each other and of humanity with God. The whole duty of the human creature is bound up in the recognition of this truth. To indulge selfhood is pardonable, often innocent, if we disclaim it in any but its phenomenal and ministerial sense. To regard it as an ultimate or spiritual fact is the one bar to redemption.

The social or sympathetic nature of creation is the fundamental postulate of Mr. James's theology, and its grand point of divergence from all orthodox forms. Creator and creature are for him convertible terms, and "Deism as a philosophic doctrine—that is, as importing an essential difference between the Divine and human natures, or God and man—is a philosophic absurdity"; for "as long as I admit an essential contrast between the two natures, which I needs must do when I in thought identify the creative activity primarily with the geometry of the physical universe, and refuse to identify it, save in a very secondary and derivative or indirect way, with the laws of the human mind, I never can rationally acknowledge the Divine existence, nor consequently ever honestly worship it."

He denies all supernatural attributes or impersonal infinitudes to the Divinity with a persistency and clearness which would convert Him into a familiar fetish, if it were not that these terms are employed in an inverted sense, and that Mr. James proves the Divine to be human by presenting the human as Divine, nature being for him the metaphysical, not the physical, quality of human existence; its social and regenerate form, not the aggregate of its individual weaknesses and limitations. This rebellion against what he considers to be Christian superstition could go no farther than in the following words. He has declared a few lines back that "a man is in the long run only so much as he does, that there is no such thing as a chronic excellency—as an absolute or fossil perfection—ever practicable either to man or God"; and he thus continues:—

"I am free to confess for my own part that I have no belief in God's absolute or irrelative and unconditional perfection. I have not the least sentiment of worship for His name, the least sentiment of awe or reverence towards Him, considered as a perfect person sufficient unto Himself. That style of deity exerts no attraction either upon my heart or understanding. Any mother who suckles her babe upon her own breast, any bitch, in fact, who litters her periodical brood of pups, presents to my imagination a vastly nearer and sweeter Divine charm. What do I care for a goodness which boasts of a hopeless aloofness from my own nature—except to hate it with a manly inward hatred? And what do I care for a truth which professes to be eternally incommunicable to its own starving progeny—but to avert myself from it with a manly outward contempt? Let men go on to cherish under whatever name of virtue, or wisdom, or power they will the idol of Self-Sufficiency; I for my part will cherish the name of Him alone whose insufficiency to Himself is so abject that He is incapable of realising Himself except in others. In short, I neither can nor will spiritually confess any deity who is not essentially human, and existentially thence exclusively natural, that is to say, devoid of all distinctively personal or liminary pretensions."

Mr. James discards as an equal discredit to the Divine nature the belief that creation has been magical—magic being, as he defines it, "the art of producing things irrationally, or without the use of means"—and asserts that such a method would not only prove the Creator a mere "flashy showman or conjurer," but stamp His work as "a monstrous imposture" in consequence; and he contrasts the philosophic fatuity of those who imagine that "nothing" exists in some "preposterous limbo" beyond the realm of nature, and constitutes the mother-substance from which this has been evolved, with Swedenborg's truly philosophic conception that nature itself is the realm of uncreation, that is, the mother-substance, or logical background of contingent human existence. It is, however, in the treatment of this part of his subject that the author is most difficult to follow, and that we fall back most often on the evidence of a conviction in which his apparent contradictions are reconciled. He tells us in the name of Swedenborg what we are also told by Kant, that space and time are forms of the natural mind, and have no existence outside it; but he goes far beyond Kant when he says we must expect Swedenborg to deny all reality to nature, since nature is conditioned in space and time, being the sum-total of the limitations of the one and the vicinities of the other. He is on the ground of idealism when he tells us that nature is purely apparitional and subjective, and the only unitary or universal substance which underlies its forms is not nature, but man—man being identical with God. He passes from Fichte to Hegel in the assertion that the Divine Being produces from its own essence the mother-substance or nature without which, as he explains, creation would be as visionary and magical as children produced without a female parent or a crop raised without last year's grain; and this abstract mother-substance is again made to tantalise us by always hovering on the limits of a more conditioned existence. In describing the relation of thought to things he talks the language of science, and is justified in doing so, since he admits its truth in the constitutive sphere and accepts nature as an "authentic datum for it." He is consistent in declaring that every fact of consciousness implies a subject and an object, since he also declares that living knowledge or perception takes no cognizance of such a distinction; the dissecting into object and subject being a good logical analysis for "deceased facts," and possible only when facts are deceased and the mental stomach can present them to the gastric juice of the "ruminant or logical understanding." Nor does he lose sight of his metaphysical and subjective conception of nature when he maintains that to take away the object by resolving it into the sensations of the subject is to take away the subject also, because he here uses this word in a merely formal sense; but we are increasingly puzzled by the combined points of view of scientific existence and philosophic non-being; and when we refer these utterances to an earlier passage, where the idea of man's relation to the lower existences is stated in the usual form, and when we finally read that this metaphysical nature of ours involves physics as its necessary basis of manifestation, the hallucination theory of human experience seems to melt away, and Mr. James's universe to become as real, and its creation out of the pure Divine Essence as "magical," as that of any theist or atheist whose errors he is meaning to expose. I desire, however, rather to call attention to the intellectual subtlety of these arguments than to advance a criticism of them, which, supposing it to be just, could scarcely prove itself so in a cursory notice of the work.

In Mr. James's deductions from his philosophy of nature we touch more familiar ground. We find the orthodox distinction between fact and truth, between scientific observation and spiritual insight; and the author only carries it to its legitimate conclusion when he asserts that miracles may be good philosophy and yet very bad science, and that protoplasm is probably good science, but supremely unimportant to philosophy; in fact, a symbol of intellectual chaos. On the whole, he is more just to observation and more familiar with its results than might be expected from one who declares that its name is Esau, not Jacob; that it is born of the bondwoman, not of the free; and if he somewhat overrates its "ontologic pretensions," and cites Prof. Huxley as a leading instance of them, the error is too common to astonish us. His discussion of evolution as rendered possible only by involution is very ingenious; and when he professes himself willing to account for man on monkey principles, provided he may account for the monkey on man principles, I am not sure that Prof. Huxley himself would not sympathise with him. He is equally orthodox in divorcing morality from spiritual life, to which he makes it inferior by all the difference between the voluntary and the spontaneous, between a self-regarding submission to a civic code and the social virtue in which self is forgotten. Nothing could be more logical than his denial of all but a contingent reality to the whole mental and moral order of human existence. "Good and evil, heaven and hell, are not facts of creative, but of purely constitutive order. They bear primarily upon man's natural destiny, and have no relation to his spiritual freedom save through that. They are the mere geology of our natural consciousness, and this is all they are."

But he does not stop here. Morality not only is insufficient, it is injurious, because it tends to keep up the subjective consciousness which is "the characteristic natural evil of man"; that delusion of selfhood or proprium which is odious, imbecile, full of all danger and damnation. Even the morality which does not increase self-consciousness is better than the asceticism which does; this ultra-religious paradox receiving its fullest and most original expression in a footnote, of which we quote part:—"There is no way of getting to heaven but the way of self-denial, which is inward or spiritual humility. There are but few who are content to walk in this heavenly way I know, because it is not half so sweet and alluring to carnal thought as the way of self-indulgence, which is that of saintly asceticism. There is nothing so inwardly nourishing to selfhood in man as the culture of asceticism, or the practice of needlessly numbing one's innocent and unconscious flesh; for, of course, the more that is done of this unrequired or gratuitous work, the more the subject's complacency in himself abounds, and the greater grows his sense of merit, which is the source of all our spiritual defilement. Our nature never prompts any mortification to the flesh in us; for the flesh is always divinely sweet and modest until it has been bedevilled by our ascetic efforts to worry some comfort out of it to our self-righteous pretensions; but only to the fleshly mind, which is the exact mind of the ascetic or church saint"; and he finally lands himself in an attack upon the Church, which he denounces as a system of other-worldliness, and the parent or protagonist of "all the spiritual evil latent or possible in human nature." He passes lightly over the "very unhandsome pre-natal physiological development,.....while she was still an immature and unborn providential embryo in the earth, peopling it, too, with every uncouth, unclean, and monstrous form of life below the human"; and over the earlier self-conscious stage, of which the corruption "culminated, or became a momentous historical phenomenon, in the gross fanatical lineaments of the Jewish theocracy: certainly from a spiritual point of view the most complete and comprehensive embodiment of ungodliness ever divinely consecrated in human annals." Her lasting crime has been that she found her mission in the Christian revelation and has belied it; for that mission was to bear witness to the literal and miraculous facts which can alone convey Divine truth to the sensuous understanding; and from a witness she has erected herself into a judge; from a nursing-mother, whose function was to supply the pure milk of Gospel tradition, into a teacher presiding over its conversion. She fosters self-hood, self-righteousness, the "sentiment of moral worth, which is the sentiment of distinction or difference between men and men"; she teaches "that the only imaginable theory of Christ's office is to save men in their individual persons or their piddling private capacities, and not at all as a nature or race, and consequently that their only chance of salvation at His hands lies in their diligently and impudently appropriating Him every one to his worthless and insignificant little self." "Her pretension in humanity is in short the ultimate natural or outward form of all man's spiritual profligacy." Her action is as absurd as it is mischievous in such noisy evangelists as the "late collapsed Mr. Moody" or the "present distended Mr. Cook"; and it is matter for rejoicing that a "humptious and inexorable but providential science" seems destined to sweep such "venomous little ecclesiasticisms" out of the way, and hasten the birth of a new spiritual life for the American nation.

The quaintness and vigour, the sarcasm and the invective of Mr. James's language are in curious contrast with the not only religious but spiritual tendency of his work. To the modern English mind they are the very antidote to spiritual emotion. Yet no form of words has ever accompanied a more lofty enthusiasm for the religious life. His system of ethics is a wholesale denial of the principle of individualism which, whether in its selfish or sympathetic form, is the basis of every working theory of morals which has taken root in a European race. In his conception Christianity casts off the reproach of selfishness which philosophic morality imputes to it; and his earnestness proves that a theism is possible which subjugates personality in the spiritual more completely than does positivism in the moral sphere, while it only excuses such developments of the natural existences as the latter system would include in the larger destiny of mankind. But it is doubtful whether it will ever prove itself more than possible. It does more to reconcile the reason and the imagination than any known form of theism, but it does less to conciliate the natural human emotions which underlie both. It abolishes the individual by means of social affections, which tend neither to a glorified self-consciousness after death nor to an enlarged self-consciousness during life. It exacts, in short, more than either Christianity or positivism, and gives less in return; for its rewards are smaller than those of the former faith, and less thinkable than those of the latter. If the direction of thought were towards transcendental belief, Mr. James's religion might be that of the future. It still retains the educative value of a brilliant mental phenomenon, the joint result of an ardent faith and an absolutely fearless scepticism. His book is also a literary study; and those of his readers who deplore the decadence of Saxon English on our side of the Atlantic may have the not unmingled pleasure of seeing that it has suffered no decline on the other. A. ORR.

"THE MELANCHOLY JAIQUES."

Athenæum Club, July, 1880.

I SHOULD much like, in common I suspect with others of your readers, to be informed, by some of the learned and acute Shakespearean critics who write in your columns, if there be any authority for our common pronunciation of the name of the cynical lord in 'As You Like It' as if it were spelled "Jaikes." Surely Shakespeare himself and his company did not say "Jaikes." It was certainly in the fashion at the courts of Elizabeth and of James to use French words and French phrases. Why should we suppose that Shakespeare was ignorant of the right pronunciation of the commonest of all French proper names? When it comes to speaking the word in blank verse we are landed in what seems to me a very palpable absurdity. "Jaques" as a monosyllable does well enough in the line which ends,

"What said the melancholy Jaques?"

But I notice, in the beautiful rendering of the play by Miss Lutton's company at Drury Lane, that the actor who speaks the line,

To-day as I and Jaques lay along, has no alternative but to convert the word into a most barbarous dissyllable, which to my ears is only spellable "Jaikwé." (I quote from the acting version, but the name requires the same scanning in all the accepted editions.) Now, I do not believe that Shakespeare ever meant that so false a note as "Jaikwé" should be sounded in the sweet music of his verse. I know that stage tradition is in favour of the Drury Lane pronunciation, but is this tradition authentic? Does it derive from Shakespeare's time? I believe there is no certain record of the acting of 'As You Like It' for more than one hundred years after Shakespeare's death. Tradition therefore, if it exists, cannot be unbroken tradition. If Shakespeare meant the name to be spoken in the French way, with the fully sounded s, all difficulties of scansion, of course, vanish at once, for the s would then be sounded or made mute as the line required a word of two syllables or of one syllable, in accordance with the usage of all French poets and of our own Chaucer.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

PROF. MOMMSEN'S LIBRARY.

An intimate friend of Prof. Mommsen sends us the following details respecting the calamity which has befallen that eminent scholar:—

"On my visit to-day, the 16th, I received full confirmation of what the papers announced. The professor is still busily engaged searching the debris. Of books not many more are coming to light entire. His library must really be regarded as destroyed. The ancient manuscripts from foreign libraries which were in his hands are partly damaged, no doubt; but it would seem that they may be regarded as having as a body been practically saved. This was the case with the most important manuscript of Jordanis's Gothic history, which he had edited for the 'Monumenta Germaniae.' The edition is ready printed. In the collection of Roman inscriptions the main loss is in South Italy, because it will not perhaps be possible to collect again all the materials. The collection of Swiss inscriptions is also lost, and Mommsen will at once undertake its reconstruction, and so soon as he can get away he will proceed to Switzerland—not, as the papers say, to North Italy. Mommsen's

MS. of his lectures must be considered as destroyed, and they can only approximately be replaced from the note-books of his hearers. His collectanea are lost, and among these are unfortunately included those for the 'Römisches Staatsrecht' and the Roman history, and most valuable critical materials collected for the edition of the oldest writers on German history.

"Many steps are being taken to restore his library. The Academy of Sciences yesterday decided to re-present him with the books which he received as a member. It has further been suggested that workers in his department should send him such of their writings as deal with subjects that interest the professor. The idea is being put in execution in Germany, and it is hoped and desired that foreign scholars may join in the movement.

"I sought out Mommsen the morning after the catastrophe, and found him very much depressed. All references to his vigour and mental freshness and the possible restoration of his library were of no avail. To-day he was quite different—of course grave, and still thinking much of the greatness of the mischance that has befallen him, but on the whole collected and absorbed in the immediately necessary exertions. Already it was pleasant to observe that he deliberately used the phrase 'Misgeschick,' while on Monday he said 'Unglück.'"

Literary Gossip.

An attempt is being made to establish an association of a novel kind. Its promoters design to collect, receive, and diffuse intelligence from trustworthy, competent, and impartial sources in all the countries concerned in the "Eastern Question." A very short study of the contradictory and exaggerated telegrams from Constantinople and elsewhere which have appeared in the daily papers during the last four years, and the memory, still fresh, of certain heated discussions based upon insufficient evidence on either side, prove the possible advantages of such an association, which is necessarily without political bias, if its information can be depended upon. Mr. Whitaker, of the Levant Herald, has consented to make the necessary arrangements for obtaining trustworthy letters, at regular intervals, from the most important places. The promoters propose taking convenient rooms, where their subscribers may receive and read the letters as they arrive. The arrangements will probably include printing the letters in some form for subscribers. The rooms may possibly be opened by October. It has been decided to ask those who join to hold themselves liable for the sum of 10*l.* each, beyond which there will be no further liability. Among those who have already given in their names are Lords Dunraven and Melgund, the Hon. Percy Wyndham, M.P., the Hon. Philip Stanhope, M.P., Mr. Arthur Otway, M.P., Mr. Henry Brand, M.P., Sir Algernon Borthwick, Capt. Gill, Mr. Charles E. Austin, and Mr. Laurence Oliphant. The last named will receive letters from those who wish to join, addressed to him at the Athenæum Club, Pall Mall.

The forthcoming number of Macmillan's Magazine will contain a memorial notice of Mr. Tom Taylor, from the pen of Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C. In it will be found some details of his early career, of some interest in themselves, and revealing a side of his character hardly to be suspected by those who knew him only in his later time. There will be also an article called 'Journalists malgré Lui,' in which, under a thin disguise, a well-known English author relates some strange facts of recent occurrence in a French provincial town.

The final meeting for the season of the Rabelais Club took place on the 20th inst., Mr. F. Pollock occupying the chair. Among those present were his Excellency the American Minister, Lord Houghton, Sir F. Pollock, Messrs. Woolner, R.A., Frith, R.A., Moulton, F.R.S., and many others. A volume consisting of the miscellanies which have from time to time been laid before the meetings is in preparation.

Mr. F. BOYLE has, we understand, started for Greece as special correspondent of the Standard. This looks as if Mr. Boyle expected that stirring events are going to occur on the Greek frontier.

LADY DUFFUS HARDY, who for the past twelve months has been travelling in the United States, has written a book on America, which will be published in London in the autumn.

A BILL affecting the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge has just been brought from the Lords. It is for the purpose of authorizing the extension and further limitation of the tenures of certain university and college emoluments limited or to be limited by orders of the Oxford and Cambridge Commissioners.

THE speculative builder is destroying another place of historic interest. The Manor House, Stoke Newington, where Edgar Poe and other celebrities went to school, and which tradition connects with the times of Queen Elizabeth and the Commonwealth, is being pulled down to make way for a row of shops. Of late years it has been a place of much interest for American travellers.

We have been asked to say that Lieut.-Col. Fergusson will feel grateful to any one who will kindly furnish him with certified copies of, or information regarding, letters of Henry Erskine, Lord Advocate for Scotland towards the end of the last century and at the beginning of the present, such as would be useful to supplement family papers in the preparation of a sketch of the great lawyer. The originals of any such letters, if forwarded to 18, Lennox Street, Edinburgh, would be copied at once and returned.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press a volume entitled 'The Aryan Village, Past and Present, in Bengal and Ceylon,' by Sir John B. Phear, formerly Chief Justice of Ceylon, and one of the judges of the High Court of Judicature in Calcutta.

THE third annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom is fixed for the 5th, 6th, and 7th of October, at Edinburgh, in the rooms of the Royal Society. Special attention will be devoted to the libraries of Scotland and to classification and binding. The Council invite early offers of papers for the meeting.

THE death is announced, at the age of nearly eighty years, of Mr. Benjamin Poole, the editor of the Coventry Standard and the author of a History of Coventry.

THE annual meeting of the Metropolitan Free Libraries Association was held at the rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society on Friday, the 9th inst., Mr. T. Hughes in the chair. The Report stated that the Council had directed its special attention to the object of consolidating and amending the Public Libraries Acts for England, and that it was assured of the willingness of those members of Parliament who were on the Council to promote the passing of a new Act whenever the condition of public business afforded an opportunity. In furtherance of the same object the co-operation of the Library Association—a body in which nearly every important library in the kingdom is represented—had been spontaneously offered and promptly accepted. A Bill had been drafted. The attempt to establish a free library in Camberwell during the past year, though successful at a public meeting of the ratepayers, was defeated on a poll. Had the votes been taken by voting papers delivered at the houses of the ratepayers, under the Act of 1877—as was done at Richmond—Camberwell, like Richmond, would doubtless now be in the enjoyment of its free library. The Report was adopted and the accounts passed.

WE do not often hear of an author travelling some thousands of miles to see his works through the press, but such is the case in the instance of the Rev. John Cooper, who has just set out from London for his home near Melbourne, Australia, having visited England to personally superintend the issue of three books written by him, and which will be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton during the autumn. They will be announced as embodying "vital truths for present-day thinkers." Mr. Cooper is the author of 'The Science of Spiritual Life,' which was first published in Melbourne, a second edition being issued by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.

PROF. WILMANS, the head of the University Library of Göttingen, is now in England for the purpose of studying the arrangements of our great libraries, in order to select the best system for the new Göttingen Library, which is now in course of construction.

ONE of the oldest names connected with the bookselling trade in London is that of Bumpus, one of the members of which family died the other day, viz., Mr. John Bumpus, of Oxford Street.

PROF. D. HORSCHMANN, of Dorpat, is engaged upon a new edition of Hephæstion's 'Enchiridion de Metris,' based chiefly on the Bodleian MSS.

WE regret to learn that the Library Journal is to be discontinued as a separate publication. Some of its practical features, however, will be transferred to the Publisher's Weekly (New York). The publisher states that the Library Journal has been issued at a loss from the very beginning in 1876.

'LORD BRACKENBURY,' the new story by Miss Amelia B. Edwards, author of 'Barbara's History,' 'Debenham's Vow,' &c., will be published by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett in August.

MR. ROBERT HARRISON, of the London Library, writes:—

"The announcement in your 'Literary Gossip' that Mr. J. P. Anderson is about to publish a catalogue of the works on British topography now in the British Museum has taken me by surprise. Had I known that such a work was in hand, I should not have entered on the task of preparing my 'Index to the Topographical Literature of England and Wales,' which will soon be published by the Index Society, and which was announced in your columns nearly two years ago. It is to be hoped that the two works thus maturing together will not interfere with each other, but that there will be room both for my handbook and for Mr. Anderson's more extensive and, as I presume, more specially bibliographical work."

THE death is announced of Mr. Thomas Dixon, of Sunderland, the working man to whom Mr. Ruskin wrote the letters afterwards published under the title 'By Wear and Tyne.' Mr. Dixon, who was by trade a corkcutter, was a remarkable man for his class, and took very great interest in all matters appertaining to literature and the fine arts. He has been the means of acquiring many books and pictures for the Sunderland institutions. He died on the 11th of July, aged forty-nine years.

THE MS. "Discipline" of the Walloon Church of Norwich of 1589, recently mentioned in these columns as having been acquired by the British Museum, where it now stands as Egerton 2568, was printed at full length, with an introduction and notes by Miss Toulmin Smith, in Mr. Walter Rye's 'Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany,' Part I. Vol. II. (1879). Though not the only example of a French Church "Discipline" in England, it is the oldest and most complete known, the other two, London and Canterbury, only dating from 1641. An interesting feature of the Norwich MS. is the seven clauses as to "prophecy," according to early Elizabethan custom. The signatures of ministers, elders, and deacons appended include some well-known names, such as those of Basnage, Gaston Martineau, and others. As some of the names are difficult to decipher, Miss T. Smith asks us to say that she will be happy to assist any one who may be interested in them.

THE New York Nation announces the death of Dr. George Ripley, for many years past the literary editor of the New York Tribune:—

"He graduated at Harvard in 1823, taught mathematics for a time at the college while completing his studies at the Divinity School, and in 1828 was settled over a Congregational Church in Boston. In the division among the Unitarians which was signalized in 1838, he sided with the Transcendentalists, and when, in 1840, the Dial was founded, Mr. Ripley was one of its editors. The next year he retired from the pulpit, and took the leading part in the Brook Farm socialistic experiment, and held to it loyally till 1847, being the president of the association, of which the later phases were Fourieristic. Transition to service under Mr. Greeley was thus made easy, and Mr. Ripley joined the Tribune staff in 1849. His literary activity made him a contributor also to numerous periodicals, and he was one of the founders of Harper's Magazine. In connexion with Mr. Charles A. Dana he edited the first and second editions of 'Appletons' Cyclopædia' (1858-63 and 1873-79). Before the close of his ministry he had directed the publication of a philosophical series entitled 'Specimens of Foreign Standard Literature,' in fourteen volumes, begun in 1838. As a reviewer he was the type of the 'genial critic,' much given to what the Tribune calls 'expository reviews,' not meaning by that mere scissors-work, but fluent—perhaps too fluent—summaries of the contents of the work under consideration."

THE Rev. Herbert E. Reynolds, librarian of Exeter Cathedral, is engaged upon a collation of the documents which relate to Lichfield, Lincoln, Exeter, and Wells Cathedrals. These are now in the press, and may be expected in a collective and also separate form in the autumn.

To those who care to watch examination lists it is a subject of speculation whether University College or New Kingswood School (the school for sons of Wesleyan ministers) will gain the first place in matriculation at London University, or whether the ladies will wrest the palm from them. In the last examination, in which there has been a very great number of failures, Mr. Workman, from Kingswood School, takes the first place in honours and the first exhibition; Mr. Moritz, from University College, the second; and Miss E. S. Collet, from the North London Collegiate School, the third, with the third exhibition. Ladies take five out of the first fourteen places, all of these attaining the number of marks qualifying for prizes, and sixteen names out of eighty-five in honours are those of ladies. Twenty-four in the first class also are ladies, and only one lady is in the second class.

THE memorial to the memory of Janet Hamilton, the Langlois poetess, of which we have already made mention, was unveiled last week. Prof. Veitch delivered a speech on the occasion.

A MANUSCRIPT of the Gospels, written on purple parchment in silver ink, and adorned with miniatures, was recently discovered in Calabria by Messrs. O. von Gebhardt and A. Harnack. A set of reproductions of the miniatures has just been published at Leipzig, and a collation of the text is promised. The MS. contains St. Matthew and St. Mark. The discoverers would fix as early a date as the end of the fifth century or beginning of the sixth for both the miniatures and the text. Such a bold claim will need investigation.

AMONG German announcements are the following books: 'Das Recht des Besitzes bei den Römern,' by Prof. Bekker, of Heidelberg; 'Volkschauspiele, in Baiern und Oesterreich - Ungarn gesammelt,' by An. Hartmann, of the Staatsbibliothek at Munich; 'Das Oberammergauer Passionsspiel in seiner Aeltesten Gestalt,' the first publication of the original; the first volume of the 'Gesammelte Schriften' of Dr. Litz; a 'Griechische Grammatik' by Prof. Meyer, of Gratz; 'Ein Skizzenbuch von Beethoven aus dem Jahre 1803, in Auszügen dargestellt,' by G. Nottebohm; and an 'Allgemeine Theorie der Musikalischen Rhythmik seit J. S. Bach,' by Prof. Westphal.

MESSRS. HANNAH's Monthly List of Parliamentary Papers for June enumerates seventy-nine Reports and Papers, seventy-nine Bills, and eighty-six Papers by Command. The most important items are, among the Reports, the Return of Financial Statement on which the Calculations are based of Payments to be made to London Water Companies under proposed Metropolitan Waterworks Purchase Bill; the Report of Lieut.-Col. Bolton on Metropolitan Water; Statements and Abstracts of Reports of Life Assurance Companies deposited with the Board of Trade for the Year 1879; Return of the Receipts and Payments, Annual Expenses, &c., of Savings Banks for the Year 1879; and Account of Liabilities, Assets, and Deficiency of Savings Banks in each Year from 1860 to 1879. Among the Bills will be noted the two short titles, Hares and Rabbits and Employers' Liability (Amended). Important Papers by Command are: Report by Mr. Ormiston, C.E., on Improvements proposed at the Harbour of Famagousta; Report of the Progress of the Ordnance Survey to December 31st, 1879; and New Code of Regulations, Education Department, 1880.

OUR Correspondent, M. S. Lambros, is at present at Mount Athos, busy preparing catalogues of the MSS. in the libraries and archives. He is accompanied by three university students who can read and copy medieval MSS., by a painter, and an engraver. At Mount Athos there is a photographer, and some of the monks have studied palaeography at Athens under M. Lambros, and will aid his labours, which have every promise of success.

MR. HARTSHORNE writes:—

"With reference to the notice in the Athenæum of July 17th respecting the sale of the Sunderland Library, it appears that the Valdarfer Boccaccio of 1471 has been confounded with the edition of 1472 by Adam de Michaelibus. The former volume, the Boccaccio by Christopher Valdarfer, was sold in the Roxburghs sale, June 17th, 1812, to the Marquess of Blandford for 2,200l. When the Blandford Library was dispersed in 1819, this precious book was bought by Longmans for Lord Spencer for 918l., and it has since that time remained the choicest treasure of the Althorp Library. According to Dibdin the edition of 1472 is probably the rarer book of the two. He says that there is no perfect copy in England except it be that in the Blenheim collection."

SCIENCE

BOTANICAL SCHOOL-BOOKS.

Introduction to the Study of Flowers. By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D. (Chambers.)

A VERY simple and easy book to place in the hands of a school teacher, or, if we may be permitted the expression, "middle-aged" scholar. It seems well adapted to improve and develop the faculty of observation, and by the occasional introduction of morphological generalizations, it may serve to promote the reflective faculties also. We demur to the statement (p. 24) that the calyx tube enters in an important degree into the formation of the fruit in the apple, rose, &c. We think there is now no longer room to doubt that what Dr. Wilson calls calyx tube is really receptacular tube; but if objection be raised to this interpretation, why not say flower tube, which, while correct in itself, does not favour one theory more than another?

Botany for Children: an Illustrated Elementary Text-Book for Junior Classes and Young Children. By the Rev. George Henslow, M.A. (Stanford.)

FOLLOWING in the steps of his venerated father, the Rev. George Henslow has here issued an elementary text-book for children's use. The method adopted is to take some common wild plant and point out its different parts and the manner in which they are arranged. Another is taken and treated in a similar way. Then the two are compared, their points of resemblance and of difference noted, the inferences from these facts explained, and various items of information concerning the structure and uses of the plants incidentally furnished. The book is illustrated with several lithographic illustrations, rather coarsely executed, and the analyses generally lack clearness and are on too small a scale.

An Elementary Text-Book of Botany. Translated from the German of Dr. Prantl, the translation revised by S. H. Vines, M.A., D.Sc. (Sonnenschein & Allen.)

THIS is a translation of a German work destined for the use of students for whom the great and ill-digested 'Lehrbuch' of Sachs is not adapted. It will be hailed with acclamation by many no longer in statu pupillari, and who, while anxious to see and understand somewhat of the new aspect given to botanical science by Prof. Sachs, have been deterred from so doing either by inability to read his magnum opus in the original, or by disinclination to undertake so formidable a task as the study of the translation. It must be remembered that to a considerable extent Sachs's book entails upon the pre-Sachsian student the necessity of going to school again, a process not agreeable in itself, and for which very few can find the requisite time. To such readers the present digest will be received as a boon. To some extent it will reassure them, by showing them that much that appears new and strange is simply old material redressed. New terms are introduced with more or less justification, but comparatively little is done to amend or abolish old ones which are no longer in accordance with the state of science. Some, indeed, must always have been used in a conventional sense; for instance, such a term as we meet with on opening the present book, where, on p. 3, we find the "insertion" of the leaf spoken of. It is clear from the explanation given that "exsertion" would be a more correct expression of the facts of the case. A page or two further on we find the term "decurent" made use of in its conventional acceptance, but one that, to say the least, requires verification to ascertain whether or no it represents the actual truth. But while old terms have been retained and new ones devised upon slender grounds, it would convey a very false impression of the value of modern German botany if the reader were to infer that innovations in terminology are its most noteworthy features. On the contrary, new ideas, fertile in their application, have originated in Germany, and we have only to compare Sachs's 'Lehrbuch,' or the excellent digest of it we owe to Drs. Prantl and Vines, with English text-books of a dozen years since to see the great advance that has been made. Without going into chemical and physical questions connected with vegetable physiology—in which, however, the advance has been mainly made by German investigators—we may mention the broad generalizations connected with the alternations of generations in plants. A "spore," or reproductive body, will at one time or in one group of plants reproduce itself or grow into something quite different—a new individual, a resting spore, a fructification, a prothallus, as the case may be—and these states or stages serve to link together groups of plants whose relationship was formerly considered very remote, and to furnish suggestions, at least, of the origin and lineage of existing plants. Connected with this subject also are the curious phenomena of "heterocism," by virtue of which a parasitic plant, growing now on one host-plant, now on another of a different character, assumes quite a different appearance. In this manner may be explained the belief, prevalent among farmers and long scouted by naturalists, that there is a connexion between the rust of the barberry leaves and that of the wheat plant. What was ridiculed and pronounced impossible has become an accepted doctrine, based upon facts which can no longer be gainsaid. One of the most recently ascertained facts of this nature is that which shows the connexion between the blight so common on silver fir in Switzerland and a mould on the leaves of the Alpine rhododendron. In anatomy the molecular nature of cell membrane and the discrimination and definition of particular layers of cellular tissue have received special attention at the hands of the Germans, and much interest has been excited by the correlation of the three such layers in the developing embryo of flowering plants with the corresponding embryonic membranes in animals. When analogies like these can be made out we become reconciled to the use of such terms as "plerome," "fundamental tissue," "periblem," or "dermatogen," which at first seemed needless refinements. Botany in England, always accepting systematic classification and those departments to which Mr. Darwin directly and indirectly has contributed so much, had fallen into a sort of unproductive routine, which is reflected in the text-books of the period, and from which such works as the present will do much to extricate it.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

SOME of the fruits of Dr. Paul Topinard's recent visit to London appear in an article by him on the Hunterian Museum and the craniometric method of Prof. Flower in the Revue d'Anthropologie, published July 16th. It would be of great advantage if the study of each other's methods by the distinguished craniologists of this country and of France should lead to uniformity. The extent to which uniformity has been attained is shown by Dr. Topinard's statement that of ten measurements given for each skull in Prof. Flower's Catalogue, six are taken rigorously according to the French method. The variations in the other four are so slight that Topinard comes to the conclusion that, except as to the cranial capacity, it cannot be said that the English osteometric methods differ notably from the French. He maintains, however, his preference for small shot as the measure of capacity over mustard seed, the substance used by Prof. Flower for that purpose.

The same Revue acquaints us that the French Legislature, on the proposition of the Minister of Public Instruction, has just voted the following liberal grants towards anthropological missions: 1,800l. (sterling) to M. de Ujfalvy, for a three years' journey upon the Upper Oxus, in continuation of his previous researches upon the populations; 1,000l. to M. Cahen for a mission in Syria and Mesopotamia; 1,600l. to Dr. Crevaux for the continuation of his researches in the basin of the Upper Amazon; 1,800l. to M. Déaïre Charnay for procuring photographs of the ancient monuments of Yucatan. In addition, without subvention, Dr. Cauvin will represent the Government at the Melbourne Exhibition in the interests of anthropology, and Dr. Hacks will go on a mission to the East Indies. Three other missions have been reported upon favourably by the Commission, viz., those of M. Revoll to the Somalis, M. Moindron to the northern coast of New Guinea, and M. Flahaut to the Polar Seas. A majority of these gentlemen were pupils in the laboratory of the late Dr. Broca.

An exhibition of German prehistoric anthropology will take place at Berlin next month, under the presidency of Prof. Virchow.

NOTES FROM NAPLES.

July 12, 1880.

THE Pungolo reports that a meteorological and seismographic observatory is to be established near the summit of Vesuvius. The site fixed upon is the upper station of the funicular railway, which is not far distant from the crater. The object in view is to observe with the minutest attention and permanently the phenomena presented by the mountain. The observatory will be supplied with the best instruments, which have already been ordered from well-known houses in Munich, Paris, and London. The direction of the seismographic observatory will be entrusted to the pupil of a scientific Frenchman, whilst the meteorological observatory, it is reported, will be worked on account of the New York Herald.

The Pangolo publishes another notice which may interest the readers of the Athenæum. It is that on the 1st of September there will be a meeting in Turin of the directors of the meteorological observatories of the Italian Alps and Apennines in correspondence with one another. This association, which was first established fifteen years ago, has from a very moderate beginning now extended itself all over Italy, and it is desired to give it a firmer and more definite form. Students of meteorological science generally are invited, and are promised a courteous reception by the Italian Alpine Club and the Municipality of Turin. The termination is announced of an important work by Demetrio Salasero, entitled 'Studi sui Monumenti dell'Italia Meridionale dal IV^{to} al XIII^{to} Secolo.' The second volume, which is just completed, describes the monuments of the Apulias, of the Calabrias, and of Sicily. The author visited all the places of which he speaks, and during his long and laborious journeys made discoveries of new monuments of art and of unknown artists which add another interesting page to the artistic history of Southern Italy. The Commendatore Salasero, under the impression that a close relation exists between Southern Italian art and Roman art in the mediæval ages, will very shortly publish the monuments belonging to the Middle Ages which still exist in Rome and its neighbourhood. H. W.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

It is proposed to issue a relief map of Athens and the Piræus, similar to Mr. Burn's relief map of Rome. The size of the map would be about 32 by 24 inches. The scale would be five inches to the mile, with the vertical scale slightly exaggerated. Intending subscribers should send their names to the Rev. R. Burn, Cambridge, before October 1st, when the list will be closed.

Major E. Rowland Jones, author of 'Lincoln, Sherman, and Grant' and other works, is preparing for early publication 'The Emigrant's Friend,' a manual of "complete, authentic, and impartial information for those who contemplate leaving 'the Old Home' to try their fortunes in the West." The author, a naturalized citizen of the United States, and during the last twelve years consul for that country at Newcastle-on-Tyne, spent most of his life in the wheat-growing states of America. Messrs. Hamilton, Adams & Co. will publish the work.

Signor Chiarini died at Kialla, in Ghara, on the 5th of October, 1879, in consequence of the privations to which he was subjected by the queen of that small country, which nominally owes allegiance to the king of Shoa. The two travellers never reached Kafa, and Cochi still continues a prisoner, and is appealing for help.

Dr. Emin Bey has returned from an exploration of the western shores of Lake Albert Nyanza, bringing with him a large collection of shells and other objects of natural history. There remains now no doubt that the lake first discovered by Baker and that visited by Stanley form distinct basins. The Larragot, which Gami stated to flow out of the Upper Nile towards the west, was examined by Emin Bey, who is not yet sure whether it is a backwater or an arm of that river.

MR. W. A. LLOYD.

We regret to announce the sudden death of Mr. Lloyd, the well-known authority on aquaria. Mr. Lloyd was originally apprenticed to a book-binder, but his strong love of science enabled him to overcome surroundings little favourable to such pursuits as his. Attention was drawn in this journal to Mr. Lloyd, and he was enabled to pursue the obvious bent of his mind. He made himself the great authority on aquaria, and the services he rendered during the many years he was in charge of the Crystal Palace

Aquarium will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Lloyd's reputation extended to the Continent, and led to his being employed in arranging the aquarium at Hamburg. Mr. Lloyd retired some little time ago from the Crystal Palace, to the great loss of that institution. His single-mindedness and unselfish generosity endeared him to all who knew him.

SOCIETIES.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—July 7.—J. W. Dunning, Esq., V.P., in the chair.—Mr. J. West, on behalf of Mr. J. W. Douglas, exhibited a female specimen of Noctua e-nigrum.—Mr. M'Lachlan exhibited a piece of sugarcane from Queensland, much eaten by some undetermined lepidopterous larva, of which specimens were shown.—Mr. W. L. Distant was able to state that this was a quite distinct larva from that infesting sugar-canes in Madras, of which he had recently received specimens.—Miss Ormerod exhibited specimens of various sugar-cane borers from British Guiana, and read notes thereon.—Mr. Distant exhibited a specimen of the larva of Hyalophora e-nigrum, the so-called vegetable caterpillar of New Zealand. The spores of Cordiceps Herberti frequently falling on this caterpillar become parasitic, destroying it and growing therefrom in the form which has caused many erroneous statements to be made.—Mr. Billups exhibited a larva of Phaenocarpa, and some specimens of an ichneumon (Pachyloma, sp.) that was parasitic thereon.—Mr. Phipson exhibited a remarkable variety of Pyrausta cardui.—A note was read from Mr. S. Churchill, of Teheran, 'On Argas Pernicea.'—Mr. R. Trimen communicated notes 'On the Pairing of a Butterfly with a Moth,' and 'On a supposed Female of Dorylus heisteria, Linn.'—Messrs. Godman and Salvin communicated a paper entitled 'A List of Diurnal Lepidoptera collected in the Sierra Nevada de Santa Marta, Colombia, and the Vicinity.'

PHILOLOGICAL.—July 15.—Adjourned Special Meeting.—A. J. Ellis, Esq., President, in the chair.—The discussion of Mr. H. Sweet's notes was completed. It was resolved that es—short e should be spelled e, as in breed, breeds, &c., but that ea—long a, as in great, or long e as in ear, tear, should be left for the present; that is in believe, field, &c., should give way to the older ee (believe, field); that the tu or u should be restored, behave, law, &c. (behave, law), and that u should be replaced by u in above, affront, longue, &c. (above, affront, longue); the unhistoric u in through and young should be left out (thru, yung), and in the Old French loan-words adjour, country, &c. (adjuyn, country); u after g was to disappear in guess, guild, guarantee, &c. (guess, gild, guarantee), but to be left in guinea, guilt, &c.; u final was to be left out, and catalog, dragage, dialog, &c., to be written catalog, dragag, dialog, &c.; u was to disappear from rhyme, thyme; u to be substituted for u in corner, shor, &c. In consonants, the double final of ebb, add, odd, &c., and the double central of travelling, &c., should be cut away; u should go out of debt, doubt, subtle, and off crumb, dumb, lamb, &c. Hard ck was to be written ch, anchor as ancher; h should be left out of ghost, aghost; l out of cold; f should replace the Greek ph; s should be written s when so sounded, as chance, &c.; ss should become s, as or, or, according to its sound. The proposal to change laugh, rough, rough, &c., into legh, trogh, rug, was rejected, some members preferring laff, troff, raf. Mr. H. Sweet undertook to revise his notes, to add longish lists of the words which the principles temporarily adopted would affect, and to draw up specimens of passages from old and modern writers in the reformed spelling. The whole subject will then be reconsidered, and settled one way or the other, at the Society's meetings next November.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY.

THE authorities of Guy's Hospital Medical School have resolved upon making an idle first year's student a rare thing, if the help of a compulsory and non-competitive examination is sufficient for that purpose. This examination has just been held for the first time, and students have had four elementary papers on the principal subjects of their first year's lectures. The progress of our great hospitals into fully organized medical colleges is thus proceeding without hindrance; but a conjoint examination for diplomas is as far off as ever.

On the resignation of Mr. G. R. Waterhouse, Dr. Henry Woodward, F.R.S., has succeeded him in office as Keeper of the Geological Department in the British Museum. This is one of the most fortunate appointments the Trustees have been able to make for some time. Mr. Waterhouse entered the Museum in 1843, and became Keeper in 1851. Dr. H. Woodward entered the Museum in 1856, and attained the grade of first-class assistant in 1867.

M. PASTEUR has received from the Government of France the sum of 50,000 francs in aid of his researches on the contagious diseases of animals.

M. TAMECA, well known from his connexion for twenty-five years with the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, has quitted that establishment, his office having been considered unnecessary by M. Tiard, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.

DR. M. C. COOK has entered on his duties at Kew Gardens as cryptogamist, the India Office having placed his services at the disposal of the Office of Woods and Forests.

THE Monthly Record of Results of Observations in Meteorology, Terrestrial Magnetism, &c., taken at the Melbourne Observatory and various localities in Victoria during December, 1879, has been received. The mean of the barometer for the year has been 29.913 and the mean temperature of the air for the year 57.6. The Mineral Statistics of Victoria for the year 1879 are also to hand. The estimated yield of gold has been, from alluvial deposits 293,310 ounces, from quartz mines 466,637 ounces. The quantity of silver extracted from the gold at the Melbourne Mint in that year was 23,680.76 ounces, representing a value equal to 5,920*l*. The other mineral products were in quantity unimportant.

PROF. HUGHES, of Trinity College, Cambridge, will be glad of the loan of letters of the late Prof. Sedgwick, whose life he is writing.

PROF. C. W. BORCHARDT, of the University of Berlin, died at Rüdersdorf on the 27th of June. For many years Prof. Borchardt edited the Journal of Pure and Applied Mathematics. He was formerly the Professor of Mathematics in the Military Academy, and he was correspondent in Geometry of the Académie des Sciences de Paris.

CAPT. C. E. DUTTON, of the Ordnance Department, has published his 'Report on the Geology of the High Plateaus of Utah,' a volume of 307 pages, with eleven heliotype plates and a folio atlas. The physical features of this interesting country are graphically described, and the geological phenomena which have been active in producing the strangely wild conditions of the plateau province are carefully examined.

PROF. NEWBERRY has recently contributed to the New York School of Mines Quarterly a paper 'On the Origin and Classification of Ore Deposits,' which has been reprinted by the Scientific Publishing Co. of New York. We direct attention to this pamphlet as containing much useful information and the clearest exposition of the phenomena of mineral veins that we have met with.

THE Archivum Néerlandais des Sciences Exactes et Naturelles, published by the Société Hollandaise des Sciences à Harlem, Tome IV. Livraison II., contains several valuable papers, especially by P. M. Heringa, 'Considérations sur la Théorie des Phénomènes Capillaires,' and by J. G. Costerus, on 'L'influence des Solutions Salines sur la Durée de la Vie du Proto-plasma.'

M. EXNER, in a communication made by him to the Vienna Academy of Sciences, shows that the thermo-electric pile of Melloni is dependent on chemical as much as on thermic action. No current, he states, is generated if a pair of bismuth and antimony is plunged into nitrogen gas, whatever may be the temperature to which the junction is raised. The same result is obtained with many other metals. Not heat only but chemical action must be brought into play to generate an electric current.

THE New York Nation says that Prof. Eaton's 'Ferns of North America' "is now completed

In two quarto volumes, with seventy-one plates and one or two extras. We noticed with praise the earlier parts of this truly classical fern-book. It began well and has gone on better, the author's part having been admirably sustained throughout, the drawings and their reproductions in colours having improved to the close. Mr. Faxon's drawings are especially commendable. A conspectus of all our ferns, with diagnostic characters, in systematic order, is appended to the second volume."

M. JULES OCHER, Préparateur au Collège de France, has in the Annales de Chimie et de Physique an important paper, 'Recherches Thermiques sur les Combinaisons de l'Hydrogène avec les Phosphores, l'Arsenic et le Silicium.' This has at the present time a very important bearing on several investigations on the relation of hydrogen to other bodies.

H. KATO, President of the Department of Law, Science, and Literature, Tokio Daigaku, sends us 'Memoirs of the Science Department, University of Tokio, Japan,' Vol. II., containing a treatise on 'Mining and Mines in Japan,' by Prof. C. Netto, M.E. (who is, we infer from the preface, a German who has "now been for several years in the country"). This is really an interesting and instructive memoir. The occurrence of minerals is carefully described, and the modes of mining in all their details are given with much exactness. A section is devoted to metallurgy, and the author is clearly anxious to draw attention to the defects of many of the rude processes of smelting which are at present adopted in Japan. Indeed, each division of his subject is followed by a section of "Improvements Suggested" for mining, for dressing, and for smelting. Mining laws and mineral statistics form the conclusion of the volume. From the latter we learn that in 1868 the quantity of coal exported from Japan was 15,584 English tons, and that recorded as for ships' use was 915 tons, while in 1878 95,064 tons were exported, and 111,785 tons were consumed for ships' use. This work is produced at the Nishubashi printing office, and published by the University. The volume is illustrated by drawings of the miners' tools, and is altogether a production reflecting much credit on all who were concerned in its production.

PINE ARTS

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS. THE EXHIBITION WILL CLOSE ON MONDAY the 2nd of August. Admission (from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.), One Shilling. Catalogue 1s. or bound, with Pencil, 1s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS—EVENING EXHIBITION.—The Exhibition will be OPEN in the Evening from Monday 28th of July to Monday 2nd of August. Bank Holiday, from Tuesday to Friday. Admission Sixpence. Catalogue Sixpence.—On the Bank Holiday the Admission throughout the day will be Sixpence. On other days it will be 3d.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE TWENTY-FOURTH EXHIBITION WILL CLOSE ON Saturday July 31st. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. —Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d. ALFRED D. PIERCE, Secretary.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—THE FORTY-SIXTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION WILL CLOSE SATURDAY July 31st. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. M. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary. Gallery, 44, Pall Mall S.W.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN BLACK AND WHITE. Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly containing Drawings, Engravings, and Reproductions. OPEN DAILY from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d. M. F. McNAIR, Sec.

BORN'S GREAT WORKS, 'CHRIST LEAVING THE PRETORIUM,' 'CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM,' and 'THE BRAZEN SERPENT' (the latter just completed, each 25 by 25 feet, with 'Dream of Pilate's Wife,' 'Salvation of the Crucified,' and 'The Crucifixion,' 'House of Caliph,' 65, at the DOME GALLERY, 65, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten to Six.—1s.

Rowlandson the Caricaturist: a Selection from his Works. By J. Grego. 2 vols. Illustrated. (Chatto & Windus.)

Those who study English satirical prints of the last century are indebted to Mr. Grego for the share he took in the comprehensive monograph on James Gillray which appeared some years ago. Of this the two attractive volumes before us form the complement. The book on Gillray was intended to illustrate the satirist's "life, works, and times"; and it did so in an effective, popular manner; but the labours of Mr. Grego met with small recognition, for the work was published as "edited by Thomas Wright, Esq." Mr. Wright had already distinguished himself by compiling 'Caricature History of the Georges,' a task in which he derived much aid from the memoranda which Mr. Edward Hawkins, Keeper of the Antiquities in the British Museum, had made, or caused to be made, to elucidate his own invaluable collection of satirical prints, now deposited in the Print Room. The exhaustive Catalogue of Satirical Prints in the British Museum, part of which has been published by the Trustees, includes, besides much new matter and additional subjects, the whole of Mr. Hawkins's memoranda, but it has not yet reached the period of Gillray and Rowlandson.

How much Mr. Hawkins owed to Wright we do not know, but certain it is that the books of the latter contain a vast quantity of erudition and fruits of research which are preserved in the manuscripts of the former. Hawkins, William Smith (of Lisle Street), T. Haviland Burke, and Mr. R. H. Evans contributed much to our knowledge of Gillray, and some of them collected and illustrated the works of Rowlandson. But as a whole no contribution to the history of that admirable artist can compare with Mr. Grego's book, and it is likely to retain its position until the national collection of Rowlandson's works is duly catalogued. Even then Mr. Grego's labours will by no means lose their value, nor, let us hope, will his labours fail to find their reward. There is in these volumes so much that could not have been collected without considerable industry and a ready power of grasping and remembering details recovered from fugitive records of the last century, such as old newspapers, magazines, and contemporary histories, that no one who has not followed a similar course of studies can fairly appreciate the excellence of Mr. Grego's work. Of course a great deal of the letter-press is descriptive of, and supplementary to, the excellent photographic fac-similes of Rowlandson's drawings which enliven these pages. This supplied, much historical matter remained to be expounded, and it is in dealing with it that our author's industry has been most profitably exercised. At any rate, he has gathered for the world plenty of amusing materials, and produced a book of which the illustrations alone are full of life, fun, character, personal anecdote, and social, political, and idiosyncratic studies of the liveliest interest. He who runs may read the "caricatures" of Rowlandson, one essential feature of which is that they require observation rather than knowledge, and possess more of that which "makes the whole world kin" than the designs of Hogarth, Gillray, Lord Townshend, or Bunbury.

This work has two shortcomings: its title and the literary, or rather not literary, style of the author, who has probably been led by the nature of his materials into sundry solecisms. Crude colloquialisms abound in an unnecessary degree in his pages, and a little more care would have excluded them. More serviceable still would have been the exercise of competent editorial judgment. Revision is, in fact, much needed.

It is a mistake to call Rowlandson a caricaturist. If we accept, as every man of sense must do, Hogarth's definition of this word, Rowlandson was not a caricaturist at all, but a humourist and illustrator of character, free from that exaggeration which often appears in Gillray's art. Lord Townshend was a caricaturist and so was Daryl. Hogarth was a dramatic moralist and student of character, but he was so far from being a caricaturist that even the horrors of the 'Four Stages of Cruelty,' which are supposed to be the most exaggerated examples of the motives ruling his designs, are to this day proved to exist by the official reports of the Society for the Suppression of Cruelty to Animals. Hogarth did not exaggerate, but Gillray did, and it is to the latter more than to Rowlandson that the term "caricaturist" is fairly applicable. Allowing for the times in which he lived, Rowlandson was not more of a caricaturist than Leech, and less so than Cruikshank or "H.B." Bunbury partook of the qualities of both classes of satirical designers; in this respect his powers were peculiar. As an artist per se Rowlandson's mode was much more elegant and certainly not less animated than that of any of his contemporaries, so far as regards his female figures, which had a close resemblance to the better examples of the skill of Morland. All the satirists, except Bunbury, produced nasty things, after the manner of their day. Rowlandson, although by no means innocent, perpetrated fewer indecencies than his rivals, while, on the whole, his works have the impression of greater voluptuousness. His taste and technical style are much more refined than Gillray's. Immeasurably the greatest, ablest, and most poetical of satirical English draughtsmen was George Cruikshank. As a designer even Hogarth must yield to this transcendent genius; we say this without qualification and with the fullest reverence for the author of 'A Harlot's Progress,' which is one of the finest moralities, and surely the finest series of designs in our language. No other satirical artist is fit to be ranked with Hogarth and Cruikshank, and this is true not only on account of the superabundance, different as they were, of their inventive powers, but on account of the profundity of the humour, and, above all, because the sardonic mood which characterized each of them had its spring in the deepest pity, and was most complete when it was most tenderly expressed.

Compared with these great men Rowlandson seems trivial, Gillray's humour appears to be mere animalism, the vivid wit of Bunbury is gaseous, Sayer is vulgar, Collet seems stupid, and "H.B." is only genteel. Lord Townshend was pungently sarcastic, and Seymour indulged in pure Cockney foolery. It is beyond the range, and it may be beyond the intention, of Mr. Grego to analyze the moods of these satirists or to compare them; but in an introductory chapter he gives a sufficient history of Rowlandson's career, and a very interesting account of his publishers, among whom may be included Rudolph Ackermann, of the Strand, from whose well-known "Repository," now Mr. Rimel's shop, issued a flood of humorous sketches. Mr. Grego supplies cursory notes on some of the men with whom Rowlandson came in contact. Among them are several of the Royal Academicians, in whose school he was a pupil of note, and to whose exhibitions he contributed portraits before he made his début as a satirist at Somerset House by sending, in 1784, 'Vauxhall Gardens,' a first-rate design, which secured his reputation, for before this his position may be said to have been doubtful. In the Royal Academy schools and in Paris Rowlandson acquired that technical skill which gives so great a charm to most of his earlier drawings, but which waned as time removed him from the influence of his first studies. He often satirized the Academy and its members, from Nollekens to the visitors who tumbled over each other down the "stare-case" at Somerset House. As to Rowlandson's technical skill, our author is right in calling the famous 'Squall in Hyde Park' an unsurpassed instance of "executive ability, sense of loveliness, grouping, movement, grasp of character, powers of observation," &c. We quite agree with him that the two satires on the Royal Academy, called 'The Stare-Case' and 'Royal Academy,' dated in 1811, are reprints with the dates altered. This practice of meddling with dates is one of the most provoking among the many questionable tricks of the publishers and popular draughtsmen of the period; it is the cause of no end of confusion, a confusion which, as Mr. Grego remarks, has become the more serious because there are few considerable collections of Rowlandson's works to supply means of comparison and reference.

So prodigious was the facility of Rowlandson and so considerable his industry that it is by no means certain that even Mr. Grego's extensive catalogue is anything like complete. Yet this is by far the largest list ever made, and its comprehensiveness proves the diligence of the compiler. Of the merits of the letter-press there is little need to speak more warmly than we have done. The biography itself contains a good many anecdotes, some of which are by no means new, while others have been wisely recovered from byways and corners of old newspapers, memoirs, and magazines. The persons chiefly concerned are Nelson and Lady Hamilton, the Duke of York and the terminant Mrs. Clarke, the "hero" and "heroine" of the infamous "delicate investigation." Among other persons who figure here are H. Angelo, the fencing master; Pyne ("Hardcastle" of 'Wine and Walnuts,' that amazing olio of anecdotic gossip), John Thomas Smith, the frequenters of Vauxhall, Wolcott, and Weltje the royal cook, whose queer symposia attracted so much notice to his house on Hammersmith Upper Mall, a house that still stands, but will soon be the prey of the speculative builder. We find a few notes on Bunbury, a designer to whose wit Mr. Grego does but scanty justice. A few other persons are brought to notice in this story of a life which, notwithstanding its brilliancy and success, was by no means happy towards its end, and indeed, apart from jovial intervals, had not been really enjoyable nor profitable for many years before. It is certain, however, that Rowlandson was one of the most scrupulous and honourable of men in all his dealings with others. Would that this could be said of the rest of his class!

Having completed his biographical notice

Mr. Grego enters on a chronology of the caricaturist's works, and, selecting those examples which are most suitable to his purpose, has adorned his pages with photographic fac-similes from the designs and prints of the satirist. He explains other works briefly and adds historical notices and data. The subjects are treated in a manner which is only too "familiar," and not always witty, but there is nothing which need offend the most fastidious eye or ear; this, considering the nature of the task and the manners of the times, is no small praise. We should prefer the omission of phrases such as that which, p. 16, describes George Cruikshank as a "truly splendid old gentleman"; there are apter terms for Lord Barrymore than "the dashing, somewhat irrepressible"; it is hardly clear what is meant by calling owners of Rowlandson's works "steady collectors of his picturesque eccentricities," p. 30; we do not believe that Reynolds and West were "respectfully solicitous" that Bunbury "should send his contributions to the Royal Academy." There is considerable lack of order in the disposition of the details our author has gathered. This is particularly noticeable in the memoranda about Bunbury, and so confused is the text on Rowlandson himself that we have been unable to find the date or details of his death. The space that should have been given to such facts is filled with records of the decease and interment of Rudolph Ackermann. Malcolm is called an "anti-quarian," which is enough to make that worthy come to life and protest that he was not an adjective. Mr. Grego does not often enter deeply into the political elements of the satires, but occasionally he does so with tact and effect. Yet he is not less fallible than the rest of us, e.g., p. 140, he writes of the "secret influence"—which is the theme of a well-known satire called 'Secret Influence directing the New Parliament,' 1784—as if Earl Temple, in the guise of a serpent, beguiled the stupid king on his throne; the fact is the occult worker is the gaunt, hard-featured Earl of Bute, who from behind whispers false counsel to his thick-headed sovereign. These are the chief shortcomings in a production which owes much to the fact that it evidently has been a labour of love. Though from its very nature liable to such defects as those pointed out, it suffers less from them than books on other subjects would suffer; and its gossip, and, above all, its numerous illustrations, will have an inexhaustible attraction for the general reader, and also for the student of manners, satire, and costume, to say nothing of lovers of wit and humour, who ought to thank Mr. Grego for every page they read.

The Great Historic Galleries of England (Sampson Low & Co.) is edited by Lord R. Gower. Of this publication the first and second parts are before us, and contain, besides light sketches by the editor, very good photographs from pictures in the Bridgewater Gallery, Stafford House, and Castle Howard, including the Raphael of the first collection, Van Dyck's 'Earl of Arundel,' and Reynolds's 'Caroline, Countess of Carlisle,' from the second and third respectively. This publication deserves to be one of the most popular of "drawing-room table books."

Sculptors of the Present Day, edited by W. Hooe (W. Poole), contains a "List of the Profession in 1880," which may be useful and is susceptible of improvement, especially in regard to the grammar of the brief biographies appended to some of the names. Sir J. Steele is said to have been "educated at Aberdeen, and put to the profession of an artist, but subsequently preferring sculpture, studied at Edinburgh and Rome." Of the productions of Mr. H. Montford it is said that "The poetic, and allegoric, and relievi are the class of works chiefly selected" by him. "Mr. Simonds has more particularly cultivated the ideal, and especially the nude figure." Another gentleman "followed the trade of a pianoforte maker, but subsequently took up the calling of sculpture." Pianoforte making is not a trade, but it may be a craft. It is plain that Mr. Hooe is not a writer "by trade."

THE TORLONIA MUSEUM AT ROME.

THE Torlonia Museum, a creation of the present Prince Alexander, occupies the whole block between the Corsini Palace and the Porta Settimiana, between the foot of the Janiculum and the Lungara. The prince did not lavish much money on the building itself, foreseeing, perhaps, that its magnificent contents would sooner or later migrate to foreign countries, and make a better show in the castles of foreign Croesuses. He levelled the ground of the old Corsini kitchen garden, paved it with asphalt, and divided it into galleries 200 ft. long by 18 wide. These galleries are separated from one another by means of curtains of dark reddish cloth, drawn across the wooden columns which support the roof; other curtains, very cleverly arranged, subdivide each gallery into compartments, affording room to six works of art only. The ingenuity of such contrivance is worthy of notice by all those who have to arrange temporary exhibitions of statuary; the cost is nothing; the effect is beautiful and well suited to bring forth the works exhibited in their fullest details, not only on account of the harmonious hue of the background, but also on account of the restricted number of pieces exhibited in each compartment. The attention of visitors is concentrated upon single objects, and the eyes do not wander over endless rows of statues and busts, as is the case with the Museo Pio Clementino, with the long gallery of the Capitol, &c. A few choice objects, such as the athletic and archaic statues, the large sarcophagi, &c., are exhibited in separate rooms of more elaborate design.

Three names will be mentioned for ever with the Torlonia Museum. That of the owner, who spared no money to make it the largest, if not the best, private collection of antiques in the world; that of Pietro Ercole Visconti, the scientific manager of the business and the writer of the illustrative catalogue; that of Prof. Gnaccarini, the late sculptor, who did the restorations so cleverly as to turn the antique into modern and the modern into antique.

The marbles, nearly six hundred in number, come from various places. The bulk of the collection belongs to the once famous Galleria Giustiniani, which, like the Mattei, the Verospi, &c., shared the decline and fall of the family whose pride it had been. A great many marbles were dug up among the ruins of Porto, the harbour of imperial Rome, built by Claudius and enlarged by Trajan; others come from the farms of S. Maria Nuova and Statuario, which occupy the site of the magnificent Villa Quintiliorum. Smaller groups have been derived from the Vitali collection, from the Villa Albani, from the Villa Torlonia, on the Via Nomentana, from the Ruspoli Palace, from Boville, Centocelle, and Cures.

The most noticeable among the Giustiniani marbles are: (23) the portrait bust of an ugly girl, IYXIA. MARCI. FILIA. FLAVILLA, but full of life and pathos; (31, 32) two statues of Iain in bigio morato, one erect and composed, the other stepping towards the right, both with magnificent draperies, but headless and armless: the restorations are of the seventeenth century, and not happy ones: (41) a replica of the Venus of Alcamenes, in good preservation; (100) Prometheus, a colossal figure, representing the son of Iapetus in the act of stealing fire from heaven, or perhaps in the act of vivifying a piece of clay with which he is modelling the new man: this is represented as a kind of Egyptian mummy, very small in size, and in an unfinished stage; pieces of clay are strewn on the ground; (126) a naked, headless (?) hero, restored as Sextus Pompeius; (170, 182) two crouching Venuses, which, like the one in the Vatican, are copies executed by a mere technical artist of a widely celebrated original: the head and arms of one of the two were restored by Algardi, who failed to catch the ideal outlines of the goddess of beauty; (400) the celebrated Vesta Giustiniani, the gem of the whole museum. The charms of this lovely statue are beyond description. The lofty but simple composure, the quiet dignity of the goddess, the ideal expression of her face, fascinate the eyes and the mind of the observer more forcibly than most of the later and more gracious productions of the Greek chisel. The masses of drapery and the sweep of the folds, although falling regularly in a perpendicular line, are not monotonous because, in spite of the stiffness of the heavy stuff, which prevents it from fitting close to the figure, one can imagine, and in fact almost trace, the beautiful and graceful lines underneath.

From the Villa Albani many works have been transferred to the Lungara Museum, notwithstanding the laws which actually forbid with us the breaking up of collections like the Albani without the sanction of the Government. To avoid any trouble, the marbles are being removed one by one at long intervals, and casts of the works removed are set up at once in the vacant spaces, made so skillfully that very few have noticed the substitution. Among the Alban contributions to the new gallery the most important are: (67) head of Alcibiades, affording a fair notion of the personal attractions of this extraordinary man; (290) the bas-relief representing a poulterer's shop, so graphically described by Zosma, i. 27, and Brauns, 377, n. 16; (268) Pan and Olympus; (276) the famous Bacchic vase; (290) the ornamental basin with the labours of Hercules, found on the Appian Way in the year 1762, and illustrated by Winckelmann, 'Mon. Ined.', 228; (238, 291) two basins of precious coloured marble, the unique tazze of brocca d'Egitto, formerly in the Albani Casino, and many busts of emperors and eminent men.

Porto, that inexhaustible mine of statuary, has supplied the new gallery with many first-rate works: the Æsculapius and the Hygiea (96, 98), the group of fighting fauns (115), the fine imperial torso which supports a head of Septimius Severus (136), the Cupid (171), the Hercules and Telephus (296), the Apollo (280), and the Minerva (279), which is described as the most remarkable statue of the Torlonia Museum, and as surpassing in perfection those famous representations of the most beautiful Phidian type, the Vatican and Capitoline Minervas. I doubt, however, whether it be so, because I doubt whether the head of the Porto replica is genuine. The olive-tree, anyway, the helmet, the arms, and some of the attributes are modern additions.

The marbles removed from the Villa Torlonia, outside Porta Pia, are few and unimportant. I have noticed a Niobe (141), a group of the Niobides (233), four candelabras (155, &c.), a group of Bacchus and Silenus (300), and some smaller works.

The collection of imperial busts numbers more than one hundred. Of course many of them are only supposed to represent this or that emperor or empress; but, as a whole, they bear comparison fairly well with the Roman numis-mation. If those described ex oraculo as representing young Tiberius, Otho (with a long beard), Geta, Julia Paula, Julia Aquilia, Annia Faustina, Zenobia, Volusianus, &c., were classified among the doubtful, the authenticity of the collection would gain a great deal.

I come now to the question of restorations. They could not have been done more skilfully, sometimes escaping the most experienced eye. In examining the best works of the gallery, at least those which in the Visconti catalogue are described as such, one wonders doubtfully which parts are modern and which are really antique and genuine. The utmost care has been bestowed in selecting marble of the same texture and colour as that of the broken statue; the modelling of the missing parts was carefully studied after parallel and genuine works; then, after these pieces had been cut in marble, they were broken again, so as to necessitate the restoration of these restorations. Sometimes they were stained with dirt, to secure a natural hue of antiquity; they were hammered and split here and there, left without polish when the harmony of the whole required it to be done. The catalogue (save in a few instances, which make the matter worse) keeps silence on this subject, and leaves entirely for the visitor to discover whether he is admiring the work of an antique chisel or the imitative powers and ingenuity of a living artist.

This subject of restoration may be discussed from an æsthetic point of view. Artists and archaeologists have fought in its favour, on the ground that one cannot fully appreciate the beauty of ancient works from fragments unless these fragments be completely restored to the original entirety, and unless the general outline designed by the author of the work be brought into evidence. The great majority of living artists and men of science have repudiated the system, and the general feeling now is that an antique work loses one-half or more of its value when profaned by modern hands. Who can guarantee, no matter how exquisite the restorations are, that they express the feeling, the conception, the inspiration of the original? Take, for instance, the Hercules killing the Hydra, found at S. Agnese, and now one of the beauties of the Capitoline Museum. When first discovered the left leg and the monster were missing: Algardi, the great Algardi, restored both with wonderful skill. However, when, many years afterwards, the missing pieces were found, they proved to be entirely different from what Algardi had fancied. As regards the Torlonia Museum, these things are carried to such an excess that the question is no more a question of æsthetics, it amounts almost to imposition which has no excuse.

This sounds like a hard judgment, but it is justified from facts which I can relate almost as a personal experience. In April, 1874, Signor Giuseppe Gagliardi, while excavating in Prince Torlonia's Sabine farm, degli Arci, which occupies the site of Cures, discovered "un Cellisimo torso di statua virile in bronzo" ('Comm. in Hon. Mommsenii,' p. 416). No head was found, and, besides the head, one arm, both hands, and the right leg and foot were also missing. The torso was brought to town, restored as Germanicus, placed in the best room of the museum, and praised beyond measure in the catalogue as being the best and most trustworthy representation of Germanicus in the world.

In the hall of the athletes the place of honour is given to a torso discovered at Porto in 1806 or 1807, whose head, arms, and legs are the work of Gnaccarini. I could bring forth hundreds of similar instances, and describe one by one all the bits of marble which have grown into full-size figures or groups. Had the prince and his scientific advisers had the good sense to leave the marbles alone, to exhibit them in the same condition as they had come down to us, the museum would have ranked among the finest in the world, and its eventual sale to foreign countries would have been mourned over as a national loss. As it stands now, I doubt whether it would find purchasers, notwithstanding many good and some few unique works. R. L.

SALES.

On Saturday last Messrs. Christie, Manson & Woods sold the following pictures: E. Nicol, "Insolvent," 117*l.* A. J. Daiwaille, A Landscape, with Figures and Animals by E. Verboeckhoven, 111*l.* P. Graham, A Rough Sea on the Scotch Coast, 210*l.* F. Danby, The Deluge, 106*l.* A water-colour drawing by W. Hunt, A Cottage Interior, fetched 70*l.*

Art-Sale Society.

Messrs. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS announce an important sale, that of the whole of the collections of pictures, engravings, and books belonging to the Earl of Hardwicke, the chief ornaments of Wimpole Hall. The pictures will be disposed of on the 7th of August; they include ancestral portraits and many good works by the old masters. Among the former are Reynolds's 'Master P. Yorke with a Robin,' one of the same master's portraits of the Marquis of Rockingham, others of the second Earl of Hardwicke, the Hon. John Yorke, and Archbishop Secker. Besides these are works by Zuccheri, Ravesteyn, Van Dyck, Dobson, Walker, Van Somer, Jonson, Old Stone, Hogarth, Gainsborough, and others. The engravings will be sold on the 9th and 10th of August, the books on the 11th, 12th, and 13th of that month. It is to be hoped the National Portrait Gallery and the British Museum may not be compelled to forego this opportunity of enriching the national collections.

We understand that Mr. M. Huish succeeds Mr. S. C. Hall and the late Mr. Dafforne in the management of the Art Journal, and that it is intended to elevate the tone and improve the quality of our contemporary, so that it may compete with the Portfolio. This is a well-merited compliment to Mr. Hamerton and Messrs. Seeley, and they will appreciate it.

We regret to announce the death, after a painful illness, of Mr. J. C. Moore, the well-known artist, who was born at Gainsborough in 1829. He was the eldest son of Mr. William Moore, a portrait painter, who afterwards settled in York, and he became a student at the Royal Academy in 1851, and for some time followed his father's profession of portrait painter. He spent most of the winters between 1858 and 1866 in Italy. These visits opened to him a wealth of fresh artistic impressions of which he largely availed himself. If his works are not remarkable for extraordinary genius or great powers of execution, they are distinguished by good taste, sweetness, and simplicity of rendering. His water-colour drawings are perhaps better known than his oil pictures. The quiet, neutral tones of his portraits soothe and refresh the eye in an age in which purity and unity of tone are exceptional. Of late he has painted few landscapes. His scenes in the neighbourhood of Florence, from the heights of San Miniato or in the Val d'Arno, or of those of the Roman Campagna and on the banks of the Tiber, combined qualities not often attained—much subtlety of line and delicacy of colour. The long stretch of St. Peter's and the Vatican in the twilight, the serious gloom of the valleys of the Campagna with the fragment of a ruin cropping up, a broken aqueduct striding from ridge to ridge, the grey river gliding between its banks at the hour of Ave Maria, with a lazy barge slowly dropping down the stream, have been painted by Mr. Moore as they have hardly ever been painted before. As to his personal character, he leaves a valued memory behind him. His integrity, friendliness, and sincerity won the esteem of all who knew him.

He was buried at Highgate Cemetery on the 15th inst.

THE alterations in the Sculpture Galleries, Print Room, and Zoological Department of the British Museum, of which we spoke last week, are likely to be of an extensive and, for a time at least, inconvenient character. The studies and store rooms of Dr. Günther's department are to be, it is said, abandoned bodily; the corridor leading to the Print Room and the studies attached to that department are all to be pulled down, to make room for an extension of the Sculpture Galleries on the site they occupy. The Print Room proper will remain as now until the new buildings are erected in the Secretary's garden. Meanwhile access is to be afforded to the existing room by means of a sort of flying bridge over the roofs or a passage constructed below. All these arrangements, which will not be costless, are but temporary. Dr. Günther goes to South Kensington with all his belongings.

THE "patrons" of the Watson-Gordon Professorship of Fine Art in the University of Edinburgh met on Friday of last week, and elected Mr. Gerald Baldwin Brown, M.A., late Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, to fill the new chair. So little interest was taken by the patrons in the matter that but few of them attended, and Mr. Hamerton's claims were ignored.

THE Municipal Museum at Venice, which is now housed in the Fondaco dei Turchi, was opened on the 4th of July. The Fondaco has been marvellously "restored." At the opening ceremony a madrigal of Lotti's was sung which was first performed in 1737, at the wedding of the Adriatic.

MUSIC

MR. W. H. HOLMES'S THIRD PIANOFORTE and KIRCHLICH CONCERT, illustrating his NOTES upon NOTES, dedicated by special permission to their Royal and Imperial Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, SATURDAY MORNING July 25, Royal Academy at Two o'clock.—Particulars of Mr. W. H. Holmes, 25, Brunswick Street, W.

MRS. FLORENCE SANDERS (pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes) begs to announce her FORTHY-NINTH INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT at Queen's Hall, W. July 26th at Three o'clock. The programme will include Beethoven's Violator Sonata, for Violin and Pianoforte, Mandolinista Trio in D Minor for Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte. Mr. W. H. Holmes will play with Miss Florence Sanders in Duet for Hitter for Two Pianofortes. First time of performance in this country. Also Duet for Two Pianofortes, "Pianicissimo" (dedicated to Lady Hamilton), by W. H. Holmes; and in Quartet for Two Pianofortes and Four Performers (W. H. Holmes). Further particulars will be duly announced.—Tickets (Ms. 5d., 3s., 2s.) to be had of Messrs. Curzon, Regent Street, W.

THE WEEK.

THE ITALIAN OPERA SEASON.

No special remarks are needed concerning the concluding performances at Her Majesty's Theatre, and we may at once proceed to make whatever comment is necessary on the general features of the season. At Covent Garden the record is one of remarkable dreariness, affording no standpoint on which to base hopes for the future, and compelling the impartial observer to adopt the attitude of a pessimist. If the object had been to do as little as possible for art and as much as possible in the interests of the iniquitous star system, little if any modification of the policy actually pursued would have been necessary. It was remarked at the outset that the promised novelties were strangely ill-chosen, and the result has not tended to alter that opinion. Hérolf's 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' charming as it is, is quite unsuitable to the Covent Garden stage, and M. Cohen's 'Estella' proved, as was anticipated, a complete failure. It is difficult to comprehend the motives which could have actuated the director in presenting these operas, while there are works of the highest class waiting for a hearing. If we glance at the list of operas performed during the season, we find no room for consolation. Mr. Gye boasts of a répertoire of nearly sixty operas, but this number includes many recent failures not likely to see the light again. From the remainder the selection has not included many of the finest works, amongst which may be named 'Robert le Diable,' 'L'Étoile du Nord,' 'Guillaume Tell,' 'Aida,' 'Masaniello,' 'Fidelio,' 'Der Freischütz,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Der Fliegende Holländer.' Amongst the operas most frequently given have been 'Lucia,' 'La Sonnambula,' 'I Puritani,' and 'La Traviata.' In other words, Meadames Patti and Albani, still in the plenitude of their powers, have controlled events to a large extent, and a third star has been discovered in Madame Sembrich, whose exceptional vocal gifts have proved most attractive to the public. The season has therefore been dedicated to the prime donne, and the director has found his justification in the fact that the material support accorded to the establishment has been greater than of recent years. While a sufficient number of the patrons of high-priced Italian opera evince contentment, and even gratification, at the present condition of affairs, it seems a hopeless task to protest in the name of art. With the exception of Madame Sembrich, the débuts of the season have been unimportant and few in number. Madame Verni and M. Devilliers appeared but once, and M. Engel can only take second or third rank even in the present generation of tenors. A lack of refinement has been the chief fault of the orchestra, and the same remark will apply to the chorus, though in this department Covent Garden stands higher than Her Majesty's. As regards the mise en scène and stage management generally, there is ample room for praise, and if equal spirit and liberality were manifested throughout the establishment, the Royal Italian Opera would be the first institution of its kind in the world.

At Her Majesty's Theatre the season, though chequered, has been less gloomy than at the rival house. The one mistake of the director was the revival of Verdi's absurd opera, 'La Forza del Destino,' but against this must be set the engagement of Herr Richter and the production of Signor Boito's 'Mefistofele.' Under the bâton of the Viennese conductor we enjoyed for the first time in this country a performance of 'Lohengrin' in which full justice was rendered to the wonderful richness and beauty of the orchestral accompaniments; and it was a pity that the répertoire did not contain more of Wagner's works, in order that the experience might have been repeated. With regard to 'Mefistofele,' we can but reiterate what was said a fortnight ago, that the season will be rendered memorable by its production. Despite the imperfections due to youth and inexperience, it is a work of the highest order of genius, and will maintain the position it has so quickly and unequivocally won. Let it be remembered to Mr. Mapleson's credit that in 'Faust,' 'Carmen,' and 'Mefistofele' he has introduced to English musicians the three most successful operas of the last twenty years. The non-fulfilment of his promise to produce the Baron Bödog d'Oréry's 'Der Renegade' may be readily pardoned. The new singers have been more numerous than at Covent Garden, although no artist of the highest rank has appeared. Mdlle. Lilli Lehmann and Madame Robinson more than justified their engagement, and it is unaccountable that they should each have appeared in but two parts. Signor Ravelli with his fine voice, entirely free from vibrato, is a very acceptable addition to the list of tenors. Mdlle. Nevada will be better with further training, but Madame Marie Louise Swift and Signor Lazzarini proved themselves unworthy of the establishment. Meadames Marimon, Vansandt, Crommond, Salla, and Cary, though advertised in the prospectus, have not appeared; nor have Signor Fancelli, Signor Papini, M. Ordinas, and M. Roudil. The orchestra was at first out of form, owing to the change of conductors, but latterly there has been little to desire, and Signor Arditì may be complimented on the general result. Some improvement has also been noticeable in the stage management, and the mounting of 'Mefistofele' is worthy of great praise. But the necessity for a revision of the chorus is still apparent. The matter should not be one of great difficulty, and the credit of Her Majesty's Theatre demands that there should be no delay.

We append a list of the operas given at both theatres, with the number of performances of each: 'Faust,' 9; 'Carmen' and 'Lucia,' 8; 'Lohengrin' and 'Mefistofele,' 7; 'La Sonnambula' and 'Mignon,' 6; 'Don Giovanni,' 'Rigoletto,' 'La Traviata,' and 'I Puritani,' 5; 'Il Trovatore' and 'Il Barbiere,' 4; 'Le Roi de Lahore,' 'Favorita,' and 'Les Huguenots,' 3; 'Le Prophète,' 'L'Africaine,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Dinorah,' 'Semiramide,' 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' 'Estella,' 'Aida,' 'Fidelio,' and 'La Forza del Destino,' 2; and 'Un Ballo in Maschera,' 'Linda,' and 'Il Talismano,' one each. This catalogue and the diverse results at both theatres tend to prove that, if one portion of the public is attracted solely by the prime donne, another considerable section is ready to support opera based on more artistic principles, and the prospect is therefore not so desperate as a glance directed solely at one of our lyric establishments might lead one to imagine.

Musical Gossip.

THE copy of the petition of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, praying for the grant of a charter of incorporation to the Royal College of Music, and a draft of the charter prayed for have just been issued among the House of Commons Papers (No. 258).

A YOUNG singer from Leipzig, named Goetjes, has lately made his début at Frankfort-on-Main as Arnold in 'Guillaume Tell.' He is said to have an exceptionally fine and powerful tenor voice, and to excite the highest anticipations for his future.

A GRAND "International Singing Competition" is to take place at Cologne from the 14th to the 17th of August, under the auspices of the Colner Liederkreis. It is said that already 121 choral societies, numbering about 6,000 singers, have entered for the contest.

IN Düsseldorf on the 8th and 9th of August, on the occasion of the Industrial and Fine-Art Exhibition in that town, a festival performance is to be given, selected from the works of the various composers who have held the office of conductor there, from Mendelssohn downwards. The programme will include selections from the works of Mendelssohn, Schumann, Norbert Burgmüller, Julius Riets, Ferdinand Hiller, and Julius Tausch, the present conductor.

Dr. ARMITAGE writes:—"My attention has been directed to an inaccuracy in the article contributed by me to the Athenæum of the 10th inst., and, as I should be sorry to publish anything not strictly in accordance with fact, I hope you will allow me to correct the mistake which I inadvertently made. I stated that Mrs. Gardner wished to build almshouses for the older blind, in connexion with her proposed institution at Windsor. On referring to her original scheme I find that the asylum she there contemplated was intended only for former pupils of the proposed Gardner institution, and that the old and infirm blind in general were not intended to participate in the testator's bounty. In Mrs. Gardner's last scheme, which is now before the Court, the asylum plan has been given up, and pensions are proposed instead for the same class, viz., for former pupils of the institution."

HERE ALBERT HAHN, the editor of the highly esteemed musical journal Die Tonkunst, died on the 14th inst. at Landenau, near Leipzig, in the fifty-second year of his age.

DRAMA

LYCEUM THEATRE.—SOLE LEASER AND MANAGER MR. HENRY IRVING. Every Evening (except Saturday), at 7.45, 'THE MERCHANT OF VENICE' with Last Night's Performances. SHYLOCK MR. IRVING. PORTIA MISS ELLEN TERRY. Countess with HOLANDE. MISS ELLEN TERRY and MR. IRVING. The (Saturday) Evening at 8, 'THE BELL' Last Performance. MATTHIAS MR. IRVING and HOLANDE MR. IRVING and MISS ELLEN TERRY. Last Evening Performance of 'THE MERCHANT OF VENICE' (Today (Sunday) at 10 o'clock. SEVILLY. MR. IRVING. PORTIA MISS ELLEN TERRY. Box Office (Mr. Hunt) open 10 to 6. MR. IRVING'S ANNUAL BENEFIT and last night of the season, Saturday Evening, July 31st.

THE WEEK.

GAIETY.—'Colonel Sellers,' a Dramatic Sketch, in Five Acts. By Mark Twain.

AMERICA has sent us hitherto many noteworthy actors and no noteworthy drama. The few pieces with the slightest pretence to local colour which have reached us from America have been mere alterations of works with which we were already familiar. Another turn has been given to the dramatic kaleidoscope, and the well-known odds and ends have assumed another pattern. Contrary to general expectation, the development in America of a new vein of humour and a new school of fiction has been followed by no outbreak of dramatic fervour, and the poets and novelists of the United States are apparently as destitute of invention and of stagecraft as their English rivals. America seems, indeed, content to be to England in respect to drama what Belgium is to France: to live as far as possible upon our produce, and in her most ambitious efforts to go no further than imitation. 'Colonel Sellers,' as Mark Twain has called a dramatic version of his novel of 'The Gilded Age,' is one of the most disappointing works ever set before the public. Its central figure has a certain air of novelty, and its principal action is so far American that the incidents are possible only in the United States. Here all that can be said in its favour ends. It is a satire in the shape of a melo-drama; it blends together in the most incongruous fashion the most irreconcilable things, and it is, in addition, shapeless, inartistic, unedifying. Seldom has an English audience received with more toleration a piece with less claim upon consideration. As plainly as in spoken language did the action of the public assert that it was reluctant to pronounce a verdict of failure upon a piece by an author to whom in other lines of art it was indebted, and upon an actor who came as a stranger among us and disclosed the possession of genuine powers. A failure none the less, in spite of Mr. Raymond's acting and Mark Twain's reputation, the drama was. The chief incident consists of the slaughter by a girl of her lover and her acquittal of the charge of murder by an American jury. Anything more distasteful than the proceedings in the trial cannot well be conceived. In front of the audience during the entire action stands a woman known to be a murderess, since the audience has witnessed the perpetration of the crime. Necessarily the central figure, she sits with what composure she may assume and listens to the recriminations of opposing counsel, the consolations of a comic and an irrepressible friend in the person of Col. Sellers, and the outbreaks of a jubilant negro. Except a comic funeral presented upon the stage nothing could be conceived less suitable to dramatic exposition.

In one respect alone is 'Colonel Sellers' noticeable. It is a drama without a heroine, or, at least, without a heroine in whom the slightest sympathy can be felt. Not one grateful or comfortable trait do we find in Laura Hawkins, and the small measure of sympathy the play inspires goes out to her victim. Base as is her betrayal and coarse as is her victor's subsequent conduct, the one thing a man has to do whose life has in any fashion whatever got mixed up with that of Laura Hawkins is to sever the connexion. If death comes of it so much the worse for the victim, but the severance has to be made. Turning from a play the more disappointing in its effects in consequence of hopes and expectation of something better that had been inspired, and coming to the interpretation, we find in the one character with which the public is likely to concern itself a certain amount of freshness. That this is external rather than essential is comparatively unimportant. It has novelty of a kind, and it stands out in the hands of Mr. Raymond pleasantly conspicuous in a gallery of similar portraits. From an early date in the drama the sanguine schemer has been a familiar character. Col. Mulberry Sellers has thus a hundred prototypes. To two, or perhaps three, of these he stands in close relationship. Balzac's Mercadet supplies the outline of the figure, the filling up being taken from Mr. Micawber. There is also a suggestion of that speculative uncle to whom are due the reverses of the Caxton family. From Mercadet Col. Sellers differs in respect of sincerity. No getter up is he of sham companies. Not one of the schemes of the faisseur would have commended itself to him. There is always a basis to his schemes, and in the case of those even which result in disaster the fault is not his. In the opening scene he puts the money of his too credulous friends in three speculations. One of these is at first successful, and the gain resulting from it provides funds with which to face temporary disasters. A second would probably realize all that is expected from it, making allowance for the difference between empty boast and real anticipation, but the steamer in which the money is invested blows up. A third speculation proves to be all that the Colonel declares it, and land which is all but sold for five thousand dollars brings in three quarters of a million. Sanguine, then, as is Col. Sellers, and splendidly mendacious when he has to account for his own poverty, he is neither swindler nor, in the full acceptance of the word, sponge. When he has money he divides it with others, when he has none he accepts as readily as he had previously given.

In the hands of Mr. Raymond this character is almost a creation. It would be altogether such but for excremental portions which are due, we may surmise, to the actor. Mr. Raymond thus counterfeits drunkenness and presents cleverly a recognizable phase. Col. Sellers is not the man to get drunk, however, and there is no justification for his so doing. A stupid story which he relates is also an annoyance, and is introduced without rhyme or reason. Excellent, then, as is the performance, it needs to be stripped of much that is cumbrous and annoying for its full value to be exhibited. Of the remaining characters and of their exponents there is nothing to be said. A performance weaker as a whole or with less of the ensemble it is the aim of modern art to restore to the stage has seldom been seen.

A GREEK DRAMA IN ENGLISH DRESS.

IT is not many weeks since the Athenæum mentioned a performance by Oxford undergraduates of the masterpiece of Greek tragedy, the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus. A performance which has taken place this week in London possesses hardly less interest, and should not, I think, be allowed to pass altogether unrecorded, though the fact that it took place under private auspices precludes anything like detailed criticism. I trust, however, that I commit no breach of decorum in offering to your readers the following comments.

The performance in question, though new in London, has, if I mistake not, already been given in Edinburgh. The transcript used by the actors was due to the facile pen of Prof. Lewis Campbell, and the chief performer took the two parts of Clytemnestra and Cassandra.

The rendering of the character of the Argive queen, a very man in resolve, was fine throughout, whether in her outburst of joy at sight of the beacon which tells that Troy is taken, and that her husband (and, therefore, her hour of vengeance) is at hand, in the extravagance of assumed humility with which she welcomes him home, or in the haughty shameless arrogance with which she confesses his murder to the horror-stricken Chorus, and proclaims her readiness to abide by the result. If the rendering of the very different character of Cassandra was not quite so happy, every allowance must be made for the extreme difficulty of one lady doing two such parts real justice. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of this duplication, which certainly involves the loss of some of the finest points in the play, there can be no question that the change was wonderfully effected from the queen, with her coils of golden hair piled high upon her head and the red mantle cast about her shoulders, to the Trojan princess, with robe of simple white and delicately embroidered sash, and graceful Phrygian cap crowning her dark hair. Nor was the change less complete in demeanour. The great scene between Cassandra and the Chorus was not so weirdly impressive as at Oxford, though towards the close, at the final appeal to Apollo and declaration of preparedness for her doom, the actress seemed to throw more life into the part, and did it full justice. But it was in the final scene, where she appeared once more as Clytemnestra to boast of her deed and to defy all consequences, that she seemed to surpass herself. Nothing could have been better; every tone and gesture told.

Agamemnon is rather a thankless part, whether from the words actually put in his mouth or from the recollection one has of him in Homer; but his representative did his best to excite sympathy and admiration for the returning conqueror so soon to fall victim to domestic treachery. Agasthus marked, perhaps sufficiently, the man's insolence, though he showed more dignity than was thought necessary by the Oxford actor. An Old Bailey lawyer might, after all, make out a fair case for this apparently graceless villain, when we remember how Atreus served his father. The Herald was excellent.

The Chorus, though individually well sustained, was rather monotonous, and without the alleviation of music seemed at times a drag on the action. But it was ungracious to dwell on defects that were hardly to be avoided when the performance as a whole was so excellent. The scenery and dresses left nothing to be desired, and reflected great credit on the stage-manager. Of Prof. Campbell's version we cannot speak in detail. Though scholars might quarrel with him on special points, the play reads remarkably well, and where it has been found necessary to condense the work seems done with taste and skill. On the whole, then, the patrons to whose munificence we Londoners owe the chance of seeing this interesting performance deserve not only thanks but congratulation.

Z.

Dramatic Essay.

THE season at the Lyceum, remarkable for the longest run that the 'Merchant of Venice' is known to have enjoyed, will close on Saturday next, the 31st, when Mr. Irving takes his benefit. Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Herbert Reeves, Mrs. Bancroft, and Mr. Toole will lend their aid on the occasion.

THE performances for the Maddison Morton benefit at the Gaiety Theatre were a conspicuous success. Though the representation by members of the Dramatic Authors' Society of 'Woodcock's Little Game' did not rise greatly above the level of the best amateur performances, Mrs. Keeley, reappearing as Betsy Baker after a nine years' absence from the stage, obtained a remarkably cordial and enthusiastic welcome.

THE third act of 'Le Mari de la Débutante,' presented by the Palais Royal company during the last nights of its engagement, displays M. Geoffroy as Le Comte Escarbotier, one of the most comic parts in his repertory. It is difficult to imagine a more faithful picture of a pompous, egotistical, empty-headed bourgeois. Mlle. Legault was delightful as the débutante. The performance of this act supplies reason for regret that the entire piece could not be given.

FRENCH criticism has apparently learned something from the visit of the Comédie Française to London, and has commenced to censure those extravagances of style in the conventional presentation of tragedy upon which Englishmen have insisted. It is edifying to hear, & a propos of the production and failure at the Théâtre Français of M. Paul Delair's drama of 'Garin,' that M. Mounet Sully plays the hero "avec une exubérance de moyens qui confine au ridicule." This is not the only recent instance in which one of the dis majores of the Comédie Française has been subjected to severe censure.

THE novel which we reviewed last week under the title of 'Clear Shining after Rain,' will be published next week under the title of 'After a Dark Day—the Sun.' The former name had been already appropriated, and Messrs. Tinsley withdrew the book this moment they discovered the fact.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—E. J. R.—R. W. D.—Dr. K.—A. H.—received.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. S. PULLING, M.A., Reader in Geology, Oxford, and formerly Professor at the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

Under the above title it is proposed to publish a series of small volumes descriptive of the principal Countries of the World, each Country being treated of by a Writer who from personal knowledge is qualified to speak with authority on the subject. The general aim of the series will be to present a clear and accurate idea of the actual state of the different Countries in a sufficiently popular form to prove interesting to the general reader while at the same time it is intended that the Works should be useful for Educational Purposes.

The Volumes will average 160 crown 5vo. pages, and will contain Maps and a few typical Illustrations. The prices of the Volumes will be 3s. each.

The following Volumes are ready or in preparation:—
DENMARK and HOLLAND. [Ready.] SWEDEN and NORWAY. [Ready.]
GREENLAND. [Ready.] THE WEST INDIES. [Ready.]
RUSSIA. [Ready.] NEW ZEALAND. [Ready.]
AUSTRIA. [Ready.] FRANCE. [Ready.]
PRUSSIA. [Ready.] GERMANY. [Ready.]
JAPAN. [Ready.] TURKEY-IN-ASIA. [Ready.]
SIBERIA. [Ready.] AUSTRALIA. [Ready.]
CANADA. [Ready.] HOLLAND. [Ready.]

New ready crown 5vo. 20 pp. price 2s.
THE WEST INDIES. By Charles H. BRYCE, F.R.S., Author of 'Practical Aspects of the Fifth Continent,' &c. With Map and Illustrations.

New ready, crown 5vo. 161 pp. price 2s.
GREECE. By Lewis Sergeant. With Illustrations and Physical and Political Maps, showing proposed Boundary.

THE NEW VOLUMES IN THE ILLUSTRATED BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT ARTISTS ARE

SIR EDWIN LANDSEER. By F. G. MITCHELL. Author of 'Celebrated English and French Pictures,' &c. Illustrated with 16 Fac-similes of Landseer's works, including 'Irish Greyhounds,' 'The Habbit Warren,' the 'Plains of the Mother,' and the '12 small Etchings of the "Woman Game-card." Bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

New ready.
SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By F. S. PULLING, M.A. Oxford. Illustrated with Reproductions of 18 of his most celebrated paintings, including 'The Duchess of Devonshire,' 'Perseus and Andromeda,' 'Age of Innocence,' 'The Strawberry Girl,' 'Mrs. Siddons,' &c. Bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

GIOTTO. By Harry Quilter, M.A., Trinity College Cambridge. Illustrated with Photographs of the Process in the Cappella di Arena, Padua, a Fac-simile in Colour of a Madonna in the lower Church of Assisi, and Engravings from the Reliefs of the Giotto Campanile at Florence. Small size, handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt top, price 15s. (Now ready.)

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS OF ART EDUCATION. Edited by EDWARD J. POTTER, R.A. Each Volume contains numerous Illustrations, and is strongly bound for the Use of Students. Price 1s.

The Volumes now ready are—
PAINTING.
CLASSIC and ITALIAN. By EDWARD J. POTTER, R.A.; and PERCY R. MEAD, Lincoln College, Oxford. Upwards of 80 Full-Page and other Illustrations. Bound in extra cloth limp, 5s. [Ready.]

"This Volume contains an Introductory Preface on Art Education by Mr. Potter, who also contributes a Chapter on Egyptian Art, and a succinct notice of the various Italian Schools, &c."

ARCHITECTURE.
GOTHIC and RENAISSANCE. By T. ROGER SMITH, F.R.S.E. 120 Illustrations. Cloth limp, 5s. [Ready.]
"This Volume treats of the history of Architecture from the rise of the Gothic style to the general depression which overtook the Renaissance style at the close of the sixteenth century."

A RIDE IN PETTICOATS and KLIPPER from FZEE to the ALGERIAN FRONTIER. By Captain H. R. COLVILLE, of the Grenadier Guards. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 12s.

EPISODES OF FRENCH HISTORY.
1. CHARLEMAGNE and the CARLOVINGIANS. [Ready.]
2. LOUIS IX. and the CRUSADES. [Nearly ready.]
Edited with Notes, Genealogical, Historical, and other Tables, by GUSTAVE KAPLAN, J.A.

"Other Volumes in preparation."
The above Series is based upon M. Guizot's 'History of France.' The volumes are richly illustrated, with Maps, printed and bound in a handy form, price 1s. 6d. each.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.
Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. each.

MY LADY GREENLEAF. By Helen Mathers, Author of 'Conita thro' the Rye,' 'Cherry Ripe,' &c.

THREE PRATHERS. By William Black.

A DAUGHTER OF RUTH. Thirteenth Edition. By W. Black. Foreword by F. Walker, & L.A.

RILKENY. A Novel. By W. Black.

IN RISK ATTIRE. By W. Black.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWETHEART. By W. Black.

HISTORY OF A CRIME; the Story of the Corp & Hat. By Victor Hugo.

ALICE LOHRAINE. By M. D. Blackmore.

LORNA DOONE. By R. D. Blackmore. Eighth Edition.

CRADOCK NOWELL. By R. D. Blackmore.

ELANA VAUGHAN. By R. D. Blackmore.

CHIPP'S THE CAVALIER. By R. D. Blackmore.

BERNA. or 'My Father's Sin.' By M. D. Blackmore.

INNOCENT. By Mrs. Oliphant. 6 Illustrations.

WORK. A Story of Experience. By Louisa M. Alcott. Illustrations.

THE APOCALYPSE KNIFE. By E. A. Berrisford. Author of 'Gems.'

A FRENCH HEIRESS. In her OWN CHATEAU. By the Author of 'Use Only.' Constantia, &c. 6 Illustrations.

NINETY-THREE. By Victor Hugo. Numerous Illustrations.

MY WIFE and I. By Mrs. Beecher Stowe.

WRECK OF THE GRADYVOR. By W. Clark Russell.

ELINOR DRYDEN. By Mrs. Macquoid.

DIANE. By Mrs. Macquoid.

POGONUC PEOPLE, their LOVES and LIVES. By Mrs. Beecher Stowe.

A GOLDEN SORROW. By Mrs. Cabell Hoey.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON.

THE NEW WORKS OF FICTION, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

EACH IN THREE VOLUMES.

NOTICE.—New Novel by the Popular Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Woman against Woman,' 'Petronel,' &c.

The FAIR-HAIRED ALDA. By FLORENCE MARRIAT, Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Woman against Woman,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d. [This day.]

JACK ALLYN'S FRIENDS. By G. WEBB APPLETON, Author of 'Catching a Tartar' and 'Frozen Hearts.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

CHARLIE: a Waif's History, told by Himself. By Mrs. WOODWARD. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The DEAN'S WIFE. By Mrs. Eiloart, Author of 'The Curate's Discipline,' 'How He Won Her,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

CARMELA. By the Princess Olga CANTACUZENE, Author of 'In the Spring of My Life.' Translated by EUGENE KLAUS, with the Author's Approval. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

KINGS in EXILE. By Alphonse DAUDET. From the French, by express authority of the Author. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

HOLLYWOOD. By Annie L. Walker, Author of 'A Canadian Heroine,' 'Against Her Will,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Hollywood" is a book that deserves to be read. We must congratulate Miss Walker on a steady improvement."

LORD GARLFORD'S FREAK. By JAMES B. BAYNARD, Author of 'The Rector of Oxbury.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Morning Post says:—"A very amusing novel, which, deserves, for more reasons than one, to rank higher than the ordinary run of current works of fiction."

The ACTOR'S WIFE. By Edmund LEATHER, Actor. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The BURTONS of DUNROE. By W. BREW. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

AFTER a DARK DAY—the SUN. By Miss C. G. HAMILTON. 2 vols. 31s. [This day.]

London:
SAMUEL TINSLEY & Co. 31, Southampton-street, Strand.

Fifth Edition, greatly Enlarged, post 8vo. with Geological Map printed in Colours and numerous Additions, Illustrations of Fossils, Sections, and Landscapes, price 15s.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D. F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of the United Kingdom.

"No better introduction to the principles of geology could possibly be recommended to the English reader. It is a work of the highest value, and one worthy to take a foremost place among popular manuals of science."—Nature.
"Not only a useful manual for the student, but a picturesque and interesting volume for that poor general reader who, as a rule, is apt to become weary of dry lists (however scientifically perfect) of fossils and of strata. The volume, as it stands, is certainly the best introduction to the geology of these islands that we possess."—Graphic.

By the same Author,

GEOLOGICAL MAP OF ENGLAND and WALES. Scale, 12 miles to an inch; also, 36 inches by 42. Price, in Sheets, 26s.; Mounted on Linen, in Case, 30s.; or on Roller, varnished, 42s.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Post. 8vo. cloth, 3s.

THE LINCOLN POCKET GUIDE;

BEING A SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE CHURCHES AND ANTIQUITIES OF THE COUNTY, AND OF THE CATHEDRAL OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY OF LINCOLN, COMMONLY CALLED THE MINSTER.

By Sir C. H. J. ANDERSON, Bart.

With Map, and Plan and Illustrations of the Cathedral.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, Imperial 32mo. cloth, 6s.

THE PARLIAMENTARY POLL-BOOK OF ALL ELECTIONS

FROM THE PASSING OF THE FIRST REFORM ACT IN 1832 TO JULY, 1880, WITH AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ALL CANDIDATES WITHIN THAT PERIOD.

By F. H. MCCALMONT, B.C.L. M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

Early in August, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF

B A R B A R A :

HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.

By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

NEW ROMANCE OF LONDON LIFE.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE ORANGE GIRL.

ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

The KING'S PAGE: a Love Story.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE. The New Novel.

By the AUTHOR of 'SOPHIE CREWE,' &c.

"A wild, rattling, exciting story, full of matter."—Athenæum.

CHEAP EDITION OF Mrs. GORDON SMYTHIES' NOVELS.

On July 26th, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

OUR MARY: a Novel.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. W. S. HAYWARD'S NOVELS.

On July 26, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE SECRET SEVEN: a Novel.

SECRETS OF MODERN RUSSIA, NIHILISM, &c.

On July 26 (never before published), price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

MYSTERIES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

By M. MIKAËL GORTSCHAKOV.

London: J. & R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

E P P S'S
C H O C O L A T E
E S S E N C E.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.
Homeopathic Chemists, London.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

NEARLY READY,

Vols. III. and IV. (completing the Work), demy 8vo. cloth extra, 12s. each,

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES,

FROM THE ACCESSION OF QUEEN VICTORIA TO THE CLOSE OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF LORD BEACONSFIELD.

BY

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

Just ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS,

Revised and Arranged by the Author. Containing EARLIEST PAPERS, SPANISH and AMERICAN LEGENDS, TALES of the ARMOONAUTS, &c.

* Vol. I. contains the COMPLETE POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS of BRET HARTE, with new Steel-Plate Portrait and Introduction.

QUIDA'S NEW VOLUME OF COLLECTED STORIES.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d., and at every Library,

PIPISTRELLO, and other Stories. By Ouida.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s.

MOTHS. By Ouida.

"Not only the author's best work, but one which marks a new epoch in fiction."—Morning Post

CHARLES GIBBON'S NEW NOVEL.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d., and at every Library,

IN PASTURES GREEN, and other Stories.

By CHARLES GIBBON

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s. 6d.
THE SEAMY SIDE. By the Authors of 'The Golden Buttery,' 'The Monks of Thelema,' &c.

Post 8vo. illustrated boards, 2s. each,

QUIDA'S NOVELS. Cheap Edition.

HELD IN BONDAGE.
STRATHMORE.
CHANDOS.
UNDER TWO FLAGS.
ITALIA.
CECIL CASTLEMAINE.
TRIUMPH.
PUCK.

FOLLE FARINK.
DOG OF FLEANDERS.
FASCAREL.
TWO WOODEN SHIPS.
RIGVA.
IN A WINTER CITY.
ABIANNE.
FRIENDSHIP.

On the 26th inst., price One Shilling, illustrated,

BELGRAVIA, for August.

Contents.

A CONFIDENTIAL AGENT. By James Payn. Illustrated by Arthur Hopkins.

THE VALLEY OF THE AMBLÈVE. By Katharine S. Macquoid. Illustrated by Thomas K. Macquoid.

THE MIRE. By Austin Dobson.

OUR OLD COUNTRY TOWNS VIII. With 4 Illustrations. By A. Himmer.

KILDURCHES OAK. By Julia Hawthorne.

JELLY FISHES. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

THE LEADEN CASKET. By Mrs. Alfred W. Hunt.

THE LITTLE SMALLWARE SHOP. By Henry W. Lucy.

On the 26th inst., price One Shilling,

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE,

For AUGUST.

Contents.

QUEEN COPHETUA. By E. E. Francillon.

A PERISHED KERNEL. By Alex. Charles Ewald.

THE MOON and its FOLK-LORE. By T. F. Thelwell Dyer.

RACHEL FELIX. By Dutton Cook.

FROM CHERMORNE to WESTMINSTER. By Percy Fitzgerald.

THE CLARINA ANNE. By James Forster.

IN THE CITY OF THE SAINTS. By Isa Duffus Hardy.

PARLIAMENT and the PRESS. By the Member for the Chilterns Hundreds.

TABLE TALK. By Sylvanus Urban.

CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

LEGENDA SANCTORUM (now ready), according to the use of Exeter, 1377. Compiled by Bishop JOHN DE GRANDISSON. Part I. With Facsimile in Gold and Colours of the Page, Coloured List of Saints' Lives from 1885, &c. Price 5s. to Subscribers.

"The pre-work is highly creditable, neither Mr Reynolds nor the publisher have spared time or cost in the production of what will ultimately be a noble volume."—Notes and Queries, June 10, 1880.

"A very remarkable and praiseworthy literary enterprise. A work of great interest; it is most admirably reproduced."

Literary Chronicle, June 11, 1880.

"The publication of this precious relic of historical bibliography is very opportune."—University Magazine (Hunt & Blackett), June, 1880.

PART II (now in the press), February to June, F. M. R. BRIDGID to St. BONIFACE, with Chromo-lithographs of the Missing Saviour, from the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John, and other illustrations. Price 5s. to Subscribers.

This Edition will consist of only 300 copies. Over 100 ordered.

ORDINALE et STATUTA ECCLESIAE ST. ANDREW CATHEDRALIS WILLELMII Folio size, over 130 pages. The ORDINALE and STATUTES of the CATHEDRAL CHURCH of ST. ANDREW at WILLES from the MS. (No. 729) in Lambeth Palace Library by the permission of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the consent of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. Now for the first time published, with extended Preface, Plan of the Cathedral and Chapter-house and various plates stamped with Rebus of Bishop Beckington. By HERBERT EDWARD REYNOLDS, M.A., Priest-Vicar and Librarian of Exeter Cathedral.

Orders to be sent to Editor. Only 200 copies will be printed. Price 15s. London: Elliot Stock, 22, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE ERA INDUSTRIAL AND GENERAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY (Limited).—Incorporated under the Companies' Acts, 1862, 1867, and 1877, whereby the liability of Shareholders is limited to the amount of their Shares. Capital, 40,000 in 40,000 Shares of 1s. each. ISSUED 30,000 SHARES, of which upwards of 2,000 have already been placed. Payable as follows, viz.:—2s. 6d. on Application; 2s. 6d. on allotment; 2s. 6d. on the 30th September, 1880; and 2s. 6d. on the 30th November, 1880, leaving 10s. per share unpaid, which at present it is not intended to call up.

Patron.—The Marquess TOWNSEND.

Directors.—James M. Walters, Esq. (late of the Oriental Bank), 4, Gray's Inn-place, W.C.

John Brashier, Esq. (Henry Wilkinson & Co., Limited), Bolt-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Robert Thomson, Esq., 7, Camden-road, N.W.

Thomas Down, Esq., Northumberland Park, Tottenham.

Henry Smith, Esq., Tregunter-road, West Brompton.

L. W. Paynter, Esq., C.E. (late Public Works Department, India), Windsor-road, Ealing.

Business.—The City Bank (Limited), Ludgate-hill Branch.

Solicitors.—Mr. Thomas D. Pettiver, 22, Collyer-street, Collyer-hill, E.C.

Members.—Mr. J. D. Moore.

Address.—John F. Lovering & Co., F.C.A., 77, Gresham-street, E.C.

Secretary.—Mr. W. J. Bridgman.

Office.—27 and 29, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

PROSPECTUS

This Company has been formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Fire Insurance Company in all its branches, but chiefly with the object of enabling the Working or Industrial Classes to insure their household goods, furniture, and effects by means of small weekly payments.

The success of the Life Assurance Companies which have included Industrial Assurance in their operations has been unprecedented, the annual premium income of the principal Company being upwards of 1,400,000 from the Industrial branch alone, and this in the face of severe competition, so that the Directors have every confidence of achieving a similar result in the Fire Insurance business—the more so, looking to the immense field open to the operations of the Company and the absence of any kind of competition.

The Directors would also draw attention to the fact that it is seldom that an opportunity is afforded to the public of investing in Fire Insurance Companies' Shares at par, and of receiving the large and handsome profits which are usually associated with this description of business. The Shares of the existing Companies being for the most part held by those who decline to part with them except at a large premium, and at a price which yields but a comparatively small return on the money invested.

The following Table will show the present market value of the Shares of a few of the Fire Insurance Companies, as compared with the amount paid up on them—

Name of Company	Paid up per Share.	Dividend.	Present Market Value per Share, about
Union	50s.	14s. per cent. and bonus	255s.
Imperial	Originally 10s. paid up since increased to 50s. out of profits	7s. per Share	155s.
County	Originally 10s. since increased to 50s. out of profits	4s. per Share and bonus of 10s. ..	115s.
North British and Mercantile ..	Originally 5s. per share since increased to 10s. 3s. out of profits.	2s. 6s. per Share ..	85s.
Liverpool, London and Globe ..	2s.	40 per cent.	16s.
Law	2s. 10s.	30 per cent.	14s.
Northern	Originally 5s. per share since increased to 10s. out of profits	40 per cent.	45s.
Royal	2s.	30 per cent.	20s.
Commercial Union ..	2s.	30 per cent.	20s.
Lancashire	2s.	30 per cent.	20s.
Law Union	12s.	30 per cent. and bonus ..	9s.

An Agreement, dated the 22nd June, 1880, has been entered into between Mr. James David Moore (the originator of the scheme upon which the working of the Company will be founded), and Robert Thornton, Esq., as Trustees for the Company, by which Mr. Moore has agreed to discharge a moderate number of paid-up Shares and a small sum in cash in discharge of all claims against the Company, he has also agreed to enter the service of the Company at a moderate salary.

This Agreement, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company can be seen at the Office of the Solicitor.

Should it become necessary to raise more Capital, further Shares will be issued to the public at a premium, but the original Shareholders will have the privilege of taking them, pro rata, at par, according to the number of Shares then standing in their names in the books of the Company.

We have no Allocation made the Deposit will be returned and if a further number of Shares be allotted than applied for the surplus of the Deposit will be applicable to the payment of the amount due on allotment. If any instalment is not duly paid the Allocation will be liable to cancellation, and payments previously made to forfeiture.

Application for Shares can be made by letter and Prospectuses and Application Forms can be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, and at the Office of the Company.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth, price 15s. Vol. III.
THE LIFE OF ADMIRAL OF THE FLEET, Sir WILLIAM PARKER, Bart. G.C.B. By Vice-Admiral AUGUSTUS PHILLIMORE. (The Concluding Volume, with Index to the Three Volumes.)
London: Harrison, Pall Mall.

Now ready, crown 8vo. 2s. with Portrait and Plans.
COLONEL GRODEKOFF'S RIDE FROM RAMACAND TO HERAT.
Through Baluch, and the Lark States of Afghan Turkestan. With his own Map of the March-Route from the Oxus to Herat.
By CHARLES MARVIN,
Author of 'The Disastrous Russian Campaign against the Akhal Tekke Turcomans,' &c.
London: Wm. H. Allen & Co. 13, Waterloo-place, E.W.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COMPANY (Limited), having Branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Larnaca (Cyprus), is prepared to transmit every description of General Banking Business with these Places.
O. F.O.A. Secretary
London: 57, Clement's-lane, E.C.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO.
BANKERS
25 and 40, MARK LANE, LONDON
(Established 1863.)

CLEARING BANKERS—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

DEPOSITS of 10s. and upwards received and Receipts issued—
On demand 3s. per cent. per annum.
Seven Days Notice 4
14 days Notice 4
30 days Notice 5
3 Months Notice 6

An Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit Twelve complete Months.

Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.
Thames-side-street, N.C. Charing Cross S.W.
Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1710.
Home and Foreign Insurance effected.
Sole Agent in London: FRANCIS B. REIDON, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,
70, FILL MALL.
For LIVES ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1807.
Accumulated Funds £2,043,543
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than £1,000,000.
Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.

GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

Demy 8vo. cloth, price 15s.

PORTUGAL, OLD AND NEW.

By OSWALD CRAWFORD, H.M.'s Consul at Oporto.
With Illustrations and Maps.

"It is quite possible that there may be other English residents who know Portugal and the Portuguese as well as Mr. Crawford, but it is certain that no Englishman has written more interesting books on the country."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Crawford's admirable book is most opportune, and his long residence in the country, his intimate and critical knowledge of the language, history, poetry, and the inner life of the people render him an authority as safe to follow as he is pleasant."—The Book is excellent in every way.—Athenæum.

"Than this a more agreeable account of Portugal and the Portuguese could scarcely have been written, and it will surprise us if the book does not live as one of the best descriptions we possess of a foreign nation."—St. James's Gazette.

"The reader acquires a distinct and vivid impression of the matters that are chosen to be worked out; and as they include political and domestic economy, history, literature, antiquities, geography, agriculture, sport, and, most important of all, port wine, there is diversity enough to suit every taste. Mr. Crawford, however, though he has a lively sense of fun and a considerable facility of writing wittily, does not allow these gifts to gain the mastery over him."—Pall Mall Gazette.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

THE ODE OF LIFE.

By the Author of 'The Epic of Hades,' &c.
Fcap. 8vo. cloth, price 3s.

"This ought to be the most popular of the author's works. People seek to hear Mr. Stopford Brooke, or Dean Stanley, or the Bishop of Manchester, but in this book they will hear a voice more eloquent than theirs, dealing with the most important subjects that can ever occupy the thoughts of man."—Westminster Review.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

NEXT WEEK.

LOD HASTINGTON'S SPEECHES.

ELECTION SPEECHES in 1879 and 1880. By the Right Hon. the MARQUIS OF HASTINGTON, M.P. Crown 8vo. cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Small crown 8vo. cloth.

A SKETCH of the KAFFIR and ZULU WARS:
Gnadau to Isandhlwana. By Capt. HENRY HALLAM PARR, Military Secretary to H. E. Sir Bartle Frere.

Crown 8vo. cloth.

PALACE and PRISON and FAIR GERALDINE.
Two Tragedies. By the Author of 'Genere' and the 'Duke of Guise.'

Small crown 8vo. cloth.

CORYDALIS: a Story of the Sicilian Expedition.
By EDWARD M. HAWTREY.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET
and CHARIING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurance effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
Fleet-street, London.

TRUSTEES.
The Right Honourable BARON CAMPBELL.
The Right Honourable VISCOUNT CRAWFORD.
The Right Honourable LORD JUSTICE THORNTON.
The Honourable VICE-CHANCELLOR SIR CHARLES HALL.
WILLIAM FREDERICK HIGGINS, Esq.
EDMOND ROBERT TURNER, Esq.

DIRECTORS.
John James Johnson, Esq. Q.C.
Arthur John Mordaunt, Esq.
Richard Nicholson, Esq.
Charles Mordaunt, Esq.
John Smith, Esq.
The Right Honourable Lord Justice Thorneley.
Edward Tompkins, Esq.
Sir William Henry Walton.
Arnold William White, Esq.
Hall Thomas Wood, Esq.

Invested assets on 31st December, 1879, £501,700.
Income for the year 1879, 474,558.
Amount paid in claims to 31st December last, 12,386,697.
Reversionary Bonus allotted for the five years ended 31st December last, 65,837.

Aggregate Reversionary Bonus hitherto allotted, 6,106,501.
The Expenses of Management (including commissions) are under 4 per cent of the annual income.

Attention is specially directed to the revised Prospectus of the Society to the new rates of Premium, which are materially lower for young lives than heretofore, to the new conditions as to extended limits of free travel and residence, and to the reduced rate of extra Premium.

Lives are granted on more liberal terms and are more liberal in connection with policies of assurance.

Prospectus and Form of Proposal will be sent on application.
GRIFFITH DAVIES, Actuary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.
And may be prevented against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
Right Hon. Lord KIDWELL, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.
Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.

A £250 sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.

ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.

Agents for the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited, at 64, Cornhill, London.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, cloth boards, with very Copious Index,

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII.

FIFTH SERIES.

Containing, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects:—

English, Irish, and Scottish History.

The Dream and Death of Thomas, Lord Lyttelton—The Elective and Deposing Power of Parliament—Anne Boleyn—Scottish Titles—Burial-Place of Edmund, Duke of Somerset—Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce—Bondmen in England—Serfdom in Scotland—Graham, Viscount Dundee—A Jacobite Letter—Abbotsford in 1835—Compurgators—Bishop of Ross, Scotland, 1417—Knox's 'History of the Reformation'—Good Friday and Easter Sunday, temp. Charles II.—The Jews in England in the Thirteenth Century—Warrants for the Execution of Charles I.—The Fitzmales and Stewarts.

Biography.

T. Allington—William Roy—Casper Hauser—Charles Owen of Warrington—Fausto Sarpi—The Descent of William Penn—William, Abbott of Ramsey—A. H. Rowan—George Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh—Matthew Smith, the first Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford—James Sayers, the Caricaturist—Jeremiah Horrocks.

Bibliography and Literary History.

Shakespeareana—The Authorship of Anonymous Works—Milton's 'L'Allegro'—Unpublished Letter of Macaulay—'Histoire des Médecins'—Juifs Anciens et Modernes—Earle's 'Philology of the English Tongue'—Unpublished Poems by Burns—Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Turtan—From Greenland's Icy Mountains—Chap-Books—Lord Byron in Scotland—Welsh Language—Unpublished Letter of John Wesley—The Works of Thomas Fuller—The Welsh Testament—Barnes's Ode on the American Civil War—Opus Questionum divi Augustini—Letter of Smollett—'The Pilgrim's Progress'—Development of the Press, 1824-1874—Books Written by Mrs. Olivia Serres: 'The Book.'

Popular Antiquities and Folk-Lore.

Ague Charms—Birds of Ill Omen—Candicans Gills—Eggs and Drunkenness—Evil Eye—Jewish Superstitions—Hydrophobia prevented—Handkerchief thrown on suicide's Coffin—Ladies and Lionses—The Seven Whistlers.

Poetry, Ballads, and Drama.

The real Richelieu and Bulwer's Richelieu—"The Irish Brigade"—Thomas Decker—Mrs. Siddons a Sculptor—Barham's Lines on Dean Inland—Browning's "Lost Leader"—The Lord Chamberlain's Inspection of Plays—Emma Isola—A Poem by W. M. Praed—Goethe—Shelley—Henry VIII. as a Poet—The Australian Drama—Charles I. as a Poet—Sheridan and Sir John Suckling—Oxfordshire Christmas Miracle-Play—Christmas Mummings in Dorsetshire—Dante and his Translators—The Christian Year.

Popular and Proverbial Sayings.

"You know who the Critics are"—"You may put it in your eye and see none the worse for it"—Called Home—God's Church and the Devil's Chapel—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking—Tout vient à point—Wise after the event—La Parole a été donnée à l'homme—Bobbing Peter to Pay Paul—The End justifies the Means—The English seems a Fool and is a Fool.

Philology.

Carr=Cars—Heel Tape—"Bloody"—Sparring—Nor for Than—Vagaries of Spelling—Spelling Reforms—Surrey Provincialisms—Quadragesimalia—S. v. E.—English Words compared with the Icelandic—Gingham—The Termination Y in Place-Names—Calomei—Yeux—Cameo—Hall, Wych, and Salt Works—Shaddongate—Shakespeare's Name.

Genealogy and Heraldry.

The Insignia of the Knights of the Garter—Arms—Hungary—Dering Roll of Arms—Unsettled Baronetries—The Arms of Sir Francis Drake—The Arms of English Boco—Bar Minister—Strawberry Leaves on Coronets—Byron Arms—F. B. E. T. in the Navy Arms—Seal of Prince of Livonia—The Templars and Hospitallars.

Fine Arts.

Portraits of Dr. Johnson—Marks on Porcelain—Italian Works of Art at Paris in 1815—Sir Joshua Reynolds—Miss Day: Mrs. Day—Portrait of Barber—Church Plate—Various Paintings and Engravings.

Ecclesiastical Matters.

Altar Rails, Covered—Liddell v. Westerton—Ecclesiastical Vestments—Funeral Garlands—The Clericisms—"Preter John" and the Arms of the See of Chichester—Penance in the Church of England—Laud's Service Book—Epitaph of Cardinal Howard at Rome—St. Cuthbert's Burial-place—Old Northern English MSS. Painter—Borlase Church—Sacred Vessels—A Roman Catholic Visitation in 1709—Episcopal Titles—St. George's Lotte—Regium Sacrum Batavianum—Communion Tokens—Feasting Communion in the Church of England—The Title of Reverend—Consecration of Church Plate—"Defender of the Faith"—The "Breeches" Bible.

Classical Subjects.

The Latin Version of Bacon's Essays—Greek Anthology—Martial's Epigram xlii. 15—Lucretian Notelets—Medieval and Modern Latin and Greek Verse—Mittitur in disco—Catullus: "Hoc ut dixit"—"Sandon" (Horace)—Cloero—Lucas a non Lucendo.

Topography.

Sandwich Islands—Origin of the Names of the American States—Arthur's Oven on the Carron—Scottish History—The Yardley Oak—Hart Hall, Oxford—Old Kensington—Travelling in Italy Forty Years ago—The Equestrian Statue in Hyde Park—Arthurian Localities: Scotland—The Sacred Lotus—St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row.

Miscellaneous.

Christian Names—Pillar Posts—Hanging in Chains and Irons—George III. and the Pig—The Kilkenny Cats—The Waterloo and Peninsular Medals—The Clerical a healthy Profession—Unlawful Games of the Middle Ages—Itinerant Empires—Sunday Newspapers—Gipsies—The Wordsworth—Double Returns in Parliamentary Elections—Curiosities of Corporation Records—Spiritual Apparitions—The "Dial" System of Telegraphy—Professor Becker's "Gallus"—Skating Literature—Cricket—London Companies, or Guilds—A Travelling Tutor of the Olden Time—Gunpowder Plot—Baths in the Middle Ages—The Little Summer—Whitewide—Michaelmas—Christmas Contrasts.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.

205, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUARY WORKS OF ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT ON
MOORE'S MARK SYSTEM.
The Original, Best, and most Liberal.

No extra charge for plans given.
Illustrated Priced Catalogues, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F. MOEDER, 204, 205, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1852.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites from £1. 0s. to £50 Guinea.
Drawing-room Suites from £1. 5s. to £45 Guinea.
Dining-room Suites from £1. 7s. to £40 Guinea.
And all other Goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 204, 205, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1852.

KNIVES, FORKS, and SPOONS.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE for SILVER.—
The REAL NICKEL SILVER, when strongly SILVER-PLATED, cannot be distinguished from silver.

With ordinary usage this quality will wear 30 years.

Best Quality, strongly Plated.

	Fiddle Silver	Red Silver	King's or Shall
Table Forks	1 10 0	2 1 0	2 5 0
Table Spoons	1 10 0	2 1 0	2 5 0
Dessert Forks	1 2 0	1 8 0	1 11 0
Dessert Spoons	1 2 0	1 8 0	1 11 0
Ten Spoons	14 0	1 0 0	1 3 0

A SECOND QUALITY of Fiddle Pattern Table Spoons or Forks, 2s. per dozen. Dessert, 17s. Ten Spoons, 12s.

CUTLERY WARRANTED.

Handled, Serviced or Rivetted.
Blades of the Finest Steel.

	Table Knives	Dessert, Cutlery	per doz.
2 1/2 in. Ivory Handles, per doz.	12 0	9 0	8 0
3 1/2 in. do. do.	16 0	12 0	8 0
4 1/2 in. do. to balance, do.	18 0	15 0	8 0
5 1/2 in. do. do.	20 0	18 0	8 0
6 1/2 in. do. do.	23 0	21 0	8 0
7 1/2 in. extra large do.	30 0	28 0	10 0
8 1/2 in. African do.	40 0	35 0	12 0
9 1/2 in. Silver Ferrule do.	45 0	40 0	15 0

CARRIAGE PAID to any Railway Station.

Samples at above rates post free.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing

Brooming 20, Oxford-street, W., &c.

Catalogue, containing 250 illustrations, post free.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER

PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRESSING BAG.

ALLEN'S STRONG BROWN BASKETS.

ALLEN'S REGISTERED ALUMEN DISPATCH BOX.

ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 400 Articles for Continental Travelling, post free.

37, West Strand, London.

A POLLINARIS WATER.

"Laurel coronatus Apollinari."—Mars, Book IV. Ode 2.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

ANNUAL SALE, 8,000,000.

A POLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 18, Regent-street, London, E.W.

LOTS 110 and 111.—LOT 110, very soft OLD

PALE WHISKY at 30s. and LOT 111, very soft OLD OROBORO SULEKA, pale gold, at 35s. per dozen. RHEUMATISM of the old style, melted by age, very soft, and entirely free from the Rheum which has been so detrimental to the consumption of Whisky. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realization, and are offered to the public, while on the special Lot list, at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction.—The LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adelphi, W.C. (removed from 40, Strand).

M. E. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON DENTIST,
57, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.

Consultation free, from 10 to 4.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Solution as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

"SANITAS" and DISINFECTION.—The Fine

Forer at Home.—THE SANITARY PREPARATIONS are in use in more than 300 Houses of Health, Hospitals, &c. Non-poisonous, stainless, agreeable and healthful. Disinfecting Fluids, Powders, and Household Soaps. Toilet Soaps and Fluids. Tooth and Nurey Creams. All Chemicals of the Sanitary Company, Limited, Bethnal Green, London E. Testimonials of highest Medical and Sanitary Authorities free. Of universal necessity as the most perfect Farther and Disinfectant.

P O R T U G A L.

PORTUGUESE LIGHT WINES.

E L R E I.

ROYAL BUCELLAS HOCK.

A natural Portuguese white wine without Brandy is made from Rhine Vines transplanted into Portugal.

It is largely consumed in Portugal, makes an agreeable and wholesome summer drink, combining particularly well with all aerated waters, making a delicious cup without the addition of liqueurs.

Bucellas Hock maintains its character in all climates, is a cheap wine, and can be obtained from Wine Merchants and dealers throughout the Kingdom.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

PRICE
PER COPY

LEAMINGTON COLLEGE. — ENTRANCE
SCHOLARSHIP EXAMINATION on SEPTEMBER 14 and 15.
 Address Rev D. Wood, College, Leamington, or, after August 1st Messrs. Bellamy, Leamington.

E D U C A T I O N .

Ready, price 3d., post free, 3d. the AUGUST Number of

The Journal of Trinity College, London, and Institute in Union.

Principal Contents.
The Royal College of Music
College Debating Societies.
The Centenary of Great Oration.
Plato, Aristotle and Modern Education.—Parliamentary Summary: The Universities, Colleges and General.
Notes on Music, Literature, Science, and Art.
Reviews.—Official Intelligence.
London: W. Reeves, 125, Fleet-street, E.C., and all Booksellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, for AUGUST, contains:
The London Musical Season—Warner on Beethoven (Second Notice)
The Music of the Glapton—The Great Composers: Spohr—Peschel's
Opera, 'La Gioconda'—Her Majesty's Opera, Bais's 'Ménestrol'—
Henry Leslie's Choir—Reviews, Foreign and Country News, Correspondence, &c. Price 4d., post free, 4d. Annual subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, for AUGUST, contains:
The Music of the Glapton—The Great Composers: Spohr—Peschel's
Opera, 'La Gioconda'—Her Majesty's Opera, Bais's 'Ménestrol'—
Henry Leslie's Choir—Reviews, Foreign and Country News, Correspondence, &c. Price 4d., post free, 4d. Annual subscription, 4s., including postage.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL, for AUGUST 2.

Price 6d.
The Restoration Movement. By W. Chambers.
Gossip about Travellers.
Story of Peter, the Tame Sea-Gull.
Bricks and Brickmakers.
How I Got Frosted.
More Uses of Paper.
Lecture-Time Stories.
Ice-Making.
A Porter's Treasure.
A Few Words about Hobbies.
Max Gordon. In Six Chapters.
Rackety-Gnomes.
Sea-Sickness.
Sonnambulus.
The Lost Cities of Syria.

A LIFE'S ATONEMENT.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. Chapters 26-32.
W. & A. Chambers, London and Edinburgh.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES OF ENGLISHMEN ABROAD.

THE PASSION PLAY, now Acting at Ober-Ammergau.—PRACTICAL GUIDE. Post free, 6d.
PRACTICAL SWISS GUIDE. Every information. 2s. 6d.
PRACTICAL GENERAL CONTINENTAL GUIDE. 6s.
PRACTICAL FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND AND THE RHINE. 1s.
London: Trübner & Co. 57, Ludgate-hill.

At all Libraries and Railway Bookstalls, in 1 vol. crown 8vo. price 10s. 6d. post free.

THE STORY OF STELLA PEEL. By HARRIET L. CHILDS-PENBERTON.—The "Literary Production Committee." 40, Southampton-buildings, W.C. P.O. to C. M. Clark, payable at Chief Office.

Second Edition, demy 8vo. cloth, with Maps, price 10s. 6d. post free.
EPIDEMIOLOGY; or, the Volcanic Origin of Epidemic Diseases, of Nervous, of Bright, of Hysterical, and of Abnormal Atmospheric Vicissitudes. By JOHN FAHLEN, M.D.
London: David Bogue, 82, Martin's-place, W.C.

Just published in Leyden (Netherlands), 8vo. pp. 115, 2s. sewed.
GREEK WRITERS OF ROMAN HISTORY:
some Reflections upon the Authorities used by Plutarch and Appian. By Dr J. C. VON HARNACK, Litt. Hum. Doct.
London: Dulau & Co. 27, Soho-square.

Recently published, price 13s. 6d.

FRASER'S ETRUSCANS: an Examination of some Celtic Elements in the Etruscans, the Romans, and the Greek Language and Mythology.
"A marvel of learning and ingenuity."—Scotsman.
"Fitted to give him an honorable place among the philologists of our day."—Aberdeen Guide.
Edinburgh: Maclehish & Stewart. London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

THE ONLY COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED GUIDE.

THE OBER-AMMERGAU PASSION PLAY:
giving the Origin and History of the Village and People, full Descriptions of the Scenes and Talents of the German Actors of the Drama, and the Songs of the Chorus in German and English. With Portraits of the principal Actors, View of the Stage and Theatre, &c. By JOHN P. JACKSON, Author of 'The Album of the Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau' (1873), of the English Version of Richard Wagner's Music Drama, 'Rienzi', 'Flying Dutchman', 'Lohengrin', &c.

"The work has many illustrations, personal and topographical, and may be recommended both to persons about to see the drama, and to persons who would like to see it but must be content to stay at home and read of it. Mr. Jackson is a master of his subject, and readers and travellers cannot be under better guidance than his."—Daily News.
London: W. H. Smith & Son, at the Railway Bookstalls; Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

WORKS OF GEORGE ELIOT.

CABINET EDITION, in 19 vols. price 47. 15s.
Printed from a new and legible type, in a convenient and handsome form.

Each Work sold separately, price 4s. a Volume.

ADAM BEDDE. 2 vols.—The MILL on the FLOSS. 2 vols.—SILAS MARSHALL THE LITTLE VILL. BROTHERS JACOB. 1 vol.—SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE. 1 vol.—FELIX HOLT. 2 vols.—ROMOLA. 2 vols.—MIDDLEMARCH. 2 vols.—DANIEL DERONDA. 2 vols.—THE SPANISH GYPSY. 1 vol.—JUDAH, and other Poems, Old and New. 1 vol.

NOVELS OF GEORGE ELIOT, each in 1 vol.
ADAM BEDDE. 2 vols.—The MILL on the FLOSS. 2 vols.—SILAS MARSHALL THE LITTLE VILL. BROTHERS JACOB. 1 vol.—SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE. 1 vol.—FELIX HOLT. 2 vols.—ROMOLA. 2 vols.—MIDDLEMARCH. 2 vols.—DANIEL DERONDA. 2 vols.

IMPRESSIONS OF THEOPHRASTUS SUCH. By GEORGE ELIOT. Fourth Edition. 10s. 6d.

WISE, WITTY, and TENDER SAVINGS, from the WORKS OF GEORGE ELIOT. Selected by ALEXANDER MAIN. Fourth and Enlarged Edition, containing Extracts from 'Daniel Deronda' and 'Theophrastus Such'. Fcap. gilt cloth, 4s.

THE GEORGE ELIOT BIRTHDAY BOOK.
Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, fcap. 3s. 6d., in leather, 6s.
William Blackwood & Sons, Edinburgh and London.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES.

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' 'Greene Fenne Farm,' 'Hodge and His Masters.'

Crown 8vo. 1s.

[Early in August.]

Just published, 2 vols. demy 8vo. 22s. with Illustrations and Maps.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING.

DRAMATIC IDYLS. Second Series.

Fcap. 8vo. 6s.

By ROBERT BROWNING.

RENAISSANCE IN ITALY: Age of the Despots.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.

Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 15s.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LAW AND GOD.'

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo. 6s.

REASONABLE SERVICE.

By W. PAGE ROBERTS, M.A.,

Incumbent of St. Peter's, Vine-street, formerly Vicar of Ely, Suffolk, Author of 'Law and God.'

"Sermons which owe their chief charm to the deep and earnest faith impressed on every page of them."—Times.
"Mr. Page Roberts appears to be a very liberal theologian but very decidedly a Churchman."—Contemporary Review.
"A volume of discourses which are fresh, vigorous, and clear, which show a thorough comprehension of the questions most interesting to society, and which display a wise tolerance to every sincere faith. Such is Mr. Page Roberts's book, entitled 'Reasonable Service.'"
"These sermons are very short, and apparently very simple; but the careful reader will find they suggest more than is so many given words they actually teach."
"The preacher aims at making his hearers think and feel: he is likely to succeed. There is a dash of Carlyle in his manner."
—Reverend.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

THIS DAY.

LORD HARTINGTON'S SPEECHES.

ELECTION SPEECHES in 1879 and 1880. With

Address to the Electors of North-East Lancashire, by the Right Hon. the MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON, M.P. Crown 8vo. cloth, price 3s. 6d.

With Maps, small crown 8vo. cloth, price 4s.

A SKETCH of the KAFIR and ZULU WARS:

Gumdana to Imandhivana. By Captain HENRY HALLAM PARR, Military Secretary to H. R. Sir Bartle Frere.

Small crown 8vo. cloth, price 3s. 6d.

CORYDALIS: a Story of the Sicilian Expedition.

By EDWARD M. HAWTREY.

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

PALACE and PRISON and FAIR GERALDINE.

Two Tragedies. By the Author of 'Ginevra' and the 'Duke of Guise.'

Crown 8vo. cloth, price 3s. 6d.

ANIMAL MAGNETISM. Physiological Observations

by RUDOLF HERMANNHAIN, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the University of Breslau. Translated from the Fourth German Edition by L. C. WOOLDRIDGE, with a Preface by G. E. ROMANES, F.R.S.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square.

Demy 8vo. with Illustrations and Maps, cloth, 16s.

PORTUGAL, OLD AND NEW.

By OSWALD CRAWFORD, H.M.'s Consul at Oporto.

"It is quite possible that there may be other English residents who know Portugal and the Portuguese as well as Mr. Crawford, but it is certain that no Englishman has written more interesting books on the country."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Crawford's admirable book is most opportune, and his long residence in the country, his intimate and critical knowledge of the language, history, poetry, and the inner life of the people render him an authority as safe to follow as he is pleasant. The book is excellent in every way."—Athenæum.

"Than this a more agreeable account of Portugal and the Portuguese could scarcely have been written, and it will surprise us if the book does not live as one of the best descriptions we possess of a foreign nation."—St. James's Gazette.

"The reader acquires a distinct and vivid impression of the matters that are chosen to be worked out; and as they include political and domestic economy, history, literature, antiquities, geography, agriculture, sport, and, most important of all, port wine, there is diversity enough to suit every taste. Mr. Crawford, however, though he has a lively sense of fun and a considerable faculty of writing wittily, does not allow these gifts to gain the mastery over him."—Pall Mall Gazette.

C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. 1, Paternoster-square

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SPECIMEN LIST OF BOOKS IN GENERAL DEMAND.

- Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort*, by Theodore Martin—Sister Dora: a Biography—Heroes of the Cross, by W. H. D. Adams.
The Life and Work of St. Paul, by Canon Farrar—Memoir of Mrs. Tait—Sketch of the Life of Elihu Burritt.
McCarthy's History of Our Own Times—Life of Bishop Wilberforce—Memorials of Frances Ridley Havergal.
Letters of Charles Dickens—Memoir of Francis Deak—Life of W. E. Gladstone—Dixon's Royal Windsor.
Senior's Conversations—Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat—Selected Correspondence of Macvey Napier.
A Ride in Petticoats and Slippers, by Capt. Colville—The Old Régime, by Lady Jackson.
Our Home in Cyprus, by Mrs. Scott-Stevenson—Life in the Rocky Mountains, by Isabella Bird.
Memoirs of Edward and Catherine Stanley—New Zealand and Australia, by J. C. Crawford.
Memoir of Sir James Outram, by Sir F. J. Goldsmid—Memoir of Rev. Henry Venn—Hippolytus, by Bishop Wordsworth.
Political Questions of the Day, by S. C. Burton—Contemporary Portraits, by E. D. Preussner.
Hamilton's Memoirs of Frederick the Great—MacKenzie's History of the Nineteenth Century.
Dr. Martineau's Hours of Thought (New Series)—Rough Ways made Smooth, by E. A. Proctor—Russia and England, by O. K.
Russia Before and After the War—The River of Golden Sand, by Capt. Gill—Our Future Highway, by Commander Cameron.
Poynter's Classic and Italian Painting—Chinese Buddhism, by Dr. Edkins—Belton's Recollections of an Old Actor.
Life of C. J. Mathews—A Life's Decision, by Rev. T. W. Allies—Mason's Life of Milton, Vol. VI.
Essays from the North American Review—Baird's Rise of the Huguenots—Nordenfalk's Arctic Voyages.
Mrs. Brassy's Voyage in the Mediterranean—Deep unto Deep, by Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley—Up the Amazon, by E. D. Mathews.
Adventures in Many Lands, by Parker Gilmore—Gilmore's Ride Through Hostile Africa.
The Ode of Life, by the Author of 'Epic of Hades'—The Philosophy of Religion, by Professor Caird.
The Reign of Queen Anne, by J. H. Burton—Mind in the Lower Animals, by Dr. Lindsay.
Parables of Our Lord, by Dr. Calderwood—Christian Civilization, by William Cunningham—Ephphatha, Sermons, by Canon Farrar.
Life of Dr. Duff—Life of Bishop Selwyn—Memoir of Marquess Wellesley, by W. M. Torrens.
Italy and her Invaders, by Thomas Hodgkin—The Huguenots of the Dispersion, by Thomas Poole—Fossil Men, by J. W. Dawson.
Studies of Famous Women, by M. Betham-Edwards—Green's History of the English People, Vol. IV.
McClure's Early Years of Calvin—Ceremonial Institutions, by Herbert Spencer—Scottish Sermons in 1880.
Abbott's Oxford Sermons—Boskin's Notes on S. Prout and W. Hunt—Watson's Sketches in the Hunting Field.
The Racehorses in Training, by William Day—Ball's Jungle Life in India—History of the Zulu War, by Frances Coleman.
My Chief and I in Natal, by Atherton Wyld—Oppert's Corea—Subree's Madagascar—Herat, by Colonel Malleon.
Bagehot's Economic Studies—England under Beaconsfield, by P. W. Clayden—Indian Finance, by Henry Fawcett.
Froude's Lectures on South Africa—The Dead Hand, by Sir Arthur Hobbhouse—Chorley's National Music of the World.
Modern Greece, by R. C. Jebb—The Munster Circuit, by J. R. O'Flanagan—A Study of Shakespeare, by A. C. Swinburne.
Amateur Theatricals, by Lady Pollock—Recollections of Workhouse Visiting, by Louise Twining—Hellenica: a Series of Essays.
Rest Awhile, by Dean Vaughan—Campaigning in South Africa, by Capt. Montague—Glances Through the Cannon Smoke, by A. Forbes.
Camps in the Caribees, by F. A. Ober—Early Man in Britain, by W. Boyd Dawkins—Sylvan Spring, by Francis G. Heath.
Autobiography of Prince Metternich—Life of Beethoven—Life of Bishop Milman—The Amateur Dramatic Club, by F. C. Burnand.
Pen-Sketches from a Vanished Hand, by Mortimer Collins—Essays by the Archbishop of York—Life of Henry T. Buckle.
Our Visit to Kashmir, by Mrs. J. C. Murray Aynaley—Cyprus as I Saw It, by Sir Samuel Baker—Mrs. Burton's Travels in Arabia.
Watson's Science Teachings in Living Nature—Lectures on Art, by E. J. Poynter—Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.
Sir Edwin Landseer, by F. G. Stephens—Chronicles of Chelsea, by Rev. A. G. L'Estrange—Wild Life in a Southern County.
Wheeler's Short History of India—The Transvaal of To-day, by A. Aylward—A Trip to Boerland, by R. J. Atcherley.
The Theatres of Paris, by J. B. Matthews—Holidays in Eastern France, by Matilda Betham-Edwards.
Old Testament Prophecy, by Dr. Stanley Leathes—The Collects of the Day, by Dean Goulburn.
Life of Sir James Brooke, by Spencer St. John—Séguin's Black Forest—The Renaissance in France, by Mrs. Mark Pattison.
The Religions of China, by Dr. Legge—Cæsar: a Sketch, by J. A. Froude—Froude's Bunyan.
A History of Greek Literature, by J. P. Mahaffy—Episodes of French History, by Gustave Masson.
Wanderings in the Western Land, by A. P. Vivian—Klein's Narrative of the Battle of Worth—Records of York Castle.
Portugal, Old and New, by Oswald Crawford—Life and Work of Mary Carpenter—Browning's Dramatic Idyls (Second Series).
Ewald's Representative Statesmen—Bayne's Lessons from my Masters—Séguin's Country of the Passion Play.
An Eastern Afterglow, by W. B. Wood—Alexander Pope, by Leslie Stephen—Sir Joshua Reynolds, by F. S. Pulling.
Autobiography of Sir Gilbert Scott—Scott's Lectures on Mediæval Architecture—Brodrick's Political Studies.
The New Parliament, by William Saunders—Gipsy Life, by George Smith—Swinburne's Songs of the Springtides.
New and Old, by J. A. Symonds—Critical Essays, by Bayard Taylor—Food and Feeding, by Sir Henry Thompson.
A Study of Shelley, by John Todhunter—Holidays in Home Counties, by E. Walford.
The Book of Esther, by Dr. Raleigh—Renan's Hibbert Lectures, 1880—Paris Herself Again, by G. A. Sala.
Renouf's Origin and Growth of Religion—Evolution and Involution, by G. Thomson.

ALL THE BEST NEW NOVELS, AND MANY OTHER WORKS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

SEE MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for AUGUST.

All the Books in Circulation in MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY may also be obtained by every Subscriber to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

And (by order) from all Booksellers in connexion with the Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), New Oxford-street, London.

CITY OFFICE, 2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST OF NEW WORKS.

THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

A TRIP to MANITOBA. By Mary FITZ-GIBSON. In 8vo. 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

FIVE WEEKS in ICELAND. By Miss DE PONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

NIGH UNTO the END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Almighty the Eastern sky is aglow with the reddening rays of its Adventurous end, by all the stars of which himself hath spoken, the Master cometh."—From a Charge by the late Bishop of Winchester

NEW EDITIONS, NOW READY.

POPULAR EDITION

In crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s. with an Illustration.
PROBATION. By the Author of 'The First Violin.'

POPULAR EDITION.

At all Booksellers, in crown 8vo. price 6s.
"CHERRY RIPE!" By the Author of 'Comin' Thro' the Rye.'

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MISS BROUGHTON'S NEW NOVEL
SECOND THOUGHTS.
By RHODA BROUGHTON,
Author of 'Cometh Up as a Flower,' 'Joan,' &c.
In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIFF.'
PIOUS FRAUDS.
By ALBANY D. PONBLANQUE,
Author of 'Cut Adriff,' 'A Tangled Skein,' &c.
In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL
THE VIOLIN PLAYER.
By BERTHA THOMAS.
In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Miss Thomas's art as a story-teller is unmistakable, and her grasp of character deeper and more complete than we find in many novels of more ambitious pretensions."
—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story. In studies of character her book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel writing."
—Athenæum.

LADY M. MASSMIDIE'S NEW NOVEL FASCINATION.
By Lady MARGARET MASSMIDIE
In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

Now ready price One Shilling.
THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Contents for AUGUST, 1880.

ADAM AND EVE (Continued).
LETTERS TO AND FROM R. C. ANDERSEN
THE RETURN OF APHRODITE.
A TRIP AND WHAT FOLLOWED.
THE YOUTH OF QUEEN HENRI.

THE RETURN OF APHRODITE.
ROMANCE OF LITERARY DISCOVERY
THE PORTRAIT OF A PAINTER BY HIMSELF. Part III.
A SCANDALOUS ROMANCE.
THE REBEL OF THE FAMILY By Mrs. Lynn Linton. (Continued.)

* Those for binding the Volumes of Temple Bar can be obtained at all Bookellers, price One Shilling each.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE
LIFE (1797-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. ALPHONSE. 1 vol. 8vo. 12s. [This day.]

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.
SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work and the inherent romance of the stories it contains, will ensure it a widespread popularity. Many of the papers possess an engaging and popular interest, while all of them may be read with pleasure and profit."—Examiner.
"There are few readers who will not bear testimony to the fascination of these family legends. Nearly fifty stories of English, Scottish, and Irish families are narrated in these interesting volumes with such careful reference to authority as the writer, a practiced biographical historian, is accustomed to pursue."—Daily Telegraph.

THE VILLAGE of PALACES; or, CHRONICLES of CHELSEA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"This work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting period of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit."—Post.
"Mr. L'Estrange tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."—Standard.

CHEAP EDITION OF SIR GIBBIE.
By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 6s. bound.

THE NEW NOVELS.

The TENTH EARL. By John BERVICK HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Mary, &c.' 3 vols.

FORESTALLED. By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Ridgely,' 'Hedleys in Eastern France,' &c. 2 vols. 21s.

"Forestalled" is a very remarkable novel. Miss Betham-Edwards has produced a tale of powerful interest, which successfully rivets the attention from the beginning to the end."—Sunday Times.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs. G. LENNEXUS HANKE, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.

"A thoroughly readable, fresh and wholesome novel. The story is interesting and well told."—John Bull.
"Woolers and Winners" will add to Mrs. Hanke's literary fame. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting."—Chart Journal.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.
"A very attractive and clever story, which, if it be a first effort in fiction, is unusually successful. It is the work of a cultured mind, and is carried out with considerable skill."—Athenæum.
"One of the most clever and original works of fiction of the year. Its freshness and unconventionality are very attractive."—John Bull.
"This book is thoroughly readable and amusing. The heroine is one of the most charming creations in recent fiction."—Standard.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DESMART, Author of 'Katharine,' &c. 3 vols.
"Lord Desmart shows his uncommon liveliness in description, which is never protracted so as to become wearisome."—Athenæum.
"A bright, lively story, full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volumes."—Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of 'Rathconrory Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.

"One of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one will say it does not succeed."—Post.
POET and PEER. By Hamilton ALDR. 2 vols. Dedicated to Lord Lytton.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. PIRKIS, Author of 'The World of His Own,' &c. 2 vols. [Next week.]

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.
Book Work complete in 1 vol. price 6s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Mr. J. GILBERT, MILLAR, HUNT, LEBER, POYNTER, FOSTER, THOMAS, SANDYS, R. HUGHES, RAMBOURN, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY
GEORGE MACDONALD'S LITERARY WORKS

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature.
Lost and Found. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.
Barbara's History. By Amelia R. Edwards.
Life of King. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Church.
Christmas: A Miracle. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Old Yew. By George Mac Donnell, LL.D.
Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Diana. A New Adventure.
Robert Falconer. By George Mac Donnell, LL.D.
The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Annals of an Eventful Life. By O. W. Dewart, D.D.
David Brevintor. By George Mac Donnell, LL.D.
A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Barbara. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Americanism at Home.
The United Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
My Little Lady. By E. F. Parnes.
Foster.
Foster, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Life of Sir John Lubbock. By Professor C. D. Young.
Mr. O'Brien. By George Mac Donnell, LL.D.

Just ready (the Second 1,000), in 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.

By JOHN CAIRD, D.D.,
Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Glasgow;
and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains for Scotland.

"He [T. H. Green] in the Academy of July 10; recognises Dr. Caird's book as the most valuable of its kind that has appeared."

"It is remarkable also for its marvellous power of exposition and graceful simplicity of thought. Happily solution of the problem of religion is at length adequately represented in English literature. Hitherto it has never appeared so attractive as it appears in the clear and direct pages of Principal Caird."—Standard, May 18.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 18s.

A CRITICAL ACCOUNT of the PHILOSOPHY of KANT. With an Historical Introduction by EDWARD CAIRD, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, and late Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford.

"This book contains the most exhaustive and most valuable exposition of Kant's metaphysical system which has appeared in this country. The critical analysis is lucid and searching, and the exposition plain and unobscured. The running commentary to the work of a man who both knows what he has to say and knows how to say it forcibly and well. The style is attractive as well as clear. Without being ornate or rhetorical it has about it a kind of quiet eloquence which comes of common sense and of genuine conviction."—Times.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo. price 18s. 6d.

The HISTORY and POETRY of the SCOTTISH BORDER their Main Features and Relations. By JOHN VEITCH, LL.D., Professor of Logic and Rhetoric in the University of Glasgow.

"We feel as if we were hearing the stories of Rob Roy to the marches of some among the breezes of the mountains or the moorland under the sun-broken mists of the wild glens or the wooded banks of the Tarrow or the Tweed."—Times.

SECOND EDITION, in 1 vol. crown 8vo. with Frontispiece, price 1s. 6d.

The LIFE of a SCOTTISH PROBATIONER. being the Memoir of Thomas Davidson. With his Poems and Letters. By the Rev. JAMES BROWN, D.D.

"A charming little biography. His was one of those rare natures which fascinate all who come in contact with it. A picture of a man of high purpose, quiet humour, strong but not ostentatious affections, and profound Christian faith."—Standard.

It is an unpleasant pleasure to a reviewer, weary of reading through piles of commonplace, to come unexpectedly on a price such as this."—Manchester Guardian.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo. price 7s. 6d.

CREED and CONDUCT: Sermons preached in Renshaw Church. By the Rev. ROBERT HERBERT STOUT, D.D., Minister of the Parish.

"Characterised throughout by profound earnestness and spirituality, and written in a style at once graceful, clear and nervous. Dr. Stout has made a well-timed attempt to vindicate the Church, and at the same time to deepen and intensify the religious feeling of his countrymen."—Standard.

THIRD EDITION, extra fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

OLRIG GRANGE: a Poem, in Six

"The most striking phase of our civilisation has scarcely been exposed in a more quiet point, where by 'Thackeray himself' than in this satire of a fashionable and religious mother to her daughter."—Post and Courier.

SECOND EDITION, extra fcap. 8vo. 7s.

BORLAND HALL: a Poem, in Six Books. By the Author of 'Olrig Grange.'

"Some of exquisite beauty stand the poems like gems in some many week of beaten gold. The poem is not only readable in itself, but full of splendid promises."—Standard.

SECOND EDITION, extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

HILDA; among the Broken Gods: a Poem. By the Author of 'Olrig Grange.'

"The tale of 'Hilda' is told in language which is at once 'simple, vigorous and passionate, and we have not read for some considerable time a poem which is more riveting in interest. 'Hilda' is a very able, discriminating and picturesque representation of the present time of severe transition, with all its trembling doubts and agonising doubts, and its solemn, if serene, joys. A most impressive sermon indeed. 'Hilda' is, and will lay it down without losing that they are both older and wiser men."—Standard.

In 1 vol. extra fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

The VILLAGE LIFE: a Poem.

"A remarkable volume of poetry. The 'Doctor' will stamp the book as containing originally as well as power. The metre suits the subject admirably and constitutes one of the great charms of an unpretentious but worthy book, which will be read by all who have any keen interest in the progress of English literature."—Standard.

Glasgow.

JAMES MACLEHOSE, Publisher to the University.
London: MACMILLAN & CO.

SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1880.

CONTENTS.

GUIZOT IN PRIVATE LIFE	135
LOWELL'S POETICAL WORKS	136
LEONHART OF GENÈVE	137
LAMB'S TRANSLATION OF THEOCRATES	138
WALFOLD'S HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND, VOL. III.	138
MADON'S TREASURY OF ENGLISH SONNETS	140
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	141
MANUAL OF FRENCH HISTORY	142
ANTHROPOMORPHIC PUBLICATIONS	143
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	144-145
IN A COTTAGE GARDEN; "THE MELANCHOLY JACQUES"	145-146
EDGAR ALLAN POE; THE TRIAL OF CHARLES I.	146-147
LITERARY GOSPEL	147
SCIENCE—JAMES ON INDIAN INDUSTRIES, LIBRARY TABLE; ASTRONOMICAL NOTES, SOCIETIES; GOSPEL	148-151
STYLISH—BURN'S OLD HOME; LIBRARY TABLE, THE ROYAL ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE; THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND; GOSPEL	151-154
MUSIC—NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS; GOSPEL	154
DRAMA—THE WEEK, GOSPEL	154

LITERATURE

Monsieur Guizot in Private Life, 1787-1874.
By Madame de Witt. Translated by
M. C. M. Simpson. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Few statesmen have lost their reputations so suddenly as M. Guizot. Charles X. and his ministers had little fame to lose, and gradually they drifted into a contest with the nation of which most people predicted the issue; but the fall of Louis Philippe and his minister was as much of a surprise to their opponents as to themselves. It is easy to be wise after the event, and when we look back we can see that M. Guizot was busy for years preparing the catastrophe which overwhelmed his master and himself, and even this volume, which deals mainly with his private life, betrays some of the defects of character which marred many fine qualities. He possessed not only an entire belief in the infallibility of his own judgment, but a firm conviction that all who opposed him were knaves. He always regarded his own as the only policy possible.

"Try," he wrote in 1832, "to get the good sense of Europe to help us; we need the existence of every factor of reason and good sense, and we must gather strength wherever we can find it. Let it be well understood that we are playing the great, perhaps the last, game of order and safety in Europe, and that all honest men, all men of sense, must join in the game." His son repeated the same dangerous doctrine in 1836:—

"One must own, too, that honest men and high reputations are worth having, and their reign has begun: it will not continue without shocks and interruptions, but it will grow and strengthen every day. The battle is no longer being fought between honest men and rascals; it is between honest men and rogues who are ashamed of themselves, and who assume the name and appearance of honesty as well as they can. That they feel the want of it, and that they are obliged to seem honest in order to have a chance of doing mischief under the shelter of their names or their characters, is a decided improvement. The battle will continue longer, but it will be less dangerous, less violent than the last; and if the country be sometimes disturbed, it will not be revolutionised, as under the other system."

Guizot has treated of his political conduct in his Memoirs, which were reviewed in this journal at the time they appeared. The present work deals with his private life, a sphere in which he appears to far more advantage. He was fortunate in his parents. His father, an advocate of Nîmes, was one of the victims of the Reign of Terror:—

"For several weeks in danger of his life, a fugitive from one asylum to another, protected by the devotion of a few friends, André-François Guizot was at length arrested. The gendarmes who discovered his retreat had long known him—he was in despair. 'Shall I let you escape?' he said to his prisoner. 'Are you married?' was the quick response. 'Yes,' said the gendarme, 'I have two children.' 'And so have I,' returned his prisoner; 'but you would have to pay for me—let us go on!' A few days after M. Guizot died on the scaffold."

The widow some years later retired to Geneva, and devoted herself to the education of her two sons:—

"She was present at all their lessons, she took part in all their work, she studied for and with her children; sometimes in the winter when the severe climate of Geneva covered their little hands with chilblains the mother wrote their exercises from their dictation. My father preserved several copybooks thus written. They led a hard and simple life. Madame Guizot's small fortune suffered from the disturbed state of France..... Their table was plainly served: Madame Guizot had no assistance in the household work, except that of a woman who came in for a few hours every day; but, on the other hand, her sons attended the lectures of the best professors; they took lessons in riding, swimming, and drawing; at the same time she made them learn a trade, in accordance with the teaching of Rousseau, to which the violent shocks sustained by French society during the Revolution had given practical influence. François Guizot became a skilful joiner, and excelled in turning."

Guizot never forgot what he owed to his mother, who, after the death of his second wife, took entire charge of his children, and on his downfall she followed him into exile, and died at Brompton in her eighty-fourth year. The best picture of her is drawn by Ste. Beuve:—

"I think I see her still; and who that had once had the honour of seeing her could ever forget M. Guizot's venerable mother, in her ample, antique dress—her countenance with its strong and deep expression, its sweet austerity, which called to my mind the portraits of the nuns of Port Royal, and which in default of Philippe de Champagne has been preserved for us by one of the most refined painters of our age,—that mother of the Cévennes, who kept until the end of her days the most devoted and submissive of sons?—I think I see her now in the official saloon which she only passed through, and in which she appeared for a moment as the living representative of faith, simplicity, and of those substantial virtues which were brought to light by persecution at the time of the Désert."

Guizot was singularly fortunate in his wives. The first of them, Mdlle. de Meulan, who was some years his senior, was a woman of great ability, and the notes M. Guizot wrote on her are of much interest. When "all the nobles were exiled from Paris, Madame de Meulan established herself at Passy. The two sisters had scarcely any other amusement than to go daily and sign their names on the municipal register, and to hear the mayor (an honest man enough) say, 'Citoyennes, how is your mother?' In this uneventful home life, the advent of the Reign of Terror gave a violent shock to the mind of Mdlle. de Meulan. Her character henceforth became strongly emotional, and she acquired the habit of solitary meditation.

.....On her return to Paris, after the 9th Thermidor, she soon found her intellect develop as quickly as her character. She took an ardent interest in the politics of the time, in the determined resistance offered by liberty to Revolutionary principles; but she had no general theories, no precise object: her point of view was entirely moral and practical. Her confidence in the strength of her youthful powers continued to increase; her natural bent was to strong opinions and energetic resolutions. In her were combined all the exquisite delicacy, all the refinements of mind, of feeling, and of manners, which distinguished the Jeune République, with the frank, open, and somewhat unconventional habits of the Revolution.....In the month of June I settled myself in the country near Montfort l'Amaury in the house of M. Stapfer, with whom I was very intimate. I was in bad health. She took charge of all my literary affairs and relations in Paris. I went thither about once in six weeks for three or four days.....It was between 1810 and 1812, after I had definitely returned to Paris, that our intimacy became perfect, and our ideas and opinions completely fused. In July, 1811, I made a tour in Languedoc. It was thence that I wrote to tell her all that she had become to me. On my return, in September, our marriage was arranged, but it could not take place until the 7th April, 1812."

The happiest part of Guizot's later life was spent by him at Val-Richer, the first notice of which appears in a letter written to his elder daughter, then seven years old:—

"I am writing to you to-day, my dear little girl, as a precaution, because I am going to-morrow, as soon as I am up, to look at a little estate about three leagues from Lisleux, which is offered for purchase. Perhaps I shall not be back by post time, and I want you not to miss my letter. I hear that it is in a pretty country, the house is an ancient abbey, large, well built, and in tolerable order. There are fine woods all round, a spring close to the house, and a rapid stream running through the fields. Unfortunately, one has to travel over a league of bad road in order to get there; however, the estate is much cheaper than if it were close to the highroad. I am also told that a good road leading to the door will some day be made. At any rate I will go and see it."

He had not previously lived much in the country, but he enjoyed his rural life thoroughly. In the midst of political anxieties his mind constantly went back to his new acquisition. In 1836 he writes to the son he was soon to lose:—

"As we have enough of it, we must pave the dining-floor with the stone from Caen. I quite approve of this piece of economy, all the more as a pavement of this kind will be as suitable there as a wooden floor. With regard to the wainscot, we must certainly restore it where it has decayed. I hold to economy, but also to solidity. When once we have our house, we must not have to begin again."

And one of the brightest pictures of his later years is contained in the following letter, written from Val-Richer in 1857:—

"The sun really has come back to us; it never shone brighter than it did this morning. All the outdoor work is going on well this evening. We sowed the camellias yesterday; the beetroot and the carrots are coming up and the cobs are ripening. The corn is growing and the hay is getting thick. They cut the grass in the park yesterday for the cows, who enjoyed it immensely. The cow-house was jubilant. When the big bull had eaten his portion he thumped his manger with his horns, asking for more. The dairy will be finished to-day; Ecker is painting the hen-house, and Guenet completing the wall. Very few of the last batch of drain-pipes were broken. The dahlies are planted out in the large bed. The stuffed badger has arrived, and is placed in the glass case, where the birds have made room for him."

He was fond of writing to his children. When he went as an ambassador to London he sent them full accounts of the glories of the Mansion House, and in one of his letters he tells an amusing story of his visit to Windsor:—

"On Wednesday evening, at Windsor, the Queen retired at eleven o'clock; we stayed behind, talking for half-an-hour. At midnight, I set out to find my own apartment, and I lost myself in the galleries, saloons, and corridors. At last I slowly open a door, taking it for mine, and I see a lady beginning to undress, attended by her maid. I shut the door as fast as I can, and begin again to search for my own room. I, at last, find some one who shows me the way. I go to bed. The next day, at dinner, the Queen said to me, laughingly, 'Do you know that you entered my room at midnight?' 'How, ma'am; was it your Majesty's door that I half opened?' 'Certainly.' And she began laughing again, and so did I. I told her of my perplexity, which she had already guessed; and I asked whether if, like St. Simon or Sully, I should ever write my memoirs, she would allow me to mention that I had opened the Queen of England's door in Windsor Castle at midnight while she was going to bed. She gave me permission, and laughed heartily."

Even in the midst of the Revolution, when he was making his escape, he found time to write to his eldest daughter, "Take good care of your grandmother..... Do not let Guillaume go outside the door." He had his reward. His children bore bravely the reverse of fortune:—

"His second daughter replied laughingly to an English friend, who asked her if she often went into the Park, 'No; because our carriage, the omnibus, does not go through the Park.'"

His daughters married much to his satisfaction, and thus he found consolation for the early death of his eldest son:—

"Conrad and Cornelis de Witt became really his sons, and the family circle, while it extended, drew round its head with as close an intimacy as ever. It was a source of great rest as well as enjoyment to his mind. 'There is only one position which I envy,' he said, laughing, in earlier days, 'it is that of a man who has married his daughters to his liking.' 'I am now one of those who ought to inspire envy,' he repeated afterwards. All his children were gathered round him at Val-Richer; he admitted into the family circle the only sister of his son-in-law, Mdlle. Elisabeth de Witt, as well as their maternal aunt, Mdlle. Temminck. The latter spent the last years of her life there, and died without ever having left Val-Richer."

The pleasantest records of his last years refer to his grandchildren:—

"Ad Jovis principium: Jupiter here stands for the children. I have just left them. They went to sleep last night at half-past eight and did not awake till seven o'clock this morning. I told Baby he had grown fatter. 'It is because I have eaten two basins of soup this morning.' At dessert we have a great deal of trouble to make Robert sit on his Aunt Adelaide's lap, he goes on repeating 'grandpapa.' But he resigns himself without murmuring. I never saw a better-tempered child. Marie was enchanted with your long letter and the flowers; but I cannot hide from you that Cornelis was not so satisfied. When I told him, 'Marie has a letter from mamma,' his only answer was, 'I haven't.' Henriette's little girls are well—Jeanne marries than ever. They are just starting for a drive in a donkey-carriage, I think."

Even when the disasters of 1870 nearly killed him he could say:—

"Your children are well, and are behaving well; Rachel is virtuous, Suzanne tractable, François perfect. Robert and Pierre study a little and give no trouble. Robert is an excellent purveyor of trout, the only food I have been able to touch for several days."

We have room for one quotation more. His death was hastened by the loss of his elder daughter.

"He often evoked the memory of those he had lost, and, as time disappeared in the presence of eternity, he spoke of the son of whom he had been bereaved thirty-seven years previously in the same way as of the daughter who had preceded him to her eternal rest by only six months. More than once when his children were all collected round his bed in his little room, he pronounced the name of France—that dear country whose disasters had struck the first fatal blow to his robust old age. 'We must serve France, it is a difficult country to serve—short-sighted and fickle—but we must serve it well, it is a great country.' Then, as if returning to the taste for poetry, which had been so strong in his youth, and which he had never wholly lost, he would repeat in a low tone some lines from Corneille, or Rousseau's 'Ode to Fortune,' searching and finding in his memory the words which had so long been buried under the impressions of years. He wanted to hear read some passages from his 'History of France'; he desired one of his grand-daughters, who was watching by him, to look in the third volume for the portrait of Coligny, which he wished to see again. His daughter was kneeling by the side of the bed to which he had already been confined for five or six days, forced against his will to accept all the little services which each one eagerly offered—his tastes and wishes were still for independence, although his strength no longer permitted him to follow them. The look he gave his daughter was almost enough to deceive her as to their approaching separation—it was still so penetrating and so tender—'Good-bye, my child; good-bye!' he repeated. The hearts of all present were sustained by one hope. 'We shall meet again, my father,' she exclaimed. M. Guizot, whose weakness had been so great a few moments before, raised himself on his pillows, his eyes shone brightly, and his voice seemed to have regained its strength as he replied, 'No one is more convinced of that than I am.'"

Mrs. Simpson's translation, as was to be expected, reads smoothly, in spite of occasional Gallicisms, such as "professor" for teacher, and "reparation" for repair.

The Poetical Works of James Russell Lowell.

With a Critical Preface by William Michael Rossetti. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

A COMPLETE English edition of Mr. Lowell's poetical works is opportune at this moment, not only on account of the important position he fills at the British Court, but because the special interest excited amongst us by his 'Biglow Papers' has naturally caused a desire for full acquaintance with his work generally. It is true that many years since a selection from his earlier poems was published in this country. To many here, moreover, his sprightly 'Fable for Critics'—which, by the way, has a marked resemblance both in plan and style to Leigh Hunt's 'Feast of the Poets' and 'Blue-Stocking Revels'—is already familiar. We record this similarity as a mere coincidence, and with no hint of imitation. Since the 'Fable for Critics' was written, Mr. Lowell has given abundant proof that the wit, point, and discernment which it evinces are amongst his most genuine gifts. Notwithstanding, however, our exceptional knowledge of the writer's earlier poems, his serious effusions, which extend to 1880, have not for the most part been yet naturalized in this country.

The judgment delivered by Mr. W. M. Rossetti in his lucid prefatory notice, that Mr. Lowell's chief claim to admiration must rest upon his 'Biglow Papers,' cannot be successfully challenged. This fact, however, still permits the conviction that there is present in Mr. Lowell's poetry of thought and sentiment a purity of tone, a tenderness of feeling, a general grace, and, at times, an absolute beauty of expression, which the world would be the poorer for losing. Nevertheless, there are drawbacks which separate his imaginative work, regarded as a whole, from that of the highest class. In the first place his tendency is to be didactic and discursive. His art is usually rather of that mixed kind which in turns comments upon and describes life and nature than of that more genuine kind which exemplifies them. Hence he more frequently writes poetry than organic poems. Some of these latter may, however, occasionally be found, as in his tenderly plaintive 'Requiem' and in some of his love songs, though they are hardly equal in expression to the sentiment which inspires them. In many of his productions there is an over-elaboration of detail, and a want of concentration and glow which leaves them, notwithstanding their grace, comparatively vague and colourless. Often with conscientious accuracy he gives general aspects of nature and general tones of feeling, and yet misses that individualizing touch which sets the familiar in the light of a new revelation. Thus in one of his early poems, 'Summer Storm,' there is no doubt considerable truth of description and some play of fancy, yet the minuteness and superfluity of detail impart to it the studied air of a catalogue. Here is an example:—

Look! look! that livid flash!
And instantly follows the rattling thunder,
As if some cloud crag, split asunder,
Fell, splintering with a ruinous crash,
On the Earth, which crouches in silence under;
And now a solid gray wall of rain
Shuts off the landscape, mile by mile;
For a breath's space I see the blue wood again,
And, ere the next heart-beat, the wind-hurled pile,
That seemed but now a league aloof,
Bursts crackling o'er the sun-parched roof;
Against the windows the storm comes dashing,
Through tattered foliage the hail tears crashing,
The blue lightning flashes,
The rapid hail clashes,
The white waves are tumbling,
And, in one baffled roar,
Like the toothless sea mombing
A rock-bristled shore.
The thunder is rumbling
And crashing and crumbling,—
Will silence return never more?

What Byron has done with a similar subject in half a stanza will recur to the memory:—

From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud;
But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud.

Mr. Lowell's storm probably does not occur amongst the mountains. But, of course, in this comparison of the American poet with Byron, it is not similarity of detail but analogy of method that we could desire from the former. There are cases, however, even in his earlier poems, where Mr. Lowell's deliberate and too minute style is happily exchanged for masculine and glowing forms of expression, which seem to have sprung up, so to speak, on the Southern side of his imagination. In his 'Legend of Brittany' the various effects of cathedral music are caught with the fullest abandonment to their fluctuations and conveyed by striking imagery:—

Then swelled the organ: up through choir and nave
The music trembled with an inward thrill
Of bliss at its own grandeur: wave on wave
Its flood of mellow thunder rose, until
The hushed air shivered with the throbbing gave;
Then, poised for a moment, it stood still,
And sank and rose again, to burst in spray
That wandered into silence far away.

Like to a mighty heart the music seemed,
That years with melodies it cannot speak,
Until, in grand despair of what it dreamed,
In the agony of effort it doth break,
Yet triumphs breaking; on it rushed and streamed
And waned in its might, as when a lake,
Long pent among the mountains, bursts its walls
And in one crowding gush leaps forth and falls.

Deeper and deeper shudders shook the air,
As the huge bass kept gathering heavily,
Like thunder when it rouses in its lair,
And with its hoarse growl shakes the low-hung sky;

It grew up like a darkness everywhere,
Filling the vast cathedral,—suddenly,
From the dense mass a boy's clear treble broke
Like lightning, and the full-toned choir awoke.

In Mr. Lowell's more recent poems, such as 'The Cathedral' and the series entitled "Under the Willows," general progress in strength and freedom of expression is observable. Pictures bold and vivid as the following are no longer rare exceptions:—

A heap of bare and splintery crags
Tumbled about by lightning and frost,
With rifts and chasms and storm-bleached jags,
That wait and growl for a ship to be lost,
No island, but rather the skeleton
Of a wrecked and vengeance-smitten one,
Where, sons ago, with half-shut eye,
The sluggish scurion crawled to die,
Gasping under titanic ferns;
Ribs of rock that seaward jut,
Granite shoulders and boulders and snags,
Round which, though the winds in heaven be shut,
The nightmarish ocean murmurs and yearns,
Welters, and swashes, and tosses, and turns,
And the dreary black sea-weed lolls and wags;
Only rock from shore to shore,
Only a moan through the bleak clefts blown,
With sobe in the rifts where the coarse kelp shifts,
Falling and lifting, tossing and drifting,
And under all a deep, dull roar,
Dying and swelling, for evermore,—
Rock and moan and roar alone,
And the dread of some nameless thing unknown,
These make Appledore.

In the poem just quoted from, as elsewhere, there is an attempt to follow Mr. Browning's frequent method of blending the ideal with the familiar. But in 'Pictures from Appledore,' at all events, there is often no mean quality between the two extremes. Thus they contrast rather than amalgamate. From the poem called 'The Cathedral' we cite a few felicities of thought and manner:—

THE OLD CATHEDRAL.

It rose before me, patiently remote
From the great tides of life it breasted once,
Hearing the noise of men as in a dream.

Solemn the lift of high-embowered roof,
The clustered stems that spread in boughs dishevelled,
Through which the organ blew a dream of storm.

THE MAN OF TO-DAY.

Child of an age that lectures, not creates,
Plastering our swallow-nests on the awful Past,
And twittering round the work of larger men.

FAITH AND SCIENCE.

Science was Faith once, Faith were Science now,
Would she but lay her bow and arrows by
And arm her with the weapons of the time.
Nothing that keeps thought out is safe from thought.
For there's no virgin-fort but self-respect,
And Truth defensive hath lost hold on God.

* * *

Man cannot be God's outlaw if he would.

Verse like this, so suggestive in spirit and often so picturesque or epigrammatic in form, will always secure appreciative readers. Yet it cannot be disguised that, in turning from Mr. Lowell's serious work to the 'Biglow Papers,' we become at once sensible of the difference between high accomplishment and genius. In his meditative and sentimental poetry he resembles the student who has so far mastered a foreign language as to use it, on the whole, with correctness, though with some hesitancy and caution. In the 'Biglow Papers,' so full of spontaneous humour, of apt and familiar illustration, and of that high purpose which makes even the dissection of selfish foibles genial,—in these he speaks his native tongue, displays all its resources of idiom and dialect, and utters no phrase which does not go home to the listener.

Les Origines de l'Histoire d'après la Bible et les Traditions des Peuples Orientaux. Par F. Lenormant. (Paris, Maisonneuve & Cie.)

M. LENORMANT'S new work is distinguished by his usual learning and brilliancy. Even where his readers are indisposed to agree with him he brings together such a mass of information and shows such skill in combining his facts that he always proves suggestive, if not convincing.

His new volume is addressed more especially to Biblical students. He avows himself a believer in the doctrines hitherto taught by the Church in regard to the inspiration and authority of Scripture, but at the same time claims full freedom to deal with the sacred text in a critical spirit and to admit, if necessary, the existence of mythological elements in its narratives.

The first eleven (or rather nine) chapters of Genesis are the subject of M. Lenormant's study. He illustrates and explains them by the help of the many discoveries that have been made of late years in Assyria, in Egypt, and elsewhere, but which have never before been gathered together in a single compact and popular form. He has added appendices containing the cosmogonical legends of the Babylonians and Phœnicians preserved in the classical writers, the divine revelations which Chaldean story believed to have been made before the Deluge, the classical texts that relate to Babylonian astronomy, the Chaldeo-Assyrian calendar as compared with that of the other Semitic nations, and the Assyrian text of the account of the Flood accompanied by an interlinear translation. It need not be said that everything has been brought up to the latest level of knowledge, so that where revised renderings are given of the inscriptions in Mr. George Smith's 'Chaldean Genesis' the reader will have more correct representations of the sense of the originals than it was possible to furnish five or six years ago.

It is impossible to give an idea of the varied contents of the book, selected portions of which, however, have already appeared in an English dress in the pages of the Contemporary Review. Perhaps the two most interesting chapters are those on the expulsion from Eden and the Sons of God. The Cherubim, a name which appears on the Assyrian monuments under the form of kirubi, were the colossal figures which symbolized the powers of good, and guarded the entrance to an Assyrian palace. Just as they were supposed to prevent the admission of anything evil into a Babylonian or Assyrian house, so too they were placed at the entrance of Paradise to keep all intruders away. The description of the Cherubim given by Ezekiel is curiously illustrated by a Babylonian engraved cylinder, from which it might have been taken, so close is the resemblance between the words of the Jewish prophet and the representation upon the gem. The flaming sword "which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life," finds its analogue in the weapon of the Babylonian god Merodach, a revolving circular disc surrounded with flaming points. This weapon was originally the lightning, and a highly poetical description of it is given in an ancient Accadian hymn. It is here called among other names litta, which is letter for letter the same as the Hebrew word translated "flaming." M. Lenormant suggests that the true meaning of the latter word is rather "magical prodigy." This disc-like sword corresponds to the wheels of Ezekiel's vision.

M. Lenormant adopts the view which sees in the "sons of God" of Genesis vi. the angels, or rather an inferior order of celestial beings, and he tries to show that Sir Henry Rawlinson and George Smith were mistaken in discovering in the Assyrian inscriptions a mention of two races, black and white, one Adamite and the other non-Adamite. He does not seem to have noticed the article we mentioned last week by M. J. Darmesteter, in the Mémoires of the Société de Linguistique, in which the writer seeks to identify the "sons of God" with the seven Cabiri, and to connect the Greek myth of the massacre of the Lemnians by their wives with the fragmentary story which we have in Genesis.

Our knowledge of the early legends of Babylonia is still so scanty that they throw little light on the disputed questions of the authorship and age of the book of Genesis. In the account of the Deluge only do they allow us to draw a conclusion. A more exact translation of the Chaldean legend of the Deluge than that made by its discoverer "confirms," as M. Lenormant says, "in a decisive manner, the distinction between the Elohistic and the Jehovistic versions" of it. At the same time, it is clear that both versions are but varying accounts of the same tradition; the Chaldean account agrees now with the one, now with the other, though more usually with the Jehovistic document, but it knows nothing of their combination in Genesis. This is the utmost result that Biblical critics can obtain at present from the recently discovered legends of Babylonia, and until that country is excavated it is useless to expect more. The library of Nineveh, from which most of the Assyrian literature with which we are acquainted has come, contained but a selected few of the myths and stories of ancient Chaldaea; the rest are still lying buried under the soil of Babylonia, amid the dérûs of the cities and libraries with which it was once filled.

Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus. Rendered into English Prose by A. Lang. (Macmillan & Co.)

IN this age of cribes and primers a new translation of Theocritus was imperatively called for. Hardly any author entails so much use of the dictionary on the average reader; and though the "tip" given by an Oxford man to a friend who was taking up the book for "Mods.," to the effect that every strange word either meant a tamarisk-tree or expressed an idea as "offensive," as Mr. Lang puts it, "to Western morality," will serve fairly well for examination purposes, a little more precision in identifying the modern equivalents will not diminish the pleasure with which the student of the Bucolic Muse will listen to her most illustrious high-priest. We assume that Mr. Lang's translation, like all other prose versions of poetry, is intended to be used as a companion to the original; at least it is difficult to conceive the mental attitude of a person who should want to know so much of Theocritus as may be learned from it and be content to know no more. There may indeed be such people—we have at times an uneasy suspicion, when we see the flood of little books "for English readers" which every month brings forth, that there must be such; and we know that Mr. Sponge found 'Mogg's Cab-Fares' amusing reading. Even so may some people take pleasure in reading an English prose version of a Greek poet with whose own words they never mean to make acquaintance. But scholars, it is to be hoped, do not labour for such as these; rather they wish to prepare with all skill and accuracy of workmanship an easy road for others into that fair land of poetry whose beauties they themselves have reached, may be, only at the cost of long toil and laborious path-hunting. Nay, some of them even go further, and are at pains to point out to the traveller the special beauties which he is to admire, herein, as some think, a little transgressing the due functions of pioneers. To this reproach Mr. Lang is scarcely, if at all, open in the present case, for his introductory essay on "Theocritus and his Age" is historical rather than critical; at all events, what is called "sign-post criticism" is sparingly introduced. On the other hand, pretty as are the verses in which Mr. Dobson and Mr. Gosse express their own sentiments on reading Theocritus, the reader would be better pleased to meet with them among the "collected works" of those ingenious authors than to find them in his way at the outset of his exploration of the elder poet.

It is needless to mention to those who know the standard of translation aimed at and often reached nowadays, that Mr. Lang's 'Theocritus' has little resemblance to those furtive aids of our school studies which were supplied by the enterprising Mr. Bohn and confiscated by watchful tutors. No tutor could find it in his heart to carry off this elegant book with the head of "Our Lady" (after the early Sicilian use) so daintily engraved on its title-page. It seems probable, indeed, that the use of translations such as they now are made will, under judicious direction, become a duty of the industrious schoolboy rather than a crime of the idle one. Certainly he will get little but sound instruction from Mr. Lang. We are not quite sure that he has in every case followed the best interpretation or reading, as, for instance, in xv. 77, where Mr. Paley's rendering of δρακλάδες, "shut out," seems better than "shut in," as giving a touch of Wellarian humour to the remark. So in xxi. 45, ἀφ' αὐτοῦ is obviously preferable to ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, "cum panem fere aversetur canis," to quote the above-named editor. On the whole, however, the work has been admirably done, and with such uniform excellence that it is difficult to select a specimen. The following passage is an old friend, and a good deal of it fits an English almost as well as a Sicilian or Coan summer:—

"Then I sang, and sweetly smiling as before, he gave me the staff, a pledge of brotherhood in the Muses. Then he bent his way to the left, and took the road to Pyra, while I and Eucritus, with beautiful Amyntas, turned to the farm of Phrasidamas. There we reclined on deep beds of fragrant lentisk, lowly strewn, and rejoicing we lay in new-stripped leaves of the vine, and high above our heads waved many a poplar, many an elm-tree, while close at hand the sacred water from the nymphs' own cave welled forth with murmurs musical. On shadowy boughs the burnt cicadas kept their chattering toil, far off the little owl cried in the thick thorn-brake, the larks and finches sang, the ring dove moaned, the yellow bees were flitting round the springs. All breathed the scent of the opulent summer, of the season of fruits; pears at our feet and apples by our sides were rolling plentiful, the tender branches, with wild plums laden, were earthward bowed, and the four-year-old pitch seal was loosened from the mouth of the wine-jars."

A translation of the scanty remains of Bion and Moschus is appended. There is a little slip in Mr. Lang's rendering of the famous passage from the Third Idyl of the latter ('The Dirge of Bion'), αἰ αἰ τὰ μέλαρα, where τὸ τ' ὑψαλὲς οὐδὲν ἀνθρώπου is represented by "and the curled tendrils of the anise." Now the anise, as a reference to any elementary work on botany would have shown, not being a climbing plant, does not possess tendrils. It is not, perhaps, possible to identify all the plants named by Greek poets, but when it is feasible, as in this case, it is not right to take liberties with the epithets assigned to them.

A History of England from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1815. By Spencer Walpole. Vol. III. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. WALPOLE'S work is a praiseworthy specimen of a type of history which is essentially second-rate. It is as good as most other works of the same class; it attains the low standard by which unfortunately the critics measure histories which deal with recent periods. The reigns of George IV. and William IV. fall, of course, quite outside the province within which the higher order of historical writers confine themselves. We keep our historical philosophy for remote periods, and therefore no one who takes up these volumes will for a moment expect to meet with a Grote or even with a Freeman. Not even the showy literary qualities which in these days are so readily accepted instead of the qualities proper to the historian are to be looked for when the period treated is so recent. The Macaulays and Carlyles go further afield for subjects for their gorgeous tableaux. "The narrative works of the English," says Dr. Pauli, speaking of those which deal with this period, "such as Hughes, Miss Martineau, Alison, are rather unattractive attempts, partly from their tedious minuteness, partly from their decided and often unjust party bias." Mr. Walpole does not fall under quite the same condemnation. He is only over-minute now and then in the parliamentary sections of his history; in other parts, particularly in his narrative of foreign affairs, he is scarcely full enough; but both in excess and defect he errs less than his predecessors. As to party bias, readers of his former volumes will be prepared for his peculiar position. Bred a Tory, he appears to have been made a Liberal by his historical studies. The consequence has been that, while he sometimes indulges in violence of expression which betray the seal of a neophyte, and give him the appearance of being a more extreme partisan than either Miss Martineau on the one side or Alison on the other, he is in reality nearer to impartiality than either, which, of course, is not saying much.

But we see that Mr. Walpole, like his predecessors, has but a low standard when we inquire how he has prepared himself for his work. An historian is not worthy of the name who supposes that no such preparation is needed, or that the light of an ordinary intelligence cultivated by an ordinary education will suffice him. Has Mr. Walpole studied other periods besides that of which he writes the history? Has he trained his judgment by systematic study of the laws of evidence, of those of political development, of political economy? Has he mastered what has been written on the functions of the historian and the proper object of history? All our historians that have taken any rank have done this. They have been thinkers and scholars, if not always in the full sense philosophers. But Mr. Walpole neither has nor professes to have any acquirements beyond those of the ordinary English gentleman. His claim to attention is that he has read his Hansards and his Blue-books conscientiously. He has simply "got up" his period. Upon the facts which he has studied he makes just the reflections which common sense and the ordinary notions of an English politician would suggest. There seems to be no reason why he more than another should undertake to write a history of England except that he comes of a political family. And yet so completely have these recent periods been neglected by all historians worthy of the name, so completely have they been abandoned to what may be called the Philistine school, that Mr. Walpole betrays not the slightest mistrust of his own competence. He has, indeed, no reason to do so, for, as we have said, he is quite on a level with those who have undertaken the same task before him. He is quite as able a man and as profound a thinker as Sir A. Alison!

So long as he deals only with home affairs his readers are made aware of this deficiency not by any positive errors, but only by the want of quality in the style. We feel only that we are reading journalism, not history, and that the vein of reflection is such as might pass in a daily paper, but is not deep or rich enough for history, which presumes the maturest thought and the fullest investigation. It is in treating of foreign policy that the unintellectual method breaks down altogether. For the imagination of the English Philistine is well-nigh bounded by the "silver streak." The Continent is to him a cloudland without definite shape and without a history. An ordinary English education could tell Mr. Walpole little about France and Germany, and, as has been said, he has only an ordinary English education. It is only fair to him, however, to say that he has made a serious attempt to master this subject. Out of 657 pages he has devoted 120 to it, and many of his predecessors would have graded so many pages to the foundation of the Belgian kingdom, the Quadruple Alliance, and the great diplomatic duel of Palmerston and Thiers about Mehemet Ali, while the Appropriation Clause, the Bedchamber Question, and the Tithe on Pecked Turnips were claiming their attention. But though his intentions have been good, he has not known where to go for information. He has apparently not the habit of following French and German literature. Accordingly he has drawn his statements almost entirely from English sources, and apparently does not know by name many of the books to which he might have been expected to go for instruction. It is scarcely credible that he knows of only two authorities which are not English, Guizot's Mémoires and Louis Blanc's Histoire de Dix Ans. He writes of Belgian affairs without referring once to Juste or Nothomb. It would be too cruel to ask whether he ever heard of Karl Hillebrand, who has had access to unpublished documents throwing light on the international relations of this period. When we have added that Mr. Walpole is one who, so to speak, has no historic knowledge to spare, that he does not atone for his want of special study by any vivid conception of foreign nationalities or of the general course of French history since the Revolution, the reader may imagine what a blind, one-sided, John-Bullish discussion of the subject he has produced.

This incurable insularity of mind is the more to be regretted as in the period which commences with the Reform Bill the relation of England to the Continent is specially important. An historian is wanted here more than in most other periods in order to trace that influx of continental ideas which under the name of the advance of Liberalism appears as the principal feature of the epoch. A certain correspondence between the continental and the English movement is visible to all; who does not remark the connexion between the passing of the Reform Bill and the Revolution of 1830? but the help of an historian is needed to tell the reader precisely what the connexion was and what were the limits of it. Liberalism had existed, and had been known by that name, on the Continent for many years before the word began to be regularly used in England, but between continental Liberalism and English there are clear differences as well as clear correspondences. One is disposed to ask, What is the use of an historian who entirely omits to consider a question of this magnitude though it lies directly in his way? Mr. Walpole would probably answer that he only professes to understand English affairs, and that such an inquiry would call for a knowledge of French history, of which he knows no more than another. Such is Philistine history!

It is curious to observe how Mr. Walpole deals with the question when it faces him so directly that he cannot quite avoid it. He has to record the adoption of new party names in the Parliament which followed the Reform Bill, and he does it in these words:—

"The course of events, however, had again brought the titles [i.e. of Whig and Tory] into dispute. The Reformer thought he could bring no more damaging accusation against an opponent than to call him a Tory. The Radicals declared that the Whigs were identifying themselves with the worst features of Tory rule. Frightened at the possible consequences of this abuse, instructed by the careful explanation which Peel had given of his principles, the more moderate among the Tories gradually claimed for themselves the title of Conservatives; the more prudent among the Whigs invented the singularly happy name of Liberals as the designation of their party. It would have been difficult to have found two words which expressed more conveniently the determination of the one party to take its stand in defence of law and order, or the resolution of the other to carry on the struggle for civil and religious liberty till the last relics of monopoly and abuse were finally destroyed."

It would be scarcely possible to write a more unsatisfactory paragraph than this. Several of the secondary statements which it contains are either wrong or incomplete. For instance, it appears to assert that the name "Liberal" had never before the Reform Bill been appropriated to any party, and thus it suppresses the fact, which in such a connexion it was most important to state distinctly, that the party of Canning had been known for several years before the accession of the Whigs to power by the name of Liberals. In Lord Palmerston's Life (vol. i. p. 278) is to be found a list of his own party drawn out by Lord Palmerston himself, and headed "Liberals of June, 1828." A definite fact like this was surely to be preferred to the vague, half-conjectural statements of Mr. Walpole, which, moreover, are barely consistent with it. But this omission is a small fault compared to another, which is implied in every line of the passage, and concerning which it is impossible not to wonder whether it was committed in sheer ignorance or with some intention. The two parties are represented as beating about for the names which might most accurately express their respective characteristics, and the Whigs especially are admired for the ingenuity which they displayed in inventing the name "Liberal." Can Mr. Walpole be ignorant that the names were not invented in England at all, but were simply introduced at this time from the Continent, where they had been gradually coming into use ever since the French Revolution, and had been since about 1821 the universally accepted names of the European parties? Is it ignorance or is it some national prudery which makes our historians so strangely suppress a fact which is as striking and significant as any fact about names can be? If it be the business of the historian to take a more comprehensive view of facts than the mere journalist, it is to him we should look for the explanation that a change of names which might appear unimportant was in reality an evidence of one of the most momentous innovations, viz., the introduction into England of the great controversy which had so long convulsed the Continent, but had so long been artificially prevented from crossing the Channel.

But it is time to follow Mr. Walpole into his own island. Here, of course, his principal business has been to gather in the harvest which recent seasons have brought in the shape of new biographies, those of Palmerston, Melbourne, Althorp, Stockmar, Grote, Macaulay, Denman, besides Greville's Diaries and autobiographical works, such as the Recollections and Suggestions of Lord Russell. But perhaps his principal merit is that under his hand the period begins at last to take a definite form, and that some distinct outlines begin to rise out of the chaos of journalism. Mr. Walpole has made a real attempt to classify and group the facts with which he has to deal. He opens his preface thus:—

"The history of England from 1815 to the present time may be conveniently grouped into distinct periods. The first of these periods commenced with the Peace, and terminated soon after the accession of George IV. to the throne. The second commenced with the reconstruction of the Liverpool Administration, by the appointment of Peel to the Home Office and of Canning to the Foreign Office, and terminated with the passage of the Reform Act. The third comprises the history of the Whig Ministry from the passage of the Reform Act to the fall of Melbourne in 1841. It was the object of the first volume of this history to give an intelligible account of the repressive policy pursued by a Tory Ministry in the first of these periods. It was the object of the second volume to record the great reforms in legislation, in administration, and in finance which distinguished the second period. It is the object of the present volume to describe the use which the Whigs under Grey made of their triumph in 1832, and to relate the causes which subsequently led to their humiliation under Melbourne. The first volume of this work may therefore be styled a History of Reaction; the second, a History of Reform; the third, a History of the Decline and Fall of the Whig Ministry."

This general conception is certainly vigorous, and Mr. Walpole abides by it, so that the volume now published has a unity and leaves a distinct impression on the mind such as we do not receive from former narratives of the same period. It is a conception so far from obvious that it may even at first sight provoke an objection, viz., that a history of the Whig Ministry is not the same thing as a history of England under the Whig Ministry. Surely, we may say, the country is not to be altogether lost in the Government! But Mr. Walpole grasps his principle so firmly that he actually apologizes for treating other subjects besides the fortunes of the Whig Ministry.

"The history of the Whig Ministry," he writes, "from 1833 to 1841 would not be intelligible without a short review of the condition of the country in 1833. The history would not be complete if the story of the domestic policy of the Whigs were not supplemented with the account of their foreign policy."

We for our part go with Mr. Walpole, and hold that the general failure of historians to leave on the public mind any distinct impression of the recent age of English history has been caused by their injudicious attempt to include everything. It was with much satisfaction that we found in this volume a general review of English literature and English philosophy in the reign of William IV.; and if we were at first somewhat surprised to find no account of a phenomenon so important as the Tractarian movement, yet on reflection we acknowledged that this will be more in place in the fourth volume, which, it is to be supposed, will be devoted in the same judicious manner to the reign of Conservatism under Peel.

But Mr. Walpole's arrangement is not only strictly observed, it is also in one respect original. He lays more stress than has been laid before on the second period of the Liverpool Ministry, and, relatively, somewhat less stress on the passing of the Reform Bill. It is not any Tory predilection—for, in fact, his animosity against Toryism is at times almost ludicrous from its fresh ardour—that leads him to this view, which he might have supported by an additional argument if he had not, as we have pointed out, overlooked the fact that the original Liberal party was a section of the supporters of Lord Liverpool in his second period. Mr. Walpole regards the Reform Bill not as the commencement of a period of reform and the termination of a reign of stagnation and prejudice, but as the greatest of a series of reforms which had begun several years before. In truth, the violence of the convulsion which produced the Reform Bill has created the same sort of illusion which in French history has gathered round 1789. People are apt to measure the importance of an event by its violence, and so the French refer everything to 1789, though the reforming spirit had been most active from the beginning of the reign of Louis XVI. In like manner the Reform Bill hides from English eyes all the reforms which in a remarkable manner distinguished the last years of Lord Liverpool, those effected by Peel and Huskisson, as well as the brilliant Liberalism of Canning in foreign policy.

That Peel was a reformer all his life, and not merely in his last years, is certainly no new fact, but Mr. Walpole brings it out more clearly than former writers had done by thus dating the commencement of the period of reform not at the Reform Bill, but at the advent of Peel to the Home Office. In support of the same view he naturally gives great prominence to the Tamworth manifesto. After narrating the well-known story of King William's dismissal of the first Melbourne Ministry, of Peel's absence at Rome, of the mission of James Hudson to fetch him (here, by the way, Mr. Walpole shows himself a master of the picturesque style. "He found Peel at a ball at Prince Torlonia's," he writes. What a graphic touch! But Sir Robert himself writes: "On my return from a ball at the Duchesse of Torlonia's the letters were delivered to me at my residence in Rome, the Hôtel de l'Europe"), he passes to the "frank exposition" which the new minister issued on his return, and remarks that "Peel seemed above all things anxious to prove that he had always been a reformer." Then, after an analysis of the manifesto, he concludes, "Reform in Church and State at home, the maintenance of peace abroad—these were the objects which Peel offered to the country in the Tamworth manifesto."

Thus the party which was defeated by Lord Grey and was afterwards rallied by Peel was not, as Mr. Walpole points out, simply driven by the success of its opponents to adopt late and reluctantly the principle of reform, but had been, in its way, a reforming party for several years before the passing of the Reform Bill. In his next volume Mr. Walpole will show the same party coming into office after that downfall of its opponents which he has narrated here, and in office effecting new reforms still more important than those which it had made in the last days of Lord Liverpool. For Mr. Walpole, great as is his animosity against the party in which he was bred, agrees with other historians in putting Sir Robert on a pinnacle above all the statesmen of his time, and he will delight in pointing him out as the founder of that school of financial reform which has had so many triumphs since, and is triumphant now. But assuredly when he describes the "almost monarchical administration" of 1841-46, he will not alter his tone about the Conservative party. Peel will have all the glory, and not even a reflection of it will fall on the party which he led. Such is the punishment which has fallen on those who rebelled against a great leader! It affords a wholesome warning, but it is extremely severe, and may even involve some injustice. It has become a fixed idea in Mr. Walpole's mind that the Conservatives never sincerely followed Peel, and that his language about reform, though it expressed his own view faithfully, did not faithfully express the opinion of those in whose name he spoke. The real nature of Conservatism is to be seen, he thinks, not in Sir Robert, but in the Protectionists who renounced their allegiance to him. And we have lately seen how deep a root the conviction has taken in the country that Conservatism means at bottom nothing but selfishness and prejudice, and that it is a mere cant when Conservatives profess that they are favourable to moderate reform. Historically, however, the Conservatives were at the outset a party of moderate reform, if we judge them, as we judge other parties, by their authoritative manifestoes. For a long time these manifestoes were accepted by the party, and if the rank and file were really much less wise than their leader, this is true alike of all parties. The difference between them and their opponents is not that they secretly dissented from their leaders—both parties alike did this—but merely that they carried dissent to the point of mutiny. The same thing might easily have happened on the other side. The Liberal leaders might have been driven into the arms of the Conservatives by the violence of their extreme followers. In that case we should now be most of us firmly of opinion that Liberalism, though it may choose to talk at times the language of moderation and decency, means at bottom nothing but revolutionary anarchy.

There seems to be no reason why history should condemn the Conservatives of 1832-1845 retrospectively on account of the great error which the party committed in 1846, or pronounce that they had never been sincere followers of Peel because they broke with him at last. Such partisan logic history ought carefully to avoid. History, we think, should pronounce that in 1846 the Conservatives fell below the rank of a great English party—a rank which they have since struggled, but never with perfect success, to regain—but that before 1846 they fully deserved the name of a great party, and in the eminence of their leaders outshone their opponents.

Thus, though it is gratifying to find in Mr. Walpole a convert from Tory prejudices, it is to be regretted that he should at times assail his old friends with a violence unbecoming in an historian. It is true that his bark is worse than his bite. His deliberate judgments are in the main fairly impartial. If he is no Tory, he is certainly no Whig, and he is no Radical either, as may be seen from his severe treatment of Durham. His fault is that he allows his profound study of Hansard to infect his style. It has become an echo of the humdrum of party oratory. Mr. Walpole seems to take too seriously the hasty arguments, the retorts and sarcasms, of which he finds such a fund in his favourite work. He endorses them and imitates them far too often, especially the sarcasms against Toryism. Most of his readers have settled that controversy in their own minds so long ago that they can no longer feel strongly about it. The vehemence of Mr. Walpole strikes us as unnecessary. He is a sort of political Mr. Voysey, and seems less strong in construction than in negation. The Liberalism to which he has been converted is of a type too ordinary to excite enthusiasm. He tramples on Tory platitudes with platitudes of his own, which if less mischievous are sometimes so insane that the reader finds himself exclaiming with Victor Hugo, "Oh! reprends ce rien, gouffre, et rends-nous Satan."

A Treasury of English Sonnets. Edited from the Original Sources, with Notes and Illustrations, by David M. Main. (Manchester, Ireland & Co.)

THE editor of a selection of poetry is free to proceed on either of two principles in giving character to his volume: he may choose to concentrate his quality or he may aim at quantity by opening the flood-gates to all pieces in any way interesting or accredited. The former plan requires comparatively little research, but a taste exquisitely balanced and catholic and a measure of recognized authority. The man who presumes to select for us the quintessence of the verse of a nation must himself have attained the degree of a master in criticism. We have had one or two such volumes, and they have enjoyed a success in proportion to their rare merits. In the limited field of the sonnet one or two attempts have been made at a selection of this quintessential kind, but they have not attained success. On the other hand, of the larger sort, the selection that fishes broadly with an open mesh, there have been several very creditable specimens, such as the collections of Capel Loft, of Dyce, and of Leigh Hunt. Mr. Main's 'Treasury' belongs to this larger and less ambitious order, and aims at bringing into juxtaposition not so much the very best English sonnets as all the English sonnets that have at any time attracted attention or possessed a charm for literary readers. In the case of such a selection it is not taste or special judgment which we look for so much as learning, care, accuracy, and the habit of scholarship. All these qualities Mr. Main possesses, and he combines with them an acquaintance with the less-trodden paths of English poetry in which he surpasses all his predecessors in the history of the sonnet. His volume, it may be said at once, is not one of those which are a delight to the unprofessional reader, and which are slipped into a pocket to be read by the river's side on a sunny morning. It is a book for the study, a book for reference, full of erudition, and so scrupulously exact that it may be used without suspicion as a text-book.

The English sonneteers whom we naturally think of when we speak of the most characteristic employment of this form in England are Shakespeare, Milton, Wordsworth, Keats, and Mrs. Browning. The result of removing these five names from any selection of English sonnets would be to rob the collection of its chief glory, both in quality and quantity. Of 463 specimens in Mr. Main's book, 167 are contributed by these five poets. Next after them come the writers who have contributed one magnificent sonnet each to English literature, such as Drayton, Gray, Cowper, Byron. There is then a class of poets who have worked extensively in the sonnet, and who have in some cases made by it their principal fame without ever having gained supreme excellence in it, and among these we place Sidney, Spenser, Constable, Daniel, Drummond, and in later times Warton and Hartley Coleridge. When all these names are represented in a collection of sonnets, it will not be found that very many remain outside which have any claim to a place in that more restricted anthology of which we spoke above. But to an editor of Mr. Main's temperament the work is but just begun when these great writers have been searched for their best sonnets. He has still to sift the multitudinous volumes of the minor poets of three centuries to see if he can unearth any unknown quaterzains. We must give our readers an opportunity of judging some of his most happy discoveries. Here is an exquisite bit of fancy from the sweet, rambling pages of William Browne, the poet of 'Britannia's Pastorals':—

A Rose, as fair as ever saw the North,
Grew in a little garden all alone;
A sweeter flower did Nature ne'er put forth,
Nor fairer garden yet was never known.
The maidens danced about it morn and noon,
And learned bards of it their ditties made;
The nimble faeries, by the pale-faced moon,
Watered the root, and kissed her pretty shade.
But, welladay! the gardener careless grew,
The maids and faeries both were kept away,
And in a drought the caterpillars threw
Themselves upon the bud and every spray.
God shield the stock! If heaven send no supplies,
The fairest blossom of the garden dies.

There could not be a prettier allegory of the need of treating love as a delicate and fragile thing, to be watched and tended with judicious care; but most readers will feel that the couplet at the end spoils the sentiment with a harsh and needless moralizing. It is extraordinary that the Elizabethan poets, with all their tact and science, did not perceive how hurtful the use of the couplet was to the perfection of their quaterzains. Even Shakespeare's are often spoiled, and never improved, by this final impertinence of form, although there are few in which the couplet actually jars upon the physical and moral ear with such a dissonance as it does in the ninety-second, "But do thy worst to steal thyself away."

The modern editor who wishes to include Elizabethan work in his collection of sonnets must not, however, trouble himself about the exact Petrarchan form, or he will find his selection vanish like a cloud. Of Mr. Main's hundred and thirty-seven taken from writers earlier than Milton, there are but two—one by Constable and one by Sidney—which attempt to follow the Italian order of rhymes. To Constable is due the credit of having attempted to introduce into English poetry a slightly modified, but very elegant form, which we cannot too greatly regret was not adopted. Here is an example of it in a sonnet to St. Catherine:—

Because thou wert the daughter of a king,
Whose beauty did all Nature's works exceed,
And wisdom wonder to the world did breed,
A muse might rouse itself on Cupid's wing;
But, with the graces which from nature spring
Were graced by those which did from grace proceed,
And glory have deserved, my Muse doth need
An angel's feathers when thy praise I sing.
For all in thee became angelical:
An angel's face had angels' purity,
And thou an angel's tongue didst speak withal;
Lo! why thy soul, set free by martyrdom,
Was crowned by God in angels' company,
And angels' hands thy body did entomb.

From the time of Milton down to the time of Cowper, whatever sonnets were written were composed on the Petrarchan model introduced by Milton. Mr. Main has taken great pains to investigate the history of the English sonnet during this century of its disrepute, and he has found a good many specimens which possess considerable antiquarian or historical interest. He has, however, failed to observe the solitary sonnet of the Restoration, that by William Walsh. From a forgotten contemporary of Pope, Thomas Edwards, author of 'The Canons of Criticism,' he has reprinted three specimens. That on 'A Family Picture,' which laments the repeated blows struck by "insatiate Death," recalls and possibly inspired a famous passage in Young's 'Night Thoughts.' We suggest to Mr. Main that the Mr. Cambridge who died at Twickenham in 1802 can hardly have been the person addressed as "my pilot and my guide" by Edwards, who was born in 1699. Benjamin Stillingfleet, called the Blue-stocking, and grandson of the bishop, wrote in 1746 a sonnet which Mr. Main has revived, and which he designates "noble." It is rather pompous than noble. The poet contemplates the eccentric clergyman, Mr. John Williamson, as a blameless infant, whose thread is mimpun, and who has been wrecked upon a savage shore, while others on borrowed pinion soar around him; but, in the act of observing these singular phenomena, Faith obligingly explains to him that wings which are not lent from the store of Virtue will melt when near the sun. After more of this absurdly confused imagery the sonnet closes with a triplet that is undoubtedly very fine, although entirely unconnected with what has gone before:—

Nor is that man confined to this low clime
Who but the extremest skirts of glory sees,
And hears celestial echoes with delight.

Another forgotten sonneteer with whom we are grateful to Mr. Main for making us acquainted is Thomas Russell, a young clergyman, born in 1762, who died in his twenty-sixth year, under painful circumstances. His sonnets, which were posthumously published at Oxford in 1788, attracted considerable attention, and were praised in glowing language by Landor and by Wordsworth. Here is one of them, supposed to be written on the island of Lemnos:—

On this lone isle, whose rugged rocks affright
The cautious pilot, ten revolving years
Great Pæan's son, unwonted erst to tears,
Wept o'er his wound: alike each rolling light
Of heaven he watched, and blamed its lingering flight;
By day the saw-mew screaming round his cave
Drove slumber from his eyes; the chiding wave
And savage howlings chased his dreams by night.
Hope still was his: in each low breeze that sighed
Through his rude grot he heard a coming ear,
In each white cloud a coming sail he spied;
Nor seldom listened to the fancied roar
Of Oeta's torrents, or the hoarser tide
That parts famed Trachis from the Euboea shore.

This is very fine, and so are two other specimens given by Mr. Main. If these give a just idea of the writer's quality, Thomas Russell should no longer be allowed to rank among forgotten poets.

In the notes that close his volume Mr. Main has given a number of sonnets from living writers, the body of his work being confined to those already dead, but he has made a great mistake in admitting these. They are mainly from writers either unknown or unfavourably known to the public, and so a poor compliment is paid to the two or three genuine poets who accompany these obscure living sonneteers. At the same time it is possible that a small volume, carefully selected, and containing not more than 150 sonnets by living authors, would be interesting, and we hope to see this undertaken. If such a selection were made on the most general basis, without prejudice or regard for "schools" or cliques, so as to be representative of the whole body of good verse written in England in our time, the compiler would do a service to contemporary letters.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Innocence at Play. By Jean Middlemass. 3 vols. (Tinsley Brothers.)
Ramsdellholme. By Annie M. Rowan. 2 vols. (Remington & Co.)
Les Petites Cardinal. Par Ludovic Halévy. (Paris, Calmann Lévy; London, Hachette.)

'INNOCENCE AT PLAY' is from some points of view by no means an unamusing book. A number of idle little games might be played with it, such games as are proposed in the corners of country newspapers or magazines circulating among schoolgirls. It would be, for instance, an amusement—of an indolent and aimless kind, it is true, but tempered with instruction—to correct all the mistakes which Miss Middlemass makes in foreign languages, or to reckon up the number of times that the various characters swear, and to estimate the relative strength of their oaths. The style of the book affords amusement without instruction. It misses originality by reminding one too strongly of Mr. Burnand's parodies. The description of a water-party on the Thames given by a Russian prince, the villain of the piece, is as nice as anything. First, attention is called to the general aspect of things, the boats which "came and went upon the water, many of them rowed and steered by aristocratic-looking men, in irreproachable flannels and gay trimmings and bright caps."

The most gorgeous language is expended to tell how the prince took a villa near Henley, and how "every luxury which London can produce has been pressed into service by means of the prince's gold." He himself looks upon rowing on the Thames with contempt; even his valet

"laughs as he thinks of hairbreadth escapes, games of pitch-and-toss for life and death, that he has gone through in his youth, when he has more than once driven before the wind in some pirate's craft on the raging sea which lies around the islands of his almost forgotten home."

The prince's boats had silken cushions, "for his boats, like everything else belonging to the Russian, were luxurious in the extreme." The different ways in which the ladies enjoyed themselves are described by a bold metaphor: some of them, whose merry voices occasionally made themselves heard in the distance, "were sipping their champagne frothed, not sipping still Rudesheimer like Muriel," who, in fact, was carrying on a desperate flirtation with the prince. He was "the High Priest of Pleasure." "Gourmet rather than gourmand, Lavradakoff had studied the art of gastronomy in every detail." This antithesis of gourmet and gourmand is a favourite with ordinary novelists, and is a refinement which they alone understand. In truth, a gourmet is a judge of wine, a gourmand one who likes good living. But mistakes which would be avoided by turning over the pages of a dictionary are, of course, no more likely to be avoided than absurdities which might be got rid of by the smallest possible exercise of common sense. Although it would be sound advice to Miss Middlemass to suggest to her that she should use common sense and ordinary good taste, it would be a mistake to hope that she should follow such advice. At present she certainly gives some amusement, though it is of that kind which would rather receive than give; if she tried to temper her style with common sense, who could tell what would be the result?

"Rendesholme" is written in a very lofty mood, and the reflections of its author, if not her characters, maintain themselves at a high level throughout. "The fashion of this world passeth away," the reader is told at the outset. "Riches crumble. Pomp tarnishes. Vanity fades. Glory dies." Even this does not exhaust the catalogue of change and mutability which ushers in the preliminary sermon wherewith Mrs. or Miss Rowan seeks to subdue the spirit of her reader. "Love is but a fevered dream, which vanishes ere we fully realize its dizzy height of bliss." If the sermon were a little less spasmodic in its utterance, it would be more impressive; but fortunately for her readers, who might otherwise find her book altogether too gloomy for a novel, the author puts her thoughts into the shortest possible phrases. Witness this typical paragraph:—"A few hours since, almost unconscious, she had received the last rites of her Church. Been confessed. Absolved."

"Rendesholme" is not all written in this elliptical fashion, but it is scrupulously clipped and curtailed throughout, and the reader feels grateful for so much consideration. The story is interesting, however sad in its incidents and in the manner of their narration. It sacrifices too many of its heroes and heroines to the insatiable tyranny of death, which is allowed to cast its shadow over every page; but some two or three are left happy at the end, so that at least the final word of the author is not a groan.

M. Halévy's new volume of sketches and stories should be read in connexion with his "Monsieur et Madame Cardinal," now in its fifteenth edition. It is a study of character and manners—as they exist in contemporary Bohemia—of not less interest than audacity, and of not less humour than truth. Of the dozen chapters that compose the volume, the first six are devoted to the Cardinals; each of the others is complete in itself. One of the most striking is called "L'Opéra," and contains some pleasant sketches of the mothers of the ballet. Another good tale is "La Pénélope," which tells how the good ship Penelope was sent away on a six years' cruise, and cost the Empire some 422,000 francs for coals, and upwards of 1,000,000 francs for repairs—all because Raynald the banker was madly in love with Rose the dancer, who in her turn was madly in love with the sailor lieutenant, Noël de la Ville-Grise. If we add that "Les Petites Cardinal" is hardly a book to be put into the hands of youth, we shall have said enough.

SCHOOL MANUALS OF FRENCH HISTORY.

France. By Charlotte M. Yonge. "History Primers." (Macmillan & Co.)

France. By Charlotte M. Yonge. "Historical Course for Schools." (Same publishers.)

The History of France. Abridged from Mr. Robert Black's Translation of M. Guizot's larger History. By Gustave Masson. (Sampson Low & Co.)

Modern France, 1814-1879. By Oscar Browning. (Longmans & Co.)

There has been much activity shown of late in the production of historical manuals. This is all very well; but it is obviously of importance that extreme care should be bestowed on the preparation of these textbooks, because their cheapness and their conciseness give them a wide circulation, and if they are bad their influence may be very prejudicial. Nothing, in fact, is harder to write than a primer, and the shorter it is the harder the task. It has been said of Tacitus, "He abridges everything because he sees everything." It may be said that the writer of a good primer ought to know everything, even the minutest details. How else is he to choose, to distinguish the principal from the accessories, and give a general sketch which will be a faithful representation of reality? More knowledge is needed to write a satisfactory handbook than to write a monograph. Specialists alone are capable of what has hitherto been too often left to compilers. It is to be feared that Miss Yonge has studied mainly other manuals in order to write hers, and that she has neglected to have recourse, as she ought to have had, to special works, and even to familiarize herself sufficiently with our great histories, the picturesque and vigorous work of Michelet or the cold but complete and conscientious work of Darcey. There are two ways of ordering the composition of a manual: either to confine oneself to sketching in outline, in a dramatic and lively way, the exterior life of history; or to leave the picturesque side of history and explain, on the one hand, the development of the political and administrative institutions, and, on the other, the gradual formation of the national territory and the transformation of the feudal system into a centralized monarchy. Miss Yonge has followed neither plan, and has not sought to do anything else than to cram the greatest possible number of facts into the smallest possible volume. In effecting this she has shown much intelligence and dexterity, and it is surprising how many facts her little volumes contain. She has acted wisely in making Hugh Capet her starting-point, and this has enabled her to dispense with long and troublesome preliminaries; but, on the other hand, she comes as far down as the establishment of the Third Republic, and even dwells at some length on contemporary events. In grouping and selecting facts Miss Yonge has shown that she could write a much better manual than those she has given us if she had studied the history of France at first hand, and had taken heed of the points on which it is important to throw light. The movement of the communes and the formation of the municipalities are barely referred to by a vague phrase in the shorter manual, and are not made so prominent as they ought to be in the larger handbook. Miss Yonge does not explain in the subsequent part of her book how the municipal liberties disappeared, and how the bourgeoisie of the seventeenth century replaced the men of the communes of the twelfth. The establishment of the Parliament, which dates from the reign of Philip Augustus, is attributed to St. Louis, and in the most exact terms. What is more serious is that in her smaller book Miss Yonge places the creation of the States General in the reign of St. Louis instead of in the reign of Philip le Bel; and that in the larger volume she speaks of the States General under Jean le Bon without stating what was their organization when they had been created. The important part played by the States General in the fourteenth century is not even hinted at. Nothing is done in either book to show the profound difference that divides the feudal monarchy of the direct Capets and of the first Valois from the already absolute monarchy of the Valois of Angoulême and the despotism of the Bourbons. It is hardly necessary to speak of the mistaken opinions which are too common. Hugh Capet is represented as incapable, Charles VII. as a worthless coward, the Burgundians as the sole authors of the death of Joan of Arc, nothing being said about the English! The most apocryphal stories are retailed as historical facts; for instance, the six promises made by Bertrand de Gort (not du Gort, as Miss Yonge writes) to Philip le Bel in order to obtain the Papacy. The name of Turgot is not even mentioned in the reign of Louis XVI. In short, Miss Yonge shows tact as a compiler, but her primers are dry, destitute of colour and precision, and not suited to make young people understand or care for the history of France. Yet no history is better fitted to strike the imagination or interest the intellect.

The success of M. Guizot's "Histoire de France racontée à nos Petits-Enfants" has suggested to M. Gustave Masson the happy idea of boiling down the five volumes of which the work consists into one of a manageable size. M. Masson has used Mr. R. Black's translation and produced a readable abridgment. Its value naturally depends on that of M. Guizot's book, the first part of which, compiled, if not by M. Guizot, at least under his supervision, is quite remarkable, while the second, with which he had little or nothing to do, is much poorer. M. Masson, to do him justice, has not confined himself to the simple task of abridging. He is more than a Justin shortening a Trojan Pompeian. In several instances he has corrected the errors of Guizot, and he has added new touches here and there. But he has not been able to modify the general character of the work, which is more narrative than explanatory. A much greater proportion of the space is allotted to institutions than in Miss Yonge's volumes. The reader learns what the feudal system was, what the communes, what the States General; but still not enough attention is given to this part of the subject. The reader searches in vain for information about the origin of the Parliament, and nothing is said about the great changes made in the Parliament and the administration of the kingdom by St. Louis and Philip le Bel. In order to render the book useful to young readers, M. Masson has been careful to add a chronological table of the principal events, and to append a list of the sources of the history of France, the dates of the creation of the principal fiefs, the scheme of the organization of the Parliament under Louis XIV., genealogical tables, and finally a copious index. He often quotes the excellent Historical Dictionary of M. L. Lalanne, and he would have done well to say that the table of the Parliament is entirely borrowed from the admirable article written for M. Lalanne by M. Lot. In his table of the feudal system he has omitted the most important of the feudal services after the military, the "service de cour et de plaids," that is to say, the obligation to assist the seigneur in his tribunal. Finally, the list of sources is disfigured by many errors in dates, serious omissions, and useless insertions. In spite of these defects the book will be found serviceable, and put in the hands of young people will serve to give a taste for the history of France and an intelligent understanding of it.

Mr. Browning has attempted to write in a very succinct fashion an account of the history of France since the restoration of the Bourbons, and, like Miss Yonge, he has endeavoured to give the maximum of facts in the minimum of space. He also interpolates reflections which do not add to the clearness of a brief narrative. For instance, speaking of the Spanish marriages, Mr. Browning says:—"This clumsy diplomacy entirely failed of its results. The Queen had children, contrary to Guizot's expectation. Both she and Louis Philippe were driven from their thrones. The Duc de Montpensier was not suffered to reside in Spain. His daughter, who married Queen Isabella's son, died within six months of her marriage. Nothing is more pitiable than the worldly wisdom of a philosopher." But a worse defect than this is the writer's almost incredible inaccuracy, of which a few examples may be given. At the Restoration, we are told, "the nobles resumed their privileges." Talleyrand "held the reins of power till his death," p. 6. On p. 11 it is said that in invading Spain France "had strength enough to resist the example of the three Northern Powers." On p. 13 Louis XVIII. is represented as dying on September 17th. To turn to the later part. It is said, p. 96, that by the September Convention it was arranged that the French troops should be withdrawn from Rome within the year. P. 98 it is said, "Within a week from the opening of the campaign [of 1806] Austria was entirely defeated." On p. 101, "The last French troops left Vera Cruz on March 11th." On p. 100 we are told that the French loss at Montevideo was great. On p. 103 the annexation of Savoy and Nice is put down as among the causes which shook the Empire. On p. 100 it is said that after the first reverses in 1870, "Moltke retired to Metz, Franz to Nancy," and "Marshal Bismarck.... was sent to replace Lebouf." Of course some of these mistakes are trifling, but the book is full of slips, and therefore it is impossible to trust a line of it. A looseness of statement is perpetually present. "While Paris was invested, the rest of France was overcome by the German troops, or occupied with more or less serious efforts of self-defence," is a model of the sort of sentence which should not occur in a school-book. Then comes a slip of the pen, "The French had taken Orleans after some resistance," when the author obviously means the Germans. Mr. Browning will have to revise nearly every page of his book before it is fit for use in schools.

ANTIQUARIAN PUBLICATIONS.

The Twelfth Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records in Ireland (c.—2583, 1880) continues in an appendix the fiefs of Elizabeth from the last Report, carrying them down from 1570 to 1576, and covering an important period of Irish history. There are many interesting documents in this calendar of leases, grants, commissions, and pardons. Almost every lease seems to have contained the stipulation that the premises were not to be let "to any except English," and in one document (No. 1,823) "English by both parents" is stipulated. The appointment of Rome M'Goghagane to be seneschal of the country of Keshalagh (No. 1,700) is a curious illustration of the tribal characteristics of Irish history. It recites "that Conley M'Goghagane had refused to surrender his name of Magoghagane or captain of that name; and the queen desiring to change the name of captain to seneschal, 'a degree or name more usual in places of civil governance,' makes the present grant to his son and heir" of all the lawful rights and appurtenances of the captain and tenant. No 2,190 is a grant of the office of seneschal of the country of Slaghtwilliam, with power "to attack and punish all malefactors, rebels, vagabonds, rhymer, Irish harpers, idle men and women," rhymer and Irish harper being peculiarly interesting relics of old-world life. Municipal life is illustrated by the grants of charters, one of which, appointing a "sovereign" of the town of Kilkenny, is not mentioned in the Report of the Commissioners of 1835. Then we have interesting descriptions of the musters for the army, as in No. 2,444; the appointment of Essex to be Captain General of the Forces (No. 2,349); and many other valuable documents. Besides the fiefs there is another useful appendix, a table of the parochial records of Ireland in the Public Record Office and in local custody, the earliest dating from 1600 and 1619. The form of report from parochial officers having custody of parochial records might with advantage be adopted in England—it asks as to the present state of the records, their place of habitation, and the why and wherefore of destruction and neglect.

The most important paper in the Transactions of the Essex Archaeological Society, Vol. II. Part I., is a continuation of Mr. Lowndes's history of the Barrington family. The first of the race he notices here is Humphrey, who flourished in the latter half of the fifteenth century. Not very much seems to have come to light regarding him, but from all we have there is no injustice in concluding that he was a wild and violent person. The manorial records contain six separate charges of assault against him, as well as an order that he should no longer harbour in his dwelling a certain Joan Payne, who is described as "valde vicious." His descendants were reputable and careful people, who appear to have lived very uneventful lives during the Tudor period. Sir Francis Barrington was the head of the house when James I. came to the throne, and was one of the candidates for the representation of Essex in that king's first Parliament. The others were Sir Gamahel Capel and Sir Edward Denny. The king had published a proclamation forbidding canvassing for votes and "all factious labouring for the places of knights or burgesses." Notwithstanding this expression of the royal will, electioneering went on briskly, and Mr. Lowndes has been so fortunate as to discover some letters relating to it, which ought to attract the attention of all who take interest in the growth of representative government. There is an angry letter from the Earl of Suffolk which is really beautiful in its way: "I do expect and challenge at your hands," he says, "as I am Lord of the Towne & most of you my tenants.....that you give your free consents & voyces to my good friend Sir Edward Denny Knight, which if you shall not regard what I now make known unto you I will make the proudest of you all repeat it, be you well assured"; and then he goes on with charming simplicity to refer to the royal proclamation. Absurd as this seems to us, it was not unreasonable from the earl's point of view, as he was well aware that the "factious labouring" there denounced was only meant to condemn the actions of those opposed to the Court. The same line has been taken by influential people in times long subsequent to the Stuart period; but we have never chanced to meet with any other document which so directly testifies to what we should all of us now look upon as undue influence. The Rev. O. L. Acland has contributed an interesting paper on Colchester School. It is much to be wished that in some future number he would print the early lists of scholars. Many Essex men have become famous, and it would be a help to students of genealogy and local history to know who among them derived their education from that foundation. Mr. Andrew Hamilton supplies a valuable paper on the remains of stained glass to be found in certain Essex churches. There is nothing that the modern "restoration" fanatics make war upon more ruthlessly than the fragments of old glass which Reformers, Puritans, and churchwardens have spared. Every fragment that is left to us should be carefully traced and described. How very useful it is that the work should be done at once is proved by a passage in the "Archæological Intelligence" in this very number. It seems that during the "restoration" of Rochford Church "all the ancient remains of painted glass have been abstracted, and it is to be feared are irretrievably lost—at all events, to the church to which they belong. The most important portion, historically as well as for the excellence of the glass, is the shield of the arms of Bohun, which until recently filled an octofol in the head of a double-light window of the time of Edward III., at the east end of the north aisle."

Among the Tombs of Colchester, published by Messrs. Benham & Co., of Colchester, is a selection of epitaphs from the Colchester churches and burial grounds. The interest of the genealogist has not been so much considered as that of the singular class of persons who are supposed to take delight in reading the halting verses which stonecutters are wont to carve upon headstones and tablets. For our own part we cannot find much instruction or entertainment in reading verse so utterly despicable as most of that which is printed here. One stone in the churchyard of St. Mary-at-the-Walls has some lines on it which show how very easy a thing it is to improve on Shakespeare:—

For no more the hush of the Sun
For the tedious winter's blast,
For thou thy worldly task hast [sic] done,
And the dream of life is past.
Blessed, Monarchs, Princes, must Follow thee and come to dust.

This is, of course, taken from Cymbeline, IV. ii. 258-63. The Colchester Nonconformists seem to have been original—at least we cannot call to mind any antitype from which the following, in the burial-ground of the Congregational Church, Lane Walk, can have been taken:—

Jehovah shake a fever came Tempestuous from his throne
Sailed on the flesh with raging flames
And burnt the fabric down.

The Beyer family has been a notable one in Colchester, and there is a good deal about them here; among other things the reader is expected to credit is that the pedigree can be proved up to A.D. 1002. It need hardly be said that for this no evidence is given whatever.

It is pleasant to receive the second volume of the Journal of the Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, and to note that it is almost twice as bulky as its predecessor. Bulk in itself is no merit; but when we find that every page is pertinent to the history and antiquities of the county, and that it is all worth printing, it is difficult to give higher praise. The great fault of our numerous county archaeological societies, so far as their publications are concerned, is the insertion of much matter that has no reference whatever to the county or district of which they profess to treat. Having occasion recently to refer to a past volume of a western county archaeological society, it was somewhat irritating to find that a considerable proportion of the book was taken up with 'A Dissertation on the Word "Pig"!'. Whilst so much remains to be published and written of the greatest interest pertaining to almost every English county, it is highly desirable that local archaeological societies should strictly confine themselves to their own hunting-grounds. It is to be hoped that the Derbyshire Society may remain true to so good a beginning. The volume opens with a painstaking paper entitled 'A Contribution towards a History of Norton, Derbyshire,' by Mr. Addy, the author of the excellent history of Beauchief Abbey recently noticed in these columns. Mr. St. John Hope gives an exhaustive account of the clock and chimneys of All Saints, Derby; and from the same pen is a continuation, from the last volume, of an account of the excavations on the site of the Premonstratensian Abbey of Dale—one of the most interesting uncoverings of monastic remains that have taken place during the century. Mr. C. S. Greaves, Q.C., contributes an elaborate discussion on the age of the Darley yew, which has satisfactorily established its position as the largest and most luxuriant yew now extant in the United Kingdom; he considers that seven hundred years is the outside limit of its age—a period very considerably within the estimate usually assigned to it. Genealogy, in addition to Mr. Addy's pedigree of Kirke, is well represented in Mr. Charlton's account of the Pegge family, fully illustrated with five tables of descent; the best-known member of this family was Dr. Samuel Pegge, the voluminous author and careful antiquary of the end of last century. Mr. Cox, the historian of the Derbyshire charabees, supplies a diary of Edward Bagshaw, vicar of Castleton, 1723-1769, which reads like a romance; and he also edits 'The Minute-Book of the Wirksworth Classis, 1661-1658.' This last-named paper, which takes up some hundred pages of the volume, is of the most exceptional interest. It is an exact reprint of the original note-book of the registrar of the Presbyterian classis of the Wirksworth district. There is only one other similar MS. extant, viz., the note-book of the Manchester Classis, which is about to be edited by Mr. John E. Bailey for the Chetham Society. The printing of this remarkable MS. throws much light on the little understood position of religious parties during the Commonwealth, and shows how much more widely the Presbyterian system was organized than is usually admitted by historians. There is a long paper by Mr. Frederick Davis on the etymology of Derbyshire place-names: it is arranged alphabetically, and we are surprised at the large number of important omissions. Mr. Davis remarks:—"Perhaps no branch of literature is so beset with pitfalls as etymology, and doubtless I have fallen into many." Both clauses of this sentence are true; but still it is a good attempt, that may be perfected in later years either by the same or another hand. There are some excellent drawings of a mediæval cancer recently found in the chancel wall of Langwith Church, of some old houses in the county town, of an elaborate ceiling in "the great room" of Derby market-place (where the final council that ordered the retreat of 1745 was held), and of some late incised slabs in Croxall Church. Altogether the Derbyshire Archaeological Society may be congratulated on having produced an annual volume which is certainly not surpassed by any of the older established local associations.

Sussex Archaeological Collections. Vol. XXX. (Lewes, Rivington.)—This volume is less attractive than any of its forerunners; still there is much in it that may interest students who value such books. A novelty is an index of the illustrations in the thirty published volumes of the 'Collections.' Would that an index to the letter-press had accompanied it! Mr. Willett's elaborate account of British coins in Sussex is continued in Part II, which deals with inscribed coins. None of them, of course, is older than the Roman occupation, B.C. 50 being suggested as the earliest definable date. This coinage extends till the reign of Claudius. The first name on British coins of this class is that of Commius, the Atrebatian chief, a name which suggests, if it does not confirm, a Greek influence, however remote that may be, transmitted through a Gaulish medium. He is one of the few British chieftains mentioned by Roman historians of whose existence we have numismatic evidence. There are not more than four such examples! Caesar dwells on the career of Commius; but the chief's name remains on one coin only, though "Commii Filius" occurs on nearly fifty. Their common capital was Calleva (Silchester), and the sons seem to have served the Romans; the art and symbols on their money testify thus much without regard to other records. The coins of Verica, one of the sons, are remarkable for their excellence; and one of them in the hands of Dr. Birch and Mr. Evans was useful in disposing for ever of those ludicrous legends which, made available for a pseudo-political purpose, had devised a certain "community of the Fribolgs." The editor has written an exhaustive article on the Arundel chancel case, and vigorously sums up for the claim of the Duke of Norfolk. A good account of Roman mosaic pavements and other works at Bignor comes next. A popular essay by Archdeacon Hannah is devoted to Sussex churches, and expresses the author's notions about the "restoration" of ancient buildings. As the archdeacon does not hesitate to admire what has been done to Worth Church, Balcombe, nothing need be said about his opinions; he puts the facts neatly. "In the parts that have been rebuilt the old stonework has been carefully and jealously utilized." What more could any one want! What, indeed, except the real old stones! The subjects of other papers are 'Early Sussex Armory,' treated by Mr. W. S. Ellis, and 'Barcombe Church,' which is now being vigorously "restored." It needed repairs and cleaning, but it seems to have lost its history and beauty.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. MURRAY sends us A Handbook to Political Questions of the Day, by Mr. Sydney C. Buxton. To the useful collection of 'Ideas of the Day on Policy,' which Mr. Charles Buxton published some fourteen years ago, his son has now furnished a useful supplement. The new book differs considerably, however, from the old one. Instead of endeavouring to set forth the principles underlying the arguments in favour of what appear to him the most necessary political changes, Mr. Sydney Buxton succinctly sets forth the arguments themselves, appending to them as impartial a summary as a reformer can be expected to give of the arguments against reform. Strict impartiality is not, of course, to be looked for in such a volume as this. Mr. Buxton must be prepared to be told by Conservatives that he has missed, if he has not misrepresented, some of their strong points. All his efforts to keep free from bias do not prevent his statements of the rival views from being somewhat one-sided, and if it were not so he would be a poor partisan. But he has done his work with most praiseworthy honesty, and the book is a capital one for young politicians to study, and even old politicians may refresh their memories and sharpen their judgments by reading it. Mr. Buxton keeps clear of foreign politics, but his survey of domestic questions is tolerably comprehensive. He starts with the State Church, and presents very clearly the chief arguments for and against disestablishment and disendowment, assigning a separate section to the burial difficulty, which is just now uppermost. To the subject of national education, including free schools, religious teaching in Board schools, and compulsion, he does not give at all too much space; and he treats more fully of the new problems of parliamentary reform, such as the extension of the county franchise, the redistribution of seats, woman suffrage, the ballot, and other parts of the electoral machinery. Our land laws and the proposals for altering them, from the suggested abolition of entail down to reform of the game laws, occupy him yet longer; and an elaborate review of the licensing question, in all its complicated bearings, is followed by shorter chapters devoted to such miscellaneous topics as capital punishment and flogging, marriage with a deceased wife's sister, and the Sunday opening of museums. In a concluding section are grouped the principal Irish questions of the day, whether strictly political, like the demands for Home Rule and amendment of the franchise, or having to do with the present uncomfortable relations between landlords and tenants. That is a sufficiently large programme, which the most enthusiastic reformers cannot hope to exhaust for many years to come. They may, however, rejoice with Mr. Buxton at the great progress that has been made in many important directions since 1866, when his father's book was written. Some grave questions, like those of the Irish State Church, church rates, and University tests, with which that book dealt, are now things of the past; others, like the land laws and the liquor trade, are much nearer to settlement; while some old topics, such as parliamentary reform and educational reform, have entered on new stages, and others again, like local self-government and the Sunday opening of museums, are almost entirely new. Mr. Buxton is quite right in saying that his book "in no way pretends to be complete"; but it is a book which a great many people might study with advantage.

PROF. TANNY, the principal of the Presidency College in Calcutta, has just brought out in the 'Bibliotheca Indica' the first two parts of his translation from the Sanscrit of The Ocean of the Streams of Story. The Bengal Asiatic Society could not have conferred a greater boon on the students of folk-lore than by giving them a translation of this great repository of Indian legends, which was composed from older sources by Somadeva of Kashmir towards the close of the eleventh century. Its existence was first made known to Europe by Wilson in 1824, through his articles in the Calcutta Oriental Quarterly Magazine, and we are glad to see that Calcutta is to have the honour of producing the first complete translation. The second part goes down to the end of the twenty-third chapter; but the great interest of the book will begin with the twenty-seventh, where Brockhaus's German translation ceases. The stories are illustrated by notes which refer to similar legends current in other collections of folk-lore. The members of the Folk-lore Society will find this translation a mine of interesting materials.

Mr. PONSBY sends us a nicely printed copy of the Examination Papers set at the Irish Intermediate Examinations. It is greatly to be feared that set subjects necessarily promote cram, and these papers, especially those on modern languages, seem certain to encourage it. However, this is not Mr. Ponsby's fault, who simply publishes what the Commissioners approve.

Messrs. WHITTAKER & Co. send us a neat little edition of Elizabeth; or, the Exiles of Siberia, an old favourite now undeservedly neglected. It is to be hoped this handy reprint may meet with the success it merits.—That excellent magazine for children, Little Folks, has reached the conclusion of another volume. It is an admirable periodical, but Messrs. Cassell detract seriously from the value of this and others of their most popular publications by omitting all bibliographical marks, such as the date, and the number of the volume. The practice is annoying, and creates a prejudice against even so well-edited a serial as this.—The letter-press of Golden Childhood (Ward, Lock & Co.) is good, but the "beautiful coloured pictures" should be omitted. They are hideous.—The Union Jack, of which Mr. G. A. Henty recently became the editor, has greatly improved under its new management. Mr. Henty is well known, both as a special correspondent who has been a narrator of the decisive battles of our day and as the author of some excellent books for boys. In the preface to the first number of the Union Jack which he edited, he intimated that to conduct a magazine for boys had been the ambition of his life. This preface appeared in the first number for May. Since then each number has shown how thoroughly Mr. Henty has identified himself with his self-imposed task. Messrs. Griffith & Farran are the publishers.

That indefatigable person, Mr. Frowde, has sent us copies of the two special editions of the Oxford Bible for Teachers which were printed expressly for the Sunday-school Centenary Celebration. The one is declared to be "The Smallest Edition in the World," printed on extremely thin and opaque india paper, 1,416 pages, measuring 4 in. by 5½ in. by 1 in., and weighing 12½ ounces. The other is "The Sunday-school Superintendent's Edition," printed on thin india paper, measuring 5½ in. by 7½ in. by 1 in., and weighing 19 ounces. We presume that in speaking of "the smallest edition in the world" Mr. Frowde means the smallest that contains the Concordance, maps, and other useful aids that he liberally provides.

Messrs. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODS send us a Portorum Teacher's Bible, containing Variorum Notes, and the Aids to the Bible Student which they published in their 'Bible for Bible Teachers.' This edition is to be peculiarly commended for giving the translators' preface, which the ordinary editions suppress, but which ought to be read by all Sunday-school teachers. This edition, like Mr. Frowde's, commemorates the Sunday-school Centenary.

Dr. THEOPHILUS BRAGA has just brought out, on the occasion of Camões' centenary, a bibliography of the great Portuguese poet's works as well as of books relating to his biography.

We have on our table Eliza Berrett, edited by C. Northend (Low).—Bibliography of Dickens, by R. H. Shepherd (The Author).—and my Property, by Verax (Low).—Memoir Questions, by W. T. Lawrence (Heywood).—Milton's Arcades and Sonnets, by the Rev. J. Hunter (Longmans).—Chambers's English Readers, Book VI., by J. M. D. Moulejohn (Chambers).—Domestic Economy, Part II. (Chambers).—British Dogs, Parts IX. and X., by H. Dalziel ('The Bazaar' Office).—See-keeping for Amateurs, by T. Addy ('The Bazaar' Office).—Practical Trapping, by W. Carnegie ('The Bazaar' Office).—Antiseptic Surgery, by W. MacCormac (Smith, Elder & Co.).—How to Feed an Infant, by B. Baker (Baillière).—A Practical Treatise on Sea-Sickness, by G. M. Beard (New York, E. B. Treat).—Water Supply, by J. H. B. Browne (Macmillan).—Ponds and Ditches, by M. C. Cooke (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge).—The Etymology of some Derbyshire Place-names, by F. Davis (Bainrose).—How to Observe the Composition of Armies, by an Officer (Mitchell).—Help for Ireland, by an "Anglo-Irishman" (Kerby & Edean).—Communism and Socialism in their History and Theory, by T. D. Woolsey (Low).—Souvenir of Old England, by an Anglo-American (Simpkin).—Two Sides of the Atlantic, by J. Burnley (Simpkin).—Monarchs and Statesmen: a Poem, by H. G. Graham (Penny).—The Prince: a Poem, by G. D. (Stock).—Josephine: an Historical Drama (E. W. Allen).—A Catechism on Geology and Sacred History for Young People, by E. A. Peckome (Relfe Brothers).—Sketches of Church History in Germany, by J. Lloyd (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge).—The Life of David as Reflected in his Psalms, by A. Maclean (Edinburgh, Macniven & Wallace).—The Preacher's Pocket, by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould (Skeffington).—Sin and its Penalty, by J. Hawkins (Stock).—An Essay on the Scriptural Doctrine of Immortality, by the Rev. J. Challis (Rivingtons).—The Parables of Our Lord, by H. Calderwood (Macmillan).—Quæstiones Archimædæ, by J. L. Heiberg (Copenhagen, R. Klein).—Volkswirtschaftliche und Socialphilosophische Essays, by Dr. W. Neurath (Vienna, Fussy & Frick).—Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Staats- und Rechtsgeschichte, by Dr. O. Gierke (Braun, W. Koebner).—Rivellations Etymologiques, by M. Schapiro (Trübner).—I Miseri Eleonni, by S. Bernocco (Turin, E. Loescher).—Dickens and Daudet, by L. Weismann (Berlin, H. S. Hermann).—Nibelungen, by J. Jordan (Frankfurt, W. Jordan).—and Mélanges de Linguistique et d'Anthropologie, by A. Hovelacque (Trübner). Among New Editions we have Local Examination History, by R. S. Pringle (Heywood).—The Gifts of Civilization, by R. W. Church (Macmillan).—Esthetics of Musical Art, by Dr. F. Hand (Reeves).—and New Grammar of French Grammar, by Dr. V. de Fiva (Lockwood). Also the following Pamphlets: A Practical Method for the Constitutional Union of the United Kingdom and the Nine Parliamentary Colonies (Stanford).—Mr. Archibald Forbes and the Zulu War, by N. L. Walford (S. Tinsley).—The National or the Factional Party, by F. A. Hyndman (Allen & Co.).—Facts and Impressions of England, by H. de Hochstrasser (Wilson).—Who was the Founder of Sunday Schools? by S. R. T. Mayer (Moxon).—and Greece Abandoned (Infield).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Craik's (Rev. W. F.) The Rescue of Child Soul, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.
Ewald's (Dr. G. H. A. von) Commentary on the Prophecy of the Old Testament, Vol. 4, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Tuck's (E.) The Age of the Great Patriarchs, Vol. 1, 2/6 cl.

Law.

Moss's (J. F.) Handbook of the New Code of Regulations, 1880, and other Official Instructions, with Notes, &c., 2/6.
Found's (G. A.) Architecture, and How it Arose, 2/6 cl.

Poetry and the Drama.

Lewis's (H. K.) Songs for Little Singers in the Sunday School and Home, roy. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Nicholson's (James and Ellen C.) Poems, 16mo. 2/6 cl.
Palace and Ercin and Fair Geraldine, Two Tragedies, by Author of 'Gleaners' and the 'Duke of Gales', or 8vo. 4/6.
Shakespeare's King Henry V., with Notes and Introduction by E. Deighton, cr. 8vo. 4/6 cl.

History and Biography.

Guisot in Private Life, 1787-1874, by his Daughter, Madame de Witt, translated by M. G. M. Simpson, 8vo. 15/6 cl.
Parker (Admiral Sir W.), Life of, 1781-1868, by Vice-Admiral A. Phillimore, Vol. 2, 8vo. 18/6 cl.
Parr's (Capt. H. W.) Sketch of the Kafir and Zulu Wars, 4/6.
Row's (Rev. J.) The Manchus, or the Relinging Dynasty of China, their Rise and Progress, 8vo. 14/6 cl.

Geography and Travel.

Johnston's Historical Atlas, 2 vols. 4to. 31/6 cl.

Philology.

Cass's (R. H.) Linguistic and Oriental Essays, written from the Year 1844 to 1878, 8vo. 14/6 cl.

Science.

Brathwaite's (R.) The Sphagnum, or Peat Mosses of Europe and North America, imp. 8vo. 25/6 cl.
Haddenhal's (E.) Animal Magnetism, translated from the fourth German Edition by L. C. Woodbridge, 2/6 cl.

General Literature.

Berthel's (E.) The Sergeant's Legacy, from the French by G. Venables, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.
Brooks's (F.) The Boy Emigrants, a Tale of the American Plains and California Gold-Mines, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Burns in Drama, together with Shaved Lemons, edited by J. H. Stirling, 12mo. 4/6 cl.
Cordoba, a Story of the Sicilian Expedition, by E. M. Hawtrej, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Dowling's (M.) The Sport of Fate, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.
Gortchakov's (M. M.) The Mysteries of St. Petersburg, 2/6.
Great Grenfell Gardens, by E. H. Burton, 12mo. 3/6 cl. (Railway Library).
Harte's (B.) Complete Works, Vol. 2, cr. 8vo. 4/6 cl.
Hartington's (Right Hon. the Marquis of) Electoral Speeches in 1879 and 1880, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Harwood's (J. S.) The Tenth Earl, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.
Hayward's (W. S.) The Secret Seven, a Love Story, 3/6 cl.
Lynchinski's (M. J.) The Kindergarten Principles, its Educational Value and Chief Applications, 8vo. 4/6 cl.
Scientific Transmutationism, by D. M., cr. 8vo. 1/6 cl.
Sherer's (J. W.) The Conjuror's Daughter, a Tale, cr. 8vo. 4/6 cl.
Smythies's (Mrs. G.) Our Mary, a Novel, 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Stirling's (J. H.) Jerold, Tuxen, and Mamey, with other Original Essays, 12mo. 4/6 cl.
Tales and Sketches of the Convicts, Illustrated Bicentennial Edition, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Todvil's (M. E.) Merchants and Bankers' Companion, 21/6.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Gebhard (O. v.) u. Harneck (A.): Evangelium oder Gracius Kommande, seine Entdeckung und sein Werth, 10m.
Hergenhöfer (J.): Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, 2nd edition, Vol. 2, Part 2, and Vol. 2, 16m.
Hettinger (F.): Apologie d. Christenthums, Vol. 2, Parts 1 and 2, 1m. 2s.

Law.

Les Décrets du 20 Mars, 1880, et les Mesures accomplies contre les Associations Religieuses, Consultation de M. Roussin, 2/6.

Fine Art.

Keydman's (H.): Verhüllte Tugenden, Skizzen in Messing etc. Turin, 2m.
Rosen (M.): Geschichte der Malerschule Antwerpen, Skizzen v. F. Reber, Part 1, 9m.

History and Biography.

Casta (Oscar): Les Trente Dernières Années, 1848-1878, 6fr.
Correspondence of Friedrichs d. Grossen, 4 vols., 44m.
Sainte Beuve (C. A.): Nouvelle Correspondance, avec des Notes de son Dernier Secrétaire, 2fr. 50.

Geography and Travel.

Tahiti-hatoh (P. de): Algérie, Algérie et Tunisie, Lettres à M. Michel Chevalier, 1fr.

Philology.

Hass (F.): Die Attische Beredsamkeit, Part 1, Section 2, 2m.
Hobbing (O.): Samkrit-Wörterbuch in kürzerer Fassung, Part 2, 2m. 1, 2m. 20.
Comienum Atticorum Fragmenta, edited by T. Koch, Vol. 1, 16m.
Shelling (M.): Lexicon Homericum, Vol. 1, Pars. 12 and 14, Vol. 2, Pars. 2, 6m.
Hoychill Millet de Viris Illustris Librum, recensuit J. Flach, 6m. 75.
Keller (O.): Epilogomena zu Herodotus, 2m.
Müller (L.): Metrik der Griechen, v. Meuser, 2m. 50.
Pauli (C.): Etruskische Studien, Part 2, 1m. 30.
Poetae Latini Minores, rec. A. Beckhous, Vol. 2, 1m. 50.
Porphyrii Quæstiones Homericæ, collectæ H. Schneider, 2m.

Science.

Sander (M.): Der Sprachgebrauch d. Rhetorik Antiquæ, 2m.
Wiedemann (F. J.): Syrilisch-deutsches Wörterbuch, 7m.

Science.

Sartorius (Fhr. v. Waltershausen): Der Actin, edited by A. v. Leuzels, Vol. 1, 40m.

General Literature.

Bruckmann-Chetrian: Quelques Mots sur l'Empire Romain, 1fr. 50.
Lerman (J.): Les Marins Méditerranée, 3fr.

IN A COTTAGE GARDEN.

BETWIXT our apple-boughs, how clear
The violet western hills appear,
As calmly ends another day
Of Earth's long history!—from the ray
She with slow majestic motion
Wheeling continent and ocean
Into her own dim shade, wherethrough
The Outer Heavens come into view,
Deep beyond deep. In thought cohesive
This rolling Globe whereon we live,
(For in the mind, and there alone,
A picture of the world is shown)
How huge it is, how full of things,
As round the royal sun it swings,
In one of many subject rings,—
Carrying our Cottage with the rest,
Its rose-lawn and its martin's nest.
But, number every grain of sand,
Wherever salt wave touches land;
Number in single drops the sea;
Number the leaves on every tree;

Number Earth's living creatures, all
That run, that fly, that swim, that crawl;
Of sands, drops, leaves, and lives, the count
Add up into one vast amount;
And then, for every separate one
Of all these, let a flaming Sun
Whirl in the skies, encircled each
With its own massy worlds. No reach
Of thought suffices.

Look aloft.
The stars are gathering. Cool and soft
The twilight in our garden-croft
Purple the crimson-folded rose,
(O tell me how so sweet it grows!)
Makes gleam like stars the cluster'd white;
And Beauty too is infinite.

W. ALLENHAM.

"THE MELANCHOLY JACQUES."

WITH reference to Mr. Oswald Crawford's letter on this subject, I should like to mention that in an article on the Christian name John, published in the Cornhill Magazine some eighteen months since, I called attention to the fact that Shakespeare scanned the word "Jacques" as two syllables. I did not then go fully into the subject, because I thought it probably well known to most Shakespearean scholars; but I venture now to add a few further remarks upon the question. The word occurs altogether only seven times in the dialogue of 'As You Like It.' Twice the passage is in prose; three times the word is terminal, so that it may be either monosyllabic or dissyllabic, so far as the scansion is concerned; and twice it is median. The last two instances run as follows:—

The melancholy Jacques grieves at that,

and

Stay, Jacques, stay.

Again, in 'All's Well that Ends Well,' the name twice occurs in the middle of a line:—

I am St. Jacques' pilgrim, thither gone.

There's four or five to greet St. Jacques bound.

In 'Henry V.' we find

Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vandermere.

Similarly Parolles is always scanned as three syllables. For example,—

Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

Oh, my Parolles, they have married me.

I think these and other instances lead me fairly to the conclusion that Shakespeare pronounced the final syllable e in French words. On the other hand, he never pronounces the so-called e mute at the end of polysyllabic French words, though he always pronounces it in other syllables than the last. For instance, he treats Pucelle, Touraine, and Bretagne as only two syllables, and Maine as only one. If we compare two such lines as

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle joined,

and

Dieu de batayles, where have they this mettle?

I think we must allow that the final s makes the e mute into a separate syllable in Shakespeare's eyes. I know of only one case where a final e is by itself scanned as a separate syllable, and that is in the couplet

If that you will French win,
Then with Scotland first begin;

where an archaic proverb is simply quoted with its original metrical peculiarities, just as we might now quote

When Adam delf and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?

without at all committing ourselves to its versification. Doubtless Shakespeare read the first-mentioned couplet unmetrally, as most people nowadays read the second. On the other hand, I know of only one case where a final e in French words is seemingly slurred over by Shakespeare, and that is in the line

Jacques of Chatillon, Admiral of France, where the "of" may well be an interpolation, or where a hypermetrical syllable could be easily tolerated.

On the whole, therefore, I incline to think that Shakespeare pronounced the name as if written in modern English "Jah-kez," the final s being distinctly articulated. That Shakespeare elsewhere pronounced final s in French words is clear from the passage in 'Henry V.' where Pistol's prisoner says, "Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?" to which Pistol replies, "Brass, cur; offer't me brass!" Indeed, it is by no means certain that final consonants were not often still pronounced in France itself under Henri Quatre.

But what can Mr. Crawford mean by saying that the e would "be sounded or made mute as the line required a word of two syllables or of one syllable, in accordance with the usage of all French poets and of our own Chaucer"? Surely Mr. Crawford must know that in all French poetry every e mute, without exception, is invariably scanned as a separate syllable. It is true in an opéra bouffe one may write "E'gardez-le, v'la c' qui fait que soit Mam'zelle Angot"; but in serious verse the poet has no such licence to pronounce or elide e mute at his own sweet will. And if Mr. Crawford will look into so well known a school-book as Dr. Brewer's 'Chaucer,' he will see that the rules governing the final e in the 'Canterbury Tales,' though more complicated, are quite as precise.

GRANT ALLEN.

Your correspondent, as appears from the latter part of his letter, understands scansion, though his first part is not so clear. The explanation therefore, one would think, lies in his own hands. Succinctly I would say that in four instances in 'Love's Labour's Lost,' 'As You Like It,' and 'All's Well' (including one first foot) we find Jā | quā. I use the long and short signs as giving less cause of misapprehension. In two instances in 'Henry V.,' where the word forms a first foot, it might be read Jāquē, though it would, I think, be preferable to consider it in one case as an allowable spondee, and in the other as Jāquē of |. There remain three instances in 'As You Like It' where it is a final. Mr. Crawford may take them, if he pleases, as monosyllables, but it is more natural to account them as dissyllabic, the lines having an extra syllable, as in

I am | for oth | er than | for danc | ing men | ure.

If I understand him aright, he objects to Jā-quā, and would prefer the s mute. If this be so I would remind him that Shakespeare at least sounded the final s. On any other supposition, when in 'Henry V.,' IV. iv., the French soldier says "...de ton bras!" Pistol's mistake, "Brasse, Curro!...Offer't me Brasse!" becomes an absurdity. See Walker's 'Vera. of Shak.,' pp. 2-4, for similar examples in Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Is not also Mr. Crawford too general when he says "the e would then be sounded or made mute as the line required a word of two syllables or of one syllable, in accordance with the usage of all French poets and of our own Chaucer"? Can he give an instance of vis, &c., in which I am much interested, used dissyllabically?

B. NICHOLSON.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

July 24, 1880.

TWENTY FIVE years ago, when Griswold's memoir of Poe was, as you say, "accepted as authoritative," I again and again expressed my suspicion that it was not true. Here are some of my words, given as introductory to details taken then from that memoir:—"It is said," "We are told," "Here, as elsewhere, if we must believe the statements of Mr. Griswold, Poe ruined himself"; "The next paragraph in this sad story seems so improbable, that we write it without a full belief in its reality, though it is endorsed by Mr. Griswold." And here is a remark given near the close of my review:—"Of such a tale we can say only that it appears very improbable." What I so long ago suspected has now been made clear, thanks to Mr. Ingram.

I refer to my 'Handbook of American Literature,' written in 1853-4, published in 1856 (W. & R. Chambers). JOSEPH GOSWICK.

THE TRIAL OF CHARLOTTE

British Museum.

I HAVE lately met with an account of a very pathetic scene which occurred in court during the trial of Charles L., and of which I have not been able to find any mention in the various relations of that event. In the correspondence of Archbishop Sanicroft (now preserved among the Harley MSS., 3783-3785) for the year 1666 are five letters, addressed to him as Dean of St. Paul's, three signed "Aa. Delylle," and two "Jo. Levett." The former profess to be written by a lady who was present at the arraignment of the king and played a prominent part in the proceedings, and the latter letters are attestations to the genuineness of her story. The letters are as follows:—

Thine
For the honorable and the most Reverend Dean of Pauls humble servant.

I in all humilitie doe returne you most humble thanks for your civill acceptance [sic] of my abrupt lynes unworthy of the transparent of your eyes but for your account of me requyrd of the Messenger that presented you with my vnpolished lynes he is altogether a stranger unto me farther then the discharge of this employment as in my letter I gave your honored and grasse wodome account of I am a stranger, Scels by decent and my husband French, but heir from my Infance that I am stranger in my native land my father being secretarie to quene Ann and 18 deents of subiate and seruants in places of honour to his Maiesties predecessours my husband kild in his seruice my self made the obiect of pite for loyalty be burned and imprisoined as your dier frend Doctor Levett can tell but if I may humble beg, my suit to your wodome and honour may be concealed he lodge on the same flore with me and knos not my Indigence but lements my suffringe so honourable he is to conense better of me then I can merite and if you ples to ask of me at him concealing my probumtions in my suit to yow he will give that characture of me I darre not claime as meritt but in submishion to his pleasure. I am a sledgef detor most iustly as the enclosed will make apere which I humble beg yow to seale vpp and returne agane and if yow be pleased to spcke of me give me not out for Sir your humble supplemt but for one distressed Lady that yow have heird to be heir. want of tenth pound has kiped me heir to supercede all actions that my aduarsare has in malice layd vpon me and if it stood with yourhonours conuenienc to glue the Doctor a visit taking no notice of me he will truly tell his knowledge of me whose prayers you shall ever oblige as

Your ever deuoted servant
AA. DELYILLE.

If I could be made a catholike I could not be troublesome.

The next letter is from Dr. Levett:—

For the Reverend my most worthily honor'd Friend
Dr. Sanicroft Deane of St.
Pauls.

Noble Sir

You are the first I intend to write upon when my horse is addrid, which may be (I thank God) when I will, but some opportunity makes me affect a restraint at present. The Lady Delille you mention is my next neighbour and with me above any man (I may say all in our blessed Colledge) acquainted, so that (if you dare credite the relator) you may expect a just relation of all you desire concerning her. She is a Scot by birth of a very worthy (if not noble) family, especially by the mothers side, many of her Ancestors have bene in place of great trust to the kings of Scotland and her father (if I mistake not) our Quene Anne her secretarie. Her Husband was slaine in our late Kings wars and for him. The Lady herselfe for ability scarce to be paralleled by any of her sex her engagement here is ten pounds at the most, and that occasioned by her breaking of a glasse full of wine in the face of a woman for treason (had it not bene in the time of Oliver) and the judgment for the ten pounds was procured against her since our king came in and although she was used by a false name she hath bene a prisoner 4 yeares only for this, and now for chamber rent, and her out going, I heere that 166 is demanded by our Warden: she is altogether miserable as to her fortune, if her friends fail her, she perishes. She hath two brands upon her that of her shoulder I have seen (a handfull brood) she received them from Col. Huxon at the first tryall of our late king in open court for mying (upon their reading of his accusation) that it was not his subjects but traitors and rebels that made it: His Majesty then seeing her flesh smoke and her haire all of a fire for him by their hot irons, much commiserated her, and wished that he had been able to have requited her: now his (God be blessed) can do it, and its an act (if not of justice) of great mercy that it should be done, and whosoever shall be instrumental in it will purchase to himselfe a good report. Sir when I have the hapines to waite upon you I shall give you a fuller character of this lady. In the interim and ever I am

Your most affectionate and humble servant
Jo: LEVET.

18 May
— 65.

The third letter is from Lady Delisle:—

For the honored and most Reverend Deane of Pauls humble present.

I am once more constrained to give you this trouble hoping your goodness is such as to pardon me for it by reason I am so put to it now for to supersede my actions that I may make my address to the king and the Chancery to try for my libertie and not longer perish here for I have left myself nothing to subsist but has to menten my selfe soild and ragged and has no more left that will procure six pence and if does not supersede Munday the beging [sic] of the terme here I may ly and if a peny would do it I have it not at present nor can command, my friend that does some what for me being sent vpon busines for the king that I am forget till hee returne and I know not when it, I did Sir I think send the copy of my case to you with the other papers and if you have it not it is miscarried by the messenger. I have no more to say but in all humilite be you and pray for my many helthfull days and crase the protection of your fauore to subscrib as

Sir
Your most humble and deuoted

servant

AA. DELTLE.

The fourth letter is also from Lady Delisle:—

For the Reverend and much honored the Deane of Pauls present.

Yow may ple to conmane me to be a very ingrate persons not having returned my thanks for your obilite to me sence my unabilities deny to performe a deeper debt but this delay was not by neglect of my obidged duty but till I hadd supercede my actions and have a certificate to make appare the truth which I have here enclosed for your satisfaction, and if I could have compead mony I might have ben this redy a weeke ago this littl paper stands me in 3^d 10^s of which I had 20 of you Sir for the which I returne yow humble thanks and wiahs your store may be lyke the oyle in the cruse and the male in the barrell yow still taking and it ever encoring but now for my attentione if I can not procure of her I am lyke to stay and the scale day is on Munday and ther will be no more but on on Weneday I humble beg pardon for this trespass and humble entret your answer by your servant and yow will oblige the prayors of

Your deuot
servant

AA. DELTLE.

The Fleett. tymes
is new precious.

The fifth and last letter is from Dr. Jo. Levett:—

For the Reverend my most Honoured Friend Dr. Sancroft Deane of St. Pauls these.

Noble Sir

Take my letter to you concerning the Lady Delisle (pardoning my naturall credulity) for an Oracle, if Colonel Gray (Lord Gray of Warke his Brother and now Major of his Majestys Regiment of foote) Mr. Andrew Cole (one of his Majestys Quarries) Mr. Robson the Duke of Yorks Chirurgion (who cured her brands) cum multis alijs confirme the name for a truth. And especially if the Earle of Denby avers it who kissed her wounds, and condemned the then names of the Lords that she should be the only asserter of Loyalty besides that weeks newes books exposting in general the barbarous usage of a lady speaking for the king. Sir, I am taking horse, let it excuse my defects. I am ever

Your most affectionate and humble servant
Jo: LEVET.

17 June
— 65.

From the fact mentioned by Lady Delisle that Dean Sancroft had relieved her wants after making inquiry, it seems reasonable to conclude that he had fully satisfied his own mind as to the truth of the story that she had been so barbarously treated by Colonel Huxon for her outspoken loyalty. It is evident, too, from the story of the broken wineglass during the Protectorate, that her high spirit had been by no means quenched by her fiery trial.

EDWARD SCOTT.

Literary Gossip.

We are glad to be able to announce that Mr. F. C. Burnand, the author of 'Happy Thoughts,' succeeds the late Mr. Tom Taylor as editor of Punch. Mr. Burnand has for some years been the most popular of the contributors to the journal, and he will no doubt prove a worthy successor of Mark Lemon and Shirley Brooks.

In the Athenæum of June 12th it was stated that the revised version of the New Testament would appear during the autumn. We are now able to say that the publication will not take place until the spring of 1881, when the Greek texts, which are being prepared for the Universities by Archdeacon Palmer and Prebendary Scrivener, will no doubt be completed. The editorial work, as regards the revised English version, has been entrusted by the Universities, we believe, to the Rev. J. Trouthbeck, the Secretary of the New Testament Company.

The edition of Shelley's prose works which Mr. Buxton Forman has just finished putting through the press, and which, like his edition of the poetical works, is in four volumes, contains much that will be new. Shelley's own prose publications are accurately reprinted for the first time, and 'The Necessity of Atheism' and 'A Letter to Lord Ellenborough' are at length given from original copies. Mrs. Shelley's two-volume collection of posthumous essays, fragments, translations, and letters from Italy is reprinted with very considerable additions; all outlying prose essays, fragments, &c., are included, and nearly all outlying letters, except those in Hogg's 'Life of Shelley' and the 'Shelley Memorials.' The principal works not before published are the much-talked-of essay 'On the Devil and Devils,' a considerable series of 'Notes on Sculptures in Rome and Florence,' and the long letter which Shelley wrote to Leigh Hunt, as editor of the Examiner, on the iniquitous trial of Richard Carlile for publishing Paine's 'Age of Reason.' There are several new letters, and a large number of those previously published have been revised beside the MSS. The whole series of letters now given, instead of sixty-eight as published by Mrs. Shelley, is a hundred and twenty-seven. Among the illustrations are an etching of Casa Magni, the poet's last abode, a facsimile of a drawing by Shelley, and the pedigree of Shelley from the records of the College of Arms. A copious index to the whole eight volumes has been added.

The Armenians in London are preparing for publication a reply to the attack on the character of the Armenian nation which Sir Wilfrid Lawson recently made in the House of Commons.

The Bishop of Natal has now completed his digest of the voluminous Blue-books on the Zulu war. This work, which extends to 750 pages, has been set up by Zulius at the bishop's private printing press at Bishopstowe. In an appendix Dr. Colenso makes some comments on Capt. Poole's article on Cetwewayo in the April number of Macmillan's Magazine, and also gives an account of a visit paid to him in May last by a great deputation of Zulu chiefs, which included two brothers of the ex-king.

'THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN' is the title of a selection from the papers of the late Mortimer Collins, edited by Mr. Edmund Yates, which will be brought out early next month by Messrs. Bentley & Son. The work will be issued in two volumes, and will contain notes by the editor and Mrs. Mortimer Collins.

We are pleased to hear that Mr. Charles Kent is recovering from the long and severe illness which has caused much anxiety to his friends. The Pope, by the way, has just sent Mr. Kent his apostolic benediction, as a token of his approbation of the 'Corona Catholica,' which Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. published a few weeks ago. Even heretics will hope that the benediction may hasten Mr. Kent's convalescence.

THE Bampton Lectures on 'The Organization of the Early Christian Church,' recently delivered before the University of Oxford by the Rev. Edwin Hatch, Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, and Grinfield Lecturer in the Septuagint, will shortly be issued by Messrs. Rivington. They made a considerable sensation at the time of their delivery, and Mr. Henan was taken to hear one of them when he visited Oxford.

We are able to announce that it has been determined to establish an association in Birmingham by which encouragement may be given to the systematic study of history in that town. The Birmingham Historical Society—such is the title of the new undertaking—is to meet periodically to receive and discuss papers. Mr. Edmund Airy is going to act as Hon. Sec. pro tem. Mr. E. A. Freeman has agreed to be the first President. It is calculated that a subscription of five shillings will be sufficient for the present objects of the Society. The first general meeting will, it is expected, be held in October.

THE death of Mr. James Imlach, a bookseller at Banff and local antiquary, merits a passing notice in these columns. He wrote an unpretentious but interesting 'History of Banff,' in which he mentions that in early life he collected materials on the life of Macpherson, the Scottish freebooter celebrated by Burns, for Sir Walter Scott, and how the novelist was led to abandon his project.

A REPRINT of 'Glasgow, Past and Present,' and 'Glasgow and its Environs,' by "Senex" (the late Mr. Robert Reid) and others, has been undertaken by a Glasgow publishing firm. This edition, limited to 400 copies, will also embrace various other papers by "Senex," his autobiography, and the work by "J. B." on early banking in that city.

Mr. F. NORRIS writes:—

"Although it was, perhaps, not strictly right in noticing the Sunderland Library (Athenæum, July 17th) to speak of 'the famous' Valdarfer Boccaccio as one of its treasures—since this epithet belongs more especially to the Roxburghe copy, which, by the way, was never at Blenheim at all, having been sold in the White Knights Library by a late Duke of Marlborough within less than two years after he succeeded to the title (see Notes and Queries, 5th S. xii. 333)—I nevertheless see no reason to suppose with Mr. Hartshorne, in last week's Athenæum, that in the notice above referred to 'the Valdarfer Boccaccio of 1471 has been confounded with the edition of 1472 by Adam de Michaelibus,' the fact being that the Sunderland Library, now at Blenheim, contains both editions (the Valdarfer having been there for more than 140 years); and it was doubtless for this reason that the Earl of Sunderland, being content with one copy, and possibly not knowing that it was imperfect (it is said to want five leaves), refused to buy the other when it was offered to him for a hundred guineas, the price actually paid for it by the ancestor of the Duke of Roxburghe, and thus lost the opportunity of becoming owner of the only known perfect copy in Europe. According to Dibdin's 'Ædes Althorpianæ,' ii. 53, there are two other perfect copies of the Mantua edition of 1472 besides the one at Blenheim, viz., one at Paris and one, 'a truly magnificent one,' at Nuremberg." Messrs. Puttick & Simpson inform us that both the Valdarfer Boccaccio and the edition of 1472 are in the library.

THE New York Publishers' Weekly mentions the following announcements by Messrs. James R. Osgood & Co., besides the 'Memorial History of Boston,' which we have already described, under the editorship of Mr. Justin Winsor: a 'Congressional District Vote Map of the United States,' a map 21 by 36 in., showing by coloured bars the relative vote of Republicans and Democrats for Congressmen in all the districts of the country; 'Dramatic Biographies,' edited by Laurence Hutton; 'Self-Culture,' a series of twenty-two lectures, by J. F. Clarke; 'Records and Reminiscences of the Radical Chestnut Street Club, Boston,' prepared under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Sargent; a collection of 'Tales, Sketches, and Poems,' by the late Fitz-James O'Brien, edited by William Winter. Prof. N. S. Shaler and Instructor W. Morris Davis, of Harvard, are preparing 'Illustrations of the Earth's Structure—Glaciers, Mountains, Volcanoes, Rivers, Valleys, Lakes, Coasts, Islands, &c.,' to consist of sufficient descriptions and heliotype impressions of photographs from nature. It is added that if a sufficient number of subscriptions shall be guaranteed, General di Cesnola's collection of Cypriot antiquities will be described and illustrated.

"H. W." writes from Naples, on the 20th of July:—

"I send you a few gleanings which may be of interest. First let me report that in a short time will appear a work entitled 'Ricordi della Vita Intima dell' Arrigo Heine,' by his niece, Maria Embden Heine, Princess della Rocca. It is not a common event that a member of the Neapolitan aristocracy should seek distinction through the press, but her German origin will account for it. The late Duke of Richelieu married a Heine, a connexion of the Princess della Rocca, and it was his brother-in-law, Michael Heine, who went to Athens to visit the duke on hearing of his illness, and found him dead. On Friday night, July 16th, the African Club in Naples held a meeting to discuss a project for forming a colony in Amah. The project was unanimously approved, and a report of the proceedings is shortly to be published and widely distributed. A School of Industrial Chemistry, started by the Society of Operatives, was opened on the 18th inst., in presence of the Prefect, the Syndic, and a large assembly of persons. Speeches were delivered by the Prefect and others."

Mr. E. W. DARBY, the Secretary of the Leeds Butchers' Association, is making a laudable effort to elevate rather a rough class of men—the hands employed by butchers—and intends delivering some lectures at Leeds, admission to which will be confined to the trade. His first subject will be Robert Burns, his second Josiah Wedgwood.

No fewer than six biographies of General Garfield, the Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States, are in the press. One of these, by Mr. J. R. Gilmore, will be issued in the Harpers' "Franklin Square Library," and at an exceedingly low price.

A NOVEL by Mr. James Payn will be commended in the Cornhill Magazine for January next.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. will publish shortly a work on the 'Navies of the World.' It will describe concisely the plans, armour, and armament of the war ships of the twenty chief nations of the world, with a summary of their naval battles during the last twenty years, and their latest improvements in naval architecture, ordnance, and torpedoes. The author is Lieut. Edward W. W. Very, U.S.N.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are being obtained in the United States towards another monument of Edgar Poe. Mr. Edwin Booth, the noted actor, gave a farewell performance, previous to his departure for Europe, at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, in aid of the fund.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us an account of the celebration at Brazil of the Camoens tercentenary. The emperor laid the foundation of the new building for the Portuguese Library in the Rua da Lampadosa, which is now to be styled Rua de Luiz de Camoens; and opened a Camoens Exhibition at the National Library. The Librarian had arranged 486 works in more than 600 volumes, among them 93 editions of the Lusiads, 21 of which were English translations. The city was illuminated, and a grand performance took place at the theatre. The Revista Brasileira published a volume of fifty compositions by Brazilian poets. The emperor contributed some lines to the preface.

MR. JOHN WESTLAKE, Q.C., is going to publish 'A Treatise on Private International Law, with Principal Reference to its Practice in England.' This is, in some measure, a second edition of a work published in 1858 by the same author.

SCIENCE

Indian Industries. By A. G. F. Eliot James. (Allen & Co.)

Mrs. ELIOT JAMES, the author of 'A Guide to Indian Household Management,' has in the present work supplied a long-felt want in respect of the agricultural industries of India. Many books have been written before hers, by most competent authorities, on the natural productions of India; but they deal for the most part with special subjects, such as drugs, useful plants, oils and oil seeds, gums and resins, dyes and tans, tea, coffee, silk, and the like; and Mrs. Eliot James's unpretentious volume is, so far as we are aware, the first attempt which has been made to give a systematic account of the general reproductive resources of India, mineral, vegetable, and animal. One of her best chapters is devoted to the mining industries of India, of which nothing is popularly known. The great omission in her book is that there is no mention of the fisheries and wild birds and beasts used as food, which constitute so important a branch of Indian agriculture, in the wide economic sense of the word. It is a defect also that her arrangement is alphabetical, which brings "Mining" after "Ivory" and "Paper" after "Opium," a little to the confusion of even experienced students of the subjects of which Mrs. Eliot James treats.

It is to be expected that a book embracing so wide a range of subjects should also be marked by little inaccuracies of detail. It is only professional botanists who know how thick-set with pitfalls for even the most wary is the whole matter of the classification and nomenclature of their special science; and it would have been well if Mrs. James had submitted her proof-sheets for correction to some economic botanist, such as Dr. M. C. Cooke, from whom she so often quotes. There is scarcely a patch of botanical names anywhere in her book but it is disfigured by two or three mistakes in spelling. It is a graver inconvenience really that the botanical names of plants she mentions are often taken from different systems. Mrs. Eliot James has, in fact, accepted the names used by the different writers she has consulted without attempting to bring them into uniformity with some generally recognized system of nomenclature, such as that adopted at Kew, which it is very desirable that all writers on economic botany, and particularly on the vegetable productions of India, should carefully follow. India is the largest field for economic exploitation in the old world. The botanical resources of the country are almost countless, and perhaps nothing has stood more in the way of their development than the popular confusion which still exists in regard to the names and identity of the useful plants of India.

At p. 122 et seq. Mrs. Eliot James, following the ignorant compilers of "price currents," spells myrobalsams, that is, fatty-aute, "myrabolams," a word which is pure nonsense. At p. 179 she says: "Olebanum is . . . so like frankincense that it is very frequently confounded with it." They are identical, but the true frankincense must not be confounded with the frankincense of the Abies excelsa, or Norway spruce fir. At p. 66 she says: "In Sanscrit cotton is called Kurpas, and from that name comes the Latin word carbanus; and in the Bible the word green corresponds to the Hebrew word Kurpas." Now what Mrs. Eliot James really read in the book whence she concocted this slipshod statement was: "The word 'cotton' is not used in the English translation of the Bible, but in the passage of Esther, chap. i. 6, 'where were white, green, and blue hangings,' the Hebrew word translated 'green' is Karpas, identical with the Sanscrit Karpasa and Hindi Karpas, cotton (in the pod), an aboriginal Indian production." At p. 320, writing of cassia, she says it is mentioned by "Dioscorides and Theophrastus (not Such)." Surely this is a strange solecism in so matter-of-fact a book. It is as if, in naming her as an authority for any statement about Indian industries, one wrote Mrs. Eliot James (not George).

We have, however, come to the end of the faults we have discovered in reading through this book, the merits of which are undoubted. No previous writers on the economic products of India appear to have been overlooked in its preparation, and yet it is not a mere compilation. Mrs. Eliot James is inspired by a true interest in her subjects, of many of which she has had more or less personal knowledge, that gives an original interest to her book. It is written with great simplicity and clearness, and is admirably adapted as a handy and practical guide for those who for the first time look to India as a field for fresh agricultural or commercial adventures. The chapter on mining is most suggestive, and it is perfectly evident that there remains a great deal to be done in India, not only in coal and iron mining, but in the revival of the ancient industries of gold and diamond washing. The discontinuance of the historical gold and diamond trades of India would appear to be simply due to the confusion into which the country was thrown for nearly a thousand years by the constant invasions of the Afghans, Mongols, and Persians from the North-West, and the devastations of the Marathas for two centuries before the establishment of the British power in 1818-19. "Carpet-weaving" and "Pottery" are art industries, and scarcely in their proper place in Mrs. Eliot James's volume, which strictly deals only with the raw products of India. But she acknowledges that she has been led to take an interest in these great Indian manufactures in consequence of what was written on them in connexion with the Paris International Exhibition of 1878; and the earnest support she gives to the views of those who have protested against the degradation of Indian art through the competition of the Government gaols in the manufacture of carpets with the caste weavers, and of the schools of art with the native potters, will be most welcome. She gives the following quotation from the Pioneer:—

"A regiment ordering some carpets at a well-known gaol to take to England for its mess, sent some officers to see what patterns could be procured; and the superintendent of the manufacturing department is said to have exhibited in great triumph a carpet which had been made for an English nobleman, who had ordered it through some friends. The carpet was a ground-work of most lovely ruby red, with some creamy and ivory white flowers (some kind of lily) running through it, but was entirely spoiled by being bespattered with some filthy-looking yellow daubs at regular intervals, as if a bottle of West India pickles had been turned out, every three feet or so, over it. On inquiry it was found out that this was a local improvement on the old pattern, it being considered that the English peer would expect more splendid colouring from India. These officers examined a variety of patterns without finding what they wanted, until, when leaving, some old Persian and Indian patterns were handed down, covered with dust, the superintendent saying he thought nothing of them. Correspondence went on with several gaols, and they all offered to make up the patterns in any colours that might be selected."

The Pioneer adds:—

"Anything more grossly wrong cannot be conceived, and it would be no more than right if every gaol were at once inspected and every vilified pattern committed to the flames. It would indeed be deplorable if, for want of care, carpets made in India should be so corrupted as to damage the trade."

It is well known that the Agra gaol is singular among Indian gaols for scrupulously following Persian patterns in the designs of the carpets manufactured by it. An Agra gaol carpet exhibited at Paris in 1878 was, as pointed out at the time, remarkable for the fine proportion of its border to the centre. The borders of modern Oriental carpets are generally made too narrow. In the mosaic floors of the Greeks and Romans, which were evidently suggested by Oriental tapestry, the border was always remarkably broad, and in the older Persian carpets it is often a yard deep and more. The singular excellence in design of the Agra gaol carpets is due to Sir John Strachey's influence. When visiting the gaol, many years ago, the zealous superintendent triumphantly showed him some carpets he had been manufacturing from the vilest European designs. Sir John asked him if they were all the patterns of the kind he possessed. "No; not by any means," replied the superintendent. "I have ransacked all the factories in England for their latest patterns." Sir John begged that he might see them all; and when he was at last satisfied that all had been brought out, he ordered them to be all burned in the heap as they lay before him, and that for the future only native patterns should be followed without deviation. The Agra gaol carpets are, however, still defective in harmony of colouring.

Mrs. Eliot James's book illustrates in a remarkable manner the universal character of the commercial resources of India. Observers have been struck by the manner in which the Hindus have maintained the continuity of their singular civilization through three thousand years, and, not understanding that it has been due to their intellectual superiority as Aryans over their Turanian conquerors, have always attributed it to the assumed isolation of India from the rest of the world:—

Half girt with giant mountains, on whose crest,
By man untrodden, sleep eternal snows,
Half guarded by a troubled sea's unrest,
And torrents that their barrier waves oppose,
India would seem itself a semi-world,
Safe from attacks without.

The simple fact, however, is that India is more liable to attack than almost any other country in the world, and not only has been oftener conquered than any other, but owes almost its entire population to overland immigration from Higher Asia. The human race dislikes an inland climate, and ever seeks maritime climates. This it was which gradually attracted the younger Aryans into the peninsula of Europe, and its sub-peninsulas of Greece, Italy, Spain, and the islands of Great Britain and Ireland. The older Aryans sought the sea-coasts of Persia and India. More than this, the configuration of the mountain system of Asia is such as to lead the populations of Central Asia into India through the passes of its north-east and north-west frontier, by which from China it received its Chinese immigrants, and from Western and Central Asia its Dravidian immigrants and Scythian, Afghan, and Mongol conquerors. The most direct outlet, and only interrupted by Afghan misrule, of the great commerce of Central Asia to the sea is through the passes leading from Candahar to the Indus; and the natural exit of the export trade of the whole of Southern China, the richest portion of that empire, is through the passes which lead across Northern Burmah to Calcutta. The whole trade of Asia thus naturally gravitates towards India. The Indian peninsula also lies in the direct line of the immemorial trade between the Eastern Archipelago and the countries of the Mediterranean Sea; and its ports have ever been the emporia also of the trade of Arabia and Eastern Africa with Europe. So far, indeed, from India being almost an island, isolated from the rest of Asia, it is, as it were, the keystone of the whole commerce of the East with the West. This is the true significance of our possession of India, and that it will serve to make this fact better and more widely understood by the ignorant but energetic masses of Englishmen engaged in mercantile pursuits is not the least merit of Mrs. Eliot James's most useful little book.

Wood-working Machinery: its Rise, Progress, and Construction. By M. P. Bale, M. Inst. C.E. (Crosby Lockwood & Co.)

MR. BALE'S book affords an instructive illustration of the often forgotten truth that literature is an art as well as an occupation, and that, like all arts, it demands systematic study for its mastery. This truth is, no doubt, daily illustrated by a whole host of trumpery publications. But the lesson is more instructive when it is drawn from a work which is not trumpery, but which is from the hand of an intelligent man, familiar with the practice, if not with the bibliography, of the subject on which he writes. The author's account of his work is that the "pages, written in the spare hours of a long life, attempt to give an account of the rise and progress of what is now in this country an important branch of engineering." The work is rather, we should be inclined to say, the expansion into the form of a volume of the note-book of a practical man. The hints on the management of saw-mills and the economical conversion of timber are useful, if not absolutely novel. The descriptions of various machines are clear to those who understand technical phraseology, and give the idea of having been taken in the main from the specifications of the patents of the various inventors; and the woodcuts are very good, approaching the excellence of the American illustrations of scientific works. The reader who is interested in the conversion of timber will find much in the volume that may be of service to him. But the work can hardly be called a history of the subject of which it treats. A dozen pages bring us down to "our International Exhibition of 1851." The great development of all industries connected with wood in America is such, that a complete account of the general character of the labour-saving machinery in that country would with great advantage form a main feature of a book that comprehensively grasped the subject. But Mr. Bale only says, "The illustrations are confined to the designs of English, French, and American engineers." In the forty-two illustrations we only find four American and two French machines represented, with a fifth of American origin, but manufactured in England. Again, to take merely two or three points which would be likely at once to recur to the memory of any London engineer, the chapter on cask-making machinery gives no reference to Taylor's very ingenious machinery for this purpose, which was set up at the Square Shot Tower, Lambeth, in 1843, and which, we believe, is still to some extent used by the General Wood-Cutting Company. Under the head "Miscellaneous Machinery" mention is made of a patent obtained by Gibbs in 1828, and improved by Irving in 1843, for carving machinery. Some description of a very important class of copying and reducing machinery ought here to have been given. The miniature ivory busts and figures produced mechanically by Chervetron in 1835 were of extreme beauty, and it is quite tantalising to find so brief and unsatisfactory a reference to this branch of industrial art. Again, we look in vain for information as to what is now being done in the production of pierced and other ornamental woodwork by machinery—a matter that comes home to almost every one in such articles as picture-frames and house and church decorations. Two pages are given to "Corkwood Machinery." They say nothing of the wonderfully fine laminæ of cork that have been produced for the manufacture of hats. No hat is so luxurious, from its lightness, as one of which the basis is formed of cork; and laminæ have been cut for this purpose of a fineness of four hundred to the inch. We may add the remark that a reference to the indexed specifications of the Patent Office would have been a valuable feature of a work dealing with an important branch of practical mechanics.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

A UNIVERSAL treatise on the prediction of occultations of stars by the moon, and the determination of longitudes by their observation, has recently been published by M. François Calixte Berry, lieutenant in the French Navy. The title is "Théorie Complète des Occultations"; and M. Faye, President of the Bureau des Longitudes, in a short preface recommending the work to the Minister of Marine for the use of naval officers, remarks that it may really be regarded as a "traité complet sur la matière," and that it is a publication "très-importante et très-utile." It occupies ninety-seven quarto pages, including the tables, and the methods described are well illustrated by examples, so that probably there is no other book so well adapted to the purpose in view.

The July number of the American Journal of Science contains amongst its articles a very interesting one by Prof. Langley, of Alleghany, giving an account of the observations he made on Mount Etna the winter before last, with the view of determining what amount of advantage was gained for astronomical observing at a great elevation above the sea-level. He was induced to make experiments on the subject there from much concurrent testimony as to the clearness of the atmosphere on the shores of Sicily, and particularly the late selection of Etna for the site of a mountain observatory by the Italian authorities, guided by Prof. Tacchini (of which mention was made in the Athenæum of April 26th of last year). The spot chosen by the latter was the Casa degli Inglesi, about 9,650 feet high; but as it was quite impossible at such an elevation to obtain the means of living except by an organized occupation, Prof. Langley was advised to take his station at Nicolosi, the highest village of the mountain, at the elevation of a little more than 2,000 feet, just where cultivation ceases almost abruptly. Finding, however, a spot much higher, called Casa del Bosco, where "wood and water could be had with some kind of shelter," he took up his abode there on Christmas Day, 1878, and remained until the 14th of January, 1879, when the snow-line had descended to some distance below him, and he had obtained all the material results expected. The place in question is situated on the south-eastern slope of Etna, at about 4,200 feet above the sea-level. Proof of increased transparency of air was soon forthcoming, of which Prof. Langley gives several instances; thus with the naked eye nine stars were steadily visible in the Pleiades, although his eye does not at ordinary elevations see more than six steadily, occasionally catching a glimpse of a seventh and eighth; and with the telescope of $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches aperture which he had brought up the advantage was of similar character as applied to some double stars and to the nebula in Orion. Generally, by comparing what he saw with Mr. Webb's remarks in his well-known "Celestial Objects for Common Telescopes," the professor concludes that "stars of about two-thirds the brightness of those visible in England under like telescopic power can be seen on Etna at the altitude of Casa del Bosco." But the gain, he thinks, as regards double-star observing is more in clearness of atmosphere than in that freedom from tremor which accompanies good definition. The advantage obtained at such elevations in the diminution of atmospheric absorption of the more refrangible rays of light is of great importance in spectroscopical observations, which induced M. Cornu to make the Furca Pass in the Alps his observing station; and the gain for the study of the nebulae and stellar photometry is very essential, whilst Prof. Langley considers that for almost every problem in solar physics observatories at great heights "have now become not merely desirable, but indispensable." Calling to mind, however, the difficulty (for many persons amounting to impossibility) of staying long and keeping up work at very great elevations, such as that on which he had himself formerly experimented at Pike's Peak, Colorado, more than 14,000 feet above the sea, he suggests as the most promising site one where there is a dry climate and a table-land at an elevation of about 10,000 feet. The frequent condensation of cloud about a mountain makes it desirable to add to these conditions the selection of a spot sheltered on the side of the prevalent winds by a range which precipitates their moisture in clouds that rarely advance beyond the observer's horizon. During the three weeks' sojourn on Etna described in this paper, the wind was found to be a very frequent obstacle to steady vision. Elevations much more moderate but yet considerable have their advantage. We have seldom seen better definition than on the line of the Surrey Hills, and hope at some future time to find the highest point of that range, Leith Hill, nearly 1,000 feet high, made available for scientific purposes. Another very favourable position for an observatory within easy reach of London is Botley Hill, the second highest point in the county of Surrey, a ridge the south-eastern end of which, Cold Harbour Green, is in exactly the same longitude as the Greenwich Observatory, and is 860 feet above the level of the sea.

We have received the Memoire of the Italian Spectroscopical Society for last March. It is wholly occupied with the solar observations of Signor A. Riccob at the Royal Observatory, Palermo, during January, February, and March.

M. Ceraaki, of the Moscow Observatory, has discovered a remarkable variability of light in a star R.A. $0^h 49^m 39^s$, N.P.D. $8^\circ 54'$, which had been observed by Lalande in 1790, and is included in Argelander's Durchmusterung. In the space of two hours, on the night of June 23rd, M. Ceraaki noticed that its magnitude had changed from 9 to 7.

The Royal Dublin Society have just published in their Scientific Transactions an elaborate paper by the Earl of Rosse, giving the details of the greater part of the observations of nebulae and clusters of stars made at Birr Castle with the six-foot and three-foot reflecting telescopes from the year 1848 until 1878 inclusive. His lordship remarks that since the publication of his father's papers in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, the last of which appeared in 1861, no account of the observations at Parsonstown has been published, with the exception of a monograph on the great nebula in Orion. Hence it has now seemed desirable to lay before the astronomical public a tolerably complete record of those made since, and it has been wisely concluded to include in it, on the same system of detailed account as given by the observer, the earlier observations also, commencing with 1848, omitting only those of the great Orion nebula before 1866, which were published that year, together with an engraving "embodying all the features of that nebula as noted up to that date." Of the high interest of this paper we need not speak, but we desire to accord further publicity to a letter from M. Otto Struve, Director of the Imperial Observatory of Pulkowa, which Lord Rosse communicates in an appendix. A letter appeared in the Times of April 3rd last, headed "Three Giant Telescopes" (partly founded on an article in Fraser's Magazine), in which M. Struve is stated to have "expressed himself in a very uncourteous manner on the optical qualities of the great reflector." He says that these expressions are "altogether invented by the anonymous author of the note, or are, at least, quite a voluntary and thoroughly wrong interpretation" of what he said. "I am sorry," he adds, "that my name is abused in such a manner by people who probably have a design of their own in depreciating the performance of the instrument, the construction of which marked in itself a high progress in optics and mechanics, and which in its space-penetrating power has not had any rival until now, though certainly with regard to definition (particularly where the mirror is considerably out of horizontal position) there are other instruments superior to it."

Dr. O. Lohse, of the Observatory of Potsdam, communicates to the last number (2325) of the Astronomische Nachrichten some observations he has made within the last few weeks of the remarkable red spot on the planet Jupiter, which excited so much attention last year. There it is still to be seen, "little, if at all, changed in appearance. The red colour very distinctly exceeds in its intensity that of the equatorial zone." The planet's northern declination is now more than 6° , and it rises at London about ten o'clock. Saturn follows Jupiter by only about half an hour in R.A. with a northern declination of nearly 9° . Both planets are nearly stationary in the heavens.

Among the tables of observations in the second livraison, Vol. VI., of Annales de l'Observatoire de Moscou appear two chapters by Dr. Bredichin, "Sur la Résistance de l'Éther produite par le Mouvement de Translation du Système Solaire," and on last year's observations of Jupiter. This latter is increased in importance by a coloured plate showing fourteen different aspects of the Jovian planet. Another coloured plate represents profiles of the sun as observed during 1879.

SOCIETIES.

QUEKETT MICROSCOPICAL.—July 23.—Annual Meeting.—Dr T. S. Cobbold, President, in the chair.—Five new members were elected, and Mr F. H. Wenham was, on the recommendation of the Committee, elected an Honorary Member.—Alterations in the rules, by which the Honorary Librarian, Curator, and Reporter were made ex officio members of the Committee, were unanimously agreed to.—The fifteenth Annual Report, read by the Secretary, detailed the progress of the Society during the year, and congratulated the members upon its continued prosperity; excellent work had been done, and the number of members was stated at 608. The Treasurer's annual statement of account showed that the income from all sources had been 3454. 12s. 11d., of which 1354. 12s. 8d. remained as a balance in hand.

—The retiring President, Dr. Cobbold, then delivered the annual address, 'On Science in Relation to Mental and Moral Culture.'—The result of the ballot for Officers and Committee during the ensuing year was as follows: President, Mr. T. C. White; Vice-Presidents, Dr. Cobbold, Dr. M. C. Cooke, Dr. Matthews, and Mr. C. Stewart; Treasurer, Mr. F. W. Gay; Secretary, Mr. J. Ingepu; and to fill six vacancies on the Committee, Messrs. E. T. Newton, H. F. Hailes, J. W. Goodings, W. W. Reeves, W. H. Gilbert, and A. D. Michael.

Science Gossip.

SIR GARDNER WILKINSON, our readers are aware, spent the years from 1823 to 1830 in surveying and mapping the desert regions of Upper and Lower Egypt. His chief relaxation when occupied in this work was found in observing the plants and animals of those regions, and he filled his note-books with drawings. He further described the habits of the plants, and found in them many points of illustration throwing light on the sculptures of the ancient Egyptians and the botanical references in the sacred Scriptures. Lady Wilkinson is collecting all the plant-references which occur in the MSS., with the view of placing them on record. The plants which Sir Gardner Wilkinson collected were presented by him to the British Museum, and are now in the great herbarium there. From them, and from the drawings, Mr. Carruthers will prepare such accounts of the plants as will give, it is hoped, a scientific value to the publication. The plates, which will amount to forty, will contain several subjects reproduced on stone by Mr. D. Blair, F.L.S., and coloured after the original drawings. Messrs. Dulau will publish the work at the beginning of next year.

'TASMANIAN Friends and Foes, Feathered, Furred, and Finned,' is the title of a work, illustrated by woodcuts and coloured plates, upon the natural history of Tasmania, to be issued this autumn by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. The volume is from the pen of Mrs. L. A. Meredith, the author of several books upon this colony.

THE Midland Union of Natural History Societies, which consists of twenty-three of the chief scientific societies in the central counties, has formulated a scheme, the object of which is to encourage and reward original research among the members, who are 3,040 in number. An annual prize of the value of 10*l.* (to include a gold or bronze medal at the option of the successful candidate), and, by permission of Mr. Darwin, to be called "The Darwin Prize," will be offered for the best paper contributed during twelve months, ending the 31st of March each year, to the journal of the Union (the Midland Naturalist), on the subject of the year, which for 1881 is geology, and for 1882 biology. The scheme is so framed as to allow, within specified limits, absolute freedom in selecting the subject of research, in order that original workers in science may be as little hampered as possible. On the obverse of the "Darwin medal" will be a profile portrait of Mr. Darwin, after a well-known photograph by Rejlander.

THE Birmingham Philosophical Society have established a fund for the endowment of scientific research, which now amounts to 820*l.* This sum will be invested, the interest only being used. The subscription list amounts to upwards of 80*l.* a year.

AN annual prize of seven guineas for excellence in practical physiology has just been founded at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, to commemorate the long connexion of Harvey with the hospital, to which he was elected physician in 1609.

MR. ARTHUR STANLEY BUTLER, of Exeter College, Oxford, has been elected to the chair of Natural Philosophy in the United College, St. Andrews, in the room of Dr. William Swan, resigned.

KARL KOCH is, the Gardeners' Chronicle informs us, to have a monument. Some of the leading botanists and horticulturists of Berlin have formed a committee, and they appeal to the friends and admirers of Karl Koch to aid them in carrying out the idea in a manner worthy of his memory.

M. ADER, the French electrician, has been led by his experiments to the important generalization, that all bars of a magnetic nature submitted to any mechanical action have a tendency to recover their physical arrangement under the influence of a magnetic current.

DR. NORMAN MOORE writes from the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, July 24th, 1880:—"The system of examination of which you justly commend the institution at Guy's Hospital was adopted at St. Bartholomew's in 1871, and has been found a most efficient stimulus to the industry of students in their first year. Mr. W. Morrant Baker, the examiner in physiology at the College of Surgeons, gave so much time and labour, when Warden of the College of St. Bartholomew's, to the institution and conduct of this first year's examination, that his name deserves record in connexion with what is certainly a most important step in medical education."

THE American Association for the Advancement of Science will commence its twenty-ninth meeting at Boston, in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, on August 26th. One of the morning meetings will be held at Cambridge, and the remainder of the day is to be devoted to the Observatory and to Harvard University.

MR. EDWARD BARNES was on Thursday, the 22nd, re-elected Chairman of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. A letter was read from the Clothworkers' Company stating that the Guild had voted 1,600*l.* to pay the balance on the new building, making a total grant for building of 18,000*l.*

PROF. ADAM'S 'Report on the Florida Reels' commences the seventh volume of Memors of the Museum of Comparative Zoology at Harvard University. In twenty-two well-executed plates representations are given of Florida corals, and a sketch map of Southern Florida, with the keys, facilitates reference to localities.

Schriften der Naturforschenden Gesellschaft in Danzig, Part IV. of Vol. IV., contains the usual annual report of the Society, a report of the second meeting of the West Prussian botanical zoological union at Marienwerder, and an interesting paper by Dr. Conwentz 'On the Fossil Woods of Karlsdorf,' accompanied by plates.

THE July number of the American Journal of Otolaryngology prints Prof. Graham Bell's paper, 'Experiments relating to Binaural Audition,' read before the American Association at its last meeting; and in a discussion of Dr. Gude's learned treatise on teaching articulation to the deaf and dumb it is pointed out that by a proper method the majority of mutes may be taught to talk, and that Germany is doing much good work towards that beneficent result.

FINE ARTS

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN BLACK AND WHITE, Dudley Gallery, Regent-street, 11th. Privately consisting of Drawings, Engravings and Reproductions. OPEN DAILY from Ten till Six—Admission, 1*l.*, Collections, 6*d.* R. F. McNAUL, Sec.

DONOR'S GREAT WORKS. CHRIST LEAVING THE TETRACHLON. CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM. AND THE PRINCE OF PEACE. (The latter just completed), each 24 by 12 feet with 17 plates of plates with. 'Soldiers of the Cross, Night of the Crucifixion.' House of Carpenter, 40, at the BONE GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, 10 till 6—1*l.*

Old Rome: a Handbook to the Ruins of the City and the Campagna. By Robert Burn, M.A. (Bell & Sons.)

MR. ROBERT BURN'S 'Rome and the Campagna' met with great and deserved success, and secured at once a prominent place in all the archaeological libraries of Europe. Its size and its cost, however, made it less useful to the general public, and especially to the traveller, and Mr. Burn has done a service to tourists and students by issuing the present "epitome," an abridged description of the ruins and a summary of the archaeological results of recent years. The aim of the work is described in the preface:—

"This book is intended to serve as a handbook to the actually existing ruins and monuments of ancient Rome and the Campagna. It is divided into topographical sections, for the convenience of travellers visiting Rome."

If a critic be allowed, as the Italian proverb says, "di cercare il pelo nell' uovo," and to point out what makes Mr. Burn's epitome less perfect than it might be, he will remark that many "actually existing ruins and monuments of ancient Rome and the Campagna" are not described in the epitome, and that the "topographical sections" are not so well arranged as they ought to be.

The topographical sections into which the book is divided seem to be made haphazard, without any consideration of history, or chronology, or topography, either civil or geological. The student or the traveller, in order to get a good knowledge of the subject he is studying or examining de visu, must have a clear idea of its general outlines before entering into details. The proper arrangement of such a work as Mr. Burn's epitome would be easy to devise and easier to understand; in fact, Mr. Burn had the choice of many such directing lines, one more simple than the other. He could have framed his description of Rome on a chronological or historical basis, starting from the Palatine and then going over the Capitol, the Forum, the Velabrum, the Circus Maximus, the republican and imperial buildings, whereas from the Palatine and the Forum readers are brought at once to the Coliseum and the ruins of the fifth region, some of which belong to the third or fourth century of our era. Again, observing the natural topography, he could have described the seven hills and the surrounding valleys, the Palatine, the Capitol, the Caelian, the Aventine, &c. The best plan, however, would have been to follow the civil topography of the city and its division into fourteen regions, starting from the Porta Capena, and ending with the Transtevere. The Coliseum and Esquiline, described in chap. iii., have no connexion whatever, and the same is the case with the Velabrum and the Circus Flaminius, described in chap. v., with the Aventine and Caelian Hills, described in chap. viii.

As regards the contents of the book, Mr. Burn's declaration that it is "an epitome of his larger work, 'Rome and the Campagna,'" does not fully justify him. If he had strictly followed the rule all through the nine chapters of stopping his descriptions at the date of his former book, well and good; there is no objection to such a plan, although the student and the traveller, having been told in the preface that they should find in the book "a brief description of each existing ruin or monument," expect such descriptions to keep up with the times, not to stop at the date of Mr. Burn's last visit to Rome. Things are going so fast now that what it required in former times half a century to bring to light is now discovered in six months. Books on Rome are growing antiquated at a fearful pace; new and unexpected monuments are uncovered daily. Our knowledge is ever improving; museums, and, above all, those of the Capitol, have doubled their scientific and artistic stock. If Mr. Burn had prepared his new edition on the spot, it would have been perfect. Here and there hints are given of quite recent discoveries, such as the pedestal of Cornelia's sitting statue, dug up in April, 1878 (p. 121); and there are enough periodicals and books of reference, supplying accounts of latest discoveries, to save the fatigue and expense of a journey to Rome. The Notizi degli Scavi of Commendatore Fiorelli give monthly official statistics of new findings. The Bullettino della Commissione Archeologica, the Bullettino dell'Istituto Germanico, the Topographische Rundschau of Prof. Jordan, in Bursian's Jahresbericht, give the same information at longer intervals, but with greater fulness, and with ample apparatus of maps, diagrams, photographs, &c.

In chap. i., p. 18, the description of the stadium on the Palatine, besides being a little confused, is not complete, omitting as it does particulars of high topographical interest. The author speaks of a "large open space in which the later excavations have disinterred the relics of a stadium, consisting of a curved series of walls, surrounding the foundations of the meta or goal, and two lines of bases of columns which ran along the sides and the end of the stadium."

If he had simply spoken of a parallelogram of walls and porticoes, so many feet long, so many wide, with a curved end, his readers would have conceived a clearer idea of the stadium and its shape. Not a word is said of the interesting discoveries made there two years ago. It was found then that the stadium had been turned into a small amphitheatre during the fifth century; that it had been converted into workshops for stone-cutters and lime-burners during the middle ages; that many statues and architectural fragments had been partially destroyed and half burned; that only one statue had escaped destruction, and that this statue is the best, the most perfect work of art discovered in Rome since the Apoxyomenos of Lysippus, dug up in 1849 in the Vicolo delle Palme.

Describing the Basilica of Constantine and its side entrance from the Sacra Via, Mr. Burn speaks of "a flight of steps and a portico with porphyry columns, two of which are now in the Conservatori Museum on the Capitol." In the Conservatori Palace there is but one fragment of a pillar; two more were dug up near the original spot at the beginning of 1879.

As regards the group of buildings turned by Felix IV. into the church of SS. Cosma e Damiano, Mr. Burn supposes that the "name Temple of Romulus, given to the ruins by mediæval writers, may have been derived from some restorations by Romulus, son of Maxentius."

In the first place, the name was applied not to the ruins on which the church stands, but only to the circular vestibule opening on the Sacra Via; in the second place, the name was given on the authority of the original inscription, engraved on the front of the temple, some fragments of which were seen in situ by Panvinus. The inscription is fully illustrated by De Rossi, Bull. Arch. Crist., 1867, p. 63, and inserted in the 'Corpus,' vi., 1147; it shows that the temple had been dedicated by Maxentius to his son Romulus, and afterwards by the Senate to Constantine. The same thing had happened with the adjoining "basilica nova." The remarks of De Rossi, l.c., and Jordan, 'Forma,' passim, on this group of buildings, and their accounts of its history, construction, and connexion with the marble plan of Rome, ought to have been quoted by Mr. Burn, who seems to adhere exclusively to the authority of Mr. Parker.

Chap. ii. is devoted to the Forum Romanum, and accompanied by a map, many years old, on which there are houses marked between the Via dei Foraggi and the Cloaca Maxima, some of which were pulled down in 1812, some in 1854. The general excavations were carried as far as the Temple of Antoninus and Faustina in 1876, when the foundations of the noble staircase were discovered, as well as the pavement of the road which runs in front of the temple, pedestals of statues, and so on. In Mr. Burn's plan the temple is still separated from the excavations by a modern street. The illustration at p. 47, giving a view of the Forum from the platform of the Temple of Saturn, is taken from a photograph eleven years old. It represents the state of the place between 1854 and 1870: a more recent drawing should have been made use of.

In chap. iii. some of the monuments of the Esquiline are put in connexion with streets which have long ago disappeared. "The ruin called the Trophies of Marius" is placed "at the corner of the Via di S. Bibiana," which ceased to exist in 1878. The large basin or tank, which, the author says, is "now hidden under the level of the ground," was brought to light in 1874. Giving the right name of Nymphæum Alexandri to the ruin, he goes too far when he asserts that "the level of the [Alexandrine] aqueduct corresponds exactly with the building in question." The ordnance map of the Italian staff, published three years ago, shows that the level of the aqueduct at Acqua Bollicante, two miles from Rome and three from the Trophies, is 45 metres above the sea, whereas the level of the Trophies is 62 metres.

The columbaria which Mr. Burn describes in the Villa Magnani—a name belonging to past generations—do not belong "to Statilius Taurus, a nobleman mentioned by Tacitus," but to the freedmen of the Statilian family, and especially of the famous Messallina. The frescoes, representing "scenes from the Æneid of Virgil," are not "nearly destroyed." They were removed safely to the Kircherian Museum in 1877.

"The inscriptions on the Porta S. Lorenzo" do not "tell the history of the several gateways" here built by Augustus and other "emperors, down to Honorius." The inscriptions tell the history of the aque Marcia, Tepula, and Julia, as no gateway existed here before Aurelian. Only the outside one speaks of restorations to the walls made under Honorius.

The thermæ of Constantine are removed from their natural seat in chap. vii., the Quirinal Hill, and brought in contact with the Capitol (p. 100). It is said, without sufficient grounds, and perhaps against the evidence of facts, that "part of the ruins of these baths was found in the construction of the Quirinal Palace, in the time of Paul V." The Quirinal Palace is separated from the baths by a wide antique street (Alta Semita?), the pavement of which was laid bare in 1869 for some hundred yards. Another wide street separates the baths from the Temple of the Sun in the Colonna Gardens: it was discovered in 1876. Underneath its pavement ran the water-pipes for the supply of the Forum of Trajan. In the same year, 1876, nearly one-third of the baths was excavated between the Aldobrandini and the Rospigliosi Palaces, and plans of the ruins published, a fact which seems to have escaped Mr. Burn's attention.

We need not search the following chapters for slips of the pen, which only betray a little haste in writing, and can easily be eradicated from a new edition. Such is, for instance, the statement (p. 122) that the statue of Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi (the pedestal of which was found in the Via di S. Angelo in Pescheria in April, 1878), was the work of Tisicrates. Tisicrates worked and died nearly a century before the erection of Cornelia's sitting statue. More exactness also is needed in quoting monumental inscriptions. In that of Eurydice's tomb, "Marci" is given instead of MARGI, "Optima" instead of OPTIMA, in that of Porta Maggiore "Ameriem" instead of ANIEM, and so on. The minuteness of these criticisms show that there is little to criticize in Mr. Burn's epitome. Mr. Burn, we are glad to say, does not belong to that school who think that everything has to be done as regards the topography of Rome, that every received denomination of monuments is incorrect, or altogether wrong; who have seen a grand imperial aqueduct in every small drain, a "foes-way" in every bit of lava pavement, a fortress in every heap of rubbish, and have surrounded Rome with more walls than Saturn has rings. Little is needed to make this epitome an unexceptionable handbook, and that little, we trust, will be found in the next edition.

Giotto. By H. Quilter. Illustrated. (Sampson Low & Co.)—This is the édition de luxe of a member of the series called "The Great Artists." It is one of the most readable of them all, and though not, perhaps, of the highest critical or historical value, yet it is rich in fresh impressions. Mr. Quilter has an impressionable mind. He is evidently a young man, gifted with quick perceptions and readiness in expressing them with the pen; and his book is the work of an amateur who has skill enough to make spirited sketches of what pleases him. It is enriched with photographs from the Arena Chapel at Padua and little photographic touches of description, which give a charming vitality to the letter-press. In other respects it is a capital compilation from well-known sources, which are chiefly English. The author is a devoted reader of Mr. Ruskin, and is a warm champion of the Pre-Raphaelites, an especially valuable qualification for a writer on Giotto.

THE ROYAL ARCHEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

THIRTY-TWO years ago the Royal Archaeological Institute met at Lincoln. It was then but a young society, and caused much interest and some surprise in the towns which it visited. It is now so common a thing to find men taking interest in old buildings, camps, stained glass, and other remains of our forefathers, that it causes no surprise even to the dullest intellect. In 1848 it was not so, and many were the wild surmises made to account for carriages full of ladies and gentlemen visiting obscure villages. At Stow it was confidently believed that the excursionists were a body of "Papists," bent on selecting a plot of ground on which to build a convent, and we have heard that at another Lincolnshire village they were looked upon with dread, as they were reported to be a body of commissioners sent down for the purpose of assessing a new and much increased land tax. There are not many of the archaeologists who are now assembled at Lincoln who were present at the former meeting. As the Athenæum said at the time, the meeting of 1848 was a great success, and people prophesy equally brilliant things for the present gathering. The formal business began by the presentation of an address from the mayor and corporation of the city in the masonic hall. This was followed by a similar address, presented by the Bishop of Nottingham as President of the Lincolnshire Architectural Society. Luncheon was then served to the visitors in the Corn Exchange, a new building, which has been built to supply the place of an exceedingly ugly and inconvenient structure erected some forty years ago.

After luncheon the party visited the church of St. Mary-le-Wigford, under the guidance of the Bishop of Nottingham. It stands on the east side of the Ermine Street, on a spot of ground outside the limits of the Roman city, in what is known to have been a Roman burial-ground. The tower has been called Saxon, and it is convenient still to retain that designation, but it is probable that it was built early in the reign of William I., by the old inhabitants of the upper city, who were driven from their homes to make room for the great military works of the Conqueror. This tower has some later additions to it, as the parapet and hood mouldings, but there is no Norman work about it. It is, however, undoubtedly later than the Saxon towers of St. Peter's, Barton-upon-Humber, and Earl's Barton, in Northamptonshire. The nave is Early English, and very good in character; the south aisle is modern, and as ugly a bit of "restoration" as we remember to have seen. The chancel arch is Early English, of a bold and pleasing type. Near this church is a conduit, which in former days supplied much of the lower town with water. It is a picturesque object, built out of fragments of sculpture taken from the house of the White Friars, which stood on the spot now occupied by the railway station. It was, we believe, originally put together soon after the Reformation, but has, we imagine, been rebuilt more than once. It was thought to impede the traffic some fourteen or fifteen years ago, and pulled down to the ground, but has been rebuilt stone for stone as it was before. Some fragments of monumental inscriptions were discovered at this time, but it is said that they were too much mutilated to be deciphered. Near to this stands a house containing a fine fragment of timber work of the latter part of the fifteenth century. It has been ignorantly called the White Friars, but is the remains of a house of one of the citizens. The building next visited is called John of Gaunt's stables. It really was one of his houses, and there is good reason to believe that Katherine Swinford stayed here when she visited Lincoln. It is one of the finest specimens of twelfth century domestic architecture in Britain. There have been rumours from time to time of its restoration. This catastrophe we hope may be averted, but some slight and inexpensive structural repairs seem needed. The church of St. Peter-at-Gouta has a late Saxon tower, identical in general character with that of St. Mary-le-Wigford. There cannot be any reasonable doubt that they were built at the same time and probably by the same set of masons. The nave is Early English, and until recently there was a

Norman north aisle; this, however, was made away with during a recent restoration, for the purpose of supplying its place with something more in harmony with modern taste. Happily the Norman font, a stone basin with a series of round-headed arches carved upon it, has been spared. The castle was next visited, under the guidance of Mr. G. T. Clark, whose great knowledge of earthworks and mediæval fortifications well qualified him to describe this, which is one of the most curious early fortresses in Britain. Of the original Roman walls some few fragments remain above ground, as well as the great arch known as Newport Gate. The present castle has been built in an angle of the Roman city, and much of the Roman wall is known to be buried in the vast bank of earth by which the enclosure of the base court is surrounded. When this bank was raised we shall never know. It was probably there when the Conqueror came, but not with a wall on the top. It would not be possible to build a massive wall such as this on a bank of loose earth. Many years must have been allowed for it to settle. There is no doubt that at Lincoln, as elsewhere, the old Teutonic plan was followed, and the bank was surmounted not by a wall, but by a wooden stockade or paling. Such we know to have been the constant practice both here and in Normandy in early times. This paling was probably removed soon after the Conquest. Mr. Clark, who has carefully examined the masonry of the walls, thinks that we may safely assign them to an early Norman date. The great mound, with its shell keep at the top, which is such a marked feature in the landscape, must have been raised at the same time as the banks enclosing the court. The soil of which it is made was got out of the ditch adjoining, one portion of which is still pretty perfect. Like the court, it was once protected by a stockade, which does not seem to have been removed quite so early as that of the court. Mr. Clark pronounces the present walls not to be older than about the time of Stephen. Though later than Corfe (which may possibly be Saxon), Cardiff, or Berkeley, Lincoln is from its size and perfect preservation the finest shell-keep in England. As it stands on ground which belongs to the county, it is probably out of reach of destruction, and is likely to continue to be well cared for. Mr. Clark pointed out that there were two little chambers in the wall which were unknown to most of those persons who are familiar with the place. We hope the grand jury, the justices, or who ever may be the custodians of the place, will cause the ivy to be trimmed somewhat, so that these interesting little rooms may be visible.

In the evening Mr. G. T. Clark read a paper on post-Roman entrenchments, which gathered together in small compass all that is known of the fortifications of our ancestors before castles were built of stone. The collection of the facts must have been a work of great labour; not only did it indicate personal familiarity with nearly all the important earthworks in England and Normandy, but the Saxon Chronicle had been gone through, and every notice of a fortification examined. Bishop Trollope read a short paper on Little St. Hugh of Lincoln, the child who was falsely said to have been crucified by the Jews, which was followed by a very learned and interesting account of the Jews of Lincoln by Mr. D. Davis, who has worked up an elaborate history of them from documents preserved in the Record Office. Nearly the whole of the facts given by Mr. Davis are new to historical students. It seems that the English Jews mostly came originally from Rouen; London and Lincoln were their chief settlements, but they rapidly spread to many other towns. They were not under the government of the ordinary authorities, but directly under the king and the constables of his castles. At Lincoln they practised the rites of their religion publicly, and had a synagogue somewhere in the upper city, probably very near to the castle. The horrible story of their persecution and expulsion is too well known to repeat. It is pleasant to be reminded, however, that St. Hugh of Avalon, the great and good bishop of Lincoln, always used his influence for their protection, and that on his death the Lincoln Jews attended his funeral in large numbers and wept bitterly.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF WHORLTON

By LIEUTENANT-WENTWORTH CASTLE, BARNLEY

Mrs. F. VERNON WENTWORTH kindly allowed us to see the pictures in the stately house which stands in the noble park a short three miles from "Black Barnley," a long town, full of factories, and, although devoted to "business," by no means devoid of picturesque of a grimy but not very squalid sort. The neighbourhood is beautiful, and there are a number of noble houses scattered over the country. Of these Wentworth Castle is the nearest. Not much further off is the Earl of Wharfedale's, Wortley Hall, which is remarkable for English portraits, and is noteworthy in modern art-history because it contains Mr. Poynter's large paintings. The place has associations with "Avidien," "old Wortley Montagu," Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, and Mr. Montagu, and stands in the midst of superb woodland and rock scenery. A little further off is Wentworth Woodhouse, the magnificent seat of Earl Fitzwilliam, a palace of Van Dyck, which looks to Rotherham, as Wortley Hall looks to Sheffield and Penistone, and Wentworth Castle looks to Barnley, as Fryton Hall, the seat of Lord Houghton, looks to Pontefract, Harewood House and Temple Newnham to Leeds, and Nostel Priory to Wakefield. Of this group we have yet to describe Nostel, Wortley, Wentworth Woodhouse, and Wentworth Castle. The narrow region in which they stand is enclosed by the Wharfe and the Don; within these bounds are probably more smoke and a greater number of fine pictures than in any district of the same size in England, except the metropolitan one.

Wentworth Castle is the place where Horace Walpole went to see his friend the Earl of Strafford. "It is my favourite of all great seats; such a variety of ground, of wood, and water; and almost all executed and disposed with so much taste by the present earl.....The new front is, in my opinion, one of the lightest and most beautiful buildings on earth, and pray like the little Gothic edifice, and its position in the menagerie!" This is what, writing from "Strawberry," he told the Misses Berry, September 4th, 1789. We must recollect that Walpole saw the castle before the smoke appeared. His friend the earl was then an old man, who—aged seventy-nine—died the next year, his father having built the "front" in question, and out of an ancient house constructed a quasi-Italian palace, with rooms of state and comfortable "parlours," to say nothing of lordly staircases and a gallery or hall so vast, sumptuous, and brilliant, that to this day it seems only to want the figures of Walpole and his companions moving in the sunlight of enormous windows, and looking at the portraits as we looked at them, while the descendant of Walpole's friend told us their histories with a gracious courtesy. This gallery is 180 feet long, and its design was borrowed from the Colonna Palace at Rome. Thirty years before the praises we have quoted, Walpole wrote to Bentley from this house, and was enraptured with it. We believe it was on this mansion that Walpole at another time descended, and "rummaged" it to his heart's content.

It is certain that the letter-writer saw all the pictures we have to describe, and that in saying they were "all bad" he apprised some of them at a much lower rate than they deserved. Besides this, many of these works have gained historic value during the century that has elapsed since he wrote. Among the first to attract us is a large canvas, on which are depicted, standing hand in hand, after the fashion of the Graces, three clumsy kings in royal robes, ponderous figures standing among unlimited regal upholstery. In this life they were Frederick IV. of Denmark, Augustus of Poland, and Frederick William I. of Prussia. Their union here is ominous; especially was it so for the second of these hard-featured royalists. The picture bears an odd legend:—"Given by these kings to Tho^r Earle of Strafford [sic] on their having all three dined together with him when Lord Raby Ambassador Ex^t at Berlin, Anno Domⁱ: 1706." This was the first Earl of Strafford of the second creation, the father of Earl William, Walpole's host, and the boulder of the front. In the quadrangle formed by these buildings is a thoroughly characteristic statue of Earl Thomas by Rybrack. There is something pathetic and depressing about this figure, which, apart from its "out-of-doors" look, is full of melancholy suggestions of the metability of human glory. However trite the motto, "Sic transit gloria mundi," those words were never more appropriate than in this silent court, where the blank windows reflect the ornate and pompous figure of a statesman and soldier already almost forgotten, and on the ground its lengthening shadow marks the flight of time. General the Earl of Strafford, the above-named Earl Thomas, is represented in a valuable life-size equestrian picture, which bears the signature of P. C. Lens, and is the only work of such importance by him which is known to us. It is a curious illustration of the state of portraiture amongst us during the second quarter of the last century. The earl was No. 520 of the Knights of the Garter, and, as if conscious of his dignity, sits, sword in hand, stiff and erect, on his prancing white horse. He was evidently a man of ability, with smooth handsome features, which are surrounded by a large fair wig under a feathered hat. The picture is dry and jejune in execution, but marked by care and much technical skill, but otherwise heartless and artless. The face and air of the general differ in every respect from those of his near ancestor and namesake, the more famous Thomas Wentworth, Baron Raby, Viscount and Earl of Strafford, who in 1641, i.e., about seventy years before this portrait was painted, forfeited all he had in the world.

Here is a fine portrait of Sir P. Sidney, at full length, standing, his right hand resting on a sword; attributed to Sir A. More on not quite sufficient grounds, but, at any rate, a good work, distinguished by a white doublet, black breeches and hose; a black cloak is placed over the left shoulder. This example was No. 300 at the National Portrait Exhibition of 1866. Near the last are two excellent likenesses, in a group, of Mary, eldest daughter of Charles I., and her husband William of Orange, the father and mother of William III. They are standing vis-à-vis in equal unconsciousness of each other. She is in yellow satin, he in black ~~serge~~. The work slightly resembles the less spirited productions of C. Jonson. The princess is oddly like Charles II., her unlovely brother, and is especially distinguished by a big nose, the low expression of her eyes, and her sensual lips. The figures are whole-length, rather less than life, painted in a dry, harsh, poor style, devoid of spontaneity, and operose throughout, but by no means the less valuable on that account. We have a strong impression that there is an old print of this picture, a print which is not unlike that of the "Winter King" and his bride, standing under a canopy overlooking a garden. Here are four views of Rome in the manner of Canaletto, but probably not his. One of them gives a vista of a street, with a large church, an obelisk, and a fountain; near this is a carriage drawn by six horses, and preceded by running footmen and whiffers. It is an interesting piece for costume studies. Near the last is a capital example of the same class, representing the first Westminster Bridge, and including the old buildings of that neighbourhood and an extremely blue river. A view, by the same, of the same locality, includes the old terrace of Somerset Place, with the trees and gardens, and figures walking about a very curious and important picture in its way, full of costume and quaint illustrations of manners. Our readers will remember a somewhat similar picture by Canaletto, the property of the Queen, which came from Windsor to the Academy Winter Exhibition of 1878, No. 234.

By Rosa di Tivoli is a capital and characteristic specimen of shepherds, sheep, and goats, painted with his forced brown shadows, heavy but spirited handling, and crude but masterly manner. The paintings of Rosa di Tivoli were numerous in England; they have either been withdrawn or exported, for as yet we have not encountered many of them; of these one or two excellent specimens are at Nostel Priory. Another of the same character, but not so good as the above, which seems to have been much repainted, is here. By Carlo Maratti is 'David with the Head of Goliath,' seated, sword in hand, on a rock: a whole-length, life-size figure, treated with a fine, bold, academic sense of style in the carnations, and, for the time, masterly modelling of the flesh, with a just and graceful pose. The joints of the figure are loose, and its proportions questionable, yet it is undoubtedly a striking gallery picture of the "old-fashioned," stately, semi-theatrical sort.—An indifferent replica of the great Van Dyck at Wentworth Woodhouse, representing the Earl of Strafford and his secretary Mainwaring, is here. Not far from it is an interesting and quaint group of Anne, daughter of Sir John Wentworth, and her three children, the latter being armed with bows and arrows. The children wear coats of the "Bluecoat School" order, trimmed with silver; this shows how long that style of dress remained in vogue for children. Here is a good Pompeo Battoni, representing Lady Strafford, daughter of John, Duke of Argyll, wife of the third Earl of Strafford. By Abraham van Diepenbeek is a most imposing whole-length, standing, life-size portrait of Margaret (born Lucas), Duchess of Newcastle; the stately and affected authoress wears an elaborately embroidered blue petticoat and bright white milk robe. It is not to be wondered at that this portrait has been ascribed to Lely. Another example, which resembles nearly as closely the workmanship of Sir Peter, is Amiconi's striking and demonstrative portrait of the Great Peter the Great, in a breastplate, life-size, whole-length, standing with one foot on a cannon. This must have been painted while the emperor was here. We do not know to whom to attribute the remains of a very fine, rather early Italian whole-length, life-size picture of a young knight in armour, wearing a black barrete over his long fair hair. A white ermine (?) is on the ground at his feet; a castle is on our left; a knight in a black and yellow dress, the colours counterchanged, is in the background: a very curious and animated painting of its kind. Here is a good old repetition of Van Dyck's portrait of Charles I. which is in the Louvre. Here is a capital portrait of himself by Carlo Maratti, half-length, life-size, in the act of looking to the right front, and wearing a gold cross on his breast, holding a sketch-book and portecrayon: a very good and highly characteristic and excellent work indeed.

Probably the most interesting portrait here, and certainly one of the best, is that of Lady Harriet Wentworth, the beautiful and voluptuous mistress of Monmouth, painted in the manner of, and probably by, Lely. It was taken when this unfortunate dame was eighteen years of age; she wears a grey dress. It is a three-quarters-length, life-size, standing figure, noticeable by the beauty of the abundant fair yellow hair, which clusters about her head and is parted on her shoulders. The lady wears large pearls; the head is in three-quarters view to our left. She is bright enough to attract a stupider man than King Charles's luckless son. By Otto Venius is a Bacchanalian scene, comprising numerous figures, the fulness of the proportions of which predicated the embossment of Rubens. The dancing and sportive figures are crowded, and designed with uncommon animation. The execution is dry and rather crude, but not archaic. It lacks glazing; the carnations are somewhat raw and unblended. On one side of the grand gallery hang two excellent pictures by Otto Mameus, the Serpent Painter or painter of serpents, whose works are much less known here than in Holland and France. One of these shows a plant of large and cumbersome leaves springing from the earth with other flowers, and grouped with wonderfully painted, solid, vivacious, and brilliant butterflies, a lizard, and other creatures most admirably drawn. The companion is the better work of the two; it shows a large thistle with ivy and a superbly drawn and mottled serpent pursuing a butterfly, while other butterflies are hovering above. The foreshortening and craftsmanship of the leaves are very delightful. There are works of this painter in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. Besides the above-named portraits, Mr. Vernon Wentworth possesses likenesses of Thomas, first Lord Wentworth, dated 1547; another Thomas, his son, the second lord, who tried Queen Mary of Scotland, dated 1544; the fine portrait by Lucas de Hore, said to represent Lady Eleanor Brandon, the best archaic work here, dated 1565; one of the many portraits said to represent Mary, Queen of Scots, which is marked "1563, aged 24," dates which do not agree with the biography of Mary. H. Danvers, Earl of Danby, attributed to Van Dyck, born 1572, died 1644, wears a patch on his cheek; Edward Wortley Montagu appears standing, in a Turkish dress, with a grey beard; Dorothy Cavendish, wife of William, third Duke of Portland, was painted by Reynolds; John, Count of Nassau, is very good indeed.

The next paper of this series will be devoted to notes on the pictures, miniatures, and drawings belonging to the Earl of Wharfedale, and preserved at Wortley Hall.

Five-Jet Society.

THE society which was recently formed to promote the manufacture of pure pigments, vehicles, and other materials for the use of artists has resolved itself into a "limited liability" company, and is about to undertake operations on a considerable scale. There can be no doubt that some reform is indispensable, no less in the interest of artists than of the buyers of pictures, the very pigments of which fail before their eyes, so that costly investments are utterly destroyed. It would be well if collectors insisted on the use of durable materials and abstention from fugitive ones. When we hear of an eminent painter declaring he does not care how soon his pictures fade, it is time "patrons" looked into the matter. A good plan would be to demand a guarantee of durability for a certain number of years.

Mr. LACROS has made a magnificent present to the museum at Finsley, consisting of fourteen large drawings in sepia of landscape subjects, of the dignified and pathetic kind so dear to the painter's admirers. Besides these are fifty-two impressions of plates etched by himself, being his best works, and a fine 'Study from Life,' a male portrait in oil, of great value in technical respects. Among the drawings are 'At Rehob'; 'Caught in a Storm,' a traveller belated on a wild heath; 'Twilight'; 'The Pond'; 'The Peddler,' or 'Le Colporteur,' an old man, seated, with his wares near him, on a road-side; 'In the Woods,' a weird and impressive piece; 'On the Skirts of the Forest,' which is the finest of all, a poem in monochrome; and 'Evening among Rocks,' a sea-piece of great pathos.

In a few days art-critics and picture-seers may rest for a season. Before long even that Temple of Janus, the Dudley Gallery, will be closed, although it will be the first to demand attention in the autumn. The Academy will be shut on Monday evening next, after a very prosperous season at the turnstiles. On Monday, Bank holiday, the fee will be sixpence throughout the day. The Grosvenor Gallery Exhibition will close to-day (Saturday), and so will the gallery of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours; that of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, and the French Gallery, Pall Mall. 'Borke's Drift' will be no more seen, at least in London. "Mr. Frith's new pictures" will be at Scarborough after Monday next. The Society of British Artists throws its doors open free to the public on Monday.

The famous Norwegian painter, Prof. Hans Gude, has thrown up his appointment at the Academy of Arts in Karlsruhe, and has gone to Berlin, where it is understood that an important post has been offered him by the German Government.

The statue of Bernard Palissy by M. Barrias, acquired by the city of Paris from the Salon of this year, is to be set up in one of the public places of Boulogne-sur-Seine. Two reproductions of this work by M. Barrias himself are to be set up, one at Agen, the other in the Musée de Sévres.

MR. T. H. WYATT has resigned the honorary secretaryship of the Institute of Architects.

THE Chronique des Arts tells us that the Louvre has acquired two fine works of the Florentine School of the fifteenth century, being a large fresco by Fra Angelico, representing Christ on the cross, surrounded by the Virgin and two saints, and a portrait of an old man by Ghirlandajo, most vigorously drawn and brilliantly coloured. The former is placed on the great staircase, the latter in the gallery devoted to early Italian pictures. The same authority states that M. P. Chénard has given to the city of Lyons a collection of engravings, "from twenty to thirty thousand" in number, some of which are of great value.

A STATUE of the renowned archaeologist, K. O. Müller, has been unveiled at Berlin. Prof. Curtius made a speech on the occasion.

THE Annual Report of the Metropolitan Museum of New York has been published, and states the continued increase and prosperity of the institution, which is not yet, however, open to the public. The second Cesnola collection has been incorporated with the first, and the whole arranged for the use of students. Duplicates have been taken out, and formed into collections, to be disposed of hereafter. Porcelain is considered an important element in the museum; the examples belonging to Mr. S. P. Avery have been bought for 35,000 dollars, and arranged in the museum. Mr. Marquand has given a choice collection of old Venetian glass, the first of its kind in America, and this has likewise been arranged, together with many ancient American vases found in the "mound-builders' tombs" of Missouri, and presented by the same benefactor. Free industrial art schools have been formed in connexion with the museum, and the attendance of students is encouraging. Mr. R. T. Achenaut, of New York, has given the use of a plot of ground for three years, and intends to erect on it a building of one hundred feet frontage, to be used for these schools. The subscribers and donors, as well as General di Cesnola, the director of this museum, are to be congratulated on these results of their patriotic exertions. The museum receives no State or Government aid, except 6,500 dollars from the Department of Public Parks.

In commemoration of the fête of the 14th of July, M. Maissonier has been nominated Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. M. Boswillwald becomes Commandeur of the same body. M. Geoffroy de Chaume, sculptor, is made Officer, and so is M. J. F. Gigoux; M. L. Mélingue, M. de Villefroy, Duex, Guillemet, Jundt, Cormon, R. de Saint-Marceaux, Truphème, Didier, Mamead, Loviot, E. Train, E. Saglio (Conservateur au Musée du Louvre), E. Michel, Arasse (of Sévres), have been made Chevaliers; likewise M. Jules Mesureur, "entrepreneur de plomberie et cuivrerie d'art," who was employed upon the Lion of Belfort.

THE Grand Prix de Rome for painting has been awarded to M. H. L. Doucet; a "premier second grand prix" is given to M. G. Truffant, and a "second second grand prix" to M. L. N. Royer.

MUSIC

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Music Primers: The Harmonium. By King Hall. (Novello & Co.)—It would be idle to deny that the harmonium, notwithstanding its extensive use, is at best an unpopular instrument. This disfavour is mainly due to two misconceptions: first, that the office of the reed organ is merely that of a substitute for the pipe organ; and, secondly, that every one who can play the organ must, therefore, necessarily be able to play the harmonium. The latter error results in clumsy and inartistic treatment of the instrument, and its capabilities for solo purposes are, consequently, far less widely known than they should be. Mr. King Hall's treatise leaves little or nothing to be desired as a practical book of instruction. The author has evidently mastered his subject, and writes clearly and comprehensively upon it; the only matter in connexion with the study of the harmonium which, possibly from inadvertence, he fails to notice is the peculiarity known as "double touch." The work is profusely illustrated with diagrams, and may be warmly recommended to the notice of students.

From the same publishers we have received A Fourth Set of Sixty Voluntaries arranged for the Harmonium, by J. W. Elliott, a collection of very brief excerpts from the scores of the great masters, arranged in the simplest manner. Organ Compositions. By Giovanni Morandi. (Ricordi.)—The style of organ playing prevalent in Italy at the present time would be considered even more objectionable to the ordinary English mind than that of France as made familiar to us by the compositions of Weyl and Batiste. It is completely destitute of the dignity and solemnity which we consider should characterize the treatment of the king of instruments. The average executant knows little or nothing of the true uses of the pedals, his performances generally consisting of more or less frivolous pieces, in which a melody, profusely embellished, is played with the right hand, while the left hand and the feet are merely employed in filling up the harmonies, which generally consist of a wearisome iteration of tonic and dominant. Signor Morandi's pieces are mostly on an extended scale, and are remarkable for the orchestral style in which they are written. The melodies and progressions are pre-eminently Rossinian, and therefore, in the strictest sense of the word, Italian. They would undoubtedly prove effective in performance, and as there is but little contrapuntal treatment of the subjects and even less pedal work, they present no excessive difficulties to organists possessed of a fair amount of manipulative skill. The adaptation to English organs is by Mr. W. T. Best.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal, edited by Dr. Spark, Part XLV. (Novello & Co.), contains four pieces, of which the most important is a 'Flute Fantasia,' by Mr. Inglis Bervon, written in the brilliant style, and with a good deal of modern feeling.

Praeger Album. 48 Tonstücke von Ferdinand Praeger. Band I. (Leipzig, G. F. Kahnt.)—

Herr Ferdinand Praeger is known to musicians for his fervid writings in favour of his great countryman Richard Wagner. No revolutionary tendencies are observable in this collection of twenty-four slight and unpretentious pianoforte pieces. The trifles are furnished with fantastic titles, after the manner of Schumann, with whose style, however, they show but little affinity.

Short Anthems for Choirs and Congregations. Edited by J. Spencer Curwen. (J. Curwen & Sons.)—This is a collection of very brief and simple anthems by well-known composers, including the names of Macfarren, Elvey, Hopkins, Goss, and others. The book is issued in a form convenient for congregational use.

From a quantity of sheet music, mostly of very ephemeral character, we call the following as worthy of mention:—

Deux Morceaux de Genre. Par Ernest Stoeger. (Neumeier & Co.)—These are short pieces in various styles, not remarkable for individuality, but thoughtfully written and possessing a slight flavour of Stephen Heller. Two Hungarian Dances, by Gustav Lange, a composer of light and graceful pianoforte music, are based upon melodies rendered familiar to us through the instrumentality of Brahms. Romance for Violoncello, by Heinrich Hofmann, Op. 48, is a very melodious and pleasing morsel for an instrument not too well supplied with good music for solo purposes.—Rondino Gracioso, by Walter Macfarren, and Ebene, by A. H. Jackson (Stanley Lucas), may receive a word of approval as teaching pieces. The same publishers send us no less than seven songs by Maude Valérie White, three of which, Absent yet Present, To Blossoms, and Montrose's Love-song, have been sung recently by Mr. Santley with much success. Miss White has decided ability for composition, her songs having more character than is usually found in shop ballads.

Musical Society.

THE season of promenade concerts at Covent Garden Theatre is announced to commence this (Saturday) evening. In securing the services of Mr. F. H. Cowen as conductor the directors, Messrs. Gatti, have acted wisely. The published arrangements evince a desire to render the concerts as artistically interesting as is possible under the circumstances. On Mondays symphonies by Beethoven, Mozart, and Mendelssohn will be included in the programme. Wednesdays will be the regular classical nights, when, in addition to standard works, novelties of importance by Rubinstein, Saint-Saëns, Goetz, Dvorák, and others are promised. Fridays will be devoted to English music, both instrumental and choral, the latter under the direction of Mr. W. Lemaire. Among the engagements are the names of Madame Essipoff, Madame Frickenhaus, Mdlle. Vera Timanoff, Miss Bessie Richards, M. Ovide Musin, and Mr. Charles Halle.

MADAME PATTI will appear next winter in Paris at the Théâtre des Nations. Messrs. Pollini and Franchi will be the impresarii of the Italian season. It is said that 'Semiramide' and 'Mefistofele' will be mounted especially for Madame Patti. If these arrangements are carried into effect, it is more than probable that Signor Boito's opera will be heard at Covent Garden next year.

A SEASON of opera in English will be given by Herr Max Strakosch in America during the ensuing autumn, with Madame Marie Rose as prima donna. She will appear, for the first time in English, in Signor Verdi's 'Aida.'

MR. MAAR has, it is said, gone to Paris to study, under M. Ambroise Thomas, "the true traditions" of the part of Wilhelm in 'Mignon.' It is greatly to be desired that he will not injure his beautiful voice by attempting the meretricious French school of vocalization.

The death of the once-famous tenor Ivanoff, the contemporary of Rubini, is announced. His career on the lyric stage was brief, but very successful, both in Italy and England.

At the higher musical examinations of Trinity College, London, which have just concluded, there were 143 entries. The examiners were Sir George Elvey, Dr. J. F. Bridge, Dr. E. T. Chipp, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Dr. W. H. Longhurst, Mr. G. A. Osborne, Signor F. Schira, and Mr. George Riseley.

It is stated that Signor Vianesi has resigned his position as conductor at the Royal Italian Opera. We also learn that there is a possibility of Mr. Cousins retiring from the direction of the Philharmonic Society's concerts.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

ROYALTY.—'Parlours,' a "New Ultra-Paral Comedy from the French." By Robert Reece.

AMONG the forms of dramatic entertainment which have established the firmest hold upon the public must be counted farce. So altered are the conditions of theatrical representations, that the position of farce at the commencement or the close of an entertainment, which a score years ago was undisputed, is now abandoned. Until the latter half of the century a bill the interest of which was felt to be flagging was supposed to be strengthened when a new farce was presented at seven o'clock or at eleven. Not a few high reputations rest principally upon performances given at these hours. Wright, Buckstone, Compton, and Mr. Toole are well remembered in opening farces, and with them the reputation of the Keeleys is almost exclusively associated. In favour of a more "genteel" order of performance farce is now banished from our comedy houses. The Haymarket chooses for opening or closing piece, when such is required, a poetical sketch like 'Sweethearts,' the St. James's gives 'The Falcon' or 'Old Cronies,' the Lyceum 'Iolanthe,' and the Prince of Wales's 'A Happy Pair.' A natural reaction against a change which threatens to deprive the stage of one of the most exhilarating forms of entertainment has, however, set in, and farces which constitute an entire evening's entertainment have now sprung into such repute that one or more specimens are constantly before the public.

Like most of its predecessors, 'Parlours,' the latest piece of this class, is from the French. The Gallic original, indeed, is one of the works which served to establish the class, and is due to one, or rather two, of those prolific writers who a quarter of a century ago, in collaboration with, or in imitation of, M. Labiche, founded what is known as the vaudeville acrobique. Mr. Reece, by whom the translation has been made, has been but moderately happy in his work, and has been altogether unhappy in the company to which it is entrusted. For the adequate performance of pieces of this class a style of acting not common in England is required. The average English actor falls almost inevitably into one of two errors, and is either extravagant or colourless. That we shall soon have a change in this respect is scarcely to be hoped. M. Geoffroy, who is an absolute master of the style which is requisite, a man of whom one of the most brilliant and successful of modern dramatists said, "If he does not render a phrase effective, I know it is weak and I alter it,"—has appeared in London in the best pieces of his repertory and has failed to win public approval. Again and again has the astounding assertion been heard that MM. Geoffroy and Libératier are no better in 'Le Réveillon' than MM. Didier and Schey. When such views prevail there is but small temptation to an actor to cultivate the moderation, the delicacy, and the suggestiveness of style which are indispensable to keep such work within the limits of art.

Scarcely apparent behind the clamour of some of the actors and the unreadiness of others was the thoroughly comic, if passably familiar, idea upon which the play rests. An old gentleman who is weak enough in a moment of good nature to interfere between man and wife, and to give the best and most disinterested counsel, pays the inevitable penalty of his unwisdom. Whatever goes wrong is attributed to his meddling, and as everything goes wrong his responsibilities are not small. From one place to another has he to chase the lady, whose purpose, as he assumes, is elopement, and his own footsteps are dogged by the husband, whose intentions are obviously murderous.

Here are materials for farce of the most exhilarating kind. Little is made, however, of the characters, and still less of the action. The blame of this must apparently be divided between the author and the actors. The feebleness of certain of the characters seems attributable to the former; the obstreperousness of others must be charged to the exponents. Mr. Righton, meanwhile, on whom the chief responsibility rests, though he is comic as Goodman Muffat, ordinarily known as Parlours, does not assign any very distinct physiognomy to the character. Some of the expressions or catch-words put into his mouth are far from satisfactory to the audience. Mr. Sugden's performance of Mr. Snapperley has moderation which is not far from tameness. As a whole the female exponents are the more competent. The reception of 'Parlours' was stormy. If the play is to succeed in the future, the bungling and stupidity of a first performance, in which few persons seemed to know their parts, must be replaced by a sprightliness and vivacity which are indispensable to this kind of play. The manner in which English actors are content on a first performance to shuffle through their parts is a disgrace to English art.

Grandir Gessy.

THE Hanlon-Lees and M. Agout have returned to London, and reappeared at the Standard Theatre in 'Le Voyage en Suisse.'

On Monday 'Good for Nothing' was revived at the Gaiety, with Miss E. Farrer and Mr. Royce in the principal characters.

THE latest début of Mlle. Bartet at the Théâtre Français has been made as Antoinette in 'Le Gendre de M. Poirier.' It was not less successful than her previous appearances. M. Got was Poirier, and M. Delaunay the Marquis de Presles.

'MOULINOT FLE, QUINCAILLER,' is the title of a three-act vaudeville produced at the Folies Dramatiques.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—F. H. M.—D. C.—received.
W. R.—We are afraid we cannot enter in detail into a question of dogma.
We notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. K. PULLING, M.A., Brasenose College, Oxford, and formerly Professor of the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

Under the above title it is proposed to publish a series of small volumes descriptive of the principal Countries of the World, each Country being treated of by a Writer who from personal knowledge is qualified to speak with authority on the subject.
The general aim of the Series will be to present a clear and accurate idea of the actual state of the different Countries in a sufficiently popular form to prove interesting to the general reader while at the same time it is intended that the Works should be useful for educational purposes.
The Volumes will average 160 crown 8vo. pages, and will contain Maps and a few typical Illustrations. The price of the Volumes will be 2s. 6d. each.

The following Volumes are ready or in preparation:—

DENMARK and ICELAND.	SWEDEN and NORWAY.
GREECE. (Ready.)	THE WEST INDIES. (Ready.)
NETHERLANDS.	NEW ZEALAND.
AUSTRIA.	FRANCE.
RUSSIA.	EGYPT.
SPAIN.	IRELAND.
JAPAN.	TURKEY, IN ASIA.
PERU.	AUSTRALIA.
CANADA.	HOLLAND.

Now ready, crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. price 2s. 6d.

THE WEST INDIES. By Charles H. EDEN, F.R.S., Author of 'Frisson de la,' 'The West Coast,' &c. With Map and Illustrations.

Now ready, crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. price 2s. 6d.

GREECE. By Lewis Sergeant. With Illustrations and Physical and Political Maps, showing proposed boundaries.

THE NEW EDITIONS OF THE ILLUSTRATED COMPANION OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED KINGDOM.

SIR EDWIN LANDSEER. By F. G. STEPHENS. Author of 'Gleanings of the Past and Present,' &c. Illustrated with 16 Facsimiles of Landseer's work, including 'The Greyhound,' 'The Rabbit Warren,' 'The 1st of June,' and the 12 small sketches of the 'Western Game-cock.' Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Now ready.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By F. S. PULLING, M.A. Oxford. Illustrated with Reproductions of 18 of his most celebrated paintings, including 'The Duchess of Devonshire,' 'Pamela Boothby,' 'Age of Innocence,' 'The Strawberry Girl,' 'Mrs. Siddons,' &c. Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

GIOTTO. By Harry Quilter, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. Illustrated with Photographs of 18 of his most celebrated paintings, including 'A Preaching in the Church of the Madonna in the lower Church of Assisi,' and 'The Descent from the Cross,' &c. Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS OF ART EDUCATION. Edited by EDWARD J. FOYNT, B.A. Each volume contains numerous illustrations, and is strongly bound for the use of Students. Price 2s.

The Volumes now ready are—
PAINTING.

CLASSIC and ITALIAN. By EDWARD J. FOYNT, B.A., and PERCY B. REARD, Lincoln College, Oxford. Upwards of 60 Full-Page and other Illustrations. Bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

This Volume contains an Introductory Lecture on Art Education by Mr. Foynt, who also contributes a Chapter on Egyptian Art, and contains sections of the various Italian Schools, &c.

GOTHIC and RENAISSANCE. By T. ROGER SMITH, F.R.S. 120 Illustrations. Cloth 8vo. 2s. 6d. (Ready)
This Volume treats of the history of Architecture from the rise of the Gothic style to the present day, and contains the most complete and accurate account of the style of the sixteenth century.

A RIDE IN PETTICOATS and SLIPPERS FROM THE ALGERIAN FRONTIER. By Captain M. R. COLVILLE, of the Grenadier Guards. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 12s.

EPISODES OF FRENCH HISTORY.

1. CHARLEMAGNE and the CARLOVINGIANS. (Ready.)
2. LOUIS IX. and the CRUSADES. (Nearly ready.)
Edited with Notes, Chronological, Historical, and other Tables, by GUSTAVE MASSON, B.A.

Other Volumes in preparation.

The above Series is based upon M. Guizot's 'History of France.' The volumes are carefully illustrated, with Maps, printed and bound in a handy form, price 2s. 6d. each.

Now ready, 8vo. in wrapper, price 1s. 6d. No. 26, Vol. V of MEN OF MARK. Containing Portraits and Cabinet-size Photographs, taken from Life, of Sir CHARLES W. DILLER, M.P.

THE YAVIER
LAWRENCE ALMA-TADEMA
With Biographical Notices by THOMPSON COOPER, F.R.S.

Now ready, crown 8vo. in wrapper, price 1s. Part VIII. of
THE FERN PARADISE. By FRANCIS GEORGE HEATH. Sixth Edition.

Now ready, 8vo. in wrapper, price 1s.
ST. NICHOLAS, for August. The best existing Magazine for Children. Full of very fine Illustrations.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON.

AUTHORIZED ENGLISH VERSION.

Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol. demy 8vo. 15s.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE LIFE.
(1787—1874.)

By his Daughter, Madame DE WITT.

Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON.

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

The FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW, for August.

LAND TENURE in IRELAND. By the Right Hon. Justice Longfield.
WHY the AMERICAN COLONIES SEPARATED from ENGLAND. By J. Fiske.
HEALTH RESORTS in the PYRENEES. By Dr. J. Burney Yeo.
MR. BRADLAUGH and his OPPONENTS. By Leslie Stephen.
FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. By James Randall.
SONNET. By Algernon Charles Swinburne.
THE EUROPEAN CONCERT. By D. C. Lathbury.
THE DEOCAN. By Sir David Wedderburn, Bart., M.P.
PUBLIC OPINION and its LEADERS. By T. Wemyss Reid.
THE POLICY of COERCION. By W. T. Stead.
HOME and FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

CHAPMAN & HALL (Limited), 193, Piccadilly.

This day is published.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER.

BOOKS I—XII.

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH VERSE, WITH NOTES AND PARALLEL PASSAGES.

By Sir CHARLES DU CANE, K.C.M.G.

Large 8vo. 10s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

Early in August, price 3s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF

B A R B A R A :

HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.

By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

NEW ROMANCE OF LONDON LIFE.

Now ready, price 3s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE ORANGE GIRL.

ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

Now ready, price 3s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

The KING'S PAGE: a Love Story.

Now ready, price 3s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE. The New Novel.

By the AUTHOR of 'SOPHIE CREWE,' &c.

"A wild, rattling, exciting story, full of colour."—Illustration.

CHEAP EDITION of Mrs. GORDON SMYTHIES' NOVELS.

Just out, price 3s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

OUR MARY: a Novel.

CHEAP EDITION of MR. W. S. HAYWARD'S NOVELS.

Just out, price 3s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE SECRET SEVEN: a Novel.

SECRETS OF MODERN RUSSIA, NIHILISM, &c.

Just out (never before published), price 3s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

MYSTERIES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

By M. MIKAIL GORTSCHAKOV.

London: J. & R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

E P P S ' S C O C O A.

DELECTABLE AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & CO. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON.

MARKS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—Sold in Labelled Boxes only.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' BOOKS.

THE CONDITION OF NATIONS, SOCIAL and POLITICAL.

With complete Comparative Tables of Universal Statistics.

By BARON KOLB.

Translated, Edited, and Collated to 1880, by Mrs. BREWER.

With Original Notes and Information.

By EDWIN W. STREETE, F.R.G.S., Gold Medallist of the Royal Order of Frederic.

Author of 'Precious Stones,' 'Gold,' &c.

Royal 8vo. 965 pages, price 2l. 2s.

HISTORY OF POLITICAL ECONOMY IN EUROPE.

By JEROME-ADOLPHE BLANQUI.

Successor to J. B. Say in the Chair of Political Economy in the Conservatory of Arts and Trades (Collège de France).

Translated from the Fourth French Edition.

By EMILY J. LEONARD.

With Preface by DAVID A. WELLS.

Medium 8vo. 15s.

LECTURES AND LESSONS ON ART;

Being an Introduction to a Practical and Comprehensive Scheme.

By F. W. MOODY, Instructor in Decorative Art at South Kensington Museum.

With Diagrams to illustrate Composition and other matters.

Third Edition, Revised. Demy 8vo. 4s. 6d.

THE GOLDEN HIND:

A TALE OF THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA.

THREESALE, and OTHER POEMS.

(The scenes chiefly laid at Studland, Poole, and on the Dorset Coast.)

By C. E. ROBINSON, M.A., Barrister-at-Law; Author of 'The Cruise of the Widgeon.'

Fcap. 8vo. price 7s. 6d.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, 4, York-street, Covent-garden.

MESSRS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

This day is published.

I. TROUBLESOME DAUGHTERS. By L. B.

WALFORD, Author of 'Cecilia,' 'Pauline,' 'Mr. Smith: a Part of his Life,' &c. 3 vols. post 8vo. 25s. 6d.

II. CAMPAIGNING IN SOUTH AFRICA:

Reminiscences of an Officer in 1879. By Captain W. B. MONTAGUE, 5th Regiment, Author of 'Claude Mandeville,' &c. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

III. Fifth Edition, Revised throughout and greatly Enlarged.

The MOOR and the LOCH. Containing

Minute Instructions in all Highland Sports, with Wanderings over Crag and Corrie, Wood and Fell. By JOHN COLQUHOUN. Fifth Edition. To which is added, Recollections of the Author's Early Life. 2 vols. post 8vo. with 2 Portraits and other Illustrations, price 25s.

IV. DAVID ARMSTRONG; or, Before the Dawn.

2 vols. crown 8vo. 17s.

"This is a novel of no common order."—Evening Post.

"It has both freshness and power."—Witchamper Review.

"There are parts of it which have not often been surpassed, and the interest of the story is most carefully sustained."—Scotsman.

V. REATA: What's in a Name? By E. D. Gerard.

3 vols. post 8vo. 35s. 6d. Originally published in Blackwood's Magazine.

"It is long since we have read a story in which excellence of plot and excellence of character, existing as so well combined. From the first page to the last the reader is thoroughly interested in the story. Such evenness of execution, such admirable balance between the interest of the story, the interest of the characters, and the mere interest of the local colouring itself, is very rare."—Scotsman.

"A well-constructed dramatic interest exists as a story, and a fresh and easy style adds the effect of this novel as a rolling panorama of scenes which have evidently been studied with keen observation."—Daily Telegraph.

VI. A DREAMER. By Katharine Wylde. 3 vols.

post 8vo. 25s. 6d.

"Here is the unmistakable conscious touch of genuine feeling, worth volumes of ingenuity and folio of cleverness."—Spectator.

"The characters who take part in this strange story are worked out with consummate skill."—Queen.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE BIRDS, FISHES, and CETACEA commonly frequenting Helms Lough. By ROBERT LLOYD PATTERSON, Vice-President of the Belfast Natural History Society, &c. With a Map and Tables.
London: David Bogue, 3, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

SELECTIONS OF THE VERY BEST FRENCH NOVELS PUBLISHED IN ENGLISH FOR THE FIRST TIME.

POPULAR FRENCH NOVELS, in well-printed Pocket Volumes, One Shilling each.

FROMONT and ERLER. By A. Dumas.
SAMUEL ROSE and PARTNER. By V. Chesvalier.
MAUGER, Junior. By A. Theuriot.
DRAMA of the KUN de la PAIX. By A. Reiot.

To be followed by
WAYWARD DOG. By H. Gréville.
ODDITY'S MARRIAGE. By A. Delpe.
A NEW LEASE OF LIFE. By E. Abbot.
COLOMBIA and CARMEN. By F. Méville.

Vicatelli & Co., 10, Southampton-street, Strand.

Price 6d. handsomely printed in large 8vo.
A POPULAR LIFE OF W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. Illustrated with 30 Engravings.
Vicatelli & Co., 10, Southampton-street, Strand.

NEWMAN & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

8vo. cloth, 4s. at all Libraries.
LAURA DIBALZO; or, the Patriot Martyr.

By E. H. HORN, Author of "Orion," "The Death of Marlowe," &c.
"Nothing more striking than his latest work has come from his pen."
"The dying speech of Laura is one of the most powerful that has been written for years."—Graphic.
"It is an achievement of which not only its distinguished author, but all of whose the literary fame of the age is precious, have good cause to feel proud."—Litt.
"I have read it with my old admiration for your fiery, unconquerable spirit, and your impassioned, dramatic power."
Edmund C. Stedman, Author of "Victorian Poets."

READY IN SEPTEMBER, BY THE SAME AUTHOR,
BIBLE TRAGEDIES. In 1 vol. Truly, though Newly, Dramatized.

1 JOHN THE BAPTIST; or, the Valour of the Soul.
2 JONAS WIFE; or, the Cruise Wager.
3 JUDAS ISCARIOT, a Tragic Mystery.

Cloth, 8vo. 10s. 6d.
NEW POEMS. By John Payne, Author of "The Queen of Sheba," "Laurie," &c.

"These 'Salvatore' occupy an hour du volume et l'histoire d'un homme est plus terrible et la plus délicieuse ou le plus libre."
"Salvatore" involves a description of matters which may shock very delicate nerves, but the poetical treatment shows that the writer has all that is required of delicacy as well as of passion, tenderness, of imagination and of language for turning the subject to most charming account."—Illustrated London News.

8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.
LIFE and SOCIETY in AMERICA. By SAMUEL PHILLIPS DAY, Author of "Down South," "English America," or, "Pictures of Canadian People and People."

"We are indebted to Mr. Day for a most readable and entertaining collection of sketches of Transatlantic life."—Illustrated News.
"Such an interesting and amusing book is sure to find plenty of readers. The book ought to be studied by all who want to see the shadows as well as the lights of American society."—Graphic.
"This is a work of uncommon merit. It is an exhaustive picture of life in the United States, which we can recommend to all persons who are interested in the social life of the great Republic."—Judge's Messenger.
"The present volume is described as the first series. Few readers will get it down without wishing for a second. Having a foretaste of it, I feel that you have fully succeeded in bringing out, with much force and talent, the most prominent features of American life."—Prince de Monaco de Polignac.

The DOOM of the GREAT CITY; or, London Destroyed by Fog. By WILLIAM DELIBRE MAY. Price 1s. post free.

READY IN A FEW DAYS, AT ALL BOOKSTALLS,
The VERACIOUS HISTORY of a BLACK- and-TAN THIEF. Told by Himself. 8vo. cloth, 3s. Edited by LADY LAMB. Illustrated by Walter J. Allen.

HISTORY of DUELLING. Cloth, 8vo. 2s. 6d.
Translated from the French of M. Constant de Meant, one of the French King's Body Guard, with an Introduction by Sir LUCIUS OTTIGER.

NEWMAN & CO. PUBLISHERS.

NOTICE TO AUTHORS' ROYAL COMMISSION UPON COPYRIGHT
To meet the views expressed by the Royal Commissioners after they had heard the evidence of the leading authors of the day (see Report issued the 10th May 1879), Messrs. Newman & Co. have adopted a new system of publication, which secures to the author a full and lasting reward for his labours.

In the case of authors desiring to retain a permanent interest in their works Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. now send all rights to the author to be stamped or initialed before binding. And in their agreement, Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. undertake not to sell any copy without it being first initialed or stamped, and in the event of their doing so under their form of agreement, the copyright in the work with all property connected with, such work reverts absolutely to the author.
It will thus be seen that an author under this new system obtains a full record of the progress made by his work, and the royalties due to him.
Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. undertake the publication of approved Scientific, Educational and Domestic Works, Poetry, Novels, and all Works of Fiction, and Children's Works.

NEWMAN & Co. 43, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London, W.C.

8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d., royal 8mo. cloth, 3s.
THE DAILY ROUND. Meditation, Prayer, and Praise, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year.
London: J. Whitaker, 12, Warwick-lane.

Ninth Edition, post 8vo., 1s.

DR. WATTS ON ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.L. &c. 5, Rutland-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.
London: C. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

New ready in 1 vol. demy 8vo. with 140 Woodcuts, 15s.

THE PAST in the PRESENT: WHAT IS CIVILIZATION? Being the Rhind Lectures in Archaeology, delivered in 1876 and 1879 by ARTHUR MITCHELL, M.D. LL.D., &c., Secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.
Edinburgh: David Douglas, and all Booksellers.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE. — LECTURES delivered at the ROYAL INSTITUTION By Rev A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Deputy-Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford, Author of "An Assyrian Grammar," "The Principles of Comparative Philology," &c. demy 8vo. cloth, 4s.
"Those who would know more of the libraries of Babylonia and their wonderful contents must refer to Mr. Sayce's book in which most of what is known of them at present is summed up."—Times.
London: S. Bagster & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row.

Just published, price 6d., by post, 7d.
PRACTICAL HINTS on the PRESERVATION of PAPERS.
By N. STEVENSON, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and Licentiate in Dental Surgery.
London: J. & A. Churchill, New Burlington-street.

Just published, in 2 vols. royal 8vo. full-bound cloth, with elaborate heraldic boards, price 15s.

THE HISTORICAL ATLAS.
Vol. I. ATLAS and INDEX.
Vol. II. NOTES to ACCOMPANY ATLAS and ANALYTICAL INDEX, 140 pages.

LIST OF MAPS.

- | | |
|--|---|
| Map 1. England (Britannia) under the Romans. | Map 21. World showing Discontinuity from XV to XVI Century. |
| 2. Scotland under the Romans. | 22. England (Brunswick Period). |
| 3. Gaul (Roman Period). | 23. Europe from 1713 to 1800, illustrating the Wars of the French Revolution, and Wars of Napoleon. |
| 4. England (Norman Period). | 24. Scotland (Brunswick Period). |
| 5. Scotland (Norman Period). | 25. North America, illustrating the Conquest of Canada and the War of Independence. |
| 6. France, North Part (Norman Period). | 26. Europe (Central), at the height of Napoleon's power, 1812. |
| 7. Ireland (Tudor Period). | 27. Indian Empire from its foundation in 1757 to 1850. |
| 8. England and Part of Scotland (Norman and Plantagenet Period). | 28. Part of Russia, to illustrate the Crimean War and the Operations in the Baltic. |
| 9. Europe during the time of the Crusades. | 29. Central Europe, illustrating late Continental Wars, 1640-71, including Augustus (Change of France). |
| 10. France (Norman to Tudor Period), illustrating the French and English Wars. | 30. World showing British Possessions and Dependencies. |
| 11. England and Part of Scotland (York and Lancaster Period). | 31. Turkey in Europe, Cyprus, &c. (1478). |
| 12. England (Tudor Period). | 32. Europe in 1678. |
| 13. Europe during the time of the Reformation. | Index to Geographical Names. |
| 14. Scotland (Tudor Period). | |
| 15. England (Stuart Period). | |
| 16. Scotland (Stuart Period). | |
| 17. Ireland, Stuart and Brunswick. | |
| 18. Europe 1800 to 1714, including 21st Century War. | |

W & A. K. Johnston, Edinburgh; and 6, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO. BANKERS, 39 and 40, MARK LANE, LONDON. (Established 1853.)
CLEARING BANKERS—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.
DEPOSITS of 10s. and upwards received and Receipts issued—

On demand	3s per cent. per annum.
Three Days' Notice	4 " "
14 Days Notice	4 " "
30 Days Notice	5 " "
3 Months' Notice	6 " "

As Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit Twelve complete Months.
Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurance effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. HEDDERFIELD, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,

75 PAUL MALL.
FOR LIVES ONLY ESTABLISHED 1807.
Accumulated Funds £5,043,543
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than .. £1,500,000
Reports, Prospectives, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.
GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.
And may be Provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
Right Hon. Lord KILMAIRN, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.
Sums allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.
A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London.
WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.

Thames-side-street, E.C. Charing Cross, E.W.
Old-lane-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1710.
Name and Purview Insurance effected.
Sum Insured in 1879, £200,000,000.
FRANCIS R. REITON, Secretary.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.

205, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUES WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

INEXPENSIVE BOOKCASES, Oak or Mahogany, with movable shelves, 34 in. deep. Bound Leather under Glass, 12 in. 6d. to 5s. Forty Bookcases, Thirty Library Tables, in Stock in select form. Price Lists, post free.—EDUC. SMITH & Co., 30 and 32, Tottenham Court-road, and 1, Chancery-street, W.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH YOUR HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT AN MODERN'S FINEST SYSTEM.

The Original, Best, and most Liberal, Cash Prices.

No extra charge for time given.
Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F. MORRIS, 205, 206, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 21, New-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MORRIS begs to announce that the whole of the theoborne Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 6s. 6d. to 30 Guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from 6s. 6d. to 45 Guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from 12s. 6d. to 40 Guineas.
And all other Goods in great variety.

F. MORRIS, 205, 206, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 21, New-street, W.C. Established 1862.

A POLLINARIUS WATER.

"Laurel de la Pollinaria."—Hercules, Book IV. Cde 2.
GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.
ANNUAL SALE, 5,000,000.

APOLLINARIUS COMPANY, Limited, 19, Regent-street, London, E.W.

LOTS 110 and 111. — LOT 110, very soft GLD FAIR SHERRY at 30s., and LOT 111, very soft OLD OROSO SOLERA, pale gold, at 30s. per cask. — SHERRIES of the old style malted by age, very soft, and entirely free from the bitterness which has been so common to the consumption of Sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realization and are offered to the Public while on the special Lot List, at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction.—The LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION, Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adelphi, W.C. (removed from 446, Strand).

FIFTY PER CENT. LESS FUEL BURNT, and PRESERVATION and ECONOMY in 'COOKERY.'

PATENT TREASURE COOKING RANGE.

May be placed anywhere. Cannot get out of order.
Illustrated Price Books post free.
T. J. CONSTANTINE, 6, Fleet-street, E.C.
N.B.—The cheapest Coal most salable.

FIFTY PER CENT. LESS FUEL BURNT.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.

THEIR THREE MINUTE ADVANTAGE—
Are not inflammable.
Are non-toxic.
Are non-corrosive.
Without Phosphorus.
Are perfectly harmless.
To the Operators employed.
Are very DAMP PROOF.
LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

M. R. G. H. JONES, SURGEON-DENTIST,

21, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON.
(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.
Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of the Pure Magnesia of the Dinneford Works, as the best for the cure of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-ACHE, COLIC, and INDIGESTION; and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

"SANITAS" and DISINFECTION.—The Pine Forest at Home.—The SANITAS PREPARATIONS are in use in more than 300 Hospitals, Dispensaries, and Non-profitable institutions, and are the best for the cure of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-ACHE, COLIC, and INDIGESTION; and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

Of Universal necessity as the most perfect Purifier and Disinfectant.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London.

Now ready, price 6s.

THE GENERAL INDEX

TO THE

FIFTH SERIES

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII. 1874 to 1879.

(TWO VOLS. IN EACH YEAR.)

Mr. THOMs has kindly contributed the following Preface:—

"If there be any truth in the old proverb, 'Practice makes perfect,' this ought to be a capital Preface, inasmuch as it is the Fifth to an Index of a twelve-volume Series of dear old NOTES AND QUERIES which I have been called upon to write.

"The first three it was my duty to prepare, as I was responsible for the several collections of literary material to which they were the keys. I was urged to undertake the Fourth because to a certain extent the various articles to which it referred had been garnered under my superintendence. But now that I have neither the responsibility nor the credit for the store of varied, useful, and amusing information here duly sorted and labelled ready for use, to be compelled by the importunity, not to say tyranny, of my successor to repeat an old story, and so expose myself to the risk of being taunted by some captious critic with the profanity of Jack Falstaff, and told 'Oh, thou hast damnable iteration!' is a little hard upon an Editor who has 'retired from business.'

"I must, however, run the risk, inasmuch as by so doing I shall put myself in a position to make an acknowledgment which I ought to have made long since. My distinguished and warm-hearted friend Lord Brougham (who, I may here say, had on more than one occasion furnished me with some interesting Replies), speaking to me of the great value and utility of this Journal, was pleased to add that 'that value and utility were increased tenfold by its capital Indexes.' Lord Brougham was right; and if the critic in the Saturday Review who declared of 'that little farrago of learning, oddities, absurdities, and shrewdnesses, NOTES AND QUERIES,' that it was perhaps the only weekly newspaper that would be 'consulted three hundred years hence,' should also prove to be right, I do not hesitate to declare my belief that these Indexes will have greatly contributed to that success.

"What a pleasant retribution it is for one who has for years been so mercilessly quizzed and jeered for his exposure of pretended Centenarians to think that he should be credited with the merit of having called into existence a something that shall be continuing its useful existence some three centuries hence!

"But let that pass. I have on more than one occasion expressed my sense of how much these Indexes owed to the care, intelligence, and experience of their original compiler, the late Mr. James Yeowell, as these now owe to his successor in this important department. I have not, however, in any of these Prefaces acknowledged as I ought to have done that their existence is due to the suggestion of another highly esteemed old friend, one of the earliest contributors to 'N. & Q.,' Mr. William Bernard Mac Cabe, the learned author of 'A Catholic History of England.' It was he who, when some few volumes had appeared, urged upon me the advantage of taking stock of the information recorded in them by the publication of a General Index, and the advisability of doing so at stated intervals. The suggestion was one so full of common sense that I did not hesitate to adopt it. I am pleased to avail myself of the opportunity which is thus afforded me of doing justice to my old friend. Readers who share my regret at not seeing his name so frequently as they were wont in these pages may feel assured that it is from no diminished attachment to NOTES AND QUERIES, but from the fact that he is, like the original Editor, conscious of increasing years, but, unlike him, careful not to trespass too much on the good nature of the Public."

P O R T U G A L.

PORTUGUESE LIGHT WINES.

E L R E I.

ROYAL BUCELLAS HOCK.

A natural Portuguese white wine without Brandy is made from Rhine Vines transplanted into Portugal.

It is largely consumed in Portugal, makes an agreeable and wholesome summer drink, combining particularly well with all aerated waters, making a delicious cup without the addition of liqueurs.

Bucellas Hock maintains its character in all climates, is a cheap wine, and can be obtained from Wine Merchants and dealers throughout the Kingdom.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1880.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

PRINTING.—JOHN BALE & SONS, Printers
the London Review, the Birmingham Review and other Periodicals, are prepared to undertake the printing of MANUSCRIPTS in English or French.
 All work thoroughly done at the most reasonable rates. Estimates free—General Printing Office, 67-69, Great Titchfield-street, Oak street, London.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—SPECIAL LECTURES.—THE WINTER COURSE OF SPECIAL LECTURES for the SESSION 1925-26 will be delivered by the following Gentlemen:

William Spottiswoode, Esq., M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., President of the Royal Society—Polarized Light
Dr Francis Herlihy—Musical Criticism
William Hastings Esq., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.—The Celtic Language
Especially a major contribution to the University Question.
Dr B.W. Richardson, F.R.S.—Biology and Farming
Dr J. McManus Esq., M.A., F.R.S., LL.D.—Justly Fine
Professor Leone Levi, F.R.S.—Change for a Sovereign.

The Lectures will be delivered on the THIRD THURSDAY EVENING of each month, from October to March, commencing at a quarter of eight.

Admission to the Course, Half-a-Guinea. Necessary Members of Students actually in attendance.

The proceeds will be devoted to the Building Fund. Further particulars may be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London.

The School provides for the daughters of Confederate and thoroughbred students at a nominal cost. Girls are received from the age of seven and upwards. The Head Mistress is a former American and is well known and respected. The School and boarding houses are in a healthy position to the south with Gymnasium and a verandah attached.

The next term will begin on the 1st of October.

A SCHOLARSHIP of £50 yearly for two years to be held either at Olin College, or in studying for a degree at the University of London will be awarded on the results of the School Examination in July 1915.

For further information apply to the Misses, Mrs. Mansfield, at 24

OXFORD.—The whole of the valuable Collection of Original Sketches, Drawings, Prints, Books, Manuscripts, Oil Paintings, a few Lots of Household Furniture, and other effects,

TO BE SOLD BY AUCTION, by Messrs. GALPIN & SON at the Chancery Assembly Room, on WEDNESDAY, August 11, commencing punctually at 11 o'clock in the morning and 6 o'clock in the evening, by order of the Administratrix of the late HENRY SANDERS (otherwise William John Sanderson).

The Lots will be on view the afternoon previous to and morning of the Sale, and Catalogues and further particulars may be obtained of the Auctioneers, 20, New Inn Hall-street, Oxford.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE, No. 250, for AUGUST, price 1s.

1. HE THAT WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY By Miss. Olyphant. Chaps 35-36.
2. ANNIE KERRY By Stanley Lane-Poole.
3. AT SEA 1880. By Sir Francis M. Doyle, Bart.
4. JOURNALIST'S MALGRE LUI
5. THE IRONCLAD and GUN of the FUTURE. By General W. H. Huxley.
6. A SPECIAL AMBIE under LOUIS XIV. By the Rev. Henry Leach.
7. TOM TAYLOR: in Memoriam. By Thomas Hughes.
8. LANDMAKERS in the NATIONAL GALLERY By W. G. Lacey.
9. GATNA. By Frederick Pollock.

Published Monthly, price 1s. in crown 4to. tastefully printed on hand-made paper, with rough edges, and occasionally illustrated. No. VIII. is now ready.

THE ANTIQUARY a Magazine devoted to the Study of the Past.

Edited by EDWARD WALFORD, M.A.

Contents of the AUGUST Number.

- EARLY ARMY ACCOUNTS. By Robert Hall.
- OLD GLASGOW (With Illustrations.)
- A VIKING SHIP
- THE ORTHOGRAPHY of BEN JONSON'S NAME. By A. Nicholson, M.D.
- THE POLITICNESS of OUR FOREFATHERS. By Walter Hamilton, F.R.S.E.
- BOOKS CURIOUS and RARE. By Corneille Walford, F.I.A.
- THE SHAKESPEARE DEBATE-MARK. By Lord Ronald Gower. (With Illustrations.)
- REVIEWS.—Monks of O. Brevenger—Our Ancient Monuments and the Land around them—Lightning Conductors—The Myseries of all Nations.—History of a Tour in Sweden, Norway, and Iceland in 1871—Delling in Days gone by.
- REVIEWING an ANTIQUARIAN MAGAZINE.
- THE ANTIQUARY'S NOTE-BOOK.
- ANTIQUARIAN NEWS—CORRESPONDENCE.—ANTIQUARY EXCHANGE COLUMN, &c.

London: Elliot Stock, 21, Paternoster-row.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, for AUGUST, 1880, price 2s. 6d.

AS ENGLISHMAN'S PROTEST. By His Eminence Cardinal Manning.

PLEASANT PROPRIETORS at HOME. By J. H. Tuke.

FICTION—FAIR and FOUL. II. By John Ruskin.

THE CREED of the EARLY CHRISTIANS. By the Very Rev. the ICELAND. By Sir David Wedderburn, Bart., M.P.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT in the COLONIES. By Arthur

MILN.

OUR NATIONAL ART COLLECTIONS and PROVINCIAL ART

MUSEUMS concluded. By J. C. Robinson.

THE FUTURE of CHINA. By D. C. Boulger.

STATE AID and CONTROL in INDUSTRIAL ASSURANCE. By H.

Seymour Trevelyan, C.B.

POLITICAL OPTIMISM: a Dialogue. By H. D. Traill.

THE LANDOWNERS' PANIC. By Justin McCarthy, M.P.

RECENT LITERATURE. (Compiled by W. Mark W. Oll, Alfred

Charles, H. G. Newhall, George M. Matheson, William Morris,

James Fyfe, G. J. Monahan, F. W. Rindler, Lionel Trenchard, and

E. D. J. Wilson.)

C. Rogers Peck & Co. London.

NOTES AND QUERIES. (SIXTH SERIES.)

This Day's Number contains—

NOTES.—The Library of Christ's Hospital—Landing Venues on Portsmouth Travelling. Rev. J. M. Neale—Original Arms—To Archæologi-cal Excursions—Inscriptions on a Tomb St. Mary's, Aylesbury—St.

Marlin's—St. Nicholas—Errors of Authors—Robert

Baker.

QUERIES.—Early Giltways—Bishop Gauden—Flange of London 1880—

An Eccentric Bishop—John Churchill, Davids—The Rabbinical

Word—Typewriter—Phonetic Place Names—"Bordolone"—

"Belle Children"—T. Parker, Patrick Family—Bede's North-

umbrian Version of St. John's Gospel—Episcopal Heraldry—Pews in Churches—Rents—Rothwell Church—Gammer Gurton's Story

Books—"Might and Main"—Parliament—"Collywest"—

Authors of Quotations Wanted.

REPLIES.—The Bampton Pagnon Bampton in Cornwall—"Life of Oliver Cromwell"—William Wilberforce—John

Lockyer—A Coffee-house in the Strand—"The Baby in the Wood"

—Rock Flange—"Rimosa-fardings"—Dewent—"The Lam of Nicholson Hill"—Five-Shilling Piece of Oliver Cromwell—The

Grahams of Netherby &c.—"He comes too near," &c.—Whitmore—Jones—Christ's Hospital—Fletcher Family—The Oak and the Ash—Modern Church Architecture—"Maiden"—

H. Epworth—C. D. Golden—Christmas as a Christian Name—Loathe to departe—G. Dunch, M.P.—Benhall Poet—Arm's Arm—Early

Book Auctions—Bristol—Ratland—Frischett Family—East of Arms:

Sir W. Harper—"Sam Jones' Last Words—yare, Yare—yare, The Land or the Lead—"Modern vivand"—Tennyson's "In Memoriam"

—Bret Chambers—Hold up Oil—Louis XIV. &c.—Bulwer Family—

"Mistake me"—Lead kindly Light—"Anthony," &c.—Dow-per's Mistake about Birds—Anthony Wanted.

NOTES ON BOOKS.—Joseph Octave Delapierre. In Memoriam—

Accompanying Four Centuries of English Letters—Rodington's "Chamber of Home Office Papers (Rolls Series), &c.

Notices to Correspondents, &c.

Published by John Francis, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

New ready, price 6d.; by post, 1d. N° 9, for AUGUST, of the

THIRD EDITION of

THE COVENT GARDEN MAGAZINE.

Conducted by W. H. C. NATION.

1. THE COVENT GARDEN MAGAZINE.

2. GOLDEN ORAIN.

3. A WOLF in SHEEP'S CLOTHING. A Story.

4. THE CLERICAL MARY.

5. THE REFORM of MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

6. THE RALLY REVEREND.

7. THE WISDOM of WRATHFUL PROPHETS.

8. WASTE in the CHURCH.

9. COUNTERFEIT COIN A Story.

10. FUNERAL and MOURNING REFORM.

11. GARDENING in DIFFERENT PARTIES.

Office: 44a, Chancery-lane, Strand, London.

THE LEPOLD MEMORIAL.—See the

BUILDER (4d.; by post, 6d.) for View, also Views of Contents and a Museum—New Buildings at Nice, and Theatre. This—Sir John

Sand's Museum—The Exposition Universelle—The Bridge Question—A

Memorial—Exhibition, Turin—Bavaria Lighting—Public Works

Abroad, &c.—45, Catherine-street, and all Newspapers.

THE DRESDEN GALLERY.—The Weekly Publication of a Series of elaborate Reproductions, on a large scale, of the celebrated Paintings in the Dresden Gallery was commenced in the JEREMY of Saturday, July 2nd, when the Engraving, of the Adoration of the Kings and the Marriage of Cana, by Paul Veronese, were given. Each measures 15 in. by 12 in. Price 4d. or by post 6d.

Publishing Office, 173, Strand, London, W.C.; and of all Newspapers.

Just published, price 2s.

GRACE DARLING: her True Story. From

Unpublished Papers in possession of her Family. With Portrait.

London: Hamilton, Adams & Co. Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

Just ready, with Illustrations, price 3s. 6d. post free,

NOTES ON SKETCHING TOURS.

By AN ARCHITECT.

Published at the Office of the British Review, London and Westminster; and by H. T. Baskford, 52, High Holborn, London. To be had of all

Booksellers.

Just published, in 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, price 10s. 6d.

Library Edition (being the Ninth), with a Postscript.

THE STUDY of SOCIOLOGY. By HERBERT

SPENCER.

Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 21, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just published, 8vo. cloth, price 10s. 6d.

EWALD'S (Dr. H.) COMMENTARY on the PROPHETS of the OLD TESTAMENT. Translated by the Rev.

J. P. BURNES, D.D., RECTOR, VERBA, &c.—IN VI-translation. Being the twenty-first volume of the Theological Translation Fund Library. 8 vols. 8vo. for 2s. Prospectus on application.

Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 21, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

WORK in THE PALL LANGUAGE.

8vo. pp. 8vo. 12s.

THE MILINDA PANHO, being Dialogues between King Milinda and the Buddhist Sage Nagasena. The Pall

Text, Edited by Dr. V. TRENCNER, of Copenhagen.

8vo. cloth, 12s.

THE DIPAVAMSA: a Buddhist Historical

Record in the Pali Language. Edited, with an English Translation, by Dr. H. OLDENBERG.

The "Dipavamsa" is the most ancient historical work of the Ceylonese;

it contains an account of the ecclesiastical history of the Buddhist

Church of the conversion of the Ceylonese to the Buddhist Faith, and of the ancient history of Ceylon.

8vo. price 4s.

PALI MISCELLANY. By Dr. V. TRENCNER.

Part I. 8vo.

The introductory portion of the "Milinda Panho," an English Translation and Notes.

8vo. cloth, price 21s. each.

THE VINAYA-PITAKAM, one of the Principal

Buddhist Holy Scriptures in the Pali Language. Edited by Dr. H.

OLDENBERG. In 5 vols. Vol. I. THE SAMMAVAGGA, with an introduction. Vol. II. THE CULLAVAGGA. 8vo. Published with the assistance of the Royal Academy of Berlin, and of the Secretary for India in London.

This work will consist of five volumes, containing the separate works,

"Mahavagga," "Cullavagga," "Pavattiya," "Suttavagga," and "Parivatta."

The Pall Text is printed in English letters, with a selection of various Readings.

Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 21, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.—

Advertisements for the Fortnightly Review should be sent to

Adams & Francis, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

ALL the YEAR ROUND.—Conducted by Charles

DICKENS.—Advertisements for All the Year Round should be sent to Messrs. ADAMS & FRANCIS, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

IN AND OUT OF LONDON.

The New Alphabetical Railway Guide (price 4d.) for Travellers.

On the First of every Month.

THE LONDON and PROVINCIAL BRADSHAW.

by Alphabetical and Tabular Arrangement.—Advertisements should be sent to

Adams & Francis, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

ADAMS & FRANCIS insert ADVERTISEMENTS

in all Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals.

Terms for transacting business, and List of London Papers, can be had on application to

Adams & Francis, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 55, Fleet-street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842, in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate Terms from the Ordinary Circulating Libraries.

From its commencement the original purpose of the Library has been kept steadily in view. The best Books of every shade of opinion, on all subjects of general interest, have been taken in large numbers—Hundreds, and in some instances Thousands, of Copies of the leading Works of every Season having been placed in Circulation.

Great care has always been taken in the selection of Books to study the wishes of Subscribers, and to make the Library not only "Select," but comprehensive.

More than One Million Volumes have been added since 1874.

Additional Copies of all the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all Forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear.

First-Class Subscription, One Guinea per annum,

COMMENCING AT ANY DATE.

Book Societies and Literary Institutions Supplied on Liberal Terms.

 Revised Lists of Works recently added, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded post free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET.

CITY OFFICE:—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST OF NEW WORKS.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.
THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By
MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES.
With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER
COLLINS. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 3s.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBBON.
A TRIP TO MANITOBA. By Mary
FITZ-GIBBON. In 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.
FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND. By
Miss DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

BY DR. BOYCE.
NIGH UNTO THE END; or, a Passage
In Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Already the Eastern sky is aglow with the reddening rays of its advent glory, and by all the signs of which Himself hath spoken, 'the Master cometh.'"
From a Charge by the late Bishop of Winchester.

NEW EDITIONS, NOW READY.

POPULAR EDITION.
In crown 8vo. price 6s. with an Illustration.
PROBATION. By the Author of
'The First Violin.'

POPULAR EDITION.
At all Booksellers, in crown 8vo. price 6s.
"CHERRY RIPE!" By the Author of 'Comin' Thro' the Rye.'

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY MISS BROUGHTON.
SECOND THOUGHTS. By Rhoda
BROUGHTON, Author of 'Nancy,' 'Good-bye, Sweetheart,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'OUT ADRIPT.'
PIOUS FRAUDS. By Albany de
FONBLANQUE, Author of 'Out Adrift,' 'A Tangled
Skein,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.
THE VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha
THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Miss Thomas's art as a story-teller is unmistakable, and her grasp of character deeper and more complete than we find in many novels of more ambitious pretensions."
Full Mill Gazette.

"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story.
In studies of character her book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel writing."
Athenæum.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.
FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret
MAJENDIE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY GRIZEL.'
IN HER MAJESTY'S KEEPING.
By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD. Author of 'My
Lords of Stratton,' 'Lady Grizel,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

AUTHORIZED ENGLISH TRANSLATION
MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE
LIFE (1787-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMMONS. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.
SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 3 vols.
Crown 8vo. 21s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are described in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it embodies, will ensure it a widespread popularity. Many of the papers possess an engaging and popular interest, while all of them may be read with pleasure and profit."—Examiner.

"There are few who will not bear testimony to the fascination of these family legends. Nearly fifty stories of English, Scottish, and Irish families are narrated in these interesting volumes."—Daily Telegraph.

THE VILLAGE OF PALACES; or,
CHRONICLES OF CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE.
2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

"This work has considerable value as a record of a most interesting portion of London. It may be read with pleasure and profit."—Post.

"Mr. L'Estrange tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."—Spectator.

CHEAP EDITION OF SIR GIBBIE.
By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. Price 6s. bound.

THE NEW NOVELS.
The TENTH EARL. By John Berwick HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Flavia,' &c. 3 vols.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirks.
3 vols.

FORESTALLED. By M.
BERTHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Elly,' 'Bridges,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols. 21s.

"'Forestalled' is a very remarkable novel. Miss Bertham-Edwards has produced a tale of powerful interest, which successfully rivets the attention from the beginning to the end."—Sunday Times.

"This work will be read with the greatest delight, being, as regards plot, originality, and vigorous language, by far one of the best novels of the day."—Court Journal.

WOOLERS AND WINNERS. By Mrs.
G. LINNÆUS BARKS, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.

"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome novel. The story is interesting and well told."—John Bull.

"'Woolers and Winners' will add to Mrs. Barks's literary fame. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting."—Court Journal.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.
A very attractive and clever story, which, if it be a first effort in fiction, is unusually successful. It is the work of a refined mind, and is carried out with considerable skill."—Athenæum.

"One of the most clever and original works of fiction of the year.
Its freshness and unconventionalism are very attractive."—John Bull.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DESART, Author of 'Kilverdale,' &c. 3 vols.

"A bright, lively story, full of interest and action. The reader will find ample amusement throughout the volume."—Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.
MOLLEWORTH, Author of 'Hathorcourt Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.

"One of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years. It is sure to be widely read, and no one will lay it down unaltered."—Post.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia
B. EDWARDS, Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c. 3 vols.
(Not ready.)

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.
Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 4s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT, M.P., HUNT, LEACH, POTTY, POSTER, TENNIS, SANDY, E. HUGHES, HAMPOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam. Dick's Nature and Human Nature. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

John Halliwell, Gentleman.
The Gravel and the Cross. By Elton Warburton.

Katharine. By Miss Kavanagh.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of
'John Halliwell.'

Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Sam. Dick's A Wise Slave.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.

A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Leith Hunt's Old Court Refurb.
Margaret and her Maidens.
Sam. Dick's A Good Judge.

Jurien. By Elton Warburton.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance.
The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs.
Oliphant.

The Englishwoman in Italy.
Nothin' New. By the Author of
'John Halliwell.'

Pyre's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.
The Valley of a Hundred Fords.
Julia's Romance of the Forum.

Adin. By Miss Kavanagh.
Stuart's True Life. By the Author
of 'John Halliwell.'

Grandmother's Moeey.
J. G. Macdonald's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Leo Mistralism. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Sam. Dick's American Museum.

Barbara's History. By Amelia
B. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
No Church.
Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Alce. By George Mac
Donald, LL.D.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
A Noble Life. By the Author of
'John Halliwell.'

Dixon's New America.
Robert Falconer. By George Mac
Donald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Annals of an Eventful Life. By
O. W. Everett, D.D.

David Brewster. By George Mac
Donald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of
'John Halliwell.'

Manuel. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

Sam. Dick's Americans at Rome.
The United World. By the Author of 'John Halliwell.'

A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
My Little Lady. By B. Frances Pyper.

Prince Jailer. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Young.

Sir Clibbe. By George Mac
Donald, LL.D.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

In crown 8vo. price 8s.
A LATIN GRAMMAR for SCHOOLS.
By H. J. ROBY, M.A., Author of 'A Grammar of the Latin Language from Plautus to Suetonius.' [Immediately.]

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS.
Edited by JOHN MORLEY.

BYRON. By Professor NICHOL. Crown
8vo. 2s. 6d. [Next week.]

"ART AT HOME SERIES."—NEW VOLUME.
The MINOR ARTS—Porcelain Paint-

ING, WOOD CARVING, STENCILLING, MODEL-
LING, MOSAIC WORK, &c. By CHARLES G.
LELAND. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 12s. 6d. [Next week.]

NEW NOVEL, BY WILLIAM BLACK, AUTHOR OF
'MACLEOD OF DARE,' 'MADCAP VIOLET,' &c.

WHITE WINGS: a Yachting
Romance. 3 vols. crown 8vo. [August 11.]

THEOCRITUS, BION, and
MOSCHUS. Done into English, with an Essay on Theocritus and his Age. By ANDREW LANG, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 6s.

"We may at once pronounce this volume to be as near as possible to perfection, whether it is regarded as a scholarly translation or a masterpiece of graceful English translation.....
One of the most elegant and scholarly translations which it has been our fortune to meet with."—Saturday Review.

HORACE.—SATIRES and
EPISTLES. Selected and Edited by the Rev. W. J. F. Y.
BAKER, M.A., Assistant-Master at Marlborough College. 18mo. 1s. 6d.—MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

MARTIAL.—SELECT EPIGRAMS.
Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., Head
Master of St. Peter's School, York. Fcap. 8vo. 6s.—
MACMILLAN'S "CLASSICAL SERIES."

ART and ARCHÆOLOGY, ESSAYS on. By C. T. NEWTON, C.B. D.O.L., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities at the British Museum. 8vo.
12s. 6d.

"Nothing can be more welcome to the student of classical archaeology than this collection of papers from various sources, in which Mr. Newton has recorded his valuable work and his long experience..... The volume before us
..... though not a systematic handbook of archæology, touches on almost all the recent discoveries of importance, and all the main branches of the science."—Academy.

HULSEAN LECTURES, 1845-46.
By R. O. TRENCH, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. Fifth Edition, Revised, 8vo. price 7s. 6d.

MEMORIALS of HARROW
SUNDAYS: Sermons preached in the Chapel of Harrow School. By C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D., Dean of Llandaff, and Master of the Temple. New Edition, crown 8vo.
10s. 6d.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S WORKS.
Collected Edition, in Monthly Volumes. Crown 8vo. 6s.
each.

VOL. XIX.—SCIENTIFIC LECTURES and ESSAYS. [Next week.]

CHARLOTTE M. YONGE'S
NOVELS and TALES. New Illustrated Edition, in 16 Monthly Volumes. Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

VOL. XIV.—The DOVE in the EAGLE'S
NEST. Illustrated by W. J. Hennesey. [Next week.]

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING
NOVELS.
FROM GENERATION to GENERA-

TION. By Lady AUGUSTA NOEL. Crown 8vo.
6s.

MACMILLAN & Co. London.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1880.

CONTENTS.

MONTAGUE'S REMINISCENCES OF SOUTHERN AFRICA	165
MRS STOKES'S COLLECTION OF INDIAN FAIRY TALES	166
GRIFFIN'S HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE, VOLS. III AND IV	167
CAIRD'S INTRODUCTION TO THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION	170
BELLEVUE ON THE RACES OF AFGHANISTAN	171
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	173
PHYSIOLOGICAL BOOKS	173
BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG	174
LAW BOOKS	174
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	175
BRITISH MUSEUM READING ROOM; E. A. FOR; AN ITALIAN GHOST STORY; SAMUEL JOHNSON'S JOURNAL	175-177
LIBRARY GOSNIP	177
SCIENCE—LIBRARY TABLE; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; THE SITE OF GATH; SALE; MEETINGS; GOSNIP	178-180
FINE ARTS—KALINS-JACKSON ON OUR ANCIENT MONUMENTS; LIBRARY TABLE; THE ROYAL ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE, ST. HUGH OF LINCOLN, PROPOSED SOCIETY OF PAINTERS-EN-HERBE; GOSNIP	180-185
MUSIC—THE WEEK; NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS; RELIGIOUS VALUES IN THE 'SPECTATOR'; GOSNIP	185-186
DRAMA—THE WEEK; GOSNIP	187-188

LITERATURE

Campaigning in South Africa: Reminiscences of an Officer in 1879. By Capt. W. E. Montague, 24th Regiment. (Blackwood & Sons.)

ALTHOUGH Capt. Montague was not present at any important engagement in the Zulu war, he yet saw a considerable amount of service in South Africa. At first stationed at Fort Bengough, and then at Conference Hill, he subsequently took part in Lord Chelmsford's advance into Zululand. After the battle of Ulundi he was employed in completing the subjugation of the country, and also in the operations against the redoubtable northern chief Manyonyoba. He therefore enjoyed favourable opportunities of describing the experiences of the British army in Natal, the Transvaal, and Zululand. The result is a pleasantly vivacious narrative, in which sketches of the ordinary incidents of camp life and the march are varied by descriptions of Zulu scenery, and notes of conversations with Zulus and others. Occasionally Capt. Montague introduces the reader to the sterner episodes of war; and he has also much to say concerning the vagaries of "General Funk," whose influence was at one time far too prevalent among both the colonists and the younger soldiers. It appears that at Durban a story was credited to the effect that a Zulu who had been caught lurking near the lighthouse admitted that Cetwayo had sent him there for the purpose of extinguishing the light, and thus causing the English troopships to run ashore. It was not enough that a score of tales equally absurd were disproved. Every new canard was eagerly swallowed, and made a pretext for painting the Zulu king in the blackest colours. Capt. Montague describes a number of equally ignoble "scarees" which befell the English troops. They constantly lent too ready an ear to the stories of the Dutch Boers that a Zulu "impi" was either hovering on their right or left flank, or prepared to spring upon them from an ambushade. Their idea of an "impi" was of an army always either on the march or in a position to make an attack, whereas the Zulus after every battle invariably returned to their own homes, and the king himself had no power to compel them to serve again in the field until a definite interval had elapsed. Moreover, their commissariat arrangements do not admit of their remaining absent from their homes for a longer period than three or four days. These facts ought to have been known to the troops, for they are all set forth in the pamphlet which Lord Chelmsford issued for their information. Capt. Montague's account of a scare which took place on the night that Lieut. Frith, of the 17th Lancers, was buried is suggestive. Late in the evening three shots, being the signal that a Zulu attack had begun, were fired. The whole camp was at once in commotion, and this is what ensued:—

"At that moment came a volley far down the hill where a picket had been posted, its rattle clear and distinct in the night air. A staff officer galloped past, and in an instant the rear face is lit up with fire, taken up all along the line of waggons. Crash go the volleys everywhere, belching out flame and smoke, till the front is one thick white cloud, pierced only by the sharp and vivid flashes from the muzzles. 'Whirr!' comes a bullet overhead. 'Whirr!' follows another after. Crash goes a volley close by, and the face in our front is once more framed with fire. Then the big guns in the corner give out an answer, booming their bass notes high above the rest. The bullets are flying merrily overhead; and the soldiers, young lads half of them, with a wholesome dread of the Zulus in their poor little hearts, and funk plainly written on their faces, crowd under the waggons for safety, quickly to be pulled out again by their officers in every style of undress, many with their red nightcaps still on. Out come the skulkers in droves, only to vanish again round the next waggon. The fun grows furious. Bullets sing and whiz past in flights. The smoke is stifling, and hides everything. Half-a-dozen horses, maddened by the din, are rushing about. In the narrow pathway left round the waggons it is impossible to move freely, so crowded up is it with oxen and horses. Native soldiers squat in masses in the middle, and continually let off their guns in the air, keeping the batta firmly on the ground. Conductors blaze away into the nearest waggon-tilt; tents lie flat, their ropes still tied to the pegs, sure traps for the unwary. Chaos is everywhere, even in the waggons, where the men lie firing incessantly, and paying but scant attention to the orders shouted at them. Twenty minutes of this work and a bugle sounds the 'cease fire,' and the flashes die out and leave the larger dark and silent as the night itself. Then our general followed and gave his censure pretty freely on the wretched scare; and shame sat on many a face at its recollection. Not a Zulu had been seen—the picket who commenced the row firing at what he thought was some 'blacks,' but might have been a cloud."

We do not remember that Dr. Russell has borne stronger testimony than this to the want of nerve which characterized the younger soldiers engaged in the war.

Capt. Montague describes a visit he paid to the donga in which Prince Louis Napoleon was killed. He says that although it was originally supposed that forty to fifty Kaffirs took part in the attack, the number was eight. The authoritative statement recently published by Sir Evelyn Wood, however, shows that the Zulus numbered about forty, but that only seven or eight were actually concerned in killing the Prince. The first stab proved fatal; and an old woman whom the Zulus had left behind at the kraal near the donga boasted that it was her sons who had killed the "great Inkosi":—

"Lying on the floor of a hut was the Prince's shirt, stiff with blood, and pierced with assegaistabs. In the cattle-enclosure the natives were tapping the ground with assegais to find out where the grain was buried. An officer was sitting on the wall sketching. A broken gourd, a hearth-brush, the embers at which the Zulus cooked their last meal, and some parched mealies were lying about. It was hardly the place for the last of the Napoleons to die at; it was so mean, so poor, so abject in its dirt and poverty. As we marched away next morning the smoke of that hideous kraal went up to heaven with that of eight others round it, fired by the Basutos as their last act in that too memorable valley."

Capt. Montague states that when the Zulus saw our men in full retreat, after the Prince had been struck down, they loudly taunted them with cowardice. He admits that this statement does not appear in any other account, but he gives no authority for it; and it must be remarked that while, so long as he writes from personal observation, there is no reason to doubt his accuracy, yet when his information is derived from other sources, it cannot always be accepted with equal confidence. As a singular example of inexactitude we must refer to his version of the Disputed Boundary Question, which, it will be remembered, was the prime cause of the war. He states that in 1861 the Dutch gave up to Cetwayo two of his brothers, who had fled from his anger, and received in return a slice of Zululand east of the Blood River. After some years, Capt. Montague says, it suited Cetwayo to deny this agreement, "a lesson to those who are partial to treating savages as men and brothers." In 1870 Cetwayo offered this country to Natal. The colony refused to accept it, but sent out a Commission of Inquiry. The investigation thus set on foot, we are gravely told, "dragged along after the half-hearted way common to such measures," the Zulus taking advantage of the delay to steadily increase their demands:—

"Thus pushed into a corner, the Commission awarded to Cetwayo the Blood River as an extreme boundary westward, with the Pongola as his northern limit, ignoring entirely his claims upon a territory not his own but his neighbour's. The award not being to his liking—in which he had hoped, indeed, to find the English as dishonest as himself—he commenced a series of raids and hostile demonstrations, which in the end rendered the late war necessary."

This is an extraordinary jumble of inaccuracies. The Zulus have never ceased to deny that they ceded to the Boers the land in dispute. Capt. Montague is in error when he says that years elapsed before Cetwayo thought fit to repudiate his agreement. If he had referred to the official documents, he would have found that in 1861—the very year in which the cession was alleged to have been made—Panda, who was then king, and his son Cetwayo, addressed a joint message to the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, solemnly declaring that they had not parted with the land. Although the Zulus sent to Natal numerous messages complaining of the encroachments of the Boers on their territory, the inquiry, which Capt. Montague says "dragged along," did not take place till March, 1878, and then only occupied five weeks. The Commissioners made their report on June 20th in that year; and if he had taken the trouble to refer to that document, he would have found that it is absolutely fatal to the claims of the Boers. He makes the astonishing assertion that Cetewayo's dislike of the award led him to embark in "a series of raids and hostile demonstrations," whereas the award was not made known to him till December 11th, 1878—only a month before the war—when it, together with Sir B. Frere's ultimatum, was placed in the hands of the Zulu envoys at Tugela Drift. The Zulus, instead of then assuming the aggressive, as Capt. Montague alleges, remained absolutely quiescent until their country had been invaded by the British forces.

In describing the country north of the Pongola the author occupies ground little trodden by previous travellers. He went there in connexion with the operations against Manyonyoba and his followers, whom he describes as no better than "bands of robbers." We should like to know what the Zulus thought of their invaders, who lighted fires to smoke them out of their hiding-places, and used dynamite to blow up their caves. Capt. Montague concludes his work with a glowing description of this region, which for some years past has been a battle-ground between the two races. He shows that the country is as fertile as it is picturesque, and that it is especially valuable for its timber, which in other parts of South Africa is very scarce. There is much information on this subject in Capt. Montague's work, which, while it is interesting to the public, cannot fail to convey useful hints to future travellers.

Indian Fairy Tales. Collected and translated by Maive Stokes. (Ellis & Whita.)

THE fairy tales, or rather the folk-tales, of the world will soon require a library to themselves. Every year something new is given to us, and every country in Europe has been swept to gather these cobwebs out of the corners where old wives gossip and old men spin long yarns; and beyond Europe we have tales from the coral islands of the Pacific, from Africa, from Japan, from China, and from India. The 'Cabinet des Fées' extended to forty-one volumes, but a new 'Cabinet des Fées' would extend to many times that length. It is curious, however, how monotonous these stories become. Each country has its own variations, but the theme is constantly the same. Indeed, it is hardly too much to say that when a child knows some twenty fairy tales (we use the word, though fairies themselves are generally conspicuous by their absence), he virtually knows all fairy tales that have any historical or national interest. There are others, of course, which ingenious authors invent out of their own heads, but, however clever and amusing they may be, they are no more to be mistaken for the real fairy tale than the spirit which comes up on the turning of a table can compare with the ghost that haunts the corridor of some old castle. They are purely factitious affairs, and not even Madame de Girardin, or Henry Chorley, or our new Baron Brabourne could give them length of life. But the real fairy tales, without a knowledge of which no child's education is complete, are the versions of Perrault, with one or two more contained in the 'Child's Own Book,' to which we should add Grimm's German stories, a few from the 'Arabian Nights,' and a few more from Dasent's 'Tales from the Norse.' To go beyond this is not only unnecessary, but confusing. The same plots appear with different details and different scenery, and the outline is apt to get blurred and indistinct. A child cannot absorb more than a certain quantity of fairy literature, and it is well that he should have it in its simplest and most intelligible form. He should also have it in its least moralizing form. To turn the old stories into lectures for enforcing temperance and other moralities, or into allegories for decanting on solar myths, is surely monstrous. When poor Hood recalled "the fairy tales in school-time read," they were merely fairy tales which excited the imagination and were meant to teach nothing. And yet we do them an injustice, for they taught lessons none the less impressively because they never moralized, and so Cinderella was an example of humility rewarded, and Blue Beard of curiosity punished, and not a story among them but conveyed some meaning, some warning or encouragement.

This volume of 'Indian Fairy Tales' is of no little value, though for children it is not particularly well adapted. The best of the stories are practically known to them already, and in a better form. Then in these Indian stories the exaggerations are so monstrous that credulity becomes impossible, and the imagination is rather revolted than excited. As Mr. Ralston says in his able preface:—

"The stupendous transformations which now and then take place can reconcile themselves only to an Oriental imagination. However much the Occidental mind may attempt to 'make believe,' it cannot credit such a statement as that when the Bâi Princess died her eyes turned into two birds, her heart into 'a great tank,' and her body into 'a splendid palace and garden,' her arms and legs becoming 'the pillars that supported the verandah roof,' and her head 'the dome on the top of the palace'!"

That the Indian names are unfamiliar may not matter much; but when, in the first story of all, an English child is told that God went "in the form of a Fakir to see the great Indrásan Rájá," and then "took a pair of scales and weighed" him, we suspect that the sense of bewilderment will be considerable. Indeed, on more than one ground it may be questioned whether the translation of Khudá as "God" is happy.

However, as has been already said, children have fairy tales enough, and this book is serviceable in quite another way. These stories were told to Miss Stokes, then a little child—indeed, she is still quite a young girl—by three Indian servants at Calcutta. They were told in Hindústáni, translated, and then read back into Hindústáni, in order to ascertain from the narrators whether they were absolutely exact; and then Mr. Ralston has (as we have mentioned) written a very valuable introduction, and Mrs. Stokes has added many very learned and interesting notes. As a contribution to folk-lore, therefore, this book is of no inconsiderable importance.

The first thing that strikes one about these stories is that "fairies" are hardly ever mentioned; indeed, we believe they only appear in three stories out of the entire thirty. This is disappointing, as we should have been glad to trace more fully the connexion between the Peris (or Paris) of the East and our own fays. Mrs. Stokes, in one of her notes, seems to believe in their identity, but as the Indian fairy is generally (not always; 'The Princess who loved her Father' is an exception) as large as a human being, and has always wings, he would appear to have more resemblance to one of the genii of the 'Arabian Nights.' But whether this be so or not, this book throws little light upon the matter.

One or two of these stories are obviously the same, though the variations are considerable; and when Dunkni tells of 'Brave Hírálbásá,' and Múniyá of 'The Demon and the King's Son,' it is easy to see that it is an identical legend which they are repeating. The same seems also true of 'Phúlmatí Rání' and the 'Bél Princess.' With regard to these last two, Mr. Ralston says that their leading thought, that of a "substituted bride," has "not been made familiar by modern literature to cultured children." They relate "the sorrows of a maiden who is compelled to see an impostor seated in the place she was intended to fill, by the side of the princely husband whom she was meant to wed."

We certainly should have thought that Grimm's 'Goose-girl' was among the best known of stories, and these Indian versions seem to us very inferior in both simplicity and pathos.

'The Fan Prince' appears to have some affinity to 'Cupid and Psyche' and to 'Beauty and the Beast,' and is one of the best stories in the collection. But the best of all, perhaps, is 'The Monkey Prince,' which also has some relationship to 'Beauty and the Beast,' and still more to those numerous German and Norse stories where the younger brother or "Boots" breaks his birth's invidious bars, and arrives at every good fortune. 'The Pomegranate King' is one of those horrible tales of wicked stepmothers which have always been common, and of which, perhaps, the best known example is the German 'Juniper-tree'; but this 'Pomegranate King' has peculiar horrors of its own. The young girl who told it gave two different versions of it, and it is not quite easy to understand which is the genuine one, or how far in stories of this kind the narrator will occasionally invent details or add incidents of her own accord. For instance, in 'Prince Hírálbásá' we read that "the Rájá had had great condians made for the house."

Every now and then some very old friend under a new guise meets the reader in these pages. Here is an example:—

"Sachdíl put the jar on his head and he went on, with the Sepoy following. 'Now,' said Sachdíl, 'with these four pice [small coins] I will buy a hen, and I will sell the hen and her eggs, and with the money I get for them I will buy a goat; and then I will sell the goat and her milk and her hide and buy a cow, and I will sell her milk; and then I will marry a wife, and then I shall have some children, and they will say to me, "Father, will you have some rice?" and I shall say, "No, I won't have any rice,"' and as he said, "No, I won't have any rice," he shook his head, and down came the jar of ghee, and the jar was smashed and the ghee spilled. 'Oh, dear, what have you done!' cried the Sepoy. 'Why did you shake your head?'

'Because my children asked me to have some rice, and I did not want any, so I shook my head,' said Sachdli. 'Oh,' said the Sepoy, 'he is an utter idiot.'"

In the 'Bél Princess' we have the old incident—as old as Lot's wife at least—of a person looking back and being turned into stone. In the 'Arabian Nights' we have the same incident and better told.

The two characteristics which distinguish these Indian fairy tales from those of Northern Europe, which are most familiar to us, are firstly (as has been already said) their extravagance, and secondly their want of any sense of humour. In the stories that we in England know best the impossible is always so told as to appear possible. Here the impossible is constantly more than impossible—it is absurd. In the Teutonic and Celtic tales there is a frequent element of drollery which is here entirely wanting. We are never tempted to laugh at some sharp answer or funny trick or ingenious evasion. We live in a world of portents and miracles, in which there is little place for smiles or laughter.

It is interesting to compare Miss Stokes's collection of Indian stories with that of Miss Frere in 'Old Deccan Days.' Rakshas, who are an amiable mixture of the Northern ogre and the Arabian ghoul, play a great part in both; but the supernatural form of cobra snake, which often appears in the Deccan stories, is absent in those of Eastern India. The Deccan story of 'Punchkin' is, however, only another version of 'Brave Hirilábásí,' who seizes the caged bird (or parrot) in which the wicked magician's soul is living and tears it to pieces limb by limb. The Panch Phul Rání in 'Old Deccan Days,' who weighs but five flowers, is recalled to mind by her still lighter sister, Phulmati Rání, who weighs but one. In many other stories, too, there is a resemblance in particular incidents which would seem to point to a common origin.

In Mrs. Stokes's notes no mention is made of the stories of Bidpai, which have a reputation of old standing, and to which La Fontaine has expressed his obligation. Part of them were translated into French by M. Galland in 1724, and in 1816 M. de Sacy published an Arabic text of the whole, of which an English edition appeared in 1818 by Mr. Wyndham Knatchbull. They are cast rather in the form of fables than of fairy tales, properly so called, but in reading this new volume we have often been reminded of passages of Bidpai.

History of the English People. By John Richard Green, M.A. Vols. III. and IV. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE appearance of Mr. Green's fourth volume enables us to congratulate him on having brought his magnum opus to a close. There is good reason for such congratulation, for the signs of weariness that abound in the latter part of the work make it clear that the author was anxious to escape from the uncongenial atmosphere of the eighteenth century to earlier and more interesting fields. He has, however, struggled on manfully to the end, and has now presented our libraries with a revised, corrected, and slightly enlarged edition of the 'Short History' which for six years past has been in the hands of every English reader. The aspect of the new book is certainly more dignified and luxurious than that of the single closely-printed volume on which it is based, but, as we said in a previous notice of the first two volumes, it is essentially the same work. The four volumes take up much more room on the shelves, but the amount of matter they contain exceeds by barely one-third the matter compressed into the 'Short History.' Two years ago we expressed a hope that, as Mr. Green had dealt with the sixteenth century at considerably greater length in his later work than in his earlier, he would treat the succeeding centuries with like consideration. This hope has only been partially fulfilled. The third volume is entirely devoted to the seventeenth century, or rather to the eighty years between the accession of James I. and the flight of Shaftesbury. This period is, therefore, treated at far greater length than any other of equal duration in the course of the history. At the same rate two volumes would hardly have sufficed to cover the period between 1683 and 1815, yet half a volume brings us to the accession of George III., and another half to the battle of Waterloo. There the work ends, and at present it is clear we are to have no more.

The proportion of attention given to these different periods would strike the reader as strangely capricious if he did not recollect that the two favoured centuries give more opportunities for picturesque writing than any others. Now, Mr. Green's main object is to be interesting, and to be interesting nowadays it appears that one must be picturesque. It may with more reason be objected that the shabby treatment dealt out to the post-Revolutionary period is hardly compatible with the title of the book. A history of the "people" ought surely to pay special attention to that period in which the "people" were growing into maturity. During the century and a half which followed the Revolution, the "people" were preparing for the struggle which gained them political power in the Reform Bill. And yet not only does Mr. Green pass lightly over this all-important period, but he stops abruptly at 1815. The proper conclusion of his book would have been 1832. The system of government that began in 1688 came to an end then, and not till then; and the Reform Bill gave to the "people" the power which the Revolution had given to the aristocracy. To stop short at 1815 is to leave the story of "the English people" at the very point where it becomes most interesting, and to imply that not national development but foreign affairs are Mr. Green's main subject. We may be allowed to hope that, unless the author is bound by some imperative necessity not to exceed four volumes, he will some day supply this defect, and bring his history to its natural close.

Caprice, however, in the choice of historical divisions or of subjects for full-length portraits is a feature that we have noted on a previous occasion in what may be called (to borrow a phrase of which Mr. Green is very fond) the "New History." This and other characteristics of the picturesque style are well known by this time. Want of porportion is visible in details as well as in weightier matters. For instance, the death of Hampden occupies several pages, while that of Falkland is told in one line, and the battle of Marston Moor is compressed into half a page. No one will complain of the space allotted to Hampden, for the description of his death is one of the finest passages in the book; but most readers will regret that Mr. Green's sympathies are so strongly with Hampden as to make him neglect almost entirely the still more tragical end of Falkland. Hampden is certainly one of the most striking figures in a time more full of striking figures than any other of our history, and this has apparently led Mr. Green to give a beautiful picture, in almost too poetical prose, of the home and the country in which Hampden lived. But it should not have led Mr. Green to confuse John Hampden with his brother. Macaulay's schoolboy, if he has not been examined to death, would certainly know that it was not John, but Edward Hampden, who was imprisoned for refusing to pay the forced loan in 1627. Mr. Green has taken care that this blunder shall not escape his critics, for he has repeated the passage in which it first occurs (p. 131) word for word on p. 176. Similar word-for-word repetitions, which bring the writers and paste unpleasantly near to us, may be noted on pp. 193, 195 (Pym's ride through England), and pp. 294, 346 (the state of France).

The excellences as well as the defects of Mr. Green's style are evident in these as in the first two volumes. It is a sort of mosaic, a succession of vivid pictures, always interesting and generally brilliant. The order in which the pictures occur is sometimes inexplicable, the links between them are often missing; but, take the book up where one may, it would be hard to light upon a dull or unimportant passage. Mr. Green is at his best when analysing the characteristics of a period, as in his description of Puritan England; or in tracing the influence of an author on his time, as in his account of Dryden. These remarks on literary subjects, while they are sometimes thrust in awkwardly between irrelevant matters, as in the case of Milton and 'Paradise Lost' (p. 378), are often used very effectively to illustrate the progress of political thought, as when the fierce denunciations of 'Lycidas' are brought in contact with the Solemn League and Covenant. But Mr. Green strains too much after effect to tell a plain story well, and his affectations are sometimes repulsive to a simple taste. Great folks do not, indeed, "pass away," instead of dying, so often in these volumes as in the first two. But they seem to find it difficult to "say" anything; they must mutter or whisper or cry it; four or five times at least they "laugh" their reply. Among other eccentricities, it may be hoped that the word "phrases" is only a misprint for "phases," which form certainly occur elsewhere. Recklessness about spelling is, however, rather in Mr. Green's way. The great Elizabethan is indiscriminately spelled Raleigh and Ralegh; the merchant who resisted James I. is called Bates, when we have Mr. Gardiner's authority for calling him Bate. There are several of those little inaccuracies which were pointed out in the earlier book. They are, however, trivial details, to which it is scarcely worth while to allude except as characteristic of the "New History."

One of the best portions of these volumes is perhaps the sketch of Puritanism at the beginning of vol. iii. But here it may be doubted if a too favourable impression is not produced by the constant reference to Col. Harrison and John Milton as typical Puritans. Neither can be taken as the type of Puritanism, for Milton was the greatest of the Puritans, and all we know of Col. Harrison is told us by his wife. Had the Puritans in general been animated by the spirit of Milton's pen, or had they resembled in birth, cultivation, and temper the idol of Mrs. Harrison, there would have been many fewer Cavaliers. Mr. Green allows that "the strength of Puritanism lay rather among the middle and professional classes than among the gentry," and yet he quotes page after page from the life of an exceptional gentleman to show what the ordinary Puritan was like: a very effective portrait, no doubt, but hardly truthful. In assuming, as he does throughout, that all Puritans were Calvinists, Mr. Green is surely confusing two sections of reformers, one of which deserted the main body when the Presbyterians came to the front. But he does well to lay great stress on the religious question as claiming the first place among the questions of the day throughout the earlier half of the seventeenth century, and as the prime cause of political difference. He describes in a brilliant passage the effect of the Bible on the nation at large; he traces the "break with the Parliament" to religious causes; he shows that the "Great Contract" broke down owing to the king's obstinacy in matters of religion; later on (p. 246) he rightly says, "It was the religious struggle which drew the political in its train." Mr. Green's religious sympathies enable him fully to appreciate and analyze the phenomena of religious enthusiasm, and whether it be Laud or Melville, Bunyan or Wesley, that is before him, the reader is sure of full and satisfactory treatment. Religion and literature are the two subjects which throughout the whole work receive most attention at the hands of Mr. Green.

But when we come to political matters there is often less ground for satisfaction. Speaking of the lawyers of James I.'s reign, Mr. Green says:—

"Their narrow pedantry bent slavishly then, as now, before isolated precedents, while then, as now, their ignorance of general history hindered them from realizing the conditions under which these precedents had been framed, and to which they owed their very varying value."

Even if this is true of the judges who tried the five knights or decided the question of ship-money, it is far too sweeping an assertion to make of a body of men among whom Coke and Belden and St. John stand out as leaders of the legal resistance to absolutism; while as to the truth and good taste of the side-blow which Mr. Green goes out of his way to deal at the lawyers of the present day (seeing how large a portion is contributed by the legal profession to the present majority in the House of Commons) there can hardly be two opinions. Mr. Green is, as usual, in no doubt about Wentworth's character, unfathomable as it was to his contemporaries. "From the first moment," he says, "his desire had been to find employment under the Crown." This is a bold statement, which can hardly be proved or disproved, but may certainly be doubted. Granting that personal ambition was Wentworth's leading motive, there may well have appeared to him, before 1629, to be other ways of attaining his end besides that of taking service with the king. The chapters which deal with the Long Parliament and the Civil War are perhaps the least satisfactory portion of this volume. To say that "in ecclesiastical as well as political matters the aim of the parliamentary leaders was strictly conservative," at the very moment when they were pressing the Bill to deprive bishops of their seats in the House of Lords, is at least misleading. Nor is such a statement quite consistent with the introduction of the Root and Branch Bill for the abolition of episcopacy, which was brought in within two months of the rejection of the earlier and more moderate measure. But Mr. Green does not mention the Root and Branch Bill at all. It certainly would tell against his theory of the conservatism of the parliamentary leaders. Mr. Green considers that the execution of Strafford was a turning-point in the history of the Parliament. "Till May, 1641," he says, "there was still hope for an accommodation. . . . But from that hour little hope for such an agreement remained." But surely the real turning-point is to be found in the Irish rebellion, the panic that ensued, and the Grand Remonstrance which resulted from that panic. Nothing revolutionary was carried in the first session except the Bill against the dissolution of Parliament without its own consent. That was an extraordinary measure. It was the result of the discovery of the Army Plot, and was intended to meet a temporary emergency. The king had consented to it. Nothing else had become law which was not recognized, in form or in fact, at the Restoration. A settlement had been effected which, but for the panic caused by the Irish rebellion, would probably have remained undisturbed. But the Grand Remonstrance was really a revolutionary measure. It was an appeal to a new force, the people, and it held out a programme for the future of a distinctly revolutionary nature. The House felt the importance of the crisis. The fact that Hyde voted for perpetuating the duration of Parliament, but voted against the Remonstrance, shows where the split took place between the constitutionalists and the party of progress. November, and not May, is the real turning-point. The execution of Strafford completed the settlement with the king. The Remonstrance overthrew that settlement.

Equally unsatisfactory is Mr. Green's account of the outbreak of the Civil War. Before the reader knows where he is the war has begun. He is vaguely given to understand that it was the failure to arrest the five members that led the king to resolve on war. But it is not stated why the king wanted to arrest the members or why the failure rendered war inevitable. Mr. Green does not point out what every fresh disclosure—and especially the labours of Mr. Gardiner in this field—has made more clear, that the so-called Cavalier party was essentially a Church party, that it was far more ecclesiastical than Royalist, and that the intention of the Presbyterian party to carry out the anti-ecclesiastical programme of the Remonstrance was the real cause of civil war. The Militia Bill, the immediate and ostensible cause, is hardly mentioned; the Nineteen Propositions, important as a parliamentary manifesto, are slurred over. No attempt is made to analyze the composition, character, or the aims of the two great parties that divided England in 1642. The reader gains an impression that all England, except a few gentry, was on the side of the Parliament, and he is left to wonder how it was that Cornwall, for instance, so staunch in support of freedom before, was now altogether Royalist. The king's success during the first two years of the war is, if we are left to Mr. Green's pages, simply unintelligible. But of course explanations of this kind are only wearisome. History, to be interesting, must ignore difficulties. Let us leave these dry bones to be mumbled by the doctors, and let the "New History" pass on to the picturesque fields of Chalgrove and Marston Moor.

We should have expected, when Cromwell first makes his appearance (iii. 232), to have a fuller sketch of his character. But subtle analyses of character, after the manner of Clarendon, are not in Mr. Green's way. He usually makes a series of anecdotes or of remarks by the great man do duty instead. It is certainly an easier method, and causes the reader less fatigue. As Mr. Green treated the Grand Remonstrance with scant courtesy, it was not to be expected that the Self-Denying Ordinance (which he christens the Self-Renouncing Ordinance), the next most important measure of these times, should be carefully treated. The reader is told that it was introduced by Cromwell and Vane. But Cromwell, if he pulled the wires, took care to avoid being responsible for the measure. It was Mr. Zouch Tate, M.P. for Northampton, who, as Mr. Carlyle tells us, introduced the proposal. Mr. Green gives us to understand that the measure actually passed in April, 1645, was the same as that proposed in the preceding December. But they were two distinct measures with this important difference, that while the earlier proposal laid down a rule for the whole duration of the war, the later one only affected the condition of the officers at that time in employment. Another important point is that the New Model was drawn up in the interval. The Lords made its production the condition on which they were willing to accept the Ordinance. Mr. Green says that there was "long and bitter resistance in either House," and attributes the final passing of the measure to the strength of public opinion. Public opinion had little to do with the matter, but the two facts which Mr. Green omits had a great deal. After this it is satisfactory to find a clear and interesting description of the character and wishes of the newly modelled army. But surely it is an affectation to talk always of the "New Model," as if the plan on which the army was organized was the army itself. It is a trick Mr. Green seems to have learned of Mr. Carlyle.

When we come to the Protectorate, it is pleasant to see the Parliament of 1653 treated with proper consideration, and its character and proceedings well explained. But why go out of one's way to call it, by a sort of anticipation of French Revolution titles, the Constituent Convention, and confuse honest folks who know of it as the Little Parliament? Mr. Green seems to have a passion for renaming things. Even Judge Jeffreys's Bloody Assize cannot be let alone, but must appear as the Bloody Circuit. Mr. Green has rather too high an idea of Cromwell's toleration. It was certainly very great for the time, but, if we are to believe Mr. Masson, not only Episcopals but Romanists and Unitarians were excluded from its advantages. Considering how much stress he generally lays, and rightly lays, on the religious aspect of politics, it is strange that Mr. Green, in speaking of Cromwell's alliance with France, should omit to state that the cessation of the Vaudois persecution was made by Cromwell an indispensable preliminary to that alliance. Moreover, the treaty made in October, 1655, was not a treaty of alliance, as Mr. Green calls it, but merely a commercial treaty. The alliance, as any history of treaties will show, was not made till March, 1657. Mr. Green points out the religious character of the war with Spain, but he omits the negotiations before the war, in which the demands for religious and commercial freedom appear side by side. It is hard to say which predominated in Cromwell's conduct of foreign affairs, but, whether intentionally or not, Mr. Green keeps the commercial aspect too much in the background.

It must, we fear, be allowed that wherever foreign affairs are treated of the reader is on shaky ground. Mr. Green observes that the foreign policy of Charles II. "not only deceived close observers of his own day, but still misleads historians in ours." We are obliged to think that the writer of the remark is not altogether an exception to the rule. He says (p. 373), "The war [between England and Holland in 1665] was a serious stumbling-block in the way of the French projects [for the conquest of the Spanish Netherlands]." Why, it was the very thing Louis XIV. wanted, for the war, while it lasted, prevented the European alliance that he feared, and left him free to attack Flanders without risk of interference. The offered mediation was but a ruse to avoid the necessity of aiding either party.

"Lewis," says Mr. Green, "succeeded in isolating England and in narrowing the war within the limits of a struggle at sea, a struggle in which the two great sea-powers could only weaken one another to the profit of his own powerful navy."

Exactly so. It was to the interest of Louis to narrow the area of the war, but not to stop it. Mr. Green says that Louis "restricted his help [to the Dutch] to the promise of a naval reinforcement." This is not correct. Whatever Louis may have promised in the way of ships, he actually sent a force of 6,000 men to aid the Dutch against the Bishop of Munster, who was in alliance with Charles, and even went so far as to declare war upon England. It was necessary, in support of Mr. Green's theory that the war between England and Holland was opposed to French interests, to make Louis wait for the conclusion of that war before attacking Flanders.

"On the very day, therefore," says Mr. Green (p. 388), "on which the Treaty of Breda was signed, he sent in his formal claims on the Low Countries, and his army at once took the field." It is somewhat unfortunate that, in point of fact, the French troops crossed the frontier on May 20th, 1667, while the Treaty of Breda was signed on the 31st of July. So far was the invasion from being the consequence of the peace, that, on the contrary, the peace was the immediate consequence of the invasion. Mr. Green appears to think that Charles "was stirred to a momentary pride by the success of the Triple Alliance." But this is altogether to misinterpret the aspect that measure bore to Charles. With him it was, on the one hand, a bid for popularity in England, and, on the other, was intended to raise his price with Louis XIV. Charles may well have been proud of it, but not in the sense suggested by Mr. Green. He had long ago seen that it was by the aid of French gold that he was to win the independence he coveted. The Triple Alliance was meant to show that England was not to be despised, and that the gold must be forthcoming. Louis understood if the historians did not. He paid the money, and the Treaty of Dover was the immediate result. This policy of barter was that which Charles followed throughout his reign, at any rate from 1667 onwards, but Mr. Green implies that it was first taken up in 1675. More criticisms might be made on Mr. Green's views of foreign policy in this volume, but enough has been said to show that a closer attention to dates and details would have enabled him to avoid making several mistakes and supporting an erroneous theory. But unfortunately a close, or, as he would perhaps say, a slavish, attention to dates and details is irksome to Mr. Green.

The fourth volume is for the most part of so slight a nature that it is hard to know how to criticize it. Perhaps the most striking thing about it is its omissions. In a book which pretends to pay, and generally does pay, especial attention to literature, it is strange that the only remark about Johnson is that he reported parliamentary debates. Boswell is not mentioned; nor is Sheridan, nor Goldsmith, nor Cowper, nor Wordsworth. Richardson, Smollett, and Fielding are disposed of in one line, Sterne does not appear, there is no allusion to Miss Burney. Nothing is said of Reynolds, Romney, or Gainsborough. But this last omission ought, perhaps, not to be wondered at, for they only share the fate of Van Dyck and Lely, of Inigo Jones and Christopher Wren. Art, in fact, is utterly neglected throughout these volumes. Perhaps it has nothing to do with the "people." These omissions are the more to be regretted because literary criticism is Mr. Green's strong point. He tells the story of the Revolution itself clearly and succinctly, and it is not hard to make it interesting. But the reader looks in vain for a careful explanation of what the Revolution really was, what was the nature of the political change, what was the body to which power was transferred. The results of the Revolution are treated in a somewhat confused and hasty manner. Political, religious, and military events are jumbled together. Insufficient stress is laid on the enormous change produced by the Revolution in European affairs. The reader hears, of course, a great deal about Whigs and Tories, but finds no satisfactory answer here, more than in other histories, to the question, What were they? He is told that the Whigs stuck to their principles for eighty years after the Revolution, but he is not told why their zeal for progressive legislation was so active during the first third, and so inactive during the last two thirds of that period. The Whigs were utterly defeated in 1681, they won a partial victory in 1688, and a complete one in 1715; but it is not pointed out to the inquiring student that this strange oscillation of power can only be accounted for by the fact that the bulk of the aristocracy became Whig in 1688. If it is true, as Mr. Green says, that the country in general was Tory throughout the period of Whig rule, he does not sufficiently account for the voluntary (?) retirement of the Tory party from politics. If Tory majorities could be returned so often as they were under William and Anne, why could they not be returned afterwards? Are we not forced to conclude that the Jacobitism of so many Tories disgusted the nation, and that the country was not in the main Tory after 1715, or at any rate after 1745? But to these and other questions of the like nature the oracle is dumb.

One or two points of detail may be noticed. If we are right in saying with Mr. Green (p. 65) that "the Treaty of Ryswick was the final and decisive defeat of the conspiracy which had gone on between Lewis and the Stuarts since 1670," why was it necessary to fight another long war to attain the same result a second time? That Ryswick was not decisive may be seen by imagining what would have been the effect of Louis's aid if it had been given to the Pretender at the close of Anne's reign. That it was not given was the result of Utrecht, not of Ryswick. In speaking of the Septennial Act Mr. Green implies that this "great constitutional change," as he rightly calls it, was meant at the time to be permanent, whereas it is well known that it was intended in 1716 only to affect the existing Parliament. It is more important, perhaps, to notice that Mr. Green's sympathy for Walpole leads him to underrate the damage to English trade which led to the war of 1739. A recent German historian has shown that English trade was already well-nigh ruined by the Franco-Spanish alliance, and that the commercial class was quite right in insisting on war as the only means of self-preservation. It is pleasant to turn from these things to the brilliant sketch of English society in the first half of the eighteenth century, especially to the sketch of the essayists—

"If deeper and grander things were denied him, the essayist had still a world of his own. He felt little of the pressure of those spiritual problems that had weighed on the temper of his fathers, but the removal of the pressure left him a gay, light-hearted, good-humoured observer of the social life about him, amused and glad to be amused by it all, looking on with a leisurely and somewhat indolent interest, a quiet enjoyment, a quiet scepticism, a shy reserved consciousness of their beauty and poetry, at the lives of ordinary men and women."

Nothing can be better in its way than this. We have also to thank Mr. Green for a sketch of Pope, so strangely omitted from the 'Short History.' But even now he seems to dislike giving him a place, for though Pope died in 1744, he is treated of under the reign of George III.!

The last part of Mr. Green's work is so extremely scanty, and so much of what there is is taken up by a sketch of the French Revolution and the wars that followed, that we will say nothing about it. We will only point out that France was hardly free "to attack her enemy [in 1797] with the soldiers who had fought at Hohenlinden," since they did not fight at Hohenlinden till three years later; and that La Haye Sainte was not on the left but in the centre of the English position at Waterloo. But these are mere slips. They are perhaps to be regarded as signs that Mr. Green was very tired before he got to the battle of Waterloo. Sir Walter Scott used to say that he always kept a trot for the avenue, but Mr. Green hardly limps home. We do not like perorations, but a feebler conclusion to a book of four volumes could not well be imagined. Public opinion has already declared so decisively in favour of Mr. Green's work that no praise or blame of ours is likely to modify that verdict. But we must confess a fear that the higher qualities of historical writing—painstaking and scrupulous accuracy of thought and statement, the honest effort to grapple with difficulties instead of evading them, the scientific reasoning which establishes, at the risk of wearying the casual reader, a long chain of cause and effect—are likely to suffer from the dangerous fascination of Mr. Green's style.

An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion.
By John Caird, D.D. (Glasgow, Mac-Lachlan.)

"Man's reason," Hume concludes in one of the chapters of his 'Enquiry,' "is insufficient to convince us of the veracity of the Christian religion," herein agreeing with many theologians as well as with the multitude of believers. Since Hume's day, however, a new science has arisen, which claims to base, not indeed the Christian religion only, but all religions, on reason. The contrast is striking; and any attempt, such as the present is, to introduce the reader to this new science cannot fail in these latter days to be received with serious and anxious interest. We say to introduce the reader to this new science, for be it known that it is of German origin and claims Hegel for its founder, and, as we shall have reason to complain, is to a great extent imprisoned in terms and formulae, which no one unacquainted with their German antecedents can fairly expect to understand. There is some difficulty, therefore, in imagining the precise body of readers for whom this book is intended. We propose in the remarks which follow to give some account of the contents of the book by indicating the way in which it deals with Christianity as understood before the advent of Hegel, and we hope thus to suggest what elements in the Christian religion meet with philosophic approval and in what sense, and what elements in it fall away, as necessary only to the uncritical multitude or to the imperfectly educated intelligence.

The early chapters are occupied with the consideration of the objections which may be raised against the scientific treatment of religion. These objections are three in number. First, it may be maintained, as e.g. by Mr. Herbert Spencer, that all knowledge being relative to the mind which knows, the absolute, although its existence may be and is affirmed, cannot come within the consciousness of the individual: for thereby the absolute would become relative. Or, secondly, it is held that our knowledge of God and Divine truth is intuitive and immediate, whether given us among our innate ideas, or by common sense, or among our primary beliefs, or among the fundamental principles of cognition, or in whatever form. Or, finally, it is said that the knowledge of God is given not by reason, but by revelation. Against these objections, which would be fatal to his attempt, Principal Caird wages vigorous war, and whatever may be said by an English reader as to the constructive part of his argument, as e.g. when he explains, in opposition to Mr. Spencer, Sir W. Hamilton, and Mansel alike, that the absolute must be capable of being known, there can be no doubt that his destructive efforts are crowned with a fair measure of success. In another chapter follows a highly Germanized criticism of materialistic theories of the universe. Such theories are allowed to have great superiority over common religious conceptions, but their fault seems to be that they start from premises which involve their conclusions. This is the "vicious circle of materialism." It reduces mind to a mode of matter. Now as it is mind which so reduces mind to a mode of matter, mind precedes and is presupposed by matter. We do not suppose that either this argument, or the denial that force or mechanical causality is ever likely to explain vital phenomena, will give final pause to the materialists. The necessity of religion, not, however, of any given religion, is next deduced from the idea of man's nature "as a spiritual self-conscious being." But what this idea is, and how we become possessed of it, we are not told in very intelligible language, yet how all important is this knowledge may be seen from the following extract:—

"That we are capable of a perpetual progress in knowledge and goodness, and yet that every actual attainment leaves us with an ideal still unsatisfied; that we are conscious that our knowledge is limited, whilst yet we can set in thought no absolute limit to our knowledge; that we are conscious of our moral defects, and, nevertheless, can feel that there is no point of moral advancement beyond which we may not aspire;—in this boundless possibility of advancement, combined with the latent standard of excellence which throws contempt on our highest actual attainments, we have that in our nature, as conscious spiritual beings, which constitutes what we have termed a potential infinitude. In other words, when we examine into the real significance of the rational and spiritual life of man, we find that it involves what is virtually the consciousness of God, and of our essential relation to Him."

To put this, so far as possible, into simpler language: Another man—nay, many other men—may know more than I know and be better than I am, and I myself may in future know more than I now know, and be better than I now am. Now I may generalize this fact, and speak of man's actual knowledge as being always less than it might have been or may be hereafter. Herein, apparently, is involved what is virtually the consciousness of God, and of our essential relation to Him! What, then, is God in the philosophy of religion?

The chapters which follow, by means of a detailed criticism of the proofs of the existence of God, help us, by telling us incidentally what God is not, to a partial knowledge of what He is. In the first place, the proof of the existence of God which is drawn a contingentid mundi is shown to be without validity. The world we know is contingent only, therefore a necessary Being exists as its cause. The world is phenomenal, therefore an Absolute Substance exists to which these phenomena may be referred. The world is an effect, and from effect to effect men are driven to suppose the existence of a First Cause. The world is finite and relative, and must therefore rest on a Being who is infinite and absolute. In all its forms this argument shows the same fault: it assumes the conclusion, if, that is, the conclusion is more than a negative one. The world is phenomenal, is contingent, is relative, and we may add further that the human mind is unwilling or unable to rest in the phenomenal, the contingent, and the relative. From these premises, which are all that we have, we cannot get the conclusion, and the argument from the contingency of the world proves nothing as to the existence of God. It has value in the philosophy of religion only as an early phase of religious feeling. The world is transitory and evanescent: "Our life is but a vapour that appeareth for a little and then vanisheth away." It does not prove the existence of God, but it impels men to seek after Him if haply they may find Him. Equally invalid is the argument from design. Though we feel the insufficiency of the argument from the contingent, we do not cease to ask, Whence came this world? Why is it? Our first crude answer is, that it came from an All-wise and All-good Creator and Designer, who of His own will and pleasure created the world, and to whom belong all the skill, contrivance, and ingenious adaptation of means to ends which it exhibits. But this implies a God who is external to the world, the work of His hands, and being external to the world He is limited by it, and is, therefore, finite. Moreover, the relation of God to the world herein implied is arbitrary. We say the world exhibits infinite skill, contrivance, and wisdom; but all that we show is that it is inexplicable and anomalous. Now that the world is inexplicable and anomalous is no proof that it is made by an infinitely wise and good Creator: we cannot conclude from the former statement to the latter; but did we know at starting that an infinitely wise and good Creator made the world, we might conclude that what appears to our finite minds inexplicable and anomalous is not really so. The former inference is arbitrary and unwarranted; the latter would be valid. Thus the argument from design is also inadequate. But it, too, is valuable by its failure, for it impels man to seek another and a less inadequate solution of the problem. Last of all comes what is called the ontological argument. The idea of God exists in the mind, therefore God is. As commonly understood, this argument is not particularly valuable. The same proof is adduced by Kingsley in favour of the existence of water babies. But by aid of a distinction not very clearly explained, and resting on a metaphysic which will not be intelligible, we fear, to most of the body of readers for whom the book is intended, this argument, Principal Caird thinks, may be saved. The distinction in question is one between the accidental existence of particular objects for sensuous perception—e.g., 500 dollars do not exist in my hand merely because the idea of them exists in my mind—and the necessary existence of other objects from the idea of them. Here, again, it must be regretted that this distinction is rather asserted or referred to than made good. However, by its help we come to the conclusion "that, as spiritual beings, our whole conscious life is based on a Universal Self-consciousness, an Absolute Spiritual Life, which is not a mere subjective notion or conception, but which carries with it the proof of its necessary existence as a reality." God is thus Infinite Mind, an Infinite that we may know, an Absolute that we may understand. "that Universal Infinite Self-consciousness on which the conscious life of all finite minds is based, and whose very nature it is to reveal Himself in and to them."

At this stage, having grasped "in an indefinite but not unreal way" what God is in the philosophy of religion, many of our readers will no doubt be wondering what may be the philosophic view of some of the doctrines deemed fundamental in Christianity. God is a Person. Our readers will perhaps be surprised, after what has preceded, to learn that this statement, though false as commonly understood, is true "in a higher sense." What, again, of the doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation? All such doctrines students of the philosophy of religion will be able to explain to themselves and to maintain to the world without much difficulty, for with reference to them it places in their hands a weapon of singular philosophic power. Every man, it must be stated, has by the very idea of his nature spiritual truth in implicit or virtual possession. Now this truth may be apprehended by him in many ways. Material objects, things in space, actions and events in time, may become to him the images and symbols through which he contemplates things infinite and eternal. Thus many of the doctrines of the Church may be interpreted anew as embodying truths in expressions which are merely symbolic, "in a figurative, pictorial, suggestive manner." Or, again,

"although, literally construed, one series of facts is of no higher or more spiritual significance than another, [still,] however we may explain the process, the ordinary consciousness can and does read into such outward phenomena of human history conceptions, notions, ideas, which possess something of that universality and self-consistency, that absoluteness and necessity, which are the characteristics of truth."

For instance, to the thousands of minds for which investigations in the philosophy of religion have neither meaning nor interest, "the life of Christ has been the symbol and suggestion of the richest treasure of moral ideas." Furthermore, it is shown how even popular thought may rise above the mere figurative or metaphorical reference of the signs it uses, as exemplified in the events of the life of Christ, for example, and, while using terms which at their origin were too material in their meaning, may forget their original material meaning, and may succeed in describing by them, though approximately only, spiritual acts and processes. Such terms are, e.g., repentance, conversion, regeneration, sanctification. By the aid of methods of interpretation of such power as these, the reader will be prepared to find that when he uses, as expressive of the essential nature of the Godhead, such terms as Father, Son, First-born, Only-begotten, there is in his expressions much which is perceived to belong to the domain of materialized and figurate conception. The doctrines of the Church, when approached in this way, begin to wear a new significance.

Here we must take leave of Principal Caird and the philosophy of religion. But we cannot do so without expressing once more our regret that he has not succeeded in rendering the new science more intelligible to readers who are limited to the English language for their knowledge of German philosophy and the meaning of its terms. The gate through which the uninitiated are to enter into possession of the kingdom is indeed narrow, for it appears to be neither more nor less than the Hegelian doctrine. Yet it is desirable that they should enter into possession. Indeed, the subject is the most momentous one that can occupy the mind of man; and a philosophy which can acknowledge and even adopt the arguments of sceptics like Hume and Bayle and Gibbon, as this philosophy can, and yet show that the position attacked is rendered only more invulnerable by the success of their assaults, should be made accessible to all nations and all conditions of men. It is to be feared, however, that this attempt to establish two Christianities, an esoteric and an exoteric Christianity—for such in effect it is—will soon run through its day.

The Races of Afghanistan: being a Brief Account of the Principal Nations inhabiting that Country. By Surgeon-Major H. W. Bellow, C.S.I., late on special political duty at Kabul. (Calcutta, Thacker, Spink & Co.)

"WRITTEN at Kabul, for the most part after the duties of the day were over," or "at odd intervals of leisure from official business," and never fairly revised, this volume, however useful and full of interest, is defective and disappointing. It might have been so much better if only produced in different circumstances. The introduction and four following chapters of Afghan history are good in their way, and summarize much that should be more generally known; but the political bias apparent in them is out of keeping with the ostensible theme. It is with the races of Afghanistan, and not with its politics, that we would have to do. It is to be hoped that before long the able and industrious author, restored to health and favourable literary opportunities, may return to his self-allotted task. One great merit of his book is that it seeks to bring into systematic shape the chaotic information—if information it be—which has heretofore been supplied to the world on the true divisions and subdivisions of the inhabitants of an interesting but ever disturbed region. If complete success has not been attained, a step in the right direction has nevertheless been taken, for which the reader's acknowledgments are due. Chapters vi. to xiii. describe respectively the Pathan, Yusufzai, Afridi, Khattak, Dadicor, Ghilji, Tajik, and Hazarah, and under these heads interesting data are thrown together, and occasion taken for speculation, which in some cases is ingenious, but in some purely fanciful. There is, perhaps, a little confusion in the classification adopted, and the reader may naturally ask why the Khattaks should not have been labelled "Sattagyds," and the Afridis "Aparytes," as well as the Kakars "Dadicor"; or why the modern name should not have been used for the latter people if applied to the two former.

Of the "Pathan" our author says:—

"This term has a very wide application as used by the people of India, and a very restricted one as used by the Pathans themselves. In the former case it is applied indiscriminately to all the peoples inhabiting the country now known as Afghanistan, including even the Tajik and Hamrah, who are both Persian-speaking people. In the latter case it is applied to Pukhto-speaking people only, and even then with a distinction, as the proper patronymic of certain tribes who are neither Afghan nor Ghilzai, but simply Pathan or Pukhtun. In this latter case it is the name applied to, and accepted by, the different peoples or races who speak the Pukhto language and inhabit the Pathan or Pukhtun country, much in the same way as a native of England, taken in the comprehensive sense of the word, is called Englishman, and accepts the name, whether he be in reality Irish, or Scotch, or Welsh; that is to say, the Afghan and the Ghilzai are both Pathans, but the true Pathan is neither one nor the other, just as the Irish, Scotch, and Welsh are Englishmen, whilst the true Englishman is neither one nor the other of the three."

But in India the term has a peculiar signification as well as indiscriminate comprehensiveness. It is the name given to one of four great classes of Mohammedans, the others being Saiyids, Shaikhs, and Mughals. The Indian Pathan is held to be specially favoured. Descended from the prophet (our patriarch) Jacob, he inherits the title of "Khan" conferred upon an ancestor by Mohammed, the tribal designation (originally Fath-an) being attributed to the same source in memory of a victory (fath) over the unbelievers. How the learned Muslims in Rohilkhand and Hyderabad would receive Dr. Bellow's fiat that "Pathan" is "but the Hindustani form of the native word Pukhtun," the "proper patronymic of the people inhabiting the country called Pukhtun-khwā," it is hard to determine. They would assuredly not abandon their traditions without a struggle. But we believe that in this case the theory of Western exponents is right; and Dr. Ernest Trumpp, in putting it forward with much ingenuity some years ago, asserted with Lassen that the Illyrians of Herodotus were the forefathers of many whom we now know as Afghans. Prof. Rawlinson's treatment of the subject, in a geographical sense, is most suggestive, and should not be lost sight of in any revival of these interesting inquiries. As to Dr. Bellew's notion that the Pacts and Scythas, as he calls the inhabitants of the "Pukhtún-khwá country," may be held

"to correspond with the Picts and Scots of our own country, whilst the Kamburi of the Khan of Kelat's family, and large sections of the Afridi people, called Kambur-Khel and Kamari, together with the Logari of Logar or Lohgar, may be compared with the Cambrians and Logrians of ancient Britain," we doubt its claim to command that serious attention of archaeologists which it is thought to deserve. Indeed, a few pages further on, in the chapter on the Yusufzais, the reader is told that "jumping to conclusions from mere names is not a safe course"; and many Israelitish names commonly found in Scripture are cited to show that a second Palestine might in this respect be readily identified in localities where collateral evidence to the same effect was wanting.

Of the people named, not the least interesting to us at the present time, from the fact of our compulsory relations, are the "Ghilzi," the plural, be it borne in mind, of "Ghiljai," or, as more often written, "Ghilzai." Dr. Bellew's remarks on them were quoted in our notice of his 'Afghanistan and the Afghans' in the Athenæum of the 1st of March last year. He now adds a clear and intelligent account of their supposed origin, so far as he has been enabled to trace it by the help of available data, and believes them to belong to "Turk tribes, known by the name of Khilich or Khilichi," and "said to be Christians of the Nestorian Church," who, about the beginning of the eighth century, "emigrated from their native country and sought refuge in the inaccessible mountains of Ghor." These "Khilichi"—which word, by the way, might be more correctly written "Kiliji," and if spelled "Kilijchi" means rather a "maker of swords" than a "swordsmen," as here interpreted—are supposed to have moved forward, in accordance with their nomad habits of life, and to have finally settled in the tracts now in their possession. Among the subdivisions are classed the "Povinda" soldier-merchants, notwithstanding certain remarkable distinctions between clan and clan in feature, complexion, and stature. This arrangement is worth noting, because it is customary to separate the Povinda from the Ghilzai in the classification of tribes in Afghanistan. We read:—

"Several of the Ghilji or Ghilzai clans are almost wholly engaged in the carrying-trade between India and Afghanistan and the northern states of Central Asia, and have been so for many centuries, to the exclusion almost of all the other tribes of the country. The principal clans employed in this great carrying-trade are the Nízi, Náar, Kharoti, and, to some extent, the Sulemánkhel. From the nature of their occupation they are collectively styled, or individually, so far as that goes, Povinda and Lawáni, or Loháni. These terms, it appears, are derived from the Persian words parivanda, a 'bale of merchandise,' and ravandá, a 'traveller.'"

The Tajik, we are told, has no divisions into khal and zai, like the Afghans, Ghilji, and Pathans. These affixes to a proper name denote, it need hardly be said, followers or descendants. A very recent illustration of the term is found, writes Dr. Bellew, "in the formation of two factions at Cabul, shortly after the establishment of our Envoy.... the party in favour of the British alliance being called Cavagnarizai, and those opposed to it, Yacubzai." It may be that the fact divulged in this grammatical example will afford as much matter of serious reflection to the politician as profitable acquirement to the student of Pashtu.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Beauty's Daughters. By the Author of 'Phyllis.' 3 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Pious Frauds. By Albany de Fonblanque. 3 vols. (Bentley & Son.)

In Pastures Green, and other Stories. By Charles Gibbon. (Chatto & Windus.)

Fascination. By Lady Margaret Majendie. 2 vols. (Bentley & Son.)

Red Fern. By Mrs. Robert O'Reilly. (Strahan & Co.)

The Sergeant's Legacy. By E. Berthet. Translated by Gilbert Venables. (Nimmo & Bain.)

From the Younger and Ruler the Elder. From the French of Alphonse Daudet. (Visetelly & Co.)

Margari, Junior. From the French of André Theuriot. (Same publishers.)

ONE of "Beauty's daughters," and the most amiable of a charming group of three sisters, marries a young man who is paralyzed. This is a new idea for a "society" novel, and distinguishes it from the ordinary reproductions of the lighter talk and manners of a certain section of the world. Whether the bright conception is not a little too hardly worked in the execution, and whether a little of Gretchen's affectionate demonstrativeness might not have been omitted, is another matter. One of the leading features in the book is the almost tantalizing amount of kissing which takes place between the dramatis personæ. The process is not always free from unpleasant consequences, as when the charming widow, Fancy Charteris, by an embrace bestowed on a domino by moonlight, raises a serious misconception between a most exemplary pair of spouses. Mrs. Charteris is more witty than her admirers; Brandy and Dandy—"fortie Gyas fortisque Cloanthus"—drivel almost unnaturally in their small talk, and the other men have not even talk to recommend them. The women are far better, and Florence Tremaine is almost a character. But it is to be feared that even fair readers in general will find the affectionate passages a little long, in spite of considerable skill on the author's part in making bricks without straw and of that artful introduction of the baby in the final chapter.

Mr. Albany de Fonblanque writes in a very lively manner; so much so that he makes it possible for a reader to get through the whole of his new book in spite of its peculiarly uninteresting story. If he could have persuaded his critics to read no more than one-half of the first volume, they would have found but little to blame in 'Pious Frauds.' But the legend of the Sinking Stones, and the revelations of wrongful possession, and rightful heirs in distressed circumstances, however interesting such things may be to one who reads his or her first novel, if such a creature could be discovered, are, at all events, extremely tedious and irritating to the good sense of the ordinary reader, who has, of course, yawned over many such tales. It is not pleasant to find the uncle of two girls called their "mutual uncle," but it is, on the other hand, refreshing to read immediately afterwards a very clever and pointedly written account of the girls' education, and how one of them "learned that the first object was to get the advantage of your neighbour somehow, and keep it any way." And while there are to be found few things like the first, there are many like the other. The whole of chapter vi., headed "Family History," is exceedingly well done, and a chapter of such explanation is, as every novelist must know, a difficult thing to write. Among other misfortunes attending the story is that it has spoiled the characters which promised well at the beginning. Their various changes of condition in life alter them past recognition except by means of their names, and even the author's interest is shifted from what they are to what they do, or rather to what befalls them. But in spite of all this, as has been said before, 'Pious Frauds' is a readable book.

'In Pastures Green,' as the first of Mr. Gibbon's collection is called, is a prettily told story of a heroine who is misled by the mistake of two suitors. Eben Tyler the farmer is too hasty, Montague Lewis the barrister too slow, to secure the prize. Milly is a sound-hearted maiden, who puts duty above inclination and weathers a serious disappointment. 'All a Green Willow' is another comedy of errors, Jack Aylmer wasting his most ardent feelings, and a great deal of self-examination and argument, on a girl who is happily married, though the secret remains one till he has made an overt act of absolute surrender. 'Cancelled Engagements' ends very satisfactorily according to an ancient figure which used to be in vogue in country dances. The change of partners is a great relief, for one began to feel deeply for the wretched man whose Julia hurt his most sacred feelings by stuffing his pet dog as a "delightful surprise." The remaining stories are Scotch, a circumstance which will attract some readers and repel others. To the former class 'Dominie Barclay' may be recommended as a pathetic tale, and Donald's 'Paction with the Deil' as a humorous one. 'Daft Tam' is too horrible to be pleasant. On the whole, this book will not detract from the writer's reputation, though we doubt if it will enhance it.

The reader is far advanced in Lady Majendie's story before the meaning of its title is revealed to him, and then he finds that the fascination which sheds its sinister influence over the latter part of this romance is neither more nor less than the glamour that bewitched the lambs of Virgil's Arcadian, the "jettatura" which to this day is so religiously believed in by the superstitious Italians and the unsophisticated shepherds of Greece. Handsome young Paolo (a native of Rome, alternately called "Don" and "Prince") inherits from his father the family curse of the evil eye. Whosoever is loved by him falls a victim to his baneful power, exercised in despite of himself; and the knowledge of this fact is a constant source of anguish to him. One after another he lays his best friends; and yet he is gentle, honourable, and benevolent, languishing like the spell-bound prince in the fairy tale until some one shall encounter him whose strong will and faith may triumph over the mysterious influence of his eyes. There are doubtless many readers who will expect little or nothing from a story based on such a groundwork of idle tradition as this. They may be right or wrong in their prejudice; but, at any rate, they will make a mistake if they decline better acquaintance with Lady Margaret Majendie's creations for no other reason than an unwillingness to lend themselves to a momentary superstition. Quite apart from the evil eye, its dire effects and its ultimate subjugation, we meet in this romance a great deal that is pretty, fresh, credible, and worthy of admiration. The characters of the girl-lovers, Finette and Aglae, are warmly conceived and developed with remarkable sweetness; and it is impossible not to be interested in the fortunes of these two unconventional Frenchwomen and of their married schoolfellow Martha. The men's characters are more indistinct than those of the women, but even in them there are touches which speak of considerable finish in the author's design. It would have been well if some care had been devoted to the revision of the book for the press. It would not have exacted much time or pains to read the sheets in proof; and the advantage would have been great. There was really no need why Lady Majendie's two volumes should have been marred by this slovenliness of punctuation—for that is nearly all that is amiss. The defect is mechanical, and might easily have been remedied; but, if the reader make due allowance for the drawback, the story as a whole will please him. It is pretty even when it is a trifle silly; and if it occasionally verges on affectation, he will scarcely be disposed to call it anything worse than quaint and ingenuous. It is only fair to add that the printing and binding of 'Fascination' are strikingly superior.

There is a good deal of character in the simple farmhouse story Mrs. O'Reilly has written. The natures of Kitty Deane, the active-minded, warm-tempered child, whose aspirations for something more stirring than her dull domestic life find an outlet, after all, sufficiently satisfying in the region which in her ignorance she despised; of Abel Thorne, her wise and manly brother, whose unselfishness and honesty meet the usual reward of posthumous appreciation, while in life he is thwarted and supplanted by pettier spirits; and of lame Christopher, his cousin—one of those rare souls which combine sensitiveness with the strength that influences others for their good—are completer studies than one often sees in the compass of a short story. The figures which are more sketchily treated have also their own individuality, such as the strong-minded spinster of Hillside, who rules over the large Thorne family in virtue of a short temper and a long purse, coupled with a weak heart which is the subject of many calculations; George Thorne, the sleek innkeeper, subservient and cunning; John, the weaker brother, who wins the popularity which Abel deserves from all but the sharp-sighted Kitty; Dan and his rough sons, the unruly flock of young Christopher. Of incident there is but little: sudden deaths, with sudden consequences to all the actors in the plot, are the gravest occurrences. It is a lifelike story, but not on that account other than impressive in its sequences of cause and effect. The Reed Farm, with its treacherous ponds as the single dark feature of its peacefulness, is a typical as well as appropriate setting for a romance of common life.

The second volume of the "Modern Foreign Library" is much better than the first. Mr. Venables has got hold of a sufficiently attractive original, and has translated it very fairly, though not without some of the slips which are almost unavoidable, save by the exercise of great literary skill and care, in rendering into one another two languages so treacherously alike in vocabulary and yet so dissimilar in signification as French and English. For instance, we find in 'The Sergeant's Legacy' the words, "She was descended from the Counts de Baismes, whose manor was near the forest of that name." Now we have no doubt that the original has "manoir," which is not the equivalent of manor, but of manor-house. However, these things are apparently inseparable from translations of French novels, and they are not so frequent in Mr. Venables' work as in that of most translators. The book which he has put at the service of the English reader is lively enough and of unexceptionable morality, and has, besides, the advantage of dealing with stirring times—the end of the seventeenth century—and with a picturesque country, the Velay, that is to say, the district between Auvergne and the Cevennes, of which Le Puy is the capital.

Yet another series of translations from the French starts with M. Alphonse Daudet's masterpiece, and with not the worst work of the lady who calls herself André Theuriot. The merits of both these books are sufficiently well known, and we need only say that the translations are fair, and the volumes handy and conveniently printed and bound. We must, however, give notice that we cannot go on reviewing these books. If English publishers find it profitable to translate well-known French novels by the dozen, by all means let them do so; but they must not expect to have their versions criticized.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

The Englishman and the Scandinavian; or, a Comparison of Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse Literature. By Frederick Metcalf. (Trübner & Co.)—Mr. Metcalf has produced a readable volume, but scholars will not admire his style, which is out of keeping with the serious promises of the preface. The author says himself that in 1876 he wrote a tractate on the subject indicated by the title of the volume. It "caught the attention of persons who read it, men and women alike." But they wanted a little more—"the customs, notions, language, and literature of the two peoples, based on the most rigid research, but adapted for a wider class of readers than students only—a kind of bird's-eye view of the whole matter, but with sufficient depth and colour." In fact, the readers of the tractate required the subject to be treated with consummate scholarship in a popular manner.

So far as we can judge, Mr. Metcalf has, however, only addressed himself to the general reader, and almost totally disregarded the student. It may be a matter of opinion how far this was or was not the line to be adopted. No one will deny that the execution does not tally with the terms of the preface. But, after all, it is equally undeniable that by writing as he has done, Mr. Metcalf has made a subject in which he himself manifestly takes a vivid interest more accessible to the general public, and thereby has increased the chances of a wider interest being taken in Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse studies. At the same time it must not be forgotten that in the comparison the Anglo-Saxon gets so much the worse of it that it may be truly said that readers and students are rather warned against him than otherwise. In the main, however, Mr. Metcalf is right in his estimate of the literary products of the two peoples; but owing to the peculiarities of his style the contrast becomes exaggerated at the expense of the Anglo-Saxon, as we have said already. This could hardly fail to be the result of what is from the first a mistaken notion. The Anglo-Saxons and the Norwegians have so few things in common that they can hardly be compared except by points of contrast. The life of the two peoples was ruled by laws so widely diverging that the outcome of their mental energies could exhibit only rare and faint family resemblances, mostly, if not exclusively, confined to the language of the two races. Then, again, Mr. Metcalf chooses such a large subject for treatment that to do it full justice within so small a scope as this volume would have required the unremitting, self-criticizing labour of a lifetime. In the Norse portion of the book, although it is the larger and the more interesting, Mr. Metcalf is frequently led by guides who have already been superseded. By reason of the vastness of the subject he is obliged to refer with brevity to momentous points, while, on the other hand, he is decidedly too prolix on matters which lie outside the main issue, such as the episode relating to the copy of the Edda which Worm caused to be made for Cardinal Masarin, &c. Much of the best and most critical work relating to Norse literature is buried in Transactions and pamphlets which have nearly totally escaped Mr. Metcalf's notice. Had he been master of that most fertile literature his book would certainly have borne a different stamp. Mistakes in a volume of nearly 800 pages could hardly fail to occur; but we should have liked to see them a good deal fewer than they actually are. We mention, by way of illustration, the thirteen lines copied (p. 380) from Thordvald Bjarnarson's most excellent edition of 'Leifar fornra kristinna fræða skenskra':—"þær" for þar, "travar" for þegar, "Epa" for eða, "scaldi" for scöldi, "of grímleic" for af grímlac, "luti" for hluti, "latti þu" for latti tu, "illeco" for illaco, "Romuborgar" for Rumaborgar, "og" for oc, "orþum" for orþom, and "peire hluti" for þeir hluti. But there is much in the book worth reading. A second edition we feel sure Mr. Metcalf will so revise as to bring it up to the position of a standard work on the subject.

The Irish Calendar ascribed to Oengus and the Irish manuscript known as the Book of Leinster, two works of importance to those interested in Gaelic studies, have been recently published at Dublin by the Royal Irish Academy. The work of Oengus was some years since translated by the late Prof. O'Curry as well as by Prof. J. B. Crowe, and a lithograph of its entire Gaelic text and glosses was published in 1872. In the present issue the work is printed in Roman type, with an English version by Dr. Stokes. Of the 'Book of Leinster' no translation has yet been published, but the text in Gaelic is issued in a lithographic copy executed by the late Mr. O'Longan. Descriptions of these manuscripts, with phototypographic specimens of them, were published in the second and third volumes of the Government series of 'National Manuscripts of Ireland.'

Collections for a Handbook of the Makia Language. By the Rev. Chauncy Maples. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)—This praiseworthy little volume is one of the presents to linguistic science made by the missionaries of the Church of England, and we cannot be too grateful for it. The language belongs to the Eastern group and Zambesi branch of the great Bantu family, which occupies the whole of Africa south of the equator, with certain reserved tracts for the remnants of the Hottentots and Bushmen. It differs considerably from the well-known Swahili and the less well known, though important, language of the Yao or Ajawa, of which Chuma, Livingstone's faithful attendant, is the representative man. The Makia are a large tribe, inhabiting the country at the back of the Portuguese colonies of Mozambique and in the basin of the river Rovuma; they are a domestic and peace-loving people, and a Christian mission is established in their midst, as an outpost of civilization, and a barrier against and check upon the slave traders from Lake Nyasa.

Giovanni Beltrame, late a Roman Catholic missionary in the regions of the Upper Nile, published some years back a grammar in Italian of the Denka language, which has passed through a second edition this year. The Denka are a large savage tribe occupying the basin of the White Nile. The author lived among them a long time; the work is therefore an original contribution to knowledge, and very painstaking. This language belongs to the Upper Nile Basin group of the pure Negro family of African language.

We are indebted to the same author for a slight but scientific sketch of the language of the Akka tribe. These are the well-known aboriginal dwarf races of Central Africa, west of the Albert Nyansa, residing in the Mombotto country, and mentioned by Schweinfurth and other travellers. Two boys were brought to Italy belonging to kindred tribes, but with slightly different dialects; they picked up a little Arabic on their road through Egypt, and by this mode of communication Beltrame at Verona was able to extract from them certain particulars with regard to their language. It appears to be polysyllabic, and has not yet been classified. The theory of a connexion between these dwarf races and the Bushmen of the extreme south has been started.

We have also on our table a vocabulary in Dutch, Malay, and Achinese by P. Arriens, an employé of the Government of Holland in the management of the newly conquered tracts of Achin, the most northern portion of the island of Sumatra, the attempt to subdue which has occupied the Dutch arms seven years. This work is in the highest degree elementary, and composed for practical wants without any scientific pretension. The Achinese belongs to the Sumatra-Malacca group of the Malayan family; the people are Mohammedan and warlike.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG

- Wothorpe-by-Stamford.* By Catherine Holdich. (Griffith & Farran.)
The Children's Journey, and other Stories. By the Author of 'Our Children's Story,' &c. (Strahan & Co.)
The Sea: its Starring Story of Adventure, Peril, and Heroism. By F. Whympers. 3 vols. (Caswell & Co.)
The Boy's Froisart. Edited by Sidney Lerner. (Samson Low & Co.)

A picturesque old house at Wothorpe near Stamford suggested a simple tale to Mrs. Holdich's mind, a purely imaginary tale, in no way connected with any one who has ever lived at Wothorpe. It is not only a very simple tale, but also very short and quite free from those little complications which make up a plot, and without which a story is not a story, but a mere chronicle, and hardly an artistic production at all. There is for a moment a dash of mystery about two French ladies, who are harboured with the utmost secrecy by the owners of the house at Wothorpe; but the reader is given to understand that they are people of rank, and it is a sad disappointment to find the mystery cleared up by the statement of their names and titles and the fact that they had left France during a time of revolution. The son of the house having fallen in love with the younger lady, and being below her in rank, marriage is decreed to be impossible, and the son, who belongs to a consumptive family, rapidly declines. There is but one thing to object to positively in Mrs. Holdich's very inoffensive little book, and that is an unhealthy tendency to link consumption to goodness. If the book is, as it appears to be, mainly designed for girls, it would be far better to show the possibility of there being noble-minded, high-principled men among those who have sound lungs, good spirits, and cheery tempers.

The collection of children's stories published by Messrs. Strahan & Co. is a favourable specimen of the modern kind of nursery tales. The little ones who wander off in the first tale to escape the housekeeper left in charge during their parents' absence, the Swiss boy who loses his way on the hill and imperils the safety of his brother and sister, the Mentonnes Pascal and his donkey, the little gipsy girl, and the rest, will all be favourites among childish readers, though probably they will be inclined to skip the more sentimental passages. The author shows much knowledge of the ways and thoughts of children, but this quality possibly attracts grown readers more than the simple-minded students who are intended to be benefited. It is, in our experience, the most direct narrative that finds most favour with such readers. The charm of 'Robinson Crusoe' and the 'Pilgrim's Progress' lies in their narrative, and secondarily in the fact of the lessons to be drawn lying beyond the first reach of the childish mind. Whether introspection made easy is the best mental food for beginners is at least doubtful. But nothing can be said against the tone of the lessons conveyed in these graceful pages, and there is much skill as well as good feeling in the method of their conveyance.

Mr. Whympers' volumes are of the kind that boys like. They are full of stories of peril and adventure, and they are plentifully illustrated. The tales of pirates will especially delight boys, in whose eyes the buccaneer is always a hero. In fact, parents who do not want their children "to run away to sea" should be shy of giving them this work.

'The Boy's Froisart' is another book which will be welcomed by boys. Years ago Messrs. Burns & Oates published some 'Tales from Froisart' which were the delight of many children. The present volume will serve as a good introduction to the fascinating chronicler, who never wearies his admirers. A map or two would have been a desirable addition.

LAW BOOKS

- The French Code of Commerce and the most usual Commercial Laws, with a Theoretical and Practical Commentary, and a Compendium of the Judicial Organisation and of the Course of Procedure before the Tribunals of Commerce.* By Leopold Goirand. (Stevens & Sons.)

The French are pre-eminently an arranging nation, though, politically at least, their arrangements are liable to rather sudden fluctuations. Their first code of commerce is far the earliest in modern Europe, dating, practically speaking, from the seventeenth century, for the ordinances of 1673 and 1681 were codes in effect. But the first actual code in name as well as in fact was that promulgated in 1807 and still in force, so that our neighbours are indebted for this, as for their general code, to their great Alexander and Justinian, Napoleon I. Prussia might seem at first sight to have the start of France, having codified her mercantile laws in 1794, but, as we have already observed, France had virtually codified her law in the seventeenth century. The code of 1807 was imperfect, containing no general provisions as to contracts; and many of the systems of continental nations, though in most instances based on the French, are more suited to modern requirements, because later in date. Hence numerous additions to and modifications of the French code have become necessary; and the importance of a commentary which, dealing separately with each article or section, shall give briefly the state and acceptation of the law as now existing, is too obvious to require argument. M. Goirand gives this in good plain English, for the benefit of English readers, and his modest prayer for indulgence in respect of supposed Gallicisms is not called for by any such phrases, so far as we have been able to discover. Indeed, taking up the book and allowing it to fall open where it may, the reader will, we think, be prepared to say that the language is sound, clear, and idiomatic, and might have been assumed to be written by an Englishman did not M. Goirand's preface assure us of the contrary. To the actual code of commerce M. Goirand adds various other laws of commercial importance, such as the law relating to commercial patterns and models, the law on companies, the law on patents of inventions, &c. Upon the whole it would be difficult to imagine a work more likely to be practically useful to English persons engaged either in carrying on mercantile enterprises or in advising those who carry them on, where the transactions are regulated by the law as existing in France. The time when such books will cease to be wanted is the time—somewhat distant, we fear, at present—when all civilized countries shall agree to a general set of rules by which their commercial intercourse shall be regulated.

A Draft Code of Criminal Law and Procedure. By Edward Dillon Lewis. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

Mr. Lewis in his preface informs his readers that his work was commenced a considerable time before the introduction into Parliament of the Criminal Code Bill of the late Government, and that notwithstanding the announcement of the intended introduction of that Bill he did not feel at liberty to relinquish his work, which was then far advanced towards completion. The Government Bill did not become law, and the codification of the criminal law still remains to be dealt with by Parliament. Under the circumstances, therefore, it is well that Mr. Lewis determined to complete his self-imposed task. In preparing his draft of what he conceives would be a fair code of criminal law and procedure, he has been "influenced by a desire to produce a practical measure instead of adding merely one other theory as to what should be done in that direction"; and he claims for his work "that it is the outcome of an extensive and varied actual practical experience of the subjects of which it treats." The work is divided into six parts. Part i. deals with preliminary matters, and contains, among other things, chapters on the constitution of the Supreme Court of Criminal Judicature, officers, rules of court, &c. Part ii. deals with procedure; part iii. with offences and their punishments; part iv. with juries; part v. with the protection of persons acting under the code; and part vi. relates to the repeal of existing statutes. An appendix furnishes a number of forms proper for use in criminal procedure. There is no doubt that this work will afford many useful hints to those who may be called on to draw up a code of the criminal law, and Mr. Lewis is entitled to the gratitude of the public for his labours.

The Principles of Legislation with regard to Property given for Charitable and other Public Uses. By Courtney Stanhope Kenny. (Reeves & Turner.)

THE working and results of charitable endowments give a new meaning to the old saying that the worst place is paved with the best intentions. Many readers of the treatises of Sir Arthur Hobhouse and Mr. Kenny are likely to arrive at the conclusion that on the whole these endowments have both demoralized mankind and augmented their sufferings. Mr. Kenny himself, however, does not advocate suppression, but he establishes the necessity for "supervision, restriction, and revision." "Endowed charities," in his opinion, "have done more good than harm, and should be protected, but also superintended and controlled." Mr. Kenny has condensed a library into a portable volume, which we can recommend to our readers. On two or three collateral points Mr. Kenny's arrangement and language may be found a little puzzling. It would have been better, for instance (pp. 79 and 80), to give Littré's derivation of the word "Mortmain," which Mr. Kenny adopts, last, placing Coke's and Blackstone's before it, with a plainer indication of the reasons for coinciding with Littré. Few readers are likely to receive much instruction from being told, "That this derivation is the true one seems to be shown by its being the only one which accounts for the employment of the phrase in the law of serfdom as well as in that of endowment."

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Holidays in Home Counties, by Edward Walford, M.A. (Bogue), treats in a pleasant, gossiping way about excursions to various places of interest in the south of England. Amongst other famous buildings and interesting places described by the author are Ely Cathedral, St. Albans and Waltham Abbeys, Leeds and Rochester Castles, Gilbert White's house at Selborne, and Burnham Thorpe, the birthplace of Lord Nelson. The book is nicely got up and prettily illustrated.

WE have more than once had occasion to remark on the astonishing progress of bibliographical studies in the United States. Another proof is before us in the masterly Catalogue of Works relating to William Shakespeare in the Boston Collection of the Boston Public Library, which Mr. Hubbard has compiled for the Trustees. To show, we suppose, that the race of learned booksellers is not extinct, and that there are still people who read the Fathers, Mr. Stewart, of King William Street, Strand, has begun A General Catalogue, of which Part I., A-C, is before us.

The Royal Navy List (Witherby & Co.) has reached its eleventh quarter. The details of services have been much increased, and the book would have delighted Miss Austen. It reflects credit on its compilers, Mr. Warren and Col. Lean.

The Harvard Register has entered on its second year. This periodical owes its existence to its editor, a Harvard undergraduate, full of energy and resource, and it is to be hoped it may succeed in establishing itself.

WE have on our table History of Political Economy of Europe, by Jérôme Adolphe Blanqui (New York, G. P. Putnam's Sons),—A Winter Tour through India, Burmah, and the Straits, by H. E. Falk (Longmans),—Round Europe with the Crowd, by J. Maggs (Allen & Co.),—The History of France, Vol. VI., by M. Guizot, edited by Madame de Witt (Low),—Preadamites, by A. Winchell (Trübner),—Introduction to the Study of Sign Language among the North American Indians, by G. Mallory (Washington, Government Printing Office),—A Scheme of Shortened Handwriting (Poole),—The Origin of the Homeric Poems, by Dr. H. Bonits (New York, Harper & Brothers),—Practical Photography, Part II., by O. E. Wheeler ('The Bazaar' Office),—The Essential Characteristics of the Romantic and Musical Styles, by C. H. Herford (Bell),—Rev. Joseph Cook's Monday Lectures, Part XVI. (Dickinson),—Extension of Empire, Weakness? Deficits, Ruin? by F. Lloyd and C. Tabbatt (Kegan Paul),—Life: its True Genesis, by R. W. Wright (New York, G. P. Putnam's Sons),—Principles and Portraits, by C. A. Bartol (Boston, U.S., Roberts Brothers),—Highland Legends, by Sir T. D. Lauder, Bart. (Hamilton),—The Political Comedy of Europe, by D. Johnson (Low),—Learchus, by J. Williams (Wyman & Sons),—Gwynedd: a Tragedy, by the Author of 'Margaret's Engagement' (Moxon, Saunders & Co.),—The Princess Elizabeth: a Lyric Drama, by F. H. Williams (Philadelphia, Claxton),—Maddonia, by the Rev. M. Russell (Dublin, Gill & Son),—Poems, by Sir S. Ferguson (Bell),—The Tiberiad, by J. Gemmel (Glasgow, MacLehose),—Poems in the Pulpit, by the Rev. H. R. Haweis (Low),—A Life's Decision, by T. W. Allies (Kegan Paul),—A Modern Pharisee, by J. C. Coghlan (Kegan Paul).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Fine Art.

Notes on Sketching Towns, by an Architect, etc. 2/6 swd.

History and Biography.

Borke's (S. H.) Historical Portraits of the Tudor Dynasty, Vol. 2, 8vo. 12/6 cl.

Geography and Travel.

Baughan's (R.) Northern Watering-Places, 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Hunt's (S. K.) On the Nile, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Le Mouster's (Major) Diary, Kandahar in 1879, cr. 8vo. 8/6 cl.

Science.

Dawson's (J. W.) Chain of Life in Geological Time, 6/6 cl.

Mitt's (J.) Introductory Reader to Geology, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.

Savage's (M. J.) Morals of Evolution, cr. 8vo. 5/6 cl.

General Literature.

Compaigne (C.) and Devere's (L.) Complete Manual of Cutting, Parts 3 and 4 in 1 Vol., 10/6 cl.

Doyle's (D.) An Essay on Education and the State of Ireland, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.

Henderson's (W.) Notes on the Folk-lore of the Northern Counties of England and the Borders, 8vo. 12/6 cl.

Hoppe's (E.) Shadow of a Life, a Girl's Story, 3 vols. 3/6 cl.

Kell's (G. F.) The Condition of Nations, Social and Political, translated, edited, and collated to 1890 by Mrs. Brewer, roy. 8vo. 42/6 cl.

Maudsley's (J. G.) Woman outside Christendom, 8vo. 5/6 cl.

Payne's (J.) Lectures on the Science and Art of Education, with other Lectures and Essays, edited by his son, J. F. Payne, with Introduction by Rev. E. R. Quick, 9/6 cl.

Very's (Lieut. E. W.) Stories of the World, 8vo. 3/6 cl.

FRANCE.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Ausgrabungen (Die) zu Olympia, Vol. IV., edited by E. Curtius, F. Adler, and G. Treu, 600m.

Science.

Dahm (P.) Geris, Drama on 5 Actes on Vers, 2fr. 50.

Geography.

Civiale (A.) Carte des Alpes, 20fr.

Jahrbuch d. Schweizer Alpenclub, 1879-80, 11m.

Science.

Auerbach (G.) Das Anthracen u. seine Derivate, 7m. 20.

Gerlach (H. v.) Beiträge zur Anatomie d. Menschlichen Auges, 4m.

Hertwig (O. and R.) Studien zur Ektovithorie, Part 2, Die Chastogonathen, 6m.

Scheffer (H.) Die polydimensionalen Größen u. die vollkommenen Primzahlen, 5m. 50.

Uhland (W. H.) Die Dampfmaschinen m. Schiebersteuerung, 7m.

Wiedersheim (R.) Morphologische Studien, Part 1, 6m.

General Literature.

Le Bottailier de Voltaire, imprimé pour la première fois d'après le Manuscrit Autographe de Voltaire, avec une Préface par Louson le Duc, 30fr.

Vautier (G.) Le Remords du Docteur, 3fr.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING ROOM.

4, Wyndham Crescent, Junction Road, July 31, 1880.

FOR some years past readers at the British Museum have complained of the insufficiency of the number of seats. More accommodation has lately been provided by placing narrow tables between the radiating avenues, but, notwithstanding the addition, readers arriving during the afternoon—especially Saturday afternoon—can find no seat. Twenty or thirty desks—perhaps more—have either the word "Engaged" written on the blotting-pad, or they are reserved by books and papers being placed on them. Such seats are thus engaged chiefly by men who, working until closing time at the Record Office or Somerset House, are anxious to get an hour or so at the British Museum afterwards. Knowing that it is impossible to get a seat in the afternoon, they either drop in for a few minutes between nine and ten, and secure their seats, or get some friend to do it for them. Such a practice is undoubtedly wrong, but inasmuch as I have frequently resorted to it myself, I do not condemn it, but what I do condemn is the cause that leads to it.

Every frequenter of the room knows full well that there are many so-called readers who have no right to the privileges of the Library. If they were eliminated, there is more than sufficient accommodation for literary workers. Glance over their shoulders and see the books they are reading or, on sultry summer afternoons, sleeping over. I am well aware that it is impossible to turn such drones out. Indeed, in some cases, a man may be doing literary work (of a certain sort) in reading up back London Journal stories. But there is a class which certainly should be excluded, and that is the adventurers. Some time ago there was a reader who had his letters addressed to a coffee-shop in Museum Street. Every morning he would come into the Reading Room with a huge parcel of letters, and occupy the whole day in replying to them. Only this afternoon I saw a reader (?) with Kelly's 'Staffordshire Directory' before him, addressing wrappers to all the hotel-keepers and publicans in that county. Has the Reading Room of the British Museum become a trade circular office, and must real workers be turned out of their legitimate nests by such wretched cacklers?

J. E. CURRANE.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

By referring to Appendix F. in vol. ii. of my 'Life of Poe,' Mr. Joseph Gostwick will see that I have not ignored the fact that his useful little 'Handbook of American Literature' was the first English publication to throw doubt on Griswold's statements. In the Mirror for January, 1874, I referred more fully to the remarks of the 'Handbook's' (to me) unknown author, but had to concede to Mr. Moy Thomas the credit of having been the real pioneer of the truth in England with regard to Griswold's 'Life of Poe,' because of his essay in the Truism Magazine for April, 1857. JOHN H. INGRAM.

AN ITALIAN HOUSEHOLD.

OF the many grand old buildings that adorn the fair city of Florence, two of the most remarkable for architectural excellence and artistic decorations are undoubtedly the palaces that bear the names of the ancient and noble families of Strozzi and Riccardi. The honourable descent, the great actions, the former vast wealth and power and magnificence of those two illustrious Florentine houses are matter of history. In the Riccardi palace my good old friend, now, alas! no more, the Marchese Carlo Riccardi-Strozzi was born, on the 15th of June, 1801, son of the Marchese Vincenzo, who was the son of the Marchese Giuseppe Riccardi and of the Marchesa Anna, who was the daughter of Count Amerigo Strozzi. In this great palace till the age of fourteen he passed a part of every year. He must have looked often with wonder and admiration at the marvellous frescoes by Benozzo Gozzoli in the old Medicean chapel, at the gorgeous ceiling in the great gallery painted by Luca Giordano, at the Latin inscriptions and busts and sarcophagi that adorn the court, at the old books and MSS. of the famous library, which it is a pleasure to enter and a regret to leave. He must have heard that the old palace built by Cosimo Pater Patrie, where popes, emperors, kings, princes, illustrious statesmen, scholars, and artists had been honourably received, had been almost doubled in size and restored and enriched by his ancestors the Riccardis,—he must have seen the pomp of his family, the festive meetings, the ceremonious receptions, and the thirty servants in the Riccardi livery who carried torches in the procession of Corpus Domini,—he must have been told and felt that he was heir to all this wealth and splendour. It may easily be imagined what were his feelings and sufferings when the crash of ruin came upon his family in the year 1814. The ruin was almost complete. The palace, including the library, passed into the possession of the State. The effect of that sudden change upon the boy of fourteen was seen to the last in the man. The Marchese Carlo Riccardi-Strozzi led a retired and studious life, dividing his time between the administration of the estates which came to him from his mother and his literary occupations.

Fortunately for him in his great misfortune, the property which he inherited from his mother was considerable. It consisted of a great palace, famous for its grand staircase, at the corner of the Piazza del Duomo, purchased from the Guadagni family; of an estate at Campi, comprising the old tower or fortress of Campi, and a little castle at Santa Maria di Monte Morello, like my castle of Vincigliata, but smaller; of a villa and estate at La Paneretta, a few miles from Pogibonai; of the villa and estate of San Donato in Perano, in the province of Chianti; and of the great villa and estate of Querceto, in the parish of San Martino a Mensola, near Florence. These estates he visited yearly in regular routine and at stated seasons. To the magnificent villa and estate of Salsella, near Pontedera, the last remnant of the Riccardi property, he rarely went, and only for very brief visits, as he possessed only one-half of it. It was chiefly owing to the vicinity of the villa of Querceto to my villa of Majano that I became acquainted with the Marchese Carlo Riccardi-Strozzi. The acquaintance became intimate and ripened into friendship. Ever since the year 1827, and perhaps earlier, Querceto has been a favourite villa of the Strozzi. In the chapel there is a most beautiful work of art, a Madonna and Child, by Luca della Robbia. In the great saloon are many portraits of the family, not a few of officers and generals in the service of the Holy Roman Empire, this branch of the Strozzi having adhered to that empire, as the elder branch adhered to the kings of France. My friend Marchese Carlo amongst other accomplishments was a good German scholar, and translated into Italian the life of Bianca Capello by Siebenkees, which he had the kindness to dedicate to me. As to the Holy Roman Empire, I remember an old contadino at Majano who would not hear of the French emperor or any other modern emperor; he always said with grave emphasis, "There is one God, one Pope, one Emperor." After many pleasant visits to Querceto and Campi and La Paneretta, I had the pleasure many years ago of staying for some days at San Donato, in Chianti. It is about thirty miles from Florence, the road passing through hilly country, and traversing Greve and Panzano, an ancient possession of the Riccardi, now belonging to my friend Alberto Riccardi, son-in-law of the well-known statesman Baron Bettino Riccardi, and skirting part of Radda, which is the chief town of the province of Chianti. The country is hilly, almost mountainous, thinly inhabited, its chief produce being its celebrated wine and acorns, on which great quantities of hogs, called in Italian, for euphony, "animali neri," are fed. The villa of San Donato stands high, commanding fine and extensive views. It is a great isolated building, like many other Italian provincial villas, with no pretensions to architectural beauty, and with none of the pleasant surroundings of an English country house—no gardens, no pleasure-ground,—nothing but the usual prato or lawn, but not kept like English lawns, with a well and a dwarf wall round part of it. At the back the ground rises rapidly, sheltering it from the north-east, and there are great woods of oak and of Spanish chestnut trees. On the southern and western slopes are the poderi farms forming the estate, cultivated to a great extent as vineyards. The way of life at San Donato was old-fashioned and enjoyable. The family consisted of the Marchese; the present Marchesa, whom he married late in life on the death of his first wife, a Zondadari of Siena, with whom he had never lived happily, and from whom he was early in life separated; of his sister-in-law, and generally two or three priests, who lived or visited frequently at San Donato, in the hope of receiving some good piece of church preferment from the Marchese; who inherited from his ancestors the patronage of many well-endowed benefices. These priests were generally very acceptable companions, being well informed on local and family history, especially of Chianti. There were other visitors, some from the neighbourhood, and one or two from Florence. Every one rose at the hour he fancied, having coffee or a very slight early breakfast; then, if the weather permitted, little excursions were made till about half-past eleven, when all assembled at the regular breakfast, which was almost a dinner. Then came longer excursions—to Meleto, belonging to Alberto Riccardi; to Vistareni, the half of the San Donato property which had descended to Prince Ferdinand Strozzi, and where there was a modern palazzina, or big palace, hardly ever inhabited by the family; to the little town of Radda; to the very ancient Valmorbrosan Abbey of Coteluono, now partly the village parsonage and partly the villa and fattoria of the Giuntini family (this famous abbey was founded and largely endowed by the Riccardi family; there is a list of abbots from 1061 to 1808, the date of the suppression, and an inscription in honour of the Riccardi: "Cujus auctor Hieronimus, vir ille pius, potens, liberalis, qui in oppido suo Montis Grosuli et in alius compluribus ab Arno ad Arbum late quondam dominabatur," &c.); to Brolio, the stately castle of Baron Bettino Riccardi, lately restored by him at vast expense and with exquisite taste; and to many more interesting places in Chianti. At half-past seven or later came dinner, which lasted a long time, the Marchese delighting in sitting long at table and in dinner conversation. Afterwards, for those who liked it, there was some old-fashioned game at cards till about eleven, when we parted and retired to our bed-rooms. I have seldom passed a week with more satisfaction. There were pure keen air, good country fare, something new worth seeing every day, pleasant, well-informed companions, and the old-fashioned cordiality of the master of the house, that made every one feel at home and at his ease.

One day an old priest, who held one of the Marchese's benefices and often acted as chaplain at San Donato, and who seemed to know everything about everybody, told me, amongst other things relating to the Strozzi of San Donato, that many years ago, in making some internal alterations which required an opening in a very thick wall, the workmen suddenly came upon the skeleton of a man in a standing position, built into the wall. He was dressed in the costume of about 1620–40, well known from descriptions, and better from the portraits by Van Dyck, Sustermans, and other painters of the time. The dress had partly mouldered away, the skeleton had become a parched-up mummy, and only from the well-preserved teeth and light-brown hair it could be conjectured that he had died young. On the head was a broad-brimmed felt hat, like that in the well-known picture of King Charles I. of England. One of the workmen took the hat and wore it till it was worn out. There was no judicial investigation. Who he was, whence he came, and how and why he had been built into the wall, became for a time the evening talk of the priests and contadini in the neighbourhood, and was soon forgotten for newer subjects of village conversation. The old priest said there was a tradition of a lover surprised by a jealous husband, a Strozzi, who had married a Genoese beauty about two hundred years ago or more, and who suddenly disappeared, and was never seen or heard of afterwards. He cautioned me not to ask the Marchese about it, as he disliked any mention of that part of his family history.

After some fine weather and pleasant excursions there came a day of continual heavy rain, so not being able to go out of doors, we went most of us on a tour through the house. There are more than one hundred rooms, some modernised and with modern furniture, some gloomy, but interesting, from being in appearance and in furniture much as they were in the seventeenth century. In one of them, having on the stone architrave of the door the date 1620 and the letters "O. S.," we found a number of old pictures resting on the floor and turned to the wall, mostly saints, landscapes, and portraits of little merit and in bad condition. One of them was, however, a really good picture, and, though damaged and torn and dark with age and neglect, made a great impression on me. It was a full-length portrait of a beautiful young woman in the picturesque dress of the seventeenth century, and from what could be distinguished of the figure, the fine features, and the singularly bright and expressive eyes, reminded me instantly of a charming portrait by Van Dyck in a Durazzo palace at Genoa. Round the fair graceful neck was a very thin silk or plaited hair chain, supporting a very small medallion of a reddish colour. The name of the lady depicted, the date, and the name of the painter had been carefully and thoroughly erased. When I called the Marchese's attention to it, he looked at it with an embarrassed air, remarked that it was probably a fancy portrait of some stranger, and immediately turned it to the wall. In a moment after he opened a cupboard full of books, and kindly told me that, as I had a liking for old books, I might examine them, and take those which I thought worth taking. Collectors and lovers of old books may imagine with what eagerness and curiosity I began my search in the cupboard. There were many volumes of theology and lives of saints and books of travels. Amongst them was the collection of voyages, in three volumes, folio, published at Venice by Ramusio, 1550–1555; also a book on cookery by Bartolomeo Scappi, cook to Pope Paul V. (Camillo Borghese), printed at Venice 1610, with a number of most interesting illustrations of every object relating to the kitchen and carrying and the service of the table; also, 'Tractatus de Venenis a Magistro Petro de Abano editus, Padue, Anno Domini MCCCCLXXXIII. Deo Gratias.' When I had arrived at this point, I was called away to dinner; the time occupied by that meal and the evening conversation seemed to me much longer than usual. As soon as possible, when it was about eleven, I rushed back to my book cupboard, and carried most of the books to my bed-room. The operation of glancing at the title-pages, selecting, and carrying the books in packets from the lumber-room to my bed-room occupied more than an hour. I then seated myself on the floor, with a couple of candles and my books, and proceeded with my inspection. The first volume was entitled 'I Donneschi Difetti da Giuseppe Passi, Ravenate in Venetia MDCL.' The heading of one of the chapters made me smile: "Delle Donne Maghe, Incantatrici, venefiche, malefiche, superstitiose, fattucchiere, streghe e strigimache." The next book was 'Tableau Historique des Russes et Subtilitez des Femmes, ou sont naïvement représentées leurs mœurs, humeurs, tirannies, tromperies et généralement leurs artifices et pratiques,' par L. S. R., Paris, 1623. Then came a thin folio, bound in parchment, 'Tychoonis Brahe Astronomi instaurata mechanica, Noriberge, Anno 1602,' with a very remarkable engraving of the great astronomer, one of Uraniburg, and several of astronomical instruments. It appears from an inscription on the fly leaf to have belonged to "Il Duca D^e Rob^t Dudley di Northumbria," son of Queen Elizabeth's favourite, Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, and of the Lady Douglas Sheffield—a learned and accomplished courtier and man of science, well known in Tuscany, where he lived for many years, employed by the Grand Duke in military and naval constructions, and in designing the enlargement and improvement of the port of Leghorn. This volume was especially welcome, as I had devoted much time for many years to researches in the archives and libraries and public offices of Florence respecting this Robert Dudley and his family, and have a boxful of books, manuscripts, letters, and documents relating to the subject. Then I took up a 'Compendio dell' Arte Eoristica et Possibilità delle Mirabili & Stupende Operationi delli Demoni & de' Malefici del P. F. Girolamo Menghi da Viasana Minor Osservante,' Bologna, 1576. The headings of two chapters amused me greatly, and made me ponder on the strange things which have been believed in by mankind. First, "Come gli Demoni ai faccino Incubi & Succubi," &c.; secondly, "Che Cosa sia Straga, Overo, Strigumaga; dell' Ethimologia & Natura di Questo Nome; & delli Modi, con li quali li Demoni cercano Augmentare Questa Perfidia & scelerata setta Loro." Next came 'Les Voyages de Jean Struys en Moscovie, en Tartarie, aux Indes, & en d'autres Pays Étrangers, à Amsterdam, 1681.' This was the most modern of the books in the cupboard. On the title-page is written "Chardin," and on the margin in several pages there are notes in Chardin's small, clear, delicate handwriting, commenting on Jean Struys's marvellous narratives. One of the engravings in the book is frightful and sickening; it is in two parts. In one a Persian husband, fastened by two servants, is flaying alive his wife, who is fastened naked to a St. Andrew's cross. In the other he is exhibiting to his friends the skin nailed to the wall. Jean Struys says he was near the house and heard the wretched woman's shrieks, but no one dared to interfere.

As I was thinking over the tortures of the victim, the detestable cruelty of the monster in human shape who inflicted them, and the cowardly indifference of his neighbours, I was surprised by a very slight sound as of rustling silk, and, looking up from my books, I distinctly saw a female figure in a white dress slowly gliding round the room, feeling the wall with her hands, as if searching for some particular spot. My first impression was that it was a trick to try my nerves invented by some one of the guests. I remembered a secret passage in my villa at Majano commanding a bed-room, where tricks were practised in former times to frighten visitors, especially those coming from a distance. But then I had, according to my custom, carefully examined every part of the room, one of the great old-fashioned rooms of the house. The floor was of bricks painted like granite, the ceiling of beams in the Venetian style; there was no fireplace, according to the old fashion, which allowed generally only two fireplaces to a house, one in the great hall and one in the kitchen. There was very little furniture, and the only suspicious-looking objects were two great cupboards, not movable or projecting from the side of the room, but let into the wall, which was unusually thick, the depth of the cupboards alone being at least a yard. As usual, I had locked the door. All this flashed through my mind in an instant. Then, I confess it, there came over me that peculiar sensation called creeping of the flesh—"arrectaque horrore comæ, et vox faucibus hæsit." I felt my hair standing on end, and my voice stuck in my throat. I tried to speak, and could not. At last I moved. At that moment the figure turned towards me, and I saw at once the image of the portrait in the old room; the same white figured silk dress, the same lace, the medallion, the brown hair, and the strange bright eyes with a feverish and melancholy expression. I started to my feet, and in so doing overturned and extinguished the candles. I had not closed either the outer or inner shutters; there was no moon, but a very dim twilight, partly, I suppose, from the stars. Unluckily I had no matches to strike a light. There was the figure, which appeared to move in a light of its own—a sort of halo, as it seemed to me. Slowly it left the wall and disappeared in the bed—a great bed of the seventeenth century, with a carved walnut-wood canopy and red damask silk hangings, of the size and form of a bed I have at the villa of Majano, except that mine is more modern, being of the last century, and having the canopy of carved wood gilt and the hangings of figured blue silk. I remained for a time, I know not how long, standing bewildered in the middle of the room, straining my eyes towards the bed. The semi-darkness and the silence became oppressive; I felt stupefied—an irresistible fascination fixed my thoughts. I undressed hurriedly and almost unconsciously climbed into the bed. I must have fallen into a trance or a deep sleep—so deep that I was only awakened by a loud knocking at my door. I jumped out of bed. It was late—so late that breakfast was ready; so the servant told me, and he had been sent by the Marchese to see if I was ill or had gone out. As I was dressing I saw something on the floor; it was a little medallion—a garnet or very red amethyst, or a carbuncle or a ruby, I cannot say positively which—with an exquisite ancient Greek engraving of a sphinx, with a very thin gold setting and a very small chain, either of silk or plated hair, with a tiny gold clasp. I send you an impression of it. When I appeared in the breakfast-room every one looked at me with a peculiar expression—at least I thought so—especially the Marchese, who, however, asked very kindly as to my health, observing that I looked pale and haggard. I thanked him, merely remarking that I had sat up too long over the books and had not been able to sleep till early in the morning. I put into his hand the medallion, telling him where I had found it. He looked at it curiously and nervously, turning very pale. He gave it back to me, saying that it had probably fallen out of one of the books, that as he had given me the books, he begged me to accept the medallion also, and to keep it carefully as a slight remembrance of my visit to San Donato. Shortly after breakfast the party broke up, as had been previously arranged, and I returned to Florence.

I make no attempt at an explanation. A quarter of a century or more has elapsed since that night. The vision haunts me to this day. Often at night I seem to be in that old bed with the apparition looking steadfastly at me with radiant eyes, and I wake with a start and in a fever, to wonder at the mysteries which perplex human reason. J. TEMPLE LEADER.

SANSKRIT MANUSCRIPTS IN JAPAN.

Oxford, August 2, 1880.

At the end of my paper on 'Sanskrit Texts in Japan,' printed in the last number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, and fully reported in the Athenæum, I mentioned in a postscript (March 10th) that I had received from Mr. Wylie a copy of a vocabulary called 'A Thousand Sanskrit and Chinese Words,' compiled by I-tsing, about 700 A.D., and brought to Japan by Zikaku, a Japanese priest, in 847 A.D. The edition of this vocabulary which Mr. Wylie bought in Japan was published by Jiakumyo in 1727, and in the preface the editor says: "In the temple Hōriji, in Yamato, there are treasured Prajñāpāramitā-hridaya-sūtram and Somaśa-dhāraṇī, written on two palm-leaves, handed down from Central India."

Hōriji is one of eleven temples founded by Prince Umayyado, who died in A.D. 621. This temple is in a town named Tatsuta, in the province Yamato, near Kyoto, the western capital. I ended my article with the following sentence: "Here, then, we have clear evidence that in the year 1727 palm-leaves containing the text of Sanskrit Sūtras were still preserved in the temple of Hōriji. If that temple is still in existence, might not some Buddhist priest of Kyoto, the western capital of Japan, be induced to go there to see whether the palm-leaves are still there, and, if they are, to make a copy and send it to Oxford?"

Sooner than expected this wish of mine has been fulfilled. On the 28th of April Mr. Shigefuyu Karihara, of Kyoto, a friend of one of my Sanskrit pupils, Mr. Bunyū Nanjō, who for some years had himself taken an interest in Sanskrit, went to the temple or monastery of Hōriji to inquire whether any old Sanskrit MSS. were still preserved there. He was told that the priests of the monastery had recently surrendered their valuables to the Imperial Government, and that the ancient palm-leaves had been presented to the emperor.

In a chronicle kept at the monastery of Hōriji it is stated that these palm-leaves and other valuables were brought by Ono Imoko, a retainer of the Mikado (the Emperor Suiko), from China (during the Sui dynasty, 580-618) to Japan, in the thirty-seventh year of the age of Prince Umayyado, i.e., A.D. 609. The other valuable articles were: 1. Nid, i.e., a cymbal used in Buddhist temples; 2. Midzu-game, a water vessel; 3. Shaku-jo, a staff, the top of which is armed with metal rings, as carried by Buddhist priests; 4. Kesa (Kashaya), a scarf, worn by Buddhist priests across the shoulder, which belonged to the famous Bodhidharma; 5. Haki, a bowl, given by the same Bodhidharma. These things and the Sanskrit MSS. are said to have belonged to some Chinese priests, named Wai-s (Yeshi) and Nim-shin (Neusen), and to four others successively, who lived in a monastery on the mountain called Nan-ngok (Nangak), in the province of Hang (Kō) in China. These palm-leaf MSS. may, therefore, be supposed to date from at least the sixth century A.D., and be, in fact, the oldest Sanskrit MSS. now in existence.

May we not hope that his Excellency Mori Arinori, who expressed so warm an interest in this matter when he was present at the meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, will now lead us his powerful aid, and request the Minister of the Department of the Imperial Household to allow these MSS. to be carefully copied or photographed? After the misfortune that has happened lately to Prof. Mommsen, we hardly venture to ask for a loan of the originals.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

Literary Gossip.

A COLLECTION of the 'Published Letters of John Ruskin, D.C.L.,' is to appear shortly, edited, with illustrative and explanatory notes, by "An Oxford Pupil." The first volume, which will be issued early in September next, will contain Letters on Art and Science; the second will be devoted to Letters on Politics, Economy, and Miscellaneous Matters. A fac-simile of one of the letters will be given with the first volume. As usual, copies are to be supplied by Mr. George Allen, of Orpington.

MR. WALTER BRANT has, we are glad to know, undertaken to prepare for Messrs. Blackwood & Sons a volume of 'Readings' from Rabelais. The book will be ready by the new year.

At a meeting of the Roxburghe Club, Mr. Frederic Ouvry, Fellow and late President of the Society of Antiquaries, was unanimously elected a member in the room of Sir William Stirling-Maxwell. It was resolved to print for the Club Sir John Harington's manuscript treatise on the succession to the Crown, 1602, from the Chapter Library at York Minster.

We understand that a narrative of events in Macedonia during the last few months is about to be published in London. The facts are drawn from local sources, and the object of their publication is to show that the country is reduced to a terrible condition of anarchy.

By a recent order of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, an annual sum of about thirty-five pounds is to be entrusted to the Royal Irish Academy for the establishment and remuneration of a "Professor of Celtic Languages." This amount, it appears, is derived from a sum collected for a memorial to the late Rev. James Todd, D.D., author of a 'Life of St. Patrick,' &c. Under the Chancery order the professors are to be appointed at stated intervals by the Academy, to lecture on subjects prescribed for them in connexion with Celtic languages. It seems that some of the subscribers to the fund considered the amount available too small for a professorship, in view of what has been done in that direction in Scotland and at Oxford, and they were in favour of having the money applied to the publication of a valuable Irish manuscript, to be presented to public libraries as a memorial of Dr. Todd.

Some little time ago the new enthusiasm for Gaelic study took the form of a promise of a manual suitable for Highland schools, and now we learn that tourists during the coming autumn are to be provided with a handbook of Gaelic phrases, with pronunciation, from the pen of Mrs. Mary Mac-kellar.

The work of H.I.H. the Archduke Ludwig Salvator of Austria, 'Leukosia, the Capital of Cyprus,' illustrated by his own hand, and translated into English by Chevalier Krapf Liverhoff, the Austro-Hungarian Consul-General in London, will soon be brought out by an English firm.

That zealous antiquary, Mr. Ebsworth, is busy with another volume, to be called 'One Hundred Years of Molash Records, 1781 to 1880: being the Burial Registers of Molash Parish, near Ashford, Kent, edited by the Present Vicar.'

PROF. KNÖLL, of Vienna, the editor of Babrius's fables, is now visiting English libraries for the purpose of making a more elaborate edition of that work. He intends to bring out a complete collection of Greek fables.

The Curators of the Taylorian Institution, Oxford, decided at their last meeting that the German teachership, vacated by Dr. Hamann, should not be filled up for the next term.

PROF. PALMER's new translation of the Koran, which is to appear in Prof. Max Müller's "Sacred Books of the East," is nearly ready. Two more volumes of the same series are in the press, one containing a translation of the 'Parinibbāna-Sutta' ('The Great Discourse'), by Mr. Rhys Davids; another the 'Sutta Nipata,' by Prof. Faus-bell, and the 'Dhammapada,' by Prof. Max Müller.

DR. LANDELS, of Regent's Park Chapel, is writing a biography of his son, the Rev.

John Landels, who died not long ago at Genoa, at the outset of a promising ministerial career in Italy.

The following appointments, &c., may be mentioned. Canon Stubbs has been nominated a member of the Munich Academy. Mr. Stephen Tucker, Rouge Croix Pursuivant, has been appointed Somerset Herald, succeeding to the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Planché. Signor Antonio Farnelli has been elected Professor of Italian at University College, Gower Street, Prof. Volpe having resigned his professorship on account of ill health.

We regret to hear of the death of Capt. E. Dyma Fenton, the author of several successful novels, 'Sorties from Gib.', in Quest of Sensation and Sentiment, 'Eve's Daughters,' and 'B., an Autobiography.' He had left the army, and had been residing quietly at Scarborough since the death of his wife, three years ago. After suffering much pain from an injury to his foot, he died on Thursday, the 29th of July. He was a great favourite with all who knew him. As an amateur photographer he had few equals, his Spanish views especially being highly esteemed.

There will appear very shortly in Germany the correspondence of Novalis with Friedrich, August Wilhelm, Charlotte, and Caroline Schlegel, edited by Dr. J. M. Raich. This is the first time that the letters exchanged by Hardenberg with his friend Friedrich Schlegel have been published to the world. Indeed, the letters were long thought to have perished, and quite lately the literary historian R. Haym expressed his regrets on this subject.

Mrs. ALEXANDER is going to entertain the public with a new novel, entitled 'The Freres,' which will commence in the Temple Bar magazine for 1881. Mrs. Leith Adams has again undertaken the editorship of the Kennington Magazine.

The College of the Teachers' Training and Registration Society will open again in September, under the superintendence of Miss Agnes Ward, late of the Notting Hill High School. Miss Ward is a sister of Mr. T. H. Ward, Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, editor of 'The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions.' The College was very successful at the last Cambridge Examination for Teachers' Certificates. Fifteen present and two former students passed in all three subjects.

DR. HARKAVY, of the Imperial Library of St. Petersburg, has discovered amongst the new collection of the MSS. of this library the greater part of B. Saadyah Gaon's Arabic commentary on Isaiah. Up to the present time we knew only of his Arabic translation of Isaiah, of which Prof. Lagarde is preparing a new edition.

The well-known Leipzig publishers, Messrs. Teubner & Co., are going to publish a work entitled 'Scriptorum Græcorum qui Christianam impugnauerunt Religionem quæ Supersunt,' edited by Prof. C. J. Neumann. The third fasciculus, which will appear first, will bear the title of 'Juliani Imperatoris contra Christianos Librorum quæ Supersunt. Insunt Cyrilli Alexandrini Fragmenta Syriaca.' The Syriac fragments with a Latin translation are by Dr. E. Nestle.

"ONE generation passeth away, and another generation cometh." The Critical Review of Moscow, so ably edited by Prof. Kovalewsky, has ceased to appear after a short life of eighteen months. A society of savants connected with the Berlin University is going to bring out a weekly paper with the title Die Deutsche Literaturzeitung, under the editorship of Prof. Max Roediger.

THE German Buchdrucker-Verein has been holding its annual meeting, under the presidency of Dr. E. Brockhaus, at Munich. It is to meet next year at Bremen.

SCIENCE

The Progress of the World in Arts, Agriculture, Commerce, Manufactures, Instruction, Railways, and Public Wealth, since the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century. By Michael G. Mulhall, F.R.S. (Stanford.)

We cannot conscientiously speak well of the manner in which this volume of statistics has been compiled. The author has gone to many authorities for information, and collected a vast multitude of figures, but he fails in numerous instances in evolving the truth from the heterogeneous materials which were at his command. That a book of this kind should furnish an abundant crop of errors is only what might be expected. The Allgemeine Zeitung, for instance, is not the oldest newspaper in Germany, for it was established in 1794, whilst the Frankfurter Journal has uninterruptedly been published since 1616, and is probably the oldest periodical in existence. The school population of Greece is equal to 5.6 per cent. of the total population. The German word Bauer ought to have been rendered "yeoman" or "peasant proprietor," and not "farmer." The author is mistaken when he states that "down to 1850 all the railway engines in Germany were imported from England," for Borsig in 1846 had already turned out his hundredth locomotive. The "total army and navy strength" of the United Kingdom exceeds 260,000 men, and there are certainly several European states which, proportionately to their population, do not keep an equal force under arms in time of peace. It is, however, when we come to examine some of the comparative tables furnished by the author that we have most to deplore his want of thoroughness and discrimination. The few tabular statements devoted to public finance are superficial and misleading. Instead of analysing each separate financial statement and reducing the whole to a common standard, the author is content to supply crude lump sums, which include in many instances the receipts derived from Crown lands, railways, and productive public works. He appears to think that these lump sums, divided by the number of inhabitants, ought to yield a measure of the taxation to which the nations of the world are subjected. Nothing could be further from the mark. In the United Kingdom the total expenditure for imperial and local purposes may amount to eighty shillings a head, as the author asserts, but only sixty-two shillings out of this sum are defrayed by direct or indirect taxation. Nor are Frenchmen so heavily taxed as the author believes to be the case. In comparing the educational statistics of various countries, the author contents himself with giving the proportions which the number of scholars bear to the total population. This method may suffice when tracing the progress of education in a particular country, but is not at all admissible as a measure of comparison between different states. A school attendance of 18 per cent. in France is fully equal to an attendance of 26 per cent. in the United States, for in the latter the youthful element of the population is far more numerous. If we compare the number of scholars with the total number of children between the ages of five and fifteen, we find that they amount to 77 per cent. in Scotland and Germany, to 75 per cent. in France (which has made wonderful strides in advance during the last eight years), and to 72 per cent. in England and the United States. The United States, as a whole, do not consequently stand at the head, whatever may be the superiority of the leading members of the Union. Nor need we wonder at this, for in 1870 thousands of negroes and poor whites were still denied the benefits of an elementary education. The census just taken will no doubt exhibit a wonderful progress in educational matters. The author is mistaken, too, when he says, with reference to the large number of persons in the United States unable to read, that "they are doubtless negroes or immigrants." Had he taken the trouble to consult the census returns, he would have found that the illiterate population included 777,873 persons of foreign birth, 2,789,689 negroes, and rather more than two million whites who were natives of the United States. In other words, 74 per cent. of the native-born whites, 14 per cent. of the foreign-born whites, and 51 per cent. of the coloured persons over ten years of age were unable to read. Many of these may, however, be presumed to have acquired that accomplishment as they grew older and wiser, and, so far as a knowledge of reading and writing goes, the United States need hardly fear comparison with any state in Europe. The author's railway statistics are open to similar objections, and his figures in many instances are antiquated. The length of railways throughout the world in 1880 was certainly greater than 202,021 miles. We have taken the trouble to consult trustworthy authorities on the subject, and we find that even towards the close of 1878, or in the beginning of 1879, the railways open for traffic had a length of 215,348 miles (104,130 in Europe, 96,154 in America, 2,267 in Africa, 8,800 in Asia, 3,997 in Australia and Polynesia). This is nearly 7 per cent. in excess of the length given by the author, and assuming his figures for 1870 to be correct, the increase since then has actually been 75 per cent. instead of 64 per cent. Far more satisfactory are those portions of the author's work in which he presents us with a summary of the official statistics of separate states, though even here his services as an interpreter should not be accepted without hesitation.

Natural History Rambles.—In Search of Minerals.
By D. T. Ansted, M.A., F.R.S. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)

MR. ANSTED rightly remarks that "minerals are noteworthy for many reasons," but, nevertheless, most people exhibit invincible ignorance of the most elementary teachings of mineralogy. Neither the extraordinary beauty sometimes shown by certain species, the economic value of others, nor the quaint superstitions formerly associated with many more, have awakened any general interest in their study: they are "stones," and nothing more. Mineralogists themselves are to some extent responsible for the neglect into which the study has fallen, for the introduction to the science is made unnecessarily unattractive by the uncouth terminology and bewildering synonyms by which it is disfigured. In the volume before us the late Prof. Ansted has aimed at giving in popular form a mass of curious and interesting information about minerals, and at showing the great pleasure to be derived from the search for them. For this purpose a rough-and-ready classification is adopted, which brings together in succession groups of minerals deserving consideration for their intrinsic value, their useful properties, their industrial uses, or their rarity, curious mutual relations, and peculiarities. About each class we receive much interesting and unexpected information, given in a pleasant, chatty manner. Sometimes we learn how they were used, why they were valued, and what was thought about them in classic antiquity; sometimes we are told of the magical qualities attributed to them in the Middle Ages, or at others we seem to be enjoying a pleasant chat about their uses in the arts of the present time, or about their "homes" in remote regions. Although the volume is full of varied and entertaining information, it is not free from certain blemishes, such as too frequently disfigure mineralogical works. We occasionally find vagueness in expression, an inexactness in the use of synonyms, and a certain want of definiteness in discussing crystallographical details, even so far as they are admissible into a professedly popular work. Thus, in the first chapter, after speaking of certain properties and uses of minerals, the author states that "other minerals are obtained and used chiefly in their condition as metals." The reader will, we think, fail to grasp the meaning of this statement. In another chapter we are told that "rock-crystal is one of a thousand forms of sandstone." Calc spar or Iceland spar is an occasional and unfamiliar result of the presence of limestone. These statements are ambiguous, or rather they are decidedly misleading. In the perusal of the book we have encountered several similar instances, which might have been rectified by the author in a second edition; but that, alas! is now impossible. Mr. Ansted's extensive travels and intimate practical acquaintance with mines and minerals pre-eminently qualified him to write a popular introduction to the study of mineralogy, and it is probable that his interesting chapters will induce many to go "in search of minerals" for themselves.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

SHORTLY before his lamented death the late M. Broca presented to the School of Anthropology at Paris, for the free use of all students, a register of the results of the skull measurements made by him during the last fifteen years, recently completed by M. Drouault, his private secretary. A biographical sketch of Dr. Broca has been contributed to the Lancet by Prof. Ball, Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, one of his pupils. He states that Broca was born in 1824 at Sainte Foy (Gironde), and was the son of a physician, came to Paris at the age of sixteen, and devoted himself to anatomy. "In 1848 he became professor of the Faculty, and gained in rapid succession the honours of the profession—a place as surgeon in the Paris hospitals, and the title of agrégé at the Medical Faculty. In 1866 he became a member of the Academy of Medicine, and in 1867 was promoted to a chair at the Faculty, where, as a teacher of clinical surgery, he was highly successful." Prof. Ball adds eloquent testimony to the moral and intellectual qualities of this fertile and original thinker and just and benevolent man. "From the moment of the foundation in 1860 of the Anthropological Society, the activity of Broca's intellect seemed to have found its proper channel. Anthropology is a compound of so many other sciences that the intervention of a grasping and encyclopedic mind, like Broca's, is almost indispensable to form the connecting link between so many different branches of human knowledge. An excellent mathematician, a first-rate anatomist, a good Greek scholar, Broca combined in himself that diversified knowledge which the subject requires with the synthetical tendencies which condense these disseminated forces and make them converge upon a single point." The following details are given of his death-seizure:—"On Tuesday, the 6th July, he fainted in the Senate house; on Wednesday he felt sufficiently recovered to resume his labours; towards midnight on Thursday he was suddenly seized with a fit of dyspnoea, rose from his bed, and expired in ten minutes. Upon post-mortem examination all the organs were apparently sound, and we shall probably not be far from the truth in attributing the catastrophe to cerebral exhaustion, arising from too protracted a course of severe intellectual exertion."

The time for sending in memoirs (printed or manuscript) to the Paris Anthropological Society in competition for the Godard Prize of 20L, "to the author of the best memoir on any subject relating to anthropology," has been extended to December 31st, 1880. The competition is open to any person who is not a member of the Central Committee of that Society, and the memoirs may be in any language.

THE SITE OF GATH.

THE disappearance of Gath is one of the most remarkable losses in Biblical topography. The Crusaders placed it at Yebna, the ancient Jabneh, Jabneel, or Jamnia. Robinson fixed on Dair Duban as corresponding with the position assigned to Gath by Eusebius. Dr. Porter identified it with Tell es Safieh, in which Lieut. Conder also agrees. Thomson thought that Bethogabra, Eleutheropolis, Beit Jibrin, and Gath were all one and the same city. Another site, that of Khirbet Jelediyeh, on sheet xx. of the large map, is proposed by the Rev. W. F. Birch in the July number of the Palestine Fund's Quarterly Statement, on the basis of a remarkable collection of names.

Mr. Trelawny Saunders, who is preparing for publication for the Committee of the Fund their reduced maps of Western Palestine to illustrate the ancient geography, has now made another suggestion. In the southern part of sheet xx. is a ruin called Kh. Abu Gath. It is described in the memoirs as a "heap of ruins with the remains of a modern wall." It is situated at the head of the Wady el Hesi, here called el Muleikah, which falls into the Mediterranean Sea between Gaza and Ashkelon. The position is intermediate between Gaza and Hebron, and it commands the main route from the nomad region of the Negebor south country to the lowland hills of the Philistines Shephelah, just as Gaza protects the Philistine coast road, and Hebron guards the highway through the mountains of Judah.

Apart from the apparent identity of name, Mr. Saunders defends this position from an examination of all the passages in the Bible which bear upon Gath, especially those which make Gath the southernmost city of the Philistines, with which condition Kh. Abu Gath seems to agree very well. If, too, Shearaim (1 Sam. xvii. 52) be identified with Tell Sheerah, then Kh. Abu Gath is on the way to Shearaim.

A further suggestion has been made. Prof. Palmer, while admitting that Mr. Saunders has made out a strong case for his position, contends that the name of Gath would be preserved in the modern form of Jatt or Jennet. Now five miles to the north east of Kh. Abu Gath is a place named Kh. Jennet. It is described in the memoirs as containing "foundations, caves, cisterns, and ruined walls. Apparently an ancient site."

Mr. Saunders has also communicated to the Chairman of the Committee an important rectification of the boundary of Ephraim and Manasseh, and a new identification of Magiddo arrived at from a study of the great map.

SALE.

THE library of our old contributor the late Prof. Thomas Bell, Secretary of the Royal Society, was sold on Friday and Saturday of last week at the rooms of Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge. The sale comprised 777 lots, which produced 1,191L. 17s. Amongst the more important works, Gould's Birds of Europe, 5 vols., sold for 86L.; Gray's Genera of Birds, 3 vols., 34L.; Sowerby's English Botany, 24 vols., 28L. 10s.; Sowerby's Thesaurus Conchyliorum, 25L. 10s.; Yarrell's British Fishes, 3 vols., 31L. 10s.; Linnean Society's Transactions, 30 vols., 28L.; Reeve's Conchologia Iconica, 69 parts, 17l.; Zoological Society's Transactions, 5 vols., 34l. 10s.; Meyer's British Birds, 4 vols., 22l.; Turner's Picturesque Views, 2 vols., 28l.; Annales des Sciences Naturelles, 130 vols., 31l.; Annals of Natural History, 48 vols., 15l. 10s.; Keats's Poems, first edition, 10l. 15s.; Ray Society's Publications, 54 vols., 22l. 5s.; Ruskin's Seven Lamps of Architecture, first edition, 5l.; Philosophical Transactions, 75 vols., 25l. 5s.; and Palæontological Society's Monographs, 33 vols., 18l. 10s.

MEETINGS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.
TUE. SEPT. 1.—Anniversary

Science Gossip.

Two periodical comets are now approaching perihelion, but it is not likely that either of them will become visible for some weeks yet—at any rate, until after the moon, which was new yesterday morning, has waxed and waned. Faye's comet will be nearest the earth on the 3rd of October (at the distance 1.09 that of the sun), but will not be in perihelion until the 22nd of January next year. It was discovered on November 22nd, 1843, and observed at each of the subsequent returns, passing its perihelion on the last occasion on July 18th, 1873. The other, Winnecke's periodical comet, was discovered in 1819 by Pons, and not seen again until 1858, when Dr. Winnecke determined satisfactorily the circumstances of its orbit. The last passage through perihelion occurred on March 12th, 1875; the next, according to Prof. von Oppolzer's recent calculations (Ast. Nach. No. 2326), will fall on the 4th of next December. But the position of the comet at this return will be very unfavourable for visibility at places where there are sufficiently powerful telescopes to afford hope of seeing so faint an object. Dr. von Oppolzer consoles us with the assurance that at the next return, in 1886, the circumstances will be far more likely to give astronomers an opportunity of observing the comet. Being also unfavourably placed in 1863, it was not seen at all that year, when it passed its perihelion in the autumn.

DR. WILLIAM FARR has been awarded by the Council of the British Medical Association their gold medal for his long and valuable labours in sanitary science and statistical inquiry. The presentation will be made on the 12th of August, in the Senate House, Cambridge.

THE German Association of Naturalists and Physicians meets at Danzig from September 18th to the 24th. The Association seeks for contributions from strangers, and promises all foreigners a very hearty welcome. There are twenty-three sections, several excursions, some concerts, and many social gatherings, so that the week will be fully occupied.

PROF. LISSAJOUS, the discoverer of the beautiful figures so well known by his name, is dead. M. Lissajous was the Professor of Physics at Toulouse.

THE Perseids, or August meteors, may be looked for early next week, particularly on the night of Tuesday, August 10th. The moon, being only a few days past conjunction, will not interfere with their visibility.

THE Report of the Dearborn Observatory, Chicago, issued last May, indicates a continuation of useful activity there, especially in the observations made with the fine 18½ inch refractor of Alvan Clark's manufacture, set up in the year 1862.

PROF. ELLIS LOOKIS read before the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, on April 20th, 1880, 'Contributions to Meteorology: being Results derived from an Examination of the Observations of the United States Signal Service and from other Sources.' This paper has been printed in the American Journal of Science for July. It is full of information relative to the principles upon which the progress of storms is traced from their source to their exhaustion.

DR. F. M. STAFFE contributes to the Revue Universelle des Mines, de la Métallurgie, &c., a valuable memoir, 'Étude de l'Influence de la Chaleur de l'Intérieur de la Terre sur la Possibilité de Construction des Tunnels dans les Hautes Montagnes.' His studies are well deserving the attention of engineers and physicists in general.

THE Report of the Chief Inspector of Mines of Victoria for 1879 is an important document, showing very clearly the advantages in that colony of the "Regulation of Mines Statute." In 1879 there were 146 accidents in the mines; in 1874 there were 296. The number of men killed in and about the mines last year was 129 per thousand employed, as compared with 1.93 in 1874. The Reports of the Mining Surveyors and Registrars for the quarter ending 31st March, 1880, show that 66,174 ounces of gold were obtained during the quarter from alluvial deposits and 113,775 ounces by quartz mining.

THE Association Française pour l'Avancement des Sciences meets this year for its ninth session at Rheims, from the 12th to the 19th of August, under the presidency of M. Krantz, Senator, Commissioner-General of the Universal Exposition of 1878.

FINE ARTS

EXHIBITION of WORKS of ART in BLACK and WHITE. Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, consisting of Drawings, Engravings, and Etchings. OPEN DAILY from Ten till Six.—Admission, 1s. Cambridge, &c. R. F. M'FAIR, Sec.

DON'S GREAT WORKS, 'CHRIST LEAVING THE TOMB,' 'CHRIST RISING FROM THE DEAD,' and 'THE HEAVENLY JERUSALEM,' (the latter just completed, each 22 by 22 feet, with 'Dream of Pious Wife,' 'Soldiers of the Cross,' 'Night of the Crucifixion,' 'House of Calvary,' &c., at the DOME GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten to Six.—1s.

Our Ancient Monuments and the Land around Them. By C. F. Kains-Jackson. With an Introduction by Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P. (Elliot Stock.)

This volume has appeared at an opportune moment, when the gifted writer of the preface has been again returned to the House of Commons, to resume, it is to be hoped, his praiseworthy efforts to obtain protection for our ancient British monuments. These monuments and the contents of some forms of them are the only materials from which the earliest history of this country may be evolved. Every year that passes witnesses the partial or total removal of some of these materials, and makes more and more difficult the completion of that history. They who have been for many years engaged in the careful survey of these monuments can testify to these injurious aggressions. Both last summer and within the past few months the mason's hammer has descended with destructive force upon highly instructive monuments on Dartmoor; and it is a regrettable and dispiriting thought that whilst our legislators are considering other questions of much greater moment, or are hesitating, or not striving to surmount the difficulties affecting proprietary rights which surround the question of monumental protection, the hammer and the chisel are unceasing in their work of demolition, and many ancient memorials are being irretrievably spoiled, and rendered useless to the antiquary and the historian.

There are two portions of this book, viz., the preface, by Sir John Lubbock, and the material part, by his friend Mr. Kains-Jackson, thus introduced, which invite comment. How far does each portion command itself?

It was an excellent opportunity for informing the public and showing, by accurate descriptions, how important are the instances scheduled, as illustrating the various branches of the entire subject. It will be sufficient if we confine our remarks at this moment to one section of the book, viz., tumuli and megalithic monuments in England and Wales, and to two or three only of the examples mentioned. Respecting such monuments in general, Sir John Lubbock remarks that they are "rapidly disappearing. They are seldom destroyed to serve any important purpose, but are utilized as manure, road metal, or building material, or perhaps levelled merely because they impede the plough." Many of them belong to the neolithic period; some, and especially those which cluster around Stonehenge and Abury, he refers to the Bronze Age, because they contain articles in that metal; and others "are certainly as recent as Saxon times." No exception can be taken to the last statement; but it is not so certain that both Abury and Stonehenge belong to the Bronze Age. It is possible that a considerable interval of time may have separated these two great structures, Abury indicating in no way whatever the use of metal tools, while the stones of Stonehenge have been chiselled. The former may therefore be referred to the Stone Age without violating any rule of sound induction, and the latter to that of Bronze. The chiselling, however, does not necessarily imply the use of metal, because there is good reason to believe that the elaborate sculpturing of the hard granite walling-slabs of the Gavv' Inis and other dolmens in Brittany was accomplished by stone implements; and by the same means the Sarsen stones on Salisbury Plain, and the Devil's Arrows, near Boroughbridge, Yorkshire, may have been artificially reduced and shaped. We admit that a large proportion of the barrows which cluster around these notable Wiltshire monuments and belong to the Bronze Age seem to support the view of Sir John Lubbock; yet it must not be overlooked that there are still, and probably were formerly other, sepulchres in their immediate neighbourhood which as clearly belong to an earlier age. We merely make these remarks to show that there is another view of the subject which is not without support.

Sir John Lubbock writes in a less positive manner of another class of monument. "Sometimes," he observes, "we find the central chamber standing alone, as at Kits Coty House, which may or may not have ever been covered by a mound." This remark raises a question which, we rejoice to know, is rapidly losing its influence with archaeologists, and most certainly in a few more years will be sunk in oblivion. Perhaps Sir John Lubbock does not know that a drawing by Dr. Stukeley is in existence which exhibits Kits Coty House in a somewhat different condition from what it is at this time. Dr. Stukeley was not a bad draughtsman, and in this respect was immeasurably superior to Aubrey, and he represents the monument as being partly imbedded in a long barrow. It is consequently a perfectly legitimate conclusion that he saw and sketched, in the first half of the last century, the remains of a great mound which had enveloped the chamber or cist. No one who has studied the stupendous cists of Cornwall, and seen Dr. Borlase's sketch of that of Zennor while it was partly buried in the remains of a cairn, or that of Trethey, which is still in part buried, should feel any difficulty in believing that Kits Coty House, a structure comparatively so inferior, had been originally concealed in a barrow. As Sir John Lubbock specifies no other exposed chamber or cist, it is needless to fortify our view by producing additional evidence. We cannot tell what was the plan of the Kentish monument when first erected, and it may reasonably be concluded that we only gaze now upon a dilapidated building.

The scheduled monuments described by Mr. Kains-Jackson are in reality only a few widely known examples of those which should be preserved. They are far from being the most instructive and the most important in Great Britain. There are many, s.g., in Cornwall and Devon, which are quite as valuable, but not one is placed in the schedule, for reasons given in Appendix E. (p. 112). Parliamentary custom is alleged for omitting the Cornish ones, but there is no justification for the remark that Devonshire contains "no monuments of at once prehistoric and primary interest," nor for the additional remark, "There are several of minor note well worth preserving." There is, in fact, no area of the same extent in Great Britain where such numerous and extensive prehistoric remains exist. They are of varied character and extreme importance to the archaeologist. Stone circles of large size, lines of stones forming avenues many hundred feet in length, cisted earthen barrows and cairns, menhirs, innumerable huts and walled villages, and a considerable dolmen at Drewsteignton,—all these are to be met with within the comparatively small limits of the moor, and, taken collectively, are of surpassing interest and value.

In the opening paragraph the author leads his readers to expect "short but distinctive descriptions of each monument included in the schedule"; and our disappointment is great when we find the description of one in particular—not the least important in the list—so exceedingly meagre that there is nothing distinctive in it. Of Wayland Smith's forge he writes:—

"A group of stones heaped into the form of a rough forge. The group of stones is made up of four large blocks, and of a number of smaller pieces, part supporting, but most merely lying on the ground in the immediate neighbourhood of the central construction."

It is impossible for any one to form an idea of the structure from this; and the difficulty is increased when it is further added, "If it is a dolmen, it is a dolmen of a different form and construction to most monuments of that description." In a subsequent paragraph Gough's account in his edition of Camden is quoted:—

"A parcel of stones set on edge, enclosing a piece of ground somewhat raised. On the east side of the southern extremity stand three aquariah flat stones, of about four or five feet either way, supporting a fourth."

It is quite clear that the plan of this interesting structure has not been discerned by any of its chroniclers. Its plan is that of a Latin cross, and consists of a central passage about 22 feet (internal measurement) in length, in a north and south direction, with a chamber on opposite sides near to the north end. The only capstone (measuring 10 ft. by 9 ft.) which was in situ when we planned it thirty years ago covered the eastern side-chamber. The four capstones which covered the rest of the building had been displaced and were lying near. The entrance, which was at the south end of the passage, was closed with an upright stone. The remains of the mound (about 45 ft. in diameter) which formerly enclosed the sepulchre were distinctly traceable, and a circle of stones, of which three stood on the east side, once embraced the whole. This is a very brief description of the monument as it then appeared and probably still exists, and it is sufficiently distinctive to arouse an interest in a building of a form uncommon in Great Britain.

Is the description of Kits Coty House as satisfactory as it should be? In the first place, we find a misleading observation in the opening sentence, where it is said that it is "one of the most complete of ancient British monuments." Next comes Lambard's account, written in 1570, which is useful as showing that there were then no more stones than now. After that Mr. Jackson gives the dimensions of the stones, which may pass, though they do not quite tally with our measures taken last year. But the greater part of the letter-press is taken up with local traditions, which are of no value at all, and appear to be given as though the object was to bring the monument within the range of Saxon history. As regards the ruined monument at the foot of the hill nearer to Aylesford, its overthrow was not caused, as the author says, by an "excavation carried on in the interest of antiquarian research." We have had lately in our hands an autograph letter, addressed to Dr. Stukeley, dated 1722, which informs us that about the year 1690 it was pulled down by John French and John Frankham, the then owners; that before they meddled with it its plan "nearly approached a square"; that the stones which had composed the walls, as the correspondent was told "by some who remember it standing, did all of them joyn close together so as to touch each other; and that the dore was on the west side thereof next the road. The length of the whole run is about 28 foot, the height thereof 8 foot."

That which creates an uncomfortable feeling as we read the book is the author's association of the word "Druid" with the rude stone monuments of Great Britain:—

"Throughout the British Islands weird altars and strange tomb-like blocks of stone are even to be met with in various spots.....At the present time the number (in Anglesey) is reduced to about a dozen, and of these only one—the gigantic dolmen of Plas Newydd—has remained in such a state of preservation as to be deemed worthy of that final protection which it is to be hoped the Ancient Monuments Bill will afford to Druidical remains.....The other Druidical monuments of the island must be briefly noticed."

It is not that the word "Druidical" is here used in its popular sense, as conveying to the uninstructed public mind an idea of what monuments amongst others it is proposed should be protected by statute, because the author enters into an explanation of Druidism and of its having had a rallying ground in the island of Mona, where so many "altar-like groups of stones" formerly existed. Moreover, we thought the altar theory was exploded. It would certainly be an advantage to science if its advocates would inform us where these "weird altars" are situated, for in our many archaeological rambles we have been so unfortunate as to have never seen one. At p. 30 the reader begins to obtain an insight into the author's opinions. When describing the chambered tumulus at Stoney Littleton, he finds no difficulty in affirming its sepulchral character:—

"The monument enjoys a special reputation as one of the few British remains of which the purpose is clearly discoverable.....Stoney Littleton is a place of interment. Its form admits no doubt upon the subject.....It may be described as a covered dolmen."

It may be inferred that the author cannot have seen and studied many of these monuments.

After this, as might be expected, with the exception, perhaps, of Abury, the stone circles are also called Druidical, and Stanton Drew derives its appellation from "steintown Drew, or the Druid's town of stone." Canon Jackson, F.S.A., Rector of Leigh Delamere, some time back so satisfactorily disposed of this derivation, for which there is not a shadow of reason, that its revival is surprising.

These criticisms may rightly be closed with the expression of a hope that the work, notwithstanding its defects, may serve to secure the scheduled monuments from further injury, and "lead to the preservation of many others in various parts of the United Kingdom."

Leonardo. By J. P. Richter. Illustrated. (Samson Low & Co.)—This little book is one of the series styled "The Great Artists," of which we have reviewed several. It professes to contain the results of researches in incited MSS. of Da Vinci preserved in London and Windsor, without, it would appear, reference to records in other places, Italian and French, which deal with the career of the great and, after all, almost unknown master. For these we must wait another occasion. It might have been well if Dr. Richter had been at the pains of informing his readers where the results in question are stated. It is difficult in such a book as this to detect what data have already been published and what are new, Leonardo literature being extensive, if not rich in biographical details. On the other hand, this book is welcome because it fulfils its pretensions, and offers in a compact form all the old and most important facts about the artist, and, so far as we can discover, some comparatively trivial though novel details, the value of which is overrated by Dr. Richter. We have found little worth speaking of which is new. Apart from this Dr. Richter's lack of critical power is obvious; he is ready to produce the conclusions of his fancy instead of trustworthy evidence, and indulges in the hardy assumption—a failing commoner in Germany than in this island—that he alone is master of his subject. In dealing with such a theme as the life of Da Vinci these shortcomings are peculiarly unfortunate. For example, on the strength of a memorandum without a date of the costs of the funeral of one "Caterina," paid by Da Vinci, our author (p. 87) jumps at the conclusion that the woman in question must have been Leonardo's mother, who, after her great son's birth, married a certain Accattabriga di Piero del Vaco di Vinci. "Thus [Caterina] was the name of his unfortunate mother, and Leonardo was, without doubt, the only one of her relations who paid her the last tribute of respect." The idea is pretty, but it is without a shadow of foundation beyond the fact that a Caterina died in a hospital, and was decently buried at Leonardo's cost, after he had been to see her there, on which occasion he was at the pains to note that "Giovannina, viso fantastico, età anni [sic] chetatina allopedale," i.e., the Giovanna who lies near Caterina in the hospital has fantastic features. A touching note to make at the bedside of a dying mother! who, by the way, was, if our author's guess be correct, allowed to die in a hospital. There is no evidence that Leonardo's mother was "unfortunate," or that Leonardo alone attended the deathbed of the Caterina who died in the hospital. Again, the reader is told (p. 94) that Da Vinci was at Milan in October, 1508, because there is a note in one of his MSS. that a certain thing was "bought at Milan on the 12th of October, 1508." On this memorandum is built the assumption that the artist witnessed festivities in that city in honour of victories of Louis XII.: "in these Leonardo probably took part." P. 83 tells us that "perhaps, when in Northern Italy, Leonardo may have been present at more than one battle-field." It may indeed be so, but one might as well conjecture that elephants were employed in such a battle because Da Vinci delineated them. Nor is Dr. Richter to be trusted when Leonardo makes a statement about himself. On p. 40 we are told, "It is probable that so long as Da Vinci remained at Milan in the dukes service, his talents and activity were more directed to engineering than to art." This is exactly what the master has told us, without a "probability." Again (see p. 36), we are told that the famous "horse," of which a model was set up at Milan, 1493, was twenty-six feet high, and this inexplicable caution is added—"but in the face of this fact it is utterly impossible for us to imagine that the horse can have been represented as galloping, as has been hitherto supposed." We may ask, What has the attitude of the horse to do with the bulk of the statue? The authority is Luca Pacioli, a contemporary, in his treatise on proportion, published in 1509, or eight years after the last mention of this mysterious sculpture. Dr. Richter rightly opposes to the tale of Vasari, that when Milan was sacked in 1499 the model was destroyed by Gascon archers, the letter of Ercole d'Este, dated September, 1501, begging the model as a gift for Ferrara, and the reply to him, which states that the French king had seen the statue, so the request could not be granted without that monarch's knowledge. Our author is apt to discover marvellous nests. Vasari says that Leonardo painted an angel in Verrocchio's 'Baptism of Our Lord,' which is in the Academy at Florence, in such a manner that Verrocchio thenceforth abandoned painting. Dr. Richter disbelieves the tale, because he recognises in the picture more of Da Vinci's work than the angel; in fact, he believes the figures of Christ and a second angel to be Leonardo's. This is surely a strange kind of criticism. What shall we say for the sentence on p. 73, which describes the 'Virgin and St. Anne' thus: "The conception is a thoroughly mediæval one; the figure of the Virgin, who is shown resting in St. Anne's lap, seems a return to the traditional symbolism of genealogical trees." Why, on p. 3, are we told to remember that early Florentine painters knew nothing of antique Greek art? No one ever said they did. If they had they would have done better than they did. Trivial remarks of this kind are too common. "Sumptuous costume and magnificent colouring" (p. 88) are not characteristics of the portrait of La Gioconda. What does Dr. Richter mean by "frescoes which were done in oil." (p. 43)? Is this an error of the translator's? On p. 16 it is said that Da Vinci's MSS. are "far from easy to decipher"; the fact is that, as he wrote from right to left, a mirror is useful in reversing the script; but, apart from that, the memoranda are unusually clear and quite legible to any one acquainted with manuscript of the sixteenth century.

Lectures on Art delivered at the Royal Academy, London. By Henry Weekes, R.A. Illustrated. (Bickers & Sons.)—Mr. Weekes, the Professor of Sculpture in the Royal Academy, was an able, intelligent, and diligent pupil of Boehm. He was for many years Chantrey's chief "assistant"—scandal said his duties deserved a higher name—and he became heir to the business of that maker of monuments and busts. He executed some creditable portrait statues, including those of John Hunter and Lord Auckland, and among his works which were more or less ideal are an acceptable figure of Cleopatra, and a statue of Sardanapalus which is not quite so good. This volume contains eighteen discourses, which respectively treat of "Composition," "Beauty," "Taste," "Style," "Colour in Sculpture," "Sir Joshua Reynolds as a Critic on Art," and "The Early History of Sculpture." Like Weekes's artistic productions, these lectures are thoroughly intelligent, clear, and compact. They have been conscientiously thought out, and the book reflects credit on its author. On the other hand, these lectures are so little inspired by the fire of genius that it is easy to conceive how favourable to repose of mind and body the students of the Royal Academy must have found the hours of their delivery. In truth, they lack hardly anything but fire; acumen, fidelity to convictions which were courageously formed and freely expressed, and power to take a large survey of the themes within purview, distinguish nearly every page. Great names did not overawe the honest instincts of the Academician who, in the discourse on "Style," ably criticises the defects of M. Angelo's 'David' and 'Moses.' Indeed, he dissected these celebrated statues as frankly as the works of Gibson, his contemporary, in "Colour in Sculpture." The latter is a capital piece of criticism. Not less excellent are the elaborate notices of Reynolds, which contain a careful and far, but surely supererogatory, defence of the P.R.A. against the shallow animadversions of Cunningham, who even as a gossip has passed out of count, and who was never regarded as a critic. Fall as these pages are of by no means tender criticisms on modern English sculptors and their works, it is noteworthy that not a word is said about Wyatt, one of the best of them.

Views of Ancient Buildings illustrated by the Domestic Architecture of the Parish of Halifax. By J. Leyland. (Halifax, Leyland.)—Halifax, which has lately distinguished itself by "restoring" its historic church, must formerly have possessed many domestic buildings of a valuable architectural character. Mr. J. Leyland is hardly a good draughtsman, even of buildings, and makes bad work with figures and landscapes. He is, however, leadably anxious to preserve records of these structures, and, notwithstanding technical shortcomings, has succeeded in delineating the general appearance of the relics to which good taste directed his attention. They were nearly all erected during the seventeenth century, some of them on the verge of the next age, but not a few of them prove the justice of a remark of ours, that Gothic architecture continued in vogue long after the Court had introduced incongruous elements into the practice of English builders. In districts remote from London, especially where stone abounded, it would not be difficult to find an unbroken series of domestic Gothic, beginning with the end of the thirteenth century and continuing to the present revival, thus overlapping the Elizabethan, Jacobean, Caroline, debased Renaissance, Dutch, "Queen Anne," Georgian, and pseudo-classic fashions. Barkisland Hall is dated 1638. It has a Perpendicular plan, porch, mullions, hood mouldings, and a pretty Geometrical rose window; but there is to the porch a frontispiece which is as false as anything erected in France at the time. The great house at Ervington might have been built in 1325, and so might Clay House, Greetland, yet both are doubtless only about two hundred and fifty years old. A stone house, formerly on the Bowling Green, Halifax, with cross-gables, we presume not to be earlier than 1600, and, although the chimneys are not shown here, it is very interesting as a type of its kind, fit for modern use at a small cost. Many half-timber examples in this book are noteworthy, and, although not displaying very extraordinary specimens of design, the book is rich in good and characteristic remains.

THE ROYAL ARCHEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

GAINSBOROUGH is notable as having been at one time the dwelling-place of King Alfred and afterwards the headquarters of the Danes in one of their most memorable incursions. The fine half-timber mansion known as the Old Hall was visited by the Institute on Wednesday, the 28th ult., and the somewhat long journey was well repaid. A castle or fortified house had existed here from early times. In March, 1470, Sir Thomas Burgh was its owner, when it was attacked by Lord Willoughby, taken, and destroyed. No fragment of this building remains, unless it be the picturesque tower which stands at the north-east angle of the present fabric. This Mr. Somers Clarke, who explained the building, thinks may have been a fragment of the earlier house. The present building occupies three sides of a square. It was almost certainly erected immediately on the destruction of the older one, and is an extremely interesting example of a fifteenth century house of the larger sort. It was occupied until the middle of the last century by the family of Hickman, and there is evidence that John Wesley, when a boy, used to stay with Sir Nevil Hickman. Some time about the beginning of the reign of George III. the family moved to their present seat of Throck, and the Old Hall was permitted to fall into decay, many parts of it being let out as colleges, and buildings of the most unsightly description being allowed to attach themselves to its sides. A lamentably injudicious attempt was made some thirty years ago to restore the eastern wing and the great hall, which seems to have obscured or obliterated many interesting features. Sir Hickman Bacon, the premier baronet of England, is endeavouring most successfully to repair the damages done by neglect and restoration. The fabric is in most cases strong and sound, and the structural repairs that are needed seem to be executed in a most satisfactory manner. The great timber hall, with its stone bay window, looking to the north, is one of the finest apartments of the kind in existence, and the kitchen, with two huge fireplaces, and little den-like rooms in the angles high up in the wall—probably servants' bed-rooms—is a remarkably good example. The western wing, which is at present under repair, has a series of massive and highly picturesque chimneys in its western wall, which have a remarkably fine effect when seen from the outside of the building. Mr. Clarke mentioned the fact that Thomas, Lord Burgh, entertained Henry VIII. here in 1541, and drew attention to an inscription scratched on one of the walls, "Trust truth only. P. Tyrwhitt." The person who has left this memorial of himself was most probably the third son of Sir Robert Tyrwhitt of Kettleby. He was one of the members for the city of Lincoln in 1554.

From Gainsborough the party drove to Stow. The Lincolnshire peasants to this day call Stow "the mother of Lincoln Minster," and there is some meaning in the traditional phrase. Stow may have been the site of Sidnecaster, and thus the see of the oldest Lincolnshire, or rather Lindsey, bishopric. The present cruciform church is one of the most interesting examples of Saxon architecture in England. This Saxon work is evidently of two periods. A fine Norman choir was built soon after the Conquest. It has an arcade with stone seats running round it, even behind the altar, which must have stood at some distance from the eastern wall. About forty years ago this church had fallen almost into ruin, and it was seriously proposed that it should be pulled down and a small modern edifice "in the Gothic style," suited to the wants of a small rural congregation, built on its site. This would have really been done had not the then vicar (the late Rev. George Atkinson) happened to be a man of great general culture, and much in advance of his time in most things relating to art and history. Under almost every possible disadvantage he undertook to see to the preservation of the fabric, and an almost complete repair was carried out under his direction. Every angle of this restoration would not, perhaps, bear criticism, but viewed as a whole it was of a conservative and genuine character, and much superior to what commonly goes by that name at the present time.

In the evening Mr. Peacock, of Bottesford, read a paper on Lincoln during the great civil war, in which he denounced as a calumny the statement that Oliver Cromwell was responsible for the destruction of the tombs, brasses, and stained glass in Lincoln Minster.

On Thursday, the 29th, the annual meeting of the Institute was held in the Lincoln Assembly Rooms, at which none but members of the body were present. Afterwards the cathedral was described by the Rev. Precentor Venables, and Mr. John Henry Parker, C.B., made some remarks on that portion of it which was built under the direction of St. Hugh of Avalon. There is good reason for believing that this is the oldest specimen of the Early English style that has come down to us, and it is certainly one of the most beautiful. Mr. Parker said that the double arcade, which adds so much to the richness of this part of the church, was probably not due to design, but that when the walls had risen above the single arcade which was built at first, the bishop determined not to have a wooden roof, as had been intended, but to cover his building with a stone vault. For this purpose it became necessary to make the walls more massive, and instead of pulling them down a double and intersecting arcade was resorted to. Some persons present, who had also carefully examined the masonry and the details of the sculpture, maintained that this was not the case, but that the double arcade was a purely decorative feature.

After the minster had been examined, the Rev. Owen W. Davis read a paper on the west front of St. Albans Cathedral, in which he tried to defend the alterations now being made by Sir Edmund Beckett. Mr. Peacock spoke in condemnation of so important a monument being entrusted to any one except a properly qualified architect. Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite also objected to the work.

In the afternoon the old palace of the Bishops of Lincoln, on the south of the minster, was inspected, under the guidance of the Bishop of Nottingham. The palace was probably begun by Bishop Bliot early in the twelfth century. Bishop St. Hugh of Avalon commenced the great hall, which was finished by Bishop Hugh of Wells. The gateway tower, which is now used for the lecture-rooms of the theological schools, was built by Bishop Alnwick in the middle of the fifteenth century. Except this tower, all the rest of this once magnificent building has been reduced to ruin. It seems to have been perfect till the time of the great civil war of the seventeenth century, when it was at times used as a prison; indeed, a little before that time Bishop Williams, the Lord Keeper, had spent some money in repairing it. Major Barry, the Parliamentarian, is said to have lived here for some time and to have built some stables; but at the latter end of the Commonwealth period the lead is reported to have been sold.

In the last century it began to be used as a stone quarry for the repairs of the minster, and, as we have heard, for other and more unworthy purposes.

After the palace had been examined, the party again visited the minster, and examined some of the tombs, under the guidance of the Bishop of Nottingham, who pointed out on one of the monuments, which is attributed to a member of the family of Burghersh, an interesting piece of sculpture, representing a mound, with rabbits running into and out of the holes which they had burrowed in it. His lordship suggested that this might possibly be a symbol of the resurrection—life springing from the grave. It was pointed out, however, that the portion of an iron hearth, formerly in Snarford Church, Lincolnshire, but now in the South Kensington Museum, has on the brass label which runs along its front the figure of a lion holding a rabbit in one of its paws. There is strong reason for surmising that this grille was once an adjunct to a tomb of some member of the family of St. Paul, whose arms were a double-queued lion, and this bearing is found on the sculpture of the tomb. It is at least possible, therefore, that the rabbit may have been an heraldic badge of that family. It was stated during this second visit, though we believe not by any one in authority in the cathedral, that the grey marble columns of the Lady Chapel were very shortly to undergo the process known as repolishing, which seems to consist of coating with a thick and very shiny varnish. The marble shafts in the clearstory have been so treated with most unhappy effect. It is to be hoped that this visit of the Archaeological Institute may have the result of saving these grand pillars from a similar calamity. The opinion of all present seemed to be that the proper course was the simple one of leaving them untouched.

The proceedings of this day terminated by a reception given by the Bishop of Lincoln at Riechole Palace.

The church of Grantham, dedicated to St. Wolfran, Archbishop of Sens, is one of the largest churches in eastern England, and its spire among the most graceful in the kingdom. It was described on Friday, the 30th, to the Institute by Mr. Fowler, of Louth, who pointed out the remains of the original Norman church in the fragments of clearstory windows over the nave arcade. These arcades are transitional Norman, with many of the caps highly ornamented; the two eastern ones, however, form an exception, as they are Early English. The church was greatly enlarged in the end of the thirteenth century, and much beautiful Decorated work remains to testify to the magnificence of the plan which it was intended to carry out. It was, however, never fully executed. The north aisle of the choir, which, if we are not mistaken, replaces earlier work, is of good Perpendicular character. It is said—we did not gather on what authority—to be due to Fox, Bishop of Winchester. The tower and spire belong to the fourteenth century, and seem to be in much the same state as when the builders removed their scaffolds. The roofs are new and highly ornamented. On the south side of the choir is a curious crypt containing a stone altar, which seems to have come down to our time entirely unaltered. There are no consecration crosses on its slab, which renders it probable that it is of the reign of Mary I. and that it has never been consecrated. To this fact, if fact it be, we may, perhaps, owe its preservation. When, in the early part of the reign of her successor, the altars were ordered to be removed, it is possible that this one was spared because it did not come within the meaning of the term, as the local authorities at the time chose to understand it. In this crypt are stowed away two benefaction tablets, painted in black letter. They are interesting and in good condition, but want a little repair, not repainting; one of them records gifts to the town of Grantham, the other subscriptions for the repair of the tower and spire in the thirteenth year of Charles II. Together they furnish a not uninteresting list of the old families of the southern part of the county. Among them we noticed that of Dr. Robert Sanderson, the Bishop of Lincoln. We were told that they were suspended in the church until the period of its restoration. It is high time that they were brought back again. In a chamber over the south porch are many books with chains attached, though they are now no longer fastened to the shelves. Several of them seemed to be early and curious, but in a state of decay. It occurred to us, while hastily examining them, that if some of the money which has been expended on the ornaments of the new roof had been devoted to the preservation of these books a more satisfactory work would have been accomplished. St. Wolfran is an exceedingly uncommon dedication in England. Grantham church had this foreign archbishop as a patron because it possessed, or was reputed to possess, some of his relics. A silver and copper shrine, called "sacred Wolfran shrine," was sold by the churchwardens in 1565, and communion plates bought with the money. The Angel Inn is an ancient and picturesque hostelry. There appears to be evidence that Richard III. stayed there, and the room which he is said to have occupied is still shown.

Steeleford was the next place visited. The church of St. Denis is one of the finest in the shire. The tower is transitional Norman and the spire of the same date, or Early English of the oldest character. A Perpendicular west window and other additions have been made. The nave, north transept, and aisles are flowing Decorated, melting into Perpendicular. There is a fine Perpendicular clearstory to the nave, and the chancel is of the same style. The altar rails are of wood, seemingly of the time of Charles II., and are fine examples of carpenter's work of the period. We observed three dedication crosses painted on the inner walls of the chancel, and were told of others which we did not see. The rood-screen is one of the finest late examples we remember to have seen. Its date cannot, we think, be much earlier than A.D. 1500. It has a bold projection towards the nave in the middle, opposite the place where the crucifix once stood. We imagine that this place was at one time occupied by a desk, and used as a lectern or pulpit. The churchwardens of 1566 gave a singular reason for preserving this screen. They said they had taken down the rood-loft "all save the north, which remaineth standing, which we cannot take down, for that is a wise frame one house to another, so that we have noe passage but that wais." The meaning of this is by no means obvious. There are stairs and doors at both the northern and the southern ends. The roof, which is a good modern one, is said to be a copy of the old one, which was much decayed. This church has been restored, but care seems to have been taken not to remove or to replace the tombstones and monuments, among which are fine seventeenth century examples, in memory of members of the family of Carre.

Heckington, the next place visited, is remarkable for its fine church, nearly the whole of which seems to have been built about the middle of the fourteenth century. In the north wall of the chancel is a noble Easter sepulchre, among the finest, if not, indeed, the very best, in England. Opposite it, on the south, are sedilia of similar character, which were, there can be little doubt, executed by the same workmen. There are also sedilia of a less ornate character in the south transept. The rood-loft would seem to have been a very wide structure. The chancel arch is not at the end of the nave, but there is before it a wide space, lighted by two windows on either side, one above another, between which the upper stage of the rood loft seems to have been placed, the upper one lighting the gallery and the lower one the space beneath. The rood-loft doorways remain. It is much to be regretted that the lower portion, at least, of this structure has not survived. Judging from the highly ornamental character of much of the church, we cannot doubt but that it was a magnificent specimen of woodwork. The church has undergone the process known as restoration; the joints in the masonry of the nave are pointed with black mortar, which has a most evil effect. There is an hexagonal font of the Decorated period, with niches in its sides which seem to have contained images.

Boston Church was explained to the visitors by Sir Charles Anderson, Bart., who knew it well in its unrestored state. It is entirely Decorated work, except the tower and eastern part of the chancel, which are Perpendicular. It is probably the best known of the great Lincolnshire churches, and is supposed by strangers to be the most beautiful church in the county. This is, perhaps, true of the exterior, but the work in the interior is poor when compared with that of many of its smaller neighbours. We observed on the door of the north stair of the tower a knocker of bronze, which is pretty certainly Italian work of the fifteenth century. As it is not a modern addition it is not a little strange to find it here. The altar-rails are good ironwork of the early part of the eighteenth century. There is also a good Jacobean pulpit. The vaulting of the church is of wood, put up in 1662. It is not beautiful, but we are most thankful that it has been preserved. In the hall of the guild of St. Mary of Boston, now used as a town hall, are some fragments of old stained glass, which seem interesting. This guild was a wealthy corporation. An inventory of its goods taken in 1534 is in the possession of the Corporation, and is a most instructive document.

The church at Tattershall was built about A.D. 1500. It is fine and stately, but the windows lack beauty, from the fact that cusps have been omitted in the tracery. Nearly all the windows were rich with stained glass which had passed unscathed through the political and religious tempests of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It was removed to Stamford Baron, in Northamptonshire, about a hundred years ago, and we understand that much of it has perished. There is a massive stone choir-screen, with a projection on the eastern face, in which we believe there is still a stone desk, but it is so encumbered with modern timber-work that we could not obtain conclusive proof of the fact. There is in the nave a wooden pulpit of the date of the church, with black-letter inscriptions on the panels. Tattershall Castle, which stands a little to the west of the church, is a well-known building, and has been engraved again and again. It is one of the best specimens of mediæval brick architecture that have come down to us. It was built about the middle of the fifteenth century by one of the Lords Cromwell. The chimney-pieces are remarkably rich in heraldic ornaments. If we mistake not, there are casts of them in the museum at South Kensington.

The first place visited on Saturday last was Southwell Minster, in Nottinghamshire. Tradition assigns a fabulous antiquity to this grand old church. The nave and transepts, which are the earliest part of the existing building, are of the twelfth, and the choir of the thirteenth, century. The chapter-house, which is one of the loveliest buildings in England, is of early Decorated character. The great west window is Perpendicular. Newark, also in Nottinghamshire, was the next place at which the party arrived. Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite made some remarks on the church, which is very large and interesting. Its most noticeable feature is a lofty tower, crowned by a spire rivaling Grantham in beauty. The lower part of the tower may have been built about 1230, but it has Perpendicular insertions which do not add to its beauty. The spire is of a little later character. The rest of the church is almost entirely of Decorated and Perpendicular date. Under the choir is a crypt, which, from the very little we saw of it, we conjectured to be transitional Norman. It is used as a burial vault, and is nearly full of modern coffins (there are twenty-eight of them, we were told). This being the case, we did not think it prudent to remain long below. It may be satisfactory to some people to know that the ventilation of the place has been carefully provided for. The doors by which it is reached are at the back of the reredos, and there are two modern pierced iron plates, through which the poisonous gases, if there be any, escape into the church. We were informed that several of the authorities, ecclesiastical as well as lay, had on various occasions objected to these arrangements, but that it had been found that it would be contrary to law to remove the bodies and bury them in the earth. If this be so, it causes a doubt to occur as to whether the English statute book has yet reached absolute perfection. The wooden screen which cuts off the nave from the choir was originally carried across the whole church. It has long been removed from the front of the arches of the aisles, but before the restoration of the church evidence of this was afforded by the two ends, which were rough, showing the marks of the workmen's axes who performed this barbarous act of mutilation. Now this evidence has been improved away, and some modern ends fastened on, which are so deftly carved and stained that it requires a practised eye to find out that they are a falsification of history. The date of this screen, which is a magnificent work, is uncertain; it falls, however, somewhere between A.D. 1480 and 1520. The east window of the south aisle contains some good stained glass. It is made up of fragments gathered from various windows in the church. The arms of Deyncourt occur several times, and there are some fragments of a series which must once have represented the seven deadly sins; Lust, Gluttony, and Anger yet remain pretty perfect. Gluttony is a most quaint figure of a man with a bone in his hand and a beer-jug—a leathern jack probably—attached to his belt.

On Monday, the last day of the Congress, an excursion was made among the village churches on the south of Lincoln. Navenby was the first place visited. The nave is Early English; one of the pillars of the north arcade has a stone seat around it. This is an unusual arrangement, but may be seen in several churches in Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire. The church of Bottesford, near Brigg, furnishes good examples of these seats, where the pillars of both arcades have them; they are circles on the south and octagons on the north. The north and south aisles at Navenby are of Decorated character, and there is a peculiarly richly Decorated chancel, containing an Easter sepulchre, sedilia, and credence table, the sculptures of which reminded us of the beautiful works of the same kind at Heckington. There is preserved loose in the chancel a stone, said to be marble, but which we took for Lincolnshire limestone, with an early French inscription in memory of its uncommon shape, which is that of a half quatrefoil. There is a coffin-lid in Scotton Church, near Kirton-in-Lindsey, made of precisely the same material, and inscribed in French with letters of exactly the same type.

At Wellingore the nave is Early English, and the aisles Perpendicular. There are transition Norman sedilia and fine alabaster figures of a knight and a lady, which are said once to have been ornamented with the arms of Dymoke, Houghton, and Disney.

Welbourne Church, we were told, "is still awaiting a restoration." The tower is transition Norman, or perhaps Early English, and is surmounted by a very clumsy Decorated spire. There is a fine Decorated porch, with two niches, from which the figures have been removed;

there is a mutilated representation of the Holy Trinity over the apex of the arch. A Sanctus bell-cote is bracketed out from the east end of the nave; the bell which belongs to it is preserved in the church.

In the wall of an outbuilding of a cottage on the north side of the churchyard is some masonry which might be taken for early Norman, if it be not recent imitation work. We were assured by an inhabitant of the village that it had not been built during this century.

At Brant Broughton the columns of the nave are octagonal Early English work. The aisles and clearstory are Perpendicular. There is an extremely fine painted timber roof of the date of the clearstory. The chancel is new. It replaces a miserable erection of the early part of this century. It is of Decorated character, and is a really noble specimen of modern work. The carved stalls and screen have not been added as yet. There is some of the best modern stained glass in this church that we remember to have seen. Somerton Castle must have been, when perfect, one of the noblest fortifications in the eastern shires. It is surrounded by a vast entrenchment and moat, which have been pronounced, somewhat too confidently, to be of the date of the castle. This is probably an error; they bear strong marks of an earlier antiquity, and there can, we believe, be but little doubt but that they were made by the Northern invaders in one of their numerous descents upon Lincolnshire. There is a work of much the same sort at Thonock, near Gainsborough, which it is almost certain was a Danish stronghold. We believe that the original fortification at Somerton consisted of a stockaded embankment, and that Anthony Beck, Bishop of Durham and Patriarch of Jerusalem, selected it as a site for his castle because he found this vast earthwork ready to his hands. Beck's castle consisted of a quadrangular enclosure, said to be 330 feet from north to south, and 180 from east to west. The remains have been so much mutilated that it is not easy to make out how many towers there were when the building was perfect. Its general character may, however, be so far read from what remains that we can see that it must have presented much the same general appearance as the Paris Bastille does in the engravings issued at the time of its destruction. But one tower now remains perfect. This is of distinctly Early English character; the base of another remains, with a vaulted chamber in it of rather later date. To the tower, which is yet perfect, has been added, some time in the seventeenth century, a house of moderate size, and this has caused a small fragment of the curtain wall to be preserved. Somerton must have been a place of very great strength before the use of gunpowder became common. The chief, though not the only, historical interest connected with the place is that it was for a long period the prison of John, King of France.

ST. HUGH OF LINCOLN.

I NOTICE at p. 153 a reference to a paper read by Bishop Trollope at the recent Royal Archaeological Institute's meeting, "on Little St. Hugh of Lincoln, the child who was falsely said to have been crucified by the Jews." That the accusation was false is highly probable, but it would be interesting to know what evidence there is on the subject similar to that I adduced on the Jurnepin affair, which took place fifteen years before at Norwich, in 1230 (Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany, vol. i. p. 312). There is no doubt, however, that certain Jews were actually tried and executed for the crucifixion of a boy named Hugh at Lincoln, for the occurrence is referred to on the Patent Roll for 40 Hen. III., mem. 18 and 19.

WALTER RYE.

PROPOSED SOCIETY OF PAINTER-STICKERS.

A STRONG and growing feeling has been for some time manifested that the efforts made during the last twenty years to restore the art of original, or "painter," engraving to the position it occupied in the time of the great masters only require "proper representation" to render them effectual. To put this feeling to the test Mr. Seymour Haden, a practical etcher, whose views on the subject have long been known, issued last week an invitation to a meeting, at which resolutions were passed to the following effect, namely, "That, in promotion of original engraving in all its forms, and in the material interest of painters practising that branch of art, a Society of Painter-Engravers, with a provisional committee charged to draw up laws and negotiate a locat, be herewith formed; the committee to report its proceedings to a body of fellows in November next, and, on approval, to exchange its provisional for permanent powers." Letters, in cordial approval of the proposal, from the President and several eminent members of the Academy were read at the meeting, and there is little doubt that before the close of the year we shall see the new society, to which we wish every success, firmly established.

Five-Act Sensig.

DR. SCHLIEMANN intends to dig at Orchomenus next winter, having received permission to do so from the Greek Government. The doctor has been hard at work for the last four months on his new book 'Ilion,' which is to be an elaborate work, illustrated with a large number of cuts.

FURTHER arrangements tending to enlarge the usefulness of the National Gallery are desirable, but the authorities are to be congratulated that the Treasury officials have made provision in the estimates of this year by means of which the gallery will no more be closed during the month of October.

THE Fine-Art Society, New Bond Street, intends during the month of October to exhibit a collection of the works of Bewick, comprising many of the sketches from which he executed his drawings on the block, some of the blocks themselves, and other objects of interest connected with his professional career.

AT the Doré Gallery may be seen "new pictures," which were at the Salon this year, by M. Gustave Doré, entitled 'A Day Dream' and 'The Rainbow Landscape.'

THERE is at present on view at Bruges, in the Halles, an interesting collection of old pictures, chiefly of the Flemish School. The first object of the committee which got them together has been to illustrate the architectural history of the city; so that almost every background contains some view of Bruges as it was in the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, or eighteenth century. There are, however, many pictures of independent merit, especially an early 'Martyrdom of St. Lucy.' The exhibition is well worth seeing.

AN exhibition of works of art has been opened at Ancoats, comprising a great many excellent examples of antique, Renaissance, and modern productions, casts, drawings, pictures, photographs, and prints.

A LOAN exhibition of the works of the late Sam Bough, R.S.A., and G. F. Chalmers, R.S.A., opens this week in the galleries of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts, where an exhibition of works in black and white, the first that has been held in Scotland, will be opened.

THE sale of the Earl of Hardwicke's collection has been postponed.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—The Promenade Concerts. ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The Brunswick Pianoforte Recital.

WHATEVER may be the growth of sound musical taste among the general public—and we do not wish to deny that a great improvement has taken place and is increasingly apparent year by year—it is impossible that concerts arranged after the manner of those at Covent Garden can ever be entirely satisfactory to musicians, or conduce beyond a certain point to the advancement of art. The gradual abandonment of those sensational features calculated to attract thoughtless crowds of persons who would probably be impervious to any artistic influences, is a movement in the right direction. Great credit is due to Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who, although he displayed no great vigour as a conductor, reformed the programmes to a considerable extent, and his example is being followed in the most exemplary manner by his successor, Mr. F. H. Cowen. The scheme of the opening night of the present season, which may be considered as fairly representative, included the overtures to 'L'Étoile du Nord' and 'Guillaume Tell,' the scheros from the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens' March, Rubinstein's ballet music from 'Feramors,' Mendelssohn's Serenade and Allegro Gioioso, and Weber's Polacca in π , played by Miss Bessie Richards, and an entr'acte from M. Massenet's 'Don César.' There is little fault to be found with this selection, and the remainder of the programme, though of a lower type, did not contain one item to which objection could reasonably be made. Mr. Cowen had a better opportunity of displaying his skill as a conductor to advantage on Wednesday, the first of the so-called classical nights. On this occasion the performance included Haydn's Symphony in c (No. 1 of the Saloman set, according to the old numbering), the second and third movements of Chopin's Concerto in π minor, Wagner's 'Walkurennit,' the overtures 'Leonora,' No. 3, and 'Euryanthe,' and the Chaconne and Rigaudon from Monsigny's opera 'Aline,' which were revived last season at the Crystal Palace. The orchestra of eighty performers is generally of very fine quality, with two or three exceptions in the wind contingent. Regarding the performance generally there was no ground for either hearty praise or severe blame, a lack of precision in attack being the chief defect. Mr. Cowen leads with obvious care and intelligence, but his manner is cold and his method of holding the bâton peculiar, so that, even to the attentive observer, there seems to be an uncertainty now and then as to his intention. This was the impression made by one performance, but it would be premature as yet to pronounce a definite opinion. The vocalists at this concert were Miss Annie Marriot, who should be reminded that a scena from 'Lucia' or any kindred opera is not suitable for a classical programme, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Mr. Frank Boyle, who has a well-trained and pleasing light tenor voice. The modesty which induced Mr. Cowen to exclude his own name from the list of composers represented is deserving of warm recognition, but this reticence may be relaxed without fear of giving offence.

A concert was given by Messrs. Brinsmead, the eminent firm of pianoforte manufacturers, at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, for the purpose of displaying the instruments intended for the forthcoming

Melbourne Exhibition. As the entertainment was given by invitation, criticism of the performance is, of course, out of the question. The programme included Mendelssohn's Trio in ν minor, Op. 49, the andante, with variations, and finale from Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata, Op. 47, and Weber's Sonata in λ flat. The violinist was Miss Brouail, the violoncellist Mr. G. Brouail, and the pianist the Chevalier Antoine de Kontski. Miss Helen D'Alton sang three songs, in place of Miss Anna Williams, for whom an apology was circulated. The concert seemed to yield considerable pleasure to an audience completely filling the hall.

NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Anthologie aus Opern und Oratorien von Georg Friedrich Händel. Für eine Singstimme mit Begleitung des Pianoforte bearbeitet, von Robert Franz. (Leipzig, Fr. Kistner.)

Eighteen Petites Preludes, Fifteen Two-Part Inventions, Fifteen Three-Part Inventions. By Johann Sebastian Bach. Edited by John Farmer. (Augener & Co.)

Old English Composers for the Virginals and Harpachord. Revised and Edited by E. Pauer. (Same publishers.)

Robert Schumann's Complete Symphonies. Arranged for Piano Solo by E. Pauer. (Same publishers.)

Robert Schumann's Complete Symphonies. Arranged for Piano Duet by E. Pauer. (Same publishers.)

Ode to the North-East Wind. The Poetry written by the Rev. Charles Kingsley; the Music composed for Chorus and Orchestra by Alice Mary Smith (Mrs. Meadows White). (Novello & Co.)

Of the prominent German musicians of the present generation there are few of whom less is known by our average musical public than Robert Franz. Dr. Hueffer, in his book on 'The Music of the Future,' has, indeed, rendered a just tribute to the merits of, perhaps, the greatest living song-composer; but to most concert-goers, and even to a very large proportion of professional musicians, he is little more than a name. Of some hundreds of songs which he has published, many of them of rare beauty, hardly a dozen have probably been heard in this country, though in his own land his name is a household word, and he ranks by the side of Franz Schubert and Robert Schumann. Here he is best known by his additional accompaniments to the works of Bach and Handel, and we imply no disparagement to his creative powers when we say that it is as an arranger of the old masters that he has conferred the greatest services on his art. In this particular branch he may be described as facile princeps. He has, so to speak, impregnated himself so thoroughly with the spirit of the old masters as to be able to fill up the mere outlines of their design, which they frequently left in their scores, with the most complete unity of feeling. How this is accomplished Franz has himself explained in his well-known 'Offener Brief an Eduard Hanslick,' and in his introduction to his edition of 'Thirty-six Airs and Duets by G. F. Händel,' published in 1869 by Fr. Kistner. A quotation from the latter will be of interest.

"The chief question is always whether such a task (i.e., the reconstruction of the accompaniments) be accomplished in an artistic manner, that is, with a sense of artistic form, with artistic freedom, and, if possible, with such artistic success as to produce an organic whole of perfect unity. Only in this way, whatever view critics and historians may take of the question, can these now forgotten works be restored to their rights.....My conception of a proper accompaniment aims at perfection of style; the additional parts must adhere closely to the principal polyphonic ones; they must draw their life from and blend with the motives of these; they must subserve the sentiment of the whole, and must help to intensify the expression of its poetic idea. Every note of the scores of the masters themselves, in pieces that have been fully written out and completed by their own hands, testifies to the truth of this statement; and in such pieces alone do we possess authentic models to which we can refer. We must try in good earnest to emulate the masters themselves, and to finish their sketches in accordance with the examples they have left us."

How admirably Franz has put into practice the sound principles laid down in the above remarks may be seen by an examination of his scores of Bach's 'Passion according to Matthew,' 'Magnificat,' and various church cantatas, or of Handel's 'L'Allegro' and 'Utrecht Jubilate,' for all of which he has written additional accompaniments for the orchestra. The special qualifications which he brings to his task are, first, a perfect sympathy with, and appreciation of, the style of the authors; and, secondly, a mastery of counterpoint and of polyphonic writing, which enables him so to assimilate his additions to the originals that in general nothing but a comparison of the two scores will show how much is the work of one author and how much of the other. The same features characterize the present collection. Here it is not a question of additional orchestration, but simply of an accompaniment, arranged for the piano from the score, with such additions as are needed to supplement and complete Handel's sketches. The 'Anthologie' contains twenty-three numbers, of which nine are from the oratorios, and the remainder from the Italian operas and cantatas. So perfect is the unity of style maintained throughout that even in some of the songs which were most familiar to us (e.g., "O Lord whom we adore," from 'Athalia,' and "Regard, O son, my flowing tears," from 'Belshazzar') we have found it impossible to tell, without a collation with the score, where Handel leaves off and Franz begins. Higher praise than this it would be impossible to award. It would be useless to enter into a technical description of the manner in which the editor has achieved this success, and it would, moreover, be only partially intelligible without the aid of illustrations in music type; but about the results obtained there cannot be two opinions. A great drawback to the enjoyment of many of Handel's songs at the present day is that, in accordance with the custom of the last century, the composer frequently repeats the whole first part of an air—often two-thirds, or even more, of the whole piece. In the present edition Franz, while marking the place of the repeat as indicated by the composer, has also added a compressed version of the first part, which, if preferred, may be substituted for the more tedious repetition of the whole. The entire collection will be found well worthy the attention not only of amateurs, but of professional singers, who will meet with many numbers which they may advantageously introduce into our concert rooms.

Those teachers who wish to introduce young pupils in the pleasantest and easiest way to the study of the works of Sebastian Bach will find the three books of his short pieces just reprinted by Messrs. Augener & Co. admirably adapted to their purpose. The preludes were written for the use of the composer's son, Friedemann Bach, and the 'Inventions' in two and three parts were also designed for the old master's pupils. They will be probably so well known to most musicians that it will suffice to say that they are equally valuable for training the fingers and for improving the taste. The present edition has been carefully and judiciously prepared by Mr. John Farmer, who has not only fingered it, but added marks of expression which will considerably assist the student in giving an intelligent reproduction of the music.

Herr Pauer's selection from the works of the old English composers for the virginals and harpsichord is a volume which will delight the heart of musical antiquaries. The composers of whom illustrations are given are six in number—William Byrd (1546–1623), Dr. John Bull (1563–1628), Orlando Gibbons (1583–1625), Dr. John Blow (1648–1708), Henry Purcell (1658–1695), and Thomas Augustine Arne (1710–1778). This arrangement, it will be observed, is chronological, and it thus gives an opportunity of noticing the gradual development of instrumental composition in this country through a period of nearly two centuries. In the works of the earlier composers we find chiefly dance measures and variations, of which latter the "Ground in a minor" (i.e. ground-bass), by Dr. Blow (p. 80) is one of the most characteristic specimens. Here a simple theme of eight bars only is varied in twenty-eight ways, the harmony being scarcely changed throughout. The amount of invention and resource shown in the embellishments is remarkable, considering the comparatively primitive state of music when the piece was written. To Henry Purcell a considerable space is justly devoted. The selection from his works includes eight "Suites"—a name, by the way, which does not occur among the works of his predecessors. In these, as in many of his other compositions, we find a remarkable foreshadowing of the style of Handel, and it is scarcely too much to assume that the old German, who was never scrupulous about appropriating the ideas of others, took more than one valuable hint from the works of our countryman. In the case of Arne, on the other hand, it is easy to trace the direct influence of Handel. The greater part of the 'Eight Sonatas; or, Lessons for the Harpsichord' here reprinted might readily pass for a selection from Handel's 'Suites de Pièces.' It is not that passages are actually borrowed, but that the general character of the music shows unmistakably who was Arne's model. The sonatas are very pleasing music, but of no great originality. Herr Pauer has done his editorial work with great care, and has added marks of expression which would have been useless on the older instruments, on which, as the editor remarks in his preface, no gradations of tone were possible beyond a very limited extent. All such marks are enclosed in brackets, the original text thus being not interfered with. The paper, printing, and binding of an elegant volume leave nothing to desire.

Few symphonies lose less than Schumann's by transference from the orchestra to the piano, because instrumental colouring was the composer's weak point. We therefore cordially welcome Herr Pauer's transcriptions of Schumann's four symphonies for piano solo and duet. The arranger's task has been by no means an easy one, but it has been excellently performed, and students who have but few opportunities of hearing these great works in the concert-room will be glad to make their acquaintance at home. It goes without saying that the solo arrangement is more difficult than the duet, but, while both require good playing, neither is beyond the reach of fairly advanced performers.

Miss Alice Mary Smith has already made a name among lady composers by her two overtures (to 'The Masque of Pandora' and 'Endymion'), which have been played at the Crystal Palace. We are inclined to consider her 'Ode to the North-East Wind' the best of her compositions that we have yet met with. The selection of Kingsley's words for musical purposes appears at first sight rather strange; but their spirit has been excellently caught. There is a rough vigour about the chorus which suits the text perfectly. With an adequate performance the work would be very effective.

RELIGIOUS VERSES PRINTED IN THE 'SPECTATOR' FOR 1712.

THE claim put forward (Athen. No. 2750) to the authorship of the beautiful hymn commencing "When all Thy mercies," &c., on the part of a person named Richmond, can hardly stop there, for there is a peculiarity in the mode of publication that defines the owner.

In No. 378, Wednesday, May 14th, 1712, appeared Pope's sacred eclogue, 'Messiah.'

In No. 388, Monday, May 26th, appeared a contributed poem, commencing "As when in Sharon's field," &c., the number being signed "T," i.e., Steele the Tatler.

In No. 419, Friday, June 20th, 1712, appeared My son, th' instruction that my words impart, signed "T," as before.

In No. 441, Saturday, July 26th, appears

The Lord my pasture shall prepare.

It is to be noted that these Saturday numbers, all on moral subjects, were by Addison; this one, signed "C.," for Clio, is on reliance upon God's providence; and the writer, a man of high character, calls Psalm xxiii. "a kind of pastoral hymn.....As the poetry is very exquisite, I shall present my reader with the following translation of it." Then follows "The Lord my pasture," &c.; this, I take it, is Addison's own positive claim to the authorship of it.

In No. 453, Saturday, August 9th, appears "When all Thy mercies," &c., signed "C."

In No. 461, Tuesday, August 19th, Steele introduces Dr. Watts's well-known version of Psalm cxiv.—

When Israel freed from Pharaoh's hand.

And Steele, in apparent anticipation of conflicting claims to authorship, writes:—"It is no small satisfaction to have given occasion to ingenious men to employ their thoughts upon sacred subjects from the approbation of such pieces of poetry as they have seen in my Saturday's papers. I shall never publish verse on that day but what is written by the same hand." It follows then that these two pieces, viz., "The Lord my pasture," &c., and "When all Thy mercies," &c., were both by the same author.

Again, on Saturday, August 23rd, appears

The spacious firmament on high.

And on Saturday, September 20th, appears

How are Thy currents blest, O Lord!

On Saturday, October 18th, appears

When rising from the bed of death.

So that this Mr. Richmond must also claim three other pieces, five in all, which Steele states to have been all by one writer, viz., "Clio," Joseph Addison. A. HALL.

Musical Gossip.

THE autumn season of Italian opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the direction of Messrs. Armit and Charles Mapleson, will commence about the middle of October.

THERE is said to be a possibility that the next visit of Herr Richter to London will be signalized by a series of performances of standard German operas from Mozart to Wagner. At present, however, it would be premature to speak with confidence as to the scheme.

HERR WILHELM is now on his way to Europe, after a sojourn of several years in the United States.

It is now definitely stated that Madame Patti has accepted an engagement in America, to last for eighteen months, and for which she is to receive 3,000,000 fr. (120,000*l.*). This is to commence after the Royal Italian Opera season next year, and at its conclusion Madame Patti will at once retire from the profession. There are one or two points in this intelligence which must be received with due caution.

MILLES, KRAUSS AND DARAM, with MM. Lausalle and Sallier, are the artists named to create the chief rôles in M. Gounod's new opera, 'Le Tribut de Zamora.'

THE St. Petersburg Italian opera season will commence on October 4th with Glinka's 'La Vie pour le Czar.'

Messrs. NOVELLO, EWER & Co. inform us that they will shortly publish English translations of Herr Spitta's 'Life of Bach' and of Otto Jahn's 'Mozart.' The first volume of each work will, it is hoped, be ready early in 1881.

FROM the same source we learn that M. Gounod has accepted a commission to compose an oratorio, to be entitled 'The Redemption,' for the Birmingham Festival in 1882. The French musician has written his own libretto and desires that the work shall be his crowning effort.

MR. J. SPENCER CURWEN has in the press, nearly ready for publication, a volume of 'Studies in Worship-Music,' on which he has been engaged for several years. The "Studies" bear chiefly on congregational singing. The first part of the book is historical, and relates the growth of the old parochial psalmody of the Church of England, and of Methodist, Independent, Baptist, New England, and Presbyterian psalmody. The second part is practical, and includes chapters on the use of the organ, the harmonium, and the American organ in accompanying the service; on chanting; on the style of harmony suited for congregational music; on the rhythm and notation of hymn tunes; on the old fugal tunes; on the training of boys' voices; on the training of congregations; and on the argument for congregational singing. The third part is descriptive, and includes some eighteen sketches of services of every kind in London. The work of Mr. E. J. Hopkins at the Temple Church, Mr. W. H. Monk at St. Matthias's, Stoke Newington, the late Mr. Henry Smart at St. Pancras, Dr. Allon at Islington, and Mr. Barnby at St. Anne's, Soho, is described, as well as the service music of the Jews, Roman Catholics (Brompton Oratory), Catholic Apostolic Church, Gordon Square, and many others. The work is designed as a handbook for church musicians, especially for those working for congregational music.

WE have received the Proceedings of the Musical Association for the sixth session, 1879-1880. A glance at the papers read is sufficient to prove that the society has taken to heart the strictures passed upon it in its earlier stages, that the discussions were too much confined to technical matters of little practical import. Mr. Emil Behnke's paper 'On the Mechanism of the Human Voice,' Mr. Orlando Stead's 'On Beauty of Touch and Tone,' and Mr. Blackley's 'On Quality of Tone in Wind Instruments,' are in the highest degree suggestive and instructive; while of more general subjects we have Prof. Macfarren 'On the Lyrical Drama,' Mr. E. J. Brookes 'On Musical Aesthetics,' and Mr. Salaman 'On Music as a Profession in England.' A word of acknowledgment must be given to Mr. G. A. Osborne for his chatty and agreeable paper on Chopin. The meetings of the Association may not bear immediate fruit, but it is a distinct advantage for musicians to take counsel together respecting points of interest in connexion with their art, and we are glad to see in the list of members several names eminent in science and belles-lettres.

THE WEEK.

HAYMARKET.—'A Bridal Tour,' a Comedy, in Three Acts. By Dion Boucicault. Revival of 'A Pair of Encounters,' a Comedietta. By C. M. Bar.

DRURY LANE.—'The World,' a Sentimental and Realistic Drama, in Five Acts and Nine Tableaux. By Paul Maritt, Henry Pettitt, and Augustus Harris.

LYCEUM.—Benefit of Mr. Irving. Revival by Miss E. Terry of 'The Captive,' a Poem, by "Monk" Lewis.

WHATEVER may be the defects of Mr. Boucicault's new play at the Haymarket—and they are not few—they do not interfere with its claim to rank as a comedy. Its plot is based upon improbable suppositions, and its incidents scarcely escape the charge of extravagance. Still, in conception and in execution the whole belongs to the domain of mirthful comedy instead of that of scarcely concealed farce. Into the latter category comes the mass of modern comic effort. Not a dozen genuine comedies of home birth can be counted among the productions of as many years. That many of Mr. Boucicault's characters are conventional types must be granted. He dresses, however, afresh the puppets that he employs, and he succeeds in making not a few of them pass for real beings. His dialogue meanwhile is witty and natural, and his plot is not more intricate than amusing. Among modern plays of English manufacture 'A Bridal Tour' may take a high rank. That it will suit the general public is not certain. None the less it is a delicate piece of work, and deserves to outlive most of the adaptations which constitute its sole rivals.

Under its previous title of 'Marriage' it failed to find favour in the United States. Undismayed by its reception, Mr. Boucicault, it is said, maintained that it was one of the best of his works, and spoke of it as his point-lace comedy. In spite of lending itself to the waggishness of detractors, who declare that Mr. Boucicault means his pointless comedy, the epithet awarded the piece by the author fits it. It is delicate enough and old-fashioned enough in some respects to suggest point lace, and it is a masterpiece of constructive ingenuity. That the principal incidents are altogether satisfactory on the score of probability cannot be maintained. The complications, moreover, are sufficiently intricate to puzzle those who do not pay close attention to the development of the plot. These things may and ought to be forgiven by those who note how stimulating is the action, at least in the two later acts, what droll situations are brought about in legitimate fashion, and how characteristic is the dialogue even when it is wittyest. One very stupid scene at the close of the second act needs to be excised, and 'A Bridal Tour' will then commend itself to a large class of playgoers. There will even then be a class whom its imbroglia will leave dissatisfied, but this will not consist of those with most dramatic insight or knowledge.

It is pleasant to be able to say that, profiting by the tuition Mr. Boucicault supplies, the actors play with an ensemble and intelligence rarely seen on the London stage. The sympathetic characters, chief among which are those presented by Miss Gerard, Mr. Conway, and Mr. Howe, and the comic characters assigned Mrs. John Wood and Mr. H. Beckett, are rendered in satisfactory fashion. Mr. Beckett, who comes from America, though he is, we believe, of English birth, is a low-comedy actor of distinct ability. Mrs. Wood is delightfully comic and wholly free from extravagance, and Miss Gerard evinces the possession of much tenderness and pathos. The entire performance has qualities not often seen on the English stage. 'A Bridal Tour' is well mounted. With it was given Mr. Ras's agreeable comedietta of 'A Fair Encounter,' in which Miss Winifred Emery, who took the rôle at shortest notice, played with much grace as Lady Clara, and was supported by Miss Edith Bruce as Mrs. Greville.

That the great houses which were once the only homes of the legitimate drama will ever again, except for brief periods and under exceptional conditions, be used for that class of entertainments may now be doubted. More and more clearly it is shown that the prevailing mode of acting is suited only to a small stage, and that an amplitude of style and a capacity of voice which seem to be things of the past are indispensable to the presentation of Shakespeare on such boards as those of Covent Garden or Drury Lane. Under these conditions the public must reconcile itself to seeing the "patent houses," when they are not occupied with the lyric drama, devoted to a species of spectacle in the preparation of which dramatic and literary considerations are dismissed. 'The World,' produced on Saturday last, is a piece of this class. It is so far dramatic that it contains dramatic scenes and situations, and that these are linked together and form a species of whole. If these things constitute a play, however, a cento may claim to be a poem. Practically the piece now holding possession of the stage of Drury Lane is a species of serious extravaganza, in which details possible enough in themselves take place under such conditions as put them outside the range of the conceivable. It is possible that every incident depicted in 'The World' has, in fact, occurred under conditions not widely different from those now depicted. A ship is believed to have been sunk by the agency of an infernal machine, connected with a clock that at a certain hour fired a charge and blew out the bottom of the vessel. A hero may accordingly be supposed to suffer shipwreck under such conditions. As he is the hero of a piece, he may escape by means of a raft, and may be the only one of some hundreds of people who does thus escape, except those who are to be indispensable to him in his subsequent adventures. When, from a source altogether independent of the first calamity, he is drugged with chloroform, when his brother attempts to murder him, and when in a solicitor's office in Lincoln's Inn he is seized and borne off to a lunatic asylum, whence he has to escape, it is vain to tell us that men have been drugged, to point to the first great Biblical record of fratricide, or to summon up from fiction or from the police records instances of people really or avowedly sane who have been imprisoned as mad.

Improbability of incident is an unimportant accusation to bring against a melodrama. Not on the ground of improbability, then, nor indeed on any ground at all, do we condemn 'The World.' There is a large class of people who like coarse fare. The tastes of such are gratified in the Drury Lane spectacle. Somebody is perpetually being killed, and generally under conditions which are fairly novel or striking. At times, as in the wreck scene, a hundred or two go down at once. This method of despatch is not, however, quick enough for our authors, and the hero, drawing his revolver, expedites therewith the departure of one or two who are pressing before the ladies to the boats.

Another scene, again, is really ingenious, since in this a man who enters a room in an hotel, and all but murders its occupant, takes upon himself the individuality of his victim, whom a stranger comes to visit, and is himself murdered for the man he personates by the new-comer, whose purpose has been the same as his own. De Quincey could scarcely have invented anything better in the way of murder than this. Even here the list of fancy murders is not complete. We draw breath, however. To that general public to which the play appeals it is wholly suited, and it is therefore a distinct success. It is provided with an excellent moral, since everybody who is wicked is brought in the end to confusion, and the glimpses it affords us into a world to the existence of which we are supposed to close our eyes are not unduly stimulating. There are some good scenery and effects, and some fine dresses. Nothing is wanting except that with which criticism is called upon to deal.

At the performances for the benefit of Mr. Irving, which elicited a display of enthusiasm altogether indescribable, Mr. Irving played Charles I., and Miss Terry Henrietta Maria. The last-named artist gave a recital, in costume and in presence of scenery, of Monk Lewis's poem, 'The Captive.' The action with which she accompanied this showed the possession of powers more nearly approaching tragic than any she has yet exhibited. It is to be regretted they were wasted upon so unsatisfactory a poem.

Dramatic Gossip.

THE Hon. Lewis Wingfield is engaged in rewriting for Madame Modjeska the last act of an adaptation of Schiller's 'Marie Stuart,' in which that actress is to appear. At the time of the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots, Sir Richard Wingfield, a cousin of Lord Burleigh, was appointed by that statesman to watch the proceedings and report upon them to Queen Elizabeth. His report, which has been recently discovered in the library of Sir John Sebright at Beechwood, casts a new light upon the execution, and has supplied details of which dramatic use is now being made.

MADAME MODJESKA's first appearance in 'Adrienne Lecouvreur' will take place in Liverpool, in the course of her country tour.

MR. IRVING's announcements of pieces in preparation revealed little that was altogether unknown. That the opening piece of the new season was to be 'The Corsican Brothers' and that Mr. Wills had prepared a version of 'Rienzi' had been stated. New plays by the Laureate and by Mr. F. A. Marshall are promised, but their character is not indicated.

'SHE STROOPS TO CONQUER' was revived at Sadler's Wells on Monday, with Mr. Chippendale as Hardcastle, Mrs. Chippendale as Mrs. Hardcastle, and Miss Virginia Bateman as the heroine. With this performance the series of classical representations recommences.

MR. BRONSON HOWARD is engaged in writing a new farcical comedy for the Criterion.

MR. CHARLES COOHLIN has commenced a country tour, with a version, by himself, of the play of 'La Morte Civile,' in which Signor Salvini is accustomed to appear.

THE first appearance of Mr. John McCullough at Drury Lane is fixed for the spring, when he will play in 'Virginus,' which is to be revived with elaborate surroundings.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—C. C. O.—F. C.—revolved.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling, Part V of SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.
By WILLIAM BLACK.

"It is too soon to judge of a book only a quarter completed, but for so far 'Sunrise' seems to be its author's greatest work."—Daily News.

Demy 8vo. 480 pages, price 31s. 6d.

NAVIES OF THE WORLD.

Giving Concise Descriptions of the Plans, Armament, and Armory of the Naval Armies of Twenty of the Principal Nations;
Together with the Latest Developments in Ordnance, Torpedoes, and Naval Architecture, and Concise Summary of the Principal Naval Battles of the last Twenty Years, 1860 to 1880.

By Lieut EDWARD W. VERY, U.N.

N.B.—This Work is Copyright in this Country.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. S. PULLING, M.A., Exeter College, Oxford, and formerly Professor at the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

Under the above title it is proposed to publish a series of small volumes descriptive of the principal Countries of the World, each Country being treated of by a Writer who from personal knowledge is qualified to speak with authority on the subject.

The general aim of the Series will be to present a clear and accurate idea of the actual state of the different Countries in a sufficiently popular form to prove interesting to the general reader while at the same time it is intended that the Works should be useful for Educational Purposes.

The Volumes will average 150 crown 8vo. pages, and will contain Maps and a few typical illustrations. The price of the Volumes will be 2s. 6d. each.

The following Volumes are ready or in preparation:—

DENMARK and ICELAND.	[Ready.]	SWEDEN and NORWAY.	[Ready.]
GREECE.	[Ready.]	THE WEST INDIES.	[Ready.]
SWITZERLAND.	[Ready.]	NEW ZEALAND.	[Ready.]
AUSTRIA.	[Ready.]	FRANCE.	[Ready.]
RUSSIA.	[Ready.]	EGYPT.	[Ready.]
PERIA.	[Ready.]	SPAIN.	[Ready.]
JAPAN.	[Ready.]	TURKEY-IN-ASIA.	[Ready.]
PERU.	[Ready.]	AUSTRALIA.	[Ready.]
CANADA.	[Ready.]	HOLLAND.	[Ready.]

Now ready, crown 8vo. 220 pp. price 2s. 6d.

The WEST INDIES. By Charles H. EDEN, F.R.S., Author of 'Froben Adams,' 'The Fifth Continent,' &c. With Maps and Illustrations.

Now ready, crown 8vo. 161 pp. price 2s. 6d.

GREECE. By Lewis Sergeant. With Illustrations and Physical and Political Maps, showing proposed Boundary.

EPISODES OF FRENCH HISTORY.

1. CHARLEMAGNE and the CARLOVINGIANS. [Ready.]
2. LOUISE and the CRUSADES. [Nearly ready.]
Edited, with Notes, Genealogical, Historical, and other Tables, by GUSTAVE MASSON, B.A.

* Other Volumes in preparation.

The above Series is based upon M. Guizot's 'History of France.' The volumes are elegantly illustrated, with Maps, printed and bound in a handy form, price 2s. 6d. each.

Now ready, fto. in wrapper, price 1s. 6d. No. 65, Vol. V of MEN OF MARK, Containing Permanent Cabinet-size Photographs, taken from Life, of

Sir CHARLES W. DILLER, M.P.

TOM TAYLOR.

LAWRENCE ALMA-TADEMA.

With Biographical Notices by THOMPSON COOPER, F.R.A.

Now ready, crown 8vo. in wrapper, price 1s. Part VIII of

The FERN PARADISE. By Francis GEORGE HEATH. Sixth Edition.

Now ready, 4to. in wrapper, price 1s.

ST. NICHOLAS, for August. The best existing Magazine for Children. Full of very fine Illustrations.

The ETCHER. Part XIV. August.

Price 3s. contains the following Etchings:—

GIOVANNINA. R. B. Robertson.

A SILENT HIGHWAY. Wilfred W. Bell.

FOR THE GOOD OF THE CHURCH. G. Aikman.

Practical Notes on Etching by R. S. CHALTOCK.

The GREAT HISTORIC GALLERY.

Edited by Lord RONALD GOWER, F.R.A. Part IV AUGUST, price 2s. 6d. contains the following Permanent Photographs:—

THE THREE MARIES. Currier, (Castle Howard.)

THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. Rembrandt. (Brigwater House.)

RICHÉLIEU on the RHONE. Delacroix. (Merford House.)

Opinions of the Press.

"Deserves to become of the most popular of drawing-room table-books."—Athenæum.

"The age has not produced so valuable an art book."—Art Journal.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON,
Crown Buildings, 188, Fleet-street.

THE NEW WORKS OF FICTION, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

EACH IN THREE VOLUMES.

NOTICE.—New Novel by the Popular Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Woman against Woman,' 'Petronel,' &c.

The FAIR-HAIRED ALDA. By

FLORENCE MARRYAT, Author of 'Love's Conflict,'

'Woman against Woman,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"The plot is wrought out with unquestionable vigour."

JACK ALLYN'S FRIENDS. By

G. WEBB APPLETON, Author of 'Catching a Tartar' and 'Frozen Hearts.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"A novel which combines the merits of Miss Braddon with those of Bret Harte." Jack Allyn's Friends is just the book to commend itself to thousands of holiday-seekers this summer weather."

The Scotsman says:—"Mr. Appleton knows how to write novels of absorbing and unflagging interest, and of remarkable cleverness."

HOLLYWOOD. By Annie L. Walker,

Author of 'A Canadian Heroine,' 'Against Her Will,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Hollywood" is a book that deserves to be read. We must congratulate Miss Walker on a steady improvement."

LORD GARLFORD'S FREAK. By

JAMES B. RAYNARD, Author of 'The Rector of Orbury.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Morning Post says:—"A very amusing novel, which deserves, for more reasons than one, to rank higher than the ordinary run of current works of fiction."

The ACTOR'S WIFE. By Edmund

LEATHES, Actor. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Mr. Leathes possesses both culture and good feeling. His work bears evidence of careful thought and no small amount of interest."

The BURTONS of DUNROE. By

M. W. BROW. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"None of the descriptions we have read can in any way compare for fidelity to the account of the eviction of the McGuinnesses. A very interesting and well-written book."

John Bull says:—"The book is deserving of popularity. We see no reason why 'The Burttons of Dunroe' should not reach the honours of future editions."

The Scotsman says:—"The personages are delineated with realistic force."

CHARLIE: a Waif's History, told by Himself. By Mrs. WOODWARD. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The DEAN'S WIFE. By Mrs. Eiloart,

Author of 'The Curate's Discipline,' 'How He Won Her,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

AFTER a DARK NIGHT—The SUN.

By C. G. HAMILTON. 2 vols. 21s. [This day.]

CARMELA. By the Princess Olga

CANTACUZENE, Author of 'In the Spring of My Life,' Translated by EUGENE KLAUS, with the Author's approval. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

AMY WYNTER. By Thomas A.

PINKERTON, Author of 'Crossford.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d. [This day.]

London: SAMUEL TINSLEY & Co. 31, Southampton-street, Strand.

NOTICE.

NOW READY,
VOL. I. SIXTH SERIES,
OF
NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Copious Index, price 10s. 6d.

JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

SOLDIERS of the VICTORIAN AGE. By C. R. LOW. 3 vols. demy 8vo. 30s.

CURIOSITIES of the SEARCH-ROOM. A Collection of Serious and Whimsical Wills. By the Author of 'Flemish Interiors,' &c. Demy 8vo. 18s.

NEW NOVELS.

NEW NOVEL BY CAPTAIN HAWLEY SMART.

BELLES and RINGERS. By Hawley Smart. 1 vol. [This day.]

EROS. Four Stories. By Sarah Tytler, Hon. Lewis WINGFIELD, Miss E. M. BUTT, and Miss G. BUTT. 2 vols.

The DUKE'S CHILDREN. By Anthony Trollope. 3 vols.

CHAPMAN & HALL (LIMITED), 193, Piccadilly.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

On August 12, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF BARBARA:

HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.

By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d., postage, 4d.

THE ORANGE GIRL

ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

The KING'S PAGE: a Love Story.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE. The New Novel.

By the AUTHOR of 'SOPHIE CREWE,' &c.

"A wild, rattling, exciting story, full of matter."—Athenæum.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d., postage, 4d.

OUR MARY: a Novel.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. W. S. HAYWARD'S NOVELS.

Just out, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE SECRET SEVEN: a Novel.

PLEASURE BOOKS FOR RAIL, ROAD, AND RIVER.

Now ready, price 1s. each; post free, 1s. 2d.

STRANGE JOURNEYS: On the RIVER SECRETS: In the Force.

RANK.

[Shortly.]

[Shortly.]

COMIC ENGLISH GRAMMAR. Illustrated.

SECRETS OF MODERN RUSSIA, NIHILISM, &c.

Just out (never before published), price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

MYSTERIES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

By M. MIKAIL GORTSCHAKOV.

London: J. & R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

Now ready, in 8vo. with Portrait, price 2s. cloth.
LECTURES on the SCIENCE and ART of EDUCATION; with other Lectures and Essays. By the late JOSEPH PAYNE, the First Professor of the Science and Art of Education in the College of Preceptors, London. Edited by his Son, J. F. PAYNE, M.D., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford. With an Introduction by the Rev. E. M. QUICK, M.A. Trin. Coll. Camb.

London: Longmans & Co.

THE LAND QUESTION.

Now ready, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

IRISH DISTRESS and its REMEDIES. A VISIT to DUBLIN and CONNAUGHT in the SPRING of 1880.

By JAMES H. TUCKER.

Author of 'A Visit to Connaught in the Autumn of 1887.'

London: William Ridgway, 189, Piccadilly, W.

BRITISH SCHOOL SERIES.

Now ready, cloth, 2s. 6d.

SIXTH READER.

404 pp. 60 Illustrations.

Edited by THOMAS MORRISON, M.A.,

Rector of Free Normal Training College, Glasgow.

Specimens to Teachers free on application.

Gill & Inglis, Edinburgh; and London, 25, Paternoster-square.

NEWMAN & CO'S
RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

8vo. cloth, 4s. at all Libraries.

LAURA DIBALZO; or, the Patriot Martyr.

By E. H. MORRE, Author of 'Orion,' 'The Death of Marlowe,' &c.

"Nothing more striking than his latest work has come from his pen."—Westminster Review.

"The dying speech of Laura is one of the most powerful that has been written for years."—Graphic.

"It is an achievement of which not only its distinguished author, but all of whom the literary scene of the age is precious, have good cause to feel proud."—Life.

"I have read it with my old admiration for your story, unconquerable spirit, and your impassioned, dramatic power."—Edmund C. Stedman, Author of 'Victorian Poets.'

READY IN SEPTEMBER, BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

BIBLE TRAGEDIES. In 1 vol. Truly, though Newly Dramatised.

1. JOHN THE BAPTIST; or, the Valour of the Soul.

2. JOHN'S WIFE; or, the Cruel Wager.

3. JUDAS ISCARIOT: a Tragic Mystery.

Cloth, 8vo. 10s. 6d.

NEW POEMS. By John Payne, Author of

'The Masque of Shadows,' 'Lansrec,' &c.

"Certe 'Salvestra,' occupant un tiers du volume, est l'histoire d'amour la plus terrible et la plus délicieuse qu'on puisse lire."—Théâtre de France, dont le National.

"'Salvestra' involves a description of matters which may shock very delicate nerves, but the poetical treatment shows that the writer has all that is required of delicacy as well as of passion of tenderness, of imagination and of language for turning the subject to most charming account."—Illustrated London News.

Demy 8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

LIFE and SOCIETY in AMERICA. By

SAMUEL PHILLIPS DAY Author of 'Down South,' 'English America,' or 'Pictures of Canadian Places and People.'

"We are indebted to Mr. Day for a most readable and entertaining collection of sketches of Transatlantic life."—Social Review.

"Such an interesting and amusing book is hard to find plenty of readers. The book ought to be studied by all who want to see the shadowy as well as the lights of American society."—Graphic.

"This is a work of uncommon merit. It is an exhaustive picture of life in the United States, which we can recommend to all persons who are interested in the social life of the great Republic."—Outing's Messenger.

"The present volume is described as the first series. Few readers will put it down without wishing for the second."—New York Advertiser.

"I find that you have fully succeeded in bringing out, with much force and talent, the most prominent features of American life."—Prince Comte de Poincaré.

The DOOM of the GREAT CITY; or, London

Destroyed by Fire. By WILLIAM DELIBS HAY Price 1s. post free.

READY IN A FEW DAYS, AT ALL BOOKSTALLS.

The VERACIOUS HISTORY of a BLACK-and-TAN TERRIBLE. Told by Himself. 8vo. cloth, 8s. Edited by LADY LAMB. Illustrated by Walter J. Allen.

HISTORY of DUELLING. Cloth, 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Translated from the French of M. Comte de Mont, one of the French King's Body Guard with an Introduction by Sir LUCAS OTTEGGER.

NEWMAN & CO. PUBLISHERS.

NOTICE TO AUTHORS' ROYAL COMMISSION UPON COPYRIGHT

To meet the views expressed by the Royal Commissioners, after they had heard the evidence of the leading authors of the day (see Report dated the 24th May 1879), Messrs. Newman & Co. have adopted a new system of publication, which secures to the author a full and lasting reward for his labour.

In the case of authors desiring to retain a permanent interest in their works, Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. now send all title-pages to the author to be signed or initialed before binding. And in their agreement, Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. undertake not to sell any copy without it bears such initials or stamp, and in the event of their doing so, under their form of agreement, the copyright in, together with all property connected with, such work reverts absolutely to the author.

It will thus be seen that an author under this new system obtains a full record of the progress made by his work, and the royalties due to him.

Messrs. NEWMAN & Co. undertake the publication of approved Scientific, Educational and Domestic Works, Poetry, Novels, and all Works of Fiction, and Children's Works.

NEWMAN & Co. 43, Hart-street, Bloomsbury,

London, W.C.

Temp. 6s. cloth, 4s. 6d.; royal 8mo. cloth, 3s.

THE DAILY BOUND. Meditation, Prayer, and Fasts, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year.
London: J. Whitaker, 12, Warwick Lane.

Tenth Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.E., F.R.C.S., &c., &c. 5, Dulwich-street, Greenwich-square, London, W.
London: G. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Just published, price 6d., by post, 7d.

PRACTICAL HINTS on the PRESERVATION of the TEETH.

By N. STEVENSON, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and Licentiate in Dental Surgery.

London: J. & A. Churchill, New Burlington-street.

Recently published, price 7s. 6d.

FRASER'S ETRUSCANS: an Examination of some Celtic Elements in the Etruscan, the Roman, and the Greek Language and Mythology.

"A marvel of learning and ingenuity."—Scotsman.
"Fitted to give him an honorable place among the philologists of our day."—Aberdeen Guide.

Edinburgh: Macintosh & Stewart. London: Simpkins, Marshall & Co.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE. — LECTURES delivered at the ROYAL INSTITUTION By Rev A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Deputy-Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford, Author of 'An Assyrian Grammar,' 'The Principles of Comparative Philology,' &c. 2s. 6d. 10s. cloth, 4s.

"Those who would know more of the literatures of Babylonia and their wonderful contents must refer to Mr. Sayce's book in which most of what is known of them at present is summed up."—Times.

London: S. Bagster & Son, 13, Paternoster-row.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready.

PROCEEDINGS of the SCIENTIFIC MEETINGS of the SOCIETY for 1879 Part II, containing the Papers Read at the Scientific Meetings in March and April 1880. With 15 Plates, mostly Coloured, 12s., with Plates Uncoloured, 2s.

TRANSACTIONS of the SOCIETY, Vol. XI, Part II, price 3s. containing the following Papers:—

Dr. JAMES MURIE. 'Further Observations on the Mammals.' 1s. 5 Plates.

Mr. T. JEFFERY PARKER. 'On the Intestinal Spinal Valve in the genus Rana.' With 3 Plates.

May be obtained at the Society's Office, 11, Manover-square, W., at Messrs. Longmans, the Society's Publishers, Paternoster-row, E.C., or through any bookseller.

In Use at Eton, Westminster, Harrow, Chesham, College, Christ's Hospital, St. Paul's, Merchant Taylors', City of London School, Greenwich Hospital School, Edinburgh Academy, &c.

DELLILE'S NEW GRADUATED COURSE.

The Beginner's Own French Book. 2s.—Key to the same, 2s.

Easy French Poetry for Beginners. 2s.

French Grammar. 5s. 6d.—Key to the same, 3s.

Répertoire des Proverbes. 6s. 6d.

Modèles de Poésie. 6s.

Manuel Étymologique. 2s. 6d.

A Synoptical Table of French Verbs. 6d.

Whitaker & Co. Ave. Marie-lane.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO.

BANKERS.

20 and 40, MARK-LANE, LONDON.

(Established 1822.)

CLARENCE BARKER—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

DEPOSITS of 10s. and upwards received and Receipts issued—

On demand	3 Months	6 Months	12 Months
4s. 6d.	5s. 0d.	5s. 6d.	6s. 0d.
5s. 0d.	6s. 0d.	6s. 6d.	7s. 0d.
6s. 0d.	7s. 0d.	7s. 6d.	8s. 0d.
7s. 0d.	8s. 0d.	8s. 6d.	9s. 0d.
8s. 0d.	9s. 0d.	9s. 6d.	10s. 0d.

An Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit Twelve complete Months.

Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COMPANY (Limited), having Branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Larnaca (Cyprus), is prepared to transact every description of General Banking Business with these Places.

London: 7, Cleverly-lane E.C. O. F. A. Secretary.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET

and CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.—(Incorporated 1822.)

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insures all parts of the World.

JAMES J. McCOMBFIELD, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.

Thames-side-street, E.C. 4, Chancery Cross, N.W.

Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.

Established 1710.

Home and Foreign Insurances effected.

Sums insured in 1879, £2,492,401.

FRANCIS H. BELTON, Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.

And may be provided against by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.

Right Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.

Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.

ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or at Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, cloth boards, with very Copious Index,

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII.

FIFTH SERIES.

Containing, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects:—

English, Irish, and Scottish History.

The Dream and Death of Thomas, Lord Lyttelton—The Elective and Deposing Power of Parliament—Anne Boleyn—Scottish Titles—Burial-Place of Edmund, Duke of Somerset—Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce—Bondmen in England—Serfdom in Scotland—Grahame, Viscount Dundee—A Jacobite Letter—Abbotsford in 1825—Compurgators—Bishop of Ross, Scotland, 1417—Knex's 'History of the Reformation'—Good Friday and Easter Sunday, temp. Charles II.—The Jews in England in the Thirteenth Century—Warrants for the Execution of Charles I.—The Pittmans and Stewarts.

Biography.

T. Allington—William Roy—Casper Hauser—Charles Owen of Warrington—Paolo Sarpi—The Descend of William Penn—William, Abbott of Ramsey—A. H. Rowan—George Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh—Matthew Smith, the first Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford—James Sayers, the Caricaturist—Jeremiah Horrocks.

Bibliography and Literary History.

Shakespeareana—The Authorship of Anonymous Works—Milton's 'L'Allegro'—Unpublished Letter of Macaulay—'Histoire des Mémoires'—Jules Anciens et Modernes—Barrie's 'Philology of the English Tongue'—Unpublished Poems by Burns—Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Norton—From Greenland's Icy Mountains—Chap Books—Lord Byron in Scotland—Welsh Language—Unpublished Letter of John Wesley—The Works of Thomas Fuller—The Welsh Testament—Burns's Ode on the American Civil War—Opus Questionum divi Augustini—Letter of Smollett—'The Pilgrim's Progress'—Development of the Press, 1824-1874—Books Written by Mrs. Olivia Serres: 'The Book.'

Popular Antiquities and Folk-Lore.

Ague Charms—Birds of Ill Omen—Candlemas Gills—Eggs and Drunkenness—Evil Eye—Jewish Superstitions—Hydrophobia prevented—Handkerchief thrown on Suicide's Coffin—Ladies and Lionsesses—The Seven Whistles.

Poetry, Ballads, and Drama.

The real Richelieu and Bulwer's Richelieu—"The Irish Brigade"—Thomas Decker—Mrs. Siddons a Sculptor—Barham's Lines on Dean Inland Browling's "Lost Leader"—The Lord Chamberlain's Inspection of Plays—Emma Lacla—A Poem by W. M. Pnail—Goethe—Shelley—Henry VIII. as a Poet—The Australian Drama—Charles I. as a Poet—Sheridan and Sir John Suckling—Oxfordshire Christmas Miracle Play—Christmas Mummings in Dorsetshire—Dante and his Translators—The Christian Year.

Popular and Proverbial Sayings.

"You know who the Critics are"—"You may put it in your eye and see none the worse for it"—Called Home—God's Church and the Devil's Chapel—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking—Tout vient à point—Wise after the event—La Parole a été donnée à l'homme—Robbing Peter to Pay Paul—The End justifies the Means—The English seems a Fool and is a Fool.

Philology.

Carr=Carse—Heel Tape—"Hoody"—Spurring—Nor for Than—Vagaries of Spelling—Spelling Reforms—Surrey Provincialisms—Quadragesimalis—S. v. E.—English Words compared with the Icelandic—Gingham—The Termination Y in Place-Names—Calomet—Yeux—Cameo—Hall, Wyck, and Salt Works—Shaddongate—Shakespeare's Name.

Genealogy and Heraldry.

The Insignia of the Knights of the Garter—Arms—Hungary—Dering Roll of Arms—Unsettled Baronetries—The Arms of Sir Francis Drake—The Arms of English Bats—Bar Minister—Strawberry Leaves on Coronets—Byron Arms—F. R. E. T. in the Savoy Arms—Seal of Prince of Livonia—The Templars and Hospitaliers.

Fine Arts.

Portraits of Dr. Johnson—Marks on Porcelain—Italian Works of Art at Paris in 1816—Sir Joshua Reynolds: Miss Day: Mrs. Day—Portrait of Barbot—Church Plate—Various Paintings and Engravings.

Medieval and Modern.

Alter Rails, Covered—Liddell v. Westerton—Ecclesiastical Vestments—Funeral Garlands—The Chichesters—"Prester John"—The Arms of the See of Chichester—Penance in the Church of England—Laud's Service Book—Epitaph of Cardinal Howard at Rome—St. Cathbert's Burial-place—Old Northern English MS. Painter—Berkeley Church—Sacred Vessels—A Roman Catholic Visitation in 1709—Episcopal Titles—St. George's Lodge—Registram Sacrum Batarianum—Communion Tokens—Fasting Communion in the Church of England—The Title of Reverend—Consecration of Church Plate—"Defender of the Faith"—The "Breches" Bible.

Classical Subjects.

The Latin Version of Bacon's Essays—Greek Anthology—Martialis Epigram xiii. 25—Lucretian Notelets—Medieval and Modern Latin and Greek Verse—Mithras in disco—Catinus: "Hoc ut dixit"—"Sandon" (Horace)—Cicero—Lucas a non Lucendo.

Topography.

Sandwich Islands—Origin of the Names of the American States—Arthur's Oven on the Carron—Scottish History—The Yardley Oak—Hart Hall, Oxford—Old Kensington—Travelling in Italy Forty Years ago—The Equestrian Statue in Hyde Park—Arthurian Localities: Scotland—The Sacred Lotus—St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row.

Miscellaneous.

Christian Names—Pillar Posts—Hanging in Chains and Irons—George III. and the Pig—The Kilkenny Cats—The Waterloo and Peninsular Medals—The Clerical a healthy Profession—Unlawful Games of the Middle Ages—Rune-rant Empires—Sunday Newspapers—Gipsies—The Wordsworth—Double Returns in Parliamentary Elections—Curiosities of Corporation Records—Spiritual Apparitions—The "Dial" System of Telegraphy—Professor Becker's "Gallus"—Skating Literature—Cricket—London Companies, or Guilds—A Travelling Tutor of the Olden Time—Gunpowder Plot—Baths in the Middle Ages—The Little Summer—Whitewash—Michaelmas—Christmas Contrasts.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

The special attention of the Reading Public is called to the fact that the Grosvenor Gallery Library allows TWO VOLUMES of the NEWEST BOOKS for a Subscription of ONE GUINEA per Annum.

N.B.—SETS OF BOOKS ARE DIVIDED TO MEET THE CONVENIENCE OF SUBSCRIBERS. COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS ARE RECEIVED ON SPECIALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TERMS. THE PUBLIC ARE INVITED TO INSPECT THE READING AND WAITING ROOMS, THE LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM, AND THE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW BOND-STREET.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME'

Now ready, crown 8vo. 5s.

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Peascher,' 'Grease Pans Farm,' 'Hodge and His Master.'

Crown 8vo. 5s.

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Citoyenne Jacqueline,' 'Scotch Fire,' &c.

3 vols. post 8vo.

[Next Tuesday.]

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LAW AND GOD.'

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo. 6s.

REASONABLE SERVICE.

By W. PAGE ROBERTS, M.A.,

Incumbent of St. Peter's, Vere-street, formerly Vicar of Eye, Suffolk, Author of 'Law and God.'

"Sermons which owe their chief charm to the deep and earnest faith impressed on every page of them."—Times.
 "Mr. Page Roberts appears to be a very liberal theologian but very decidedly a Churchman."—Contemporary Review.
 "A volume of discourses which are fresh, vigorous, and clear, which show a thorough comprehension of the questions most interesting society, and which display a wise tolerance to every sincere faith. Such is Mr. Page Roberts's book, entitled 'Reasonable Service.'"
 "These sermons are very short, and apparently very simple; but the careful reader will find they suggest more than in so many given words they actually teach."—Spectator.
 "The preacher aims at making his hearers think and feel: he is likely to succeed. There is a dash of Carlyle in his manner."—Reverend.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

HOW WE ARE GOVERNED.—THE FOURTEENTH EDITION.

In crown 8vo. price 2s. 6d. cloth gilt.

HOW WE ARE GOVERNED:

A HANDBOOK of the CONSTITUTION, GOVERNMENT, LAWS, and POWER of GREAT BRITAIN. By ALBANY FUNBLANQUE, jun., HOLDSWORTH, EWALD, &c. Revised to the Present Time and considerably Enlarged, By SHALMAN SMITH, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

"How We Are Governed" gives information which every man should know who has the interest of the Government of the People of Great Britain and her Colonies at heart. Its diffusion everywhere must be the means of eventual good to all who carefully read the book. It is also a useful Class-Book for schools and colleges.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

THE NEW SOCIETY MANUALS.

In crown 8vo. price 2s. 6d. cloth gilt.

THE MANAGEMENT OF SERVANTS:

A PRACTICAL GUIDE to the ROUTINE of DOMESTIC SERVICE. Containing the METHOD of WAITING at TABLE and other duties applicable to Every Household.

By the Author of 'MANNERS and TONE of GOOD SOCIETY.'

"The mystery of domestic service."—Saturday Review.
 "The book has been compiled for the use of masters and mistresses, and will prove of great assistance in the management of servants."—Court Journal.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

EPPS'S
CHOCOLATE
ESSENCE.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.
Homeopathic Chemists, London.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.

385, OXFORD-STREET, W.
 ANTIQUE WORKS of ART and modern Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the world.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THAT SHOOT or

THE ORIGINAL, BEST, and most Liberal.
 Cash Prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
 F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 247, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25, Marshall-street, W.C. Established 1847.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 40 to 50 Guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from 50 to 60 Guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from 70 to 80 Guineas.

And all other Goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 247, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25, Marshall-street, W.C. Established 1847.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing

Ironmonger by appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

SEND A CATALOGUE GRATIS and POST PAID.

It contains upwards of 100 Illustrations of his unrivalled Stock, with

List of Prices, and plans of the 30 large Show-rooms.

At 20, Oxford-street; 1, 2, 3, and 4, Newman-street; 4, 5, and 6, Ferry-place; and 1, Newman-yard, London, W.

FENDERS, FIRE-IRONS, STOVES, RANGES, &c.

REGISTERED STOVES from 5 0 0 to 25 0 0

CHINA TILED STOVES 3 0 0 to 20 0 0

DOGRON STOVES 12 0 0 to 20 0 0

FENDERS, IRON, or BRASS 3 0 0 to 10 0 0

DISS STOVES, and ORNOL 3 0 0 to 25 0 0

FENDER PHONES for TILE HEARTHES 1 0 0 to 10 0 0

MARKED STOVES 2 0 0 to 10 0 0

FIRE IRONS, set of Three 0 4 0 to 0 10 0

DISS STOVES for TILE HEARTHES, per Pair 0 12 0 to 15 0 0

GAS and HOT-WATER WORK.—ESTIMATES FREE.

BEDSTEADS, BEDDING, and FURNITURE.

BEDSTEADS of Best Make only, from 40 0 0.

BEDDING of every description made on the Premises, and guaranteed of pure materials and good workmanship.

AMERICAN WALNUT machine-made CABINET FURNITURE.

A large Stock of CHEST, USEFUL, and SOUND FURNITURE of the above make on view at prices usually charged for ordinary deal.

FURNITURE for BED, DINING, and DRAWING ROOMS, and every article necessary for HOUSE FURNISHING.

EASY TERMS of PURCHASE.—Special Arrangements made by

WILLIAM S. BURTON in reference to CREDIT without in any way altering the system of PLAIN FIGURES and FIXED PRICES, and retaining to the PURCHASER all the advantages of prices arranged for

NET CASH, and charging only such interest as may be necessary for the time over which the payments are extended.

COLEA OIL, highest quality 1s. 10d. per gallon.

KEROSENE, ditto 1s. 1d.

"Five gallons and upwards 1s. 0d.

WILLIAM S. BURTON.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER

PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRAWING BAG.

ALLEN'S PATENT OF INDIAN BARKETS.

ALLEN'S REGISTERED ALBERT DESPATCH BOX.

ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 100 Articles for Continental Travelling, post free.

27, West Strand, London.

APOLLINARIS WATER.

"Lauri domus Apollinaris."—Horace, Book IV. Ode 2.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

ANNUAL SALE, 9,000,000.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 12, Regent-street, London, E.W.

LOTS 110 and 111.—Lot 110, very soft OLD

PALE HENRY at 3s. and LOT 111, very soft OLD GLOUGHER

ROBBER pale at 4d. 10s. per dozen. SHEARERS of the old style, and known by one very soft and entirely free from the dross which has been so detrimental to the consumption of Henry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realisation

and are offered to the Public while on the special Lot List at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction.—The LONDON

CO-OPERATIVE WE ASSOCIATION, Limited, 30 and 32, John-street, Adolph. W.C. (removed from 40, Strand).

M. R. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON DENTIST,

27, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.

Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Magnesia as the best remedy for

ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-

ACHE, COLIC, and INDIGESTION, and as the only

Agent for delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Elderly.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

"SANITAS" and DISINFECTION.—The Pine

Forest at Home.—The SANITAS PREPARATIONS are in use in more than 700 Hospitals of Health, Hospitals, &c. Non-poisonous, stainless, agreeable, and healthful. Used in the House, and Household Soap. Toilet Soap, and Liniment. Tooth and Nerve Powders.

Of all Chemists, or of the Sanitas Company, Limited, 10, Pall Mall Green,

London E. Testimonials of highest Medical and Sanitary Authorities

free. Of universal necessity as the most perfect Purifier and Disinfectant.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, AND AT THE RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1. This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2. Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in Charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current Periodicals one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3. The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in Charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in Unbroken and complete Sets.

4. London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of Volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5. Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6. Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in Charge a List comprising at least twice as many titles of Works as they wish to exchange.

I. For Subscribers obtaining their Books from a London Terminus, or 186, Strand:—

	6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.		6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.
For ONE Volume at a time ..	0 12 0	1 1 0	For FOUR Volumes at a time ..	1 3 0	2 2 0
[Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.]
For TWO Volumes at a time ..	0 17 6	1 11 6	For EIGHT " " ..	1 15 0	3 3 0
[Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.]
			For FIFTEEN " " ..	3 0 0	5 5 0

II. For Subscribers obtaining their Books from a Country Bookstall:—

	6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.		6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.
For ONE Volume at a time ..	0 12 0	1 1 0	For THREE Volumes at a time ..	1 3 0	2 2 0
[Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.]
For TWO Volumes at a time ..	0 17 6	1 11 6	For FOUR " " ..	1 8 0	2 10 0
[Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.]
			For SIX " " ..	1 15 0	3 3 0
			For TWELVE " " ..	3 0 0	5 5 0

III. For Country Book Clubs, Reading Societies, &c.:—

	6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.		6 Months. £. s. d.	12 Months. £. s. d.
For TWENTY-FOUR Volumes at a time ..	5 5 0	9 8 0	For SIXTY Volumes at a time ..	13 0 0	23 9 0
For THIRTY-SIX " " ..	8 0 0	14 2 6	For SEVENTY-TWO " " ..	15 10 0	28 2 0
For FORTY-EIGHT " " ..	10 10 0	18 16 0	For EIGHTY-FOUR " " ..	18 0 0	32 15 6

For every additional Twelve Volumes, 4l. 12s. 6d.

TERMS for SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, LISTS of BOOKS in CIRCULATION, or any other information, can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A CATALOGUE of SURPLUS and NEW BOOKS, offered at greatly Reduced Prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant Bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE LATE
W. H. G. KINGSTON,
"THE MODERN MARYAT"

A LIST OF HIS BOOKS

PUBLISHED BY GRIFFITH & FARRAN.

Imperial 16mo, cloth elegant, 6s. each, or, bound boards, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. each, fully illustrated.

The THREE MIDSHIPMEN. With 32 Page Illustrations by various Artists.
"A rattling sea-story."—Daily Telegraph.
"Will be read with intense delight."—Art Journal.

The THREE LIEUTENANTS; or, Naval Life in the Nineteenth Century.
"Well calculated to interest boys."—Athenæum.
"Will be doubtless prove highly interesting to all boys."—Daily News.

The THREE COMMANDERS; or, Active Service Afloat in Modern Days.
"Fresh and vigorous."—Art Journal.
"Boys will revel in the book."—Nonconformist.

The THREE ADMIRALS, and the Adventures of their Young Followers.
"A capital story of adventure."—Times.
"A book like this not only affords amusement, but conveys incidentally a large amount of information."—Field and Gentle.

HURRICANE HURRY; or, the Adventures of a Naval Officer Afloat and on Shore during the American War of Independence.
"Worthy of a gentleman who knows how to write a 'boy's book' as well as any man."—Spectator.

The MISSING SHIP; or, Notes from the Log of the Ouzel Galley.
"Can write a sea-story for boys better than any man living."—Illustrated Post.
"The tales are always well told."—Athenæum.

TRUE BLUE; or, the Life and Adventures of a British Seaman of the Old School.
"As full of adventure as an egg is full of meat."—Famely Fair.
"A fresh sea-story of the last century."—Graphic.

WILL WEATHERHELM; or, the Yarn of an Old Sailor about his Early Life and Adventures.
"There is not a dry page in the volume."—Times.
"The scenes in the West India Islands alone are sure to be eagerly read."—Morning Post.

Illustrated, cloth elegant, 6s.; or, bound boards, gilt edges, 6s.
The RIVAL CRUSOES.
"Full of incident."—Athenæum. "The book is a good one."—Times.

Illustrated, cloth elegant, 6s.; or, gilt edges, 6s. 6d.
JOHN DEANE, of NOTTINGHAM; his Adventures and Exploits.
"The story is capitally told."—Daily Telegraph.
"The boys who read it are to be envied by those who do not."—Art Journal.

Illustrated, cloth elegant, 6s. 6d. each; or, gilt edges, 6s. each.
FRED MARKHAM in RUSSIA; or, the Boy Traveller in the Land of the Czar.
"The story is well and vigorously told."—Illustrated Post.
"The manners, customs, national character, &c., are vividly described."—Nonconformist.

MANCO, the PERUVIAN CHIEF; or, an Englishman's Adventures in the Country of the Incas.
"Mr. Kingston displays a knowledge of his subject."—Spectator.
"Can scarcely fail of captivating youthful readers."—Illustrated Times.

MARK SEAWORTH: a Tale of the Indian Ocean.
"Not read Mark Seaworth, do you say? Then you have not read one of the best of Mr. Kingston's capital sea-stories."—Nonconformist.

SALT WATER; or, the Sea Life and Adventures of Nell D'Arcy, the Midshipman.
"There is about all Mr. Kingston's tales a spirit of hopefulness, honesty and good principle, which makes them most wholesome as well as most interesting reading."—Illustrated Post.
"With the exception of Captain Maryat, we know of no English author who will compare with Mr. Kingston as a writer of nautical adventure."—Illustrated News.

PETER the WHALER: his Early Life and Adventures in the Arctic Regions.
"A good picture of life at sea."—Lancet Mercury.
"In 'Peter the Whaler' Mr. Kingston is quite at his best."—Literary Churchman.

Cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.
INFANT AMUSEMENTS; or, How to Make a Nursery Happy With Practical Hints on the Moral and Physical Training of Children With Frontispiece.
"Each chapter is worth the price of the book."—Our Own People.

Cloth elegant, 2s. each; or gilt edges, 2s. 6d. each.
OUR SOLDIERS; or, Anecdotes of the Campaigns and Gallant Deeds of the British Army during the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. With Frontispiece.
"Worthy to be placed in a boy's hands."—Times.

OUR SAILORS; or, Anecdotes of the Engagements and Gallant Deeds of the British Navy during the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. With Frontispiece.
"Full of life and exciting descriptions of gallant deeds."—Illustrated News.

Prep. 8vo, cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.
The HEROIC WIFE; or, the Wanderers on the Amazon.
"Graphically written, contains a good deal of matter descriptive of American scenery."—Liverpool Advertiser.

Royal 16mo, cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.
The CHILD of the WRECK; or, the Loss of the Royal George.
"Will doubtless be a favourite with the youngsters."—Athenæum.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN,
West Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard, London,

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

Now ready, crown 8vo. 5s.

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' 'Greene Fenne Farme,' 'Hodge and His Masters.'

Just published, 3 vols. demy 8vo. 32s. with Illustrations and Maps.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B. K.C.S.I.

"Sir Frederic Goldsmid may be congratulated on the success with which he has written his very valuable and interesting book."—Fall Mill Gazette.
"Decidedly above the average both in literary merit and in completeness of information. The maps will be found very useful in elucidating the text."—Globe.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PASSAGES FROM THE PROSE WRITINGS OF
MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Contents:—1. Literature. 2. Politics and Society. 3. Philosophy and Religion.

NEW NOVEL.

NOW READY, AT ALL THE LIBRARIES,

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Citoyenne Jacqueline,' 'Scotch Fire,' &c.

3 vols. post 8vo.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

Now ready, royal 8vo. 966 pages, price 2s. 2s.

THE CONDITION OF NATIONS,
SOCIAL AND POLITICAL.

WITH COMPLETE COMPARATIVE TABLES OF UNIVERSAL STATISTICS,

By G. FR. KOLB.

Translated, Edited, and Collated to 1880 by Mrs. BREWER;

With Original Notes and Information by EDWIN W. STREETER, F.R.G.S.

Gold Medallist of the Royal Order of Frederic, Holder of a Gold Medal from H.M. the King of the Belgians; Author of 'Precious Stones,' 'Gold,' 'Pearls,' &c.

A publication for which we are indebted to the untiring industry and unfailing accuracy of Dr. Kolb and Mrs. Brewer. No more thorough, comprehensive, or serviceable book of the kind has ever issued from the press. It might be described, from one point of view, as a panorama of the internal condition of all the people of the civilised world, and from another as a compendious and discreet deconvolution of the most important Blue-Books of all the countries and all the languages which boast a literature of the kind.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York-street, Covent-garden.

Now ready, in 1 vol. demy 8vo. with 146 Woodcuts, 15s.

THE PAST IN THE PRESENT:
WHAT IS CIVILIZATION?

BEING THE RHIND LECTURES IN ARCHEOLOGY, DELIVERED IN 1876 AND 1878.

By ARTHUR MITCHELL, M.D. LL.D., &c.,

Secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

"Whatever differences of opinion, however, may be held on minor points, there can be no question that Dr. Mitchell's work is one of the ablest and most original pieces of archaeological literature which has appeared of late years."—St. James's Gazette.

"To the general reader and the thinker alike it will be welcome."—Aberdeen Free Press.
"Whether we consider their suggestiveness or the value of the results actually reached, it would be difficult to over-estimate the importance of these discussions. They form, in fact, a valuable and interesting contribution to the literature of science, in relation especially to anthropological studies. They are, however, superior to most of the literature of science in respect both of literary form and of scientific method."—Scotsman.
"The book is one of the few for the publication of which marks a step in advance. While it must attract all thinkers, the charm of its style will commend it to those who read only for recreation."—Benfshire Journal.

"Few more interesting archaeological works have lately been published than the ten Rhind Lectures which make up Dr. Mitchell's volume, 'The Past in the Present.' We must thank him heartily for the manner and the method of his book, for the curious and valuable facts which he has collected from personal observation, and for the admirable woodcuts which adorn as well as illustrate his volume."—Saturday Review.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS; and all Booksellers.

Just published, in 2 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, 21s.

EDGAR ALLAN POE:

HIS LIFE, LETTERS, AND OPINIONS.

By JOHN H. INGRAM.

With PORTRAITS of POE and his MOTHER.

"Remarkable achievement are usually confined to the tender life of imaginative men, but Poe's biography displays a combination and popularity of interest such as to rarely meet with. . . . A man whose remarkable genius it were folly to deny."—James Russell Lowell.

PRESS NOTICES.

"Justice has at length been done to a very singular and very wonderful genius. Few works of greater interest than this have been published, because Mr. Ingram knows how to write biography in such a way as to enable us to see the gradual development of Poe's heart and mind, his nature as poet and man."—Broad Arrow.

"Practically, then, the life of Poe now given to the world may be regarded as final and definitive. Little temptation is, indeed, offered to travel again over ground which Mr. Ingram has explored with conscientious fidelity and untiring perseverance, and has mapped out with accuracy as patient, that, as Lamb says of Dryden's 'Fables', he has not left a rivulet so narrow it may be stepped over without honorable mention. . . . It is pleasant to congratulate Mr. Ingram upon the close of his labours. Scidm has a duty as arduous and necessary been performed with equal loyalty and zeal. . . . Profoundly interesting from common-sense to close to the biography now given to the world."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Ingram has to a considerable extent built up his memoir of Poe with letters, literary notices, and documents, carefully collected and so excellently arranged, that all obtainable records of this unfortunate poet's life and opinions are brought under the reader's notice; while, on the other hand, in the use of them, the author, although in this case hampered with difficulties and under strong temptations, is, like a good biographer, careful nothing to extend, nor to draw upon in vain. The quotation from this work of 'the last scene of all' will afford a glimpse of the fulness and fidelity with which Mr. Ingram has discharged his task. The literary merits of the work, well exemplified in the above, are on a par with the wealth and accuracy of material of which it is composed. It will command, as it deserves to do, a high position as an impartial and able biography of one who was so unfortunate in death as in life but whose place in literature—so far as graceful and musical versification is concerned, together with a weird glamour of which he was master—has not yet been filled."—Athenæum from Poe.

"There is no character that offers more scope for analysis than Poe's, and Mr. Ingram is the only writer who has provided us with all the necessary material for the study. His most interesting work has been upon the double stamp of conscientious thoroughness and impartiality. That is not humored because it is sympathetic."—Colquhoun's Messenger.

"These two neat volumes are a testimony to Mr. Ingram's invincible industry and devotion to the memory of the ill-fated poet of 'The Raven'. . . . Mr. Ingram's memoir is not only well written and interesting, but it is conceived in a true and artistic spirit. He is concerned only to exhibit Poe, and to portray him faithfully. He passes lightly from point to point, following him in his strangely-shaped career, never becoming tedious, in spite of the weight of documents and figures he has to present, and never becoming the mere chronicler. He is too good a critic and understanding his art too well for that. . . . We have no hesitation in ranking this among the many valuable additions to literary biography recently made."—British Quarterly Review.

"There is much in the two volumes that may be read with interest. . . . Without doubt Poe was a man of genius, and, like so many other men of genius, he was miserably ill paid for the great work that he did. . . . He was an ill-used man, for he did for the world vastly more than the world did for him."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Ingram has done his work well, and we lay down the pathetic story, with its tragic ending, impressed that Edgar A. Poe will hereafter be ranked among those men stoned against time slaying."—Publisher's Circular.

"The unfortunate American poet has been asked upon in popular fancy as a type of the moody, idle, discontented Quaker by his and others: the perfect example of the kind of artist whom George Eliot defines as a fool to the patient, laborious, contented, and prosperous Stradivarius. Few few who had looked at Poe's work critically knew otherwise."—Portsmouth Review.

"These two handsome volumes, in which justice is at length done to the most remarkable of American poets, are creditable alike to author and publisher. . . . Mr. Ingram has evidently spared no pains to impart accuracy and completeness to the work, the value of which is enhanced by his unpublished extracts from Poe's correspondence, which give us glimpses into the inner nature of a 'rare and radiant' man of genius."—Camden's Papers.

"Mr. Ingram has taken up arms against fearful odds, has boldly proclaimed that he would vindicate Poe, and has triumphed. . . . Both volumes are replete with letters, anecdotes, personal recollections of the poet's contemporaries, and extracts from the opinions of competent critics, interwoven in a manner that most effectively relieves the tediousness too often attending to biography."—Richmond Standard (U.S.A.).

"In these two volumes we have the result of many years' research, set forth with all the energy and skill of a practiced and conscientious biographer. Never, perhaps, has there been a more paradoxical fate than that of Poe. . . . Mr.

Ingram's merits are very great, and his task is very welcome. . . . In the course of the book we come on some fine and suggestive moments of criticism. While he is reluctant to make an end of the vile columns by which Poe's biography has been enveloped, he is ready to admit Poe's faults and lapses. We thus feel that we are brought into contact with a real man, and not with a shadow; and though it is evident that Mr. Ingram aimed at a close statement of facts rather than constructing an artistic picture, our sympathy is commanded from first to last."—Spectator.

"The result is to add considerably to the knowledge possessed by the public of the career of the unfortunate poet, and to make the book itself to a great extent highly interesting. . . . No feature of the book is more valuable than the letters which it contains written by Poe. He was, indeed, a marvellous letter-writer."—Scotsman.

"We heartily congratulate Mr. Ingram upon the close of his labours. Not only has he produced a biography of more excellence from an artistic point of view, but he has completely vindicated Poe's memory from slurs which have poured evidence without any foundation, as that of the unscrupulous malice of E. W. Griswold, of whom he is glorified for all time as the truest friend of Poe, a friend's reputation. We can pronounce the work to be a book pre-eminently worth reading."—York and Essex Review.

"The two volumes contain such a great amount, with extracts, of Poe's writings, that, having read them, we know more not only of the facts of his life, but of his works than we are otherwise likely to do. . . . made his mark. We heartily recommend Mr. Ingram's book to all who want to know all about Poe."—Graphic.

"After many years' to remember, the most careful and thorough, Mr. Ingram has put the finishing touch to his defence of Poe against the literary vampires who have aimed to suck the life-blood of his reputation. . . . By dint of indomitable industry and determination Mr. Ingram has shed the can to the bottom has found out all the truth about Poe, and has faithfully told it in these two volumes. . . . We can only and as we began by saying, in fairness to Mr. Ingram, that his new materials are ample enough fully to justify his claim for this memoir as final; and we have to thank him for one of the most valuable additions recently made to the field of literary biography."—Manchester and Independent.

"A consideration of plain fact, as related by Mr. Ingram in his recently published life of the author of 'The Raven', goes far to show that Poe's memory rests under enormous and unshakable foundations. . . . Those who have ever fallen under the spell of the 'Raven' of Edgar Poe, or shivered at the horror of the death within the walls of the lunatic asylum, should not fail to read Mr. Ingram's volume."—Northampton Daily Citizen.

"Mr. Ingram has a distinct title to write the book which he has written. . . . and has succeeded in clearing Poe of almost all the most odious and discreditable of the charges under which he has laboured, and in presenting a really pathetic picture of the terrible state of mental excitement and bodily suffering into which he finally passed."—Full Mail Gazette.

"This biography of Poe, implying elaborate research, could hardly have been demanded by any interest more ardent than the sentiment of justice and it is not a matter of wonder or surprise that the book sometimes impresses the reader as a vindication rather than a biography. For does this impair the interest of the work. It well repays perusal."—Contemporary.

"We are indebted to the indefatigable industry of Mr. John H. Ingram for this the most complete biography of Poe yet published. . . . The story of his life after the death of Virginia (his wife) is one of the saddest in the whole annals of literature. . . . The excellence of his crisp and pure style has rarely been surpassed, and the vigor and vividness of his imagination are almost unexcelled. During his lifetime it was his poetry that was most admired, but now the manifold beauties of these wonderful weird stories which were from Victor Hugo the expression that they had created a new school, as French romances, have outlived his poetry in popularity."—The Poet.

"Mr. Ingram has undertaken a task of considerable difficulty, and he has done it, upon the whole, to have performed it well. His facts appear to be trustworthy, and he has succeeded in restoring the poet's memory from many misapprehensions. We see Poe at his best in these pages, and the portrait is probably as faithful a one as we are likely to possess."—St. James's Gazette.

"Certainly Mr. Ingram's life has been remarkable evidence of painstaking research, and we should think it as 'full and faithful' as he could make it. . . . There can not be a question as to the extraordinary character of Poe's genius. Many have, perhaps, thought that he resembled Byron in a marked degree. One cannot help thinking of Shelley, Keats, and Byron. There were features in all three which found a correspondence in Poe. But he was not really like one of them."—Literary World.

Dedicated by permission to the Right Hon.
W. E. Gladstone, M.P., &c.

Just published, small crown 8vo. cloth, price 2s. 6d.

PLAIN LIVING AND HIGH THINKING;

OR, PRACTICAL SELF-CULTURE:

MORAL, MENTAL, AND PHYSICAL.

By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS,

Author of 'The Spirit of Science,' &c.

PRESS NOTICES.

"We like the thorough way in which Mr. Adams deals with half-forgotten ideas of Plato and Aristotle. . . . The chapter on 'The Spirit of Science' is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"This is a wonderful book. It contains a very great amount of good information about the history of the human mind. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"Mr. Adams discusses with great lucidity, for right lucidity, and for much valuable reading. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The world has been flooded with cheap and empty books. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

"The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science. . . . The book is a most important contribution to the study of the history of science."—Graphic.

* * A Bibliography of Poe's Works and a Copious Index are included in the Appendix.

London: JOHN HOGG, 18, Paternoster-row, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.

THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo. 5s.

BY GEORGE BRANDES.

LORD BEACONSFIELD: his Life, Character, and Works. A Critical Study. By GEORGE BRANDES. Translated by Mrs. GEORGE STURGE. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBSON.

A TRIP TO MANITOBA. By Mary FITZ-GIBSON. In 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.

FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND. By Miss DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

BY THE REV. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.

HIGH UNTO THE END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Already the Eastern sky is aglow with the reddening rays of its advent glory, and, by all the signs of which himself hath spoken, 'the Master cometh.'"
From a Charge by the late Bishop of Winchester.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'OUT ADMITT'.

PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBANY de FONBLANQUE. Author of 'Out Admitt,' 'A Tangled Skein,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"The characters are well and naturally drawn, the situations admirable, and the story is thoroughly good and interesting. What more can be said in its praise?"
—Whitehall Review.

"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme and produced a well-constructed story. In studies of character her book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel writing."
—Athenæum.

"There can be no hesitation in saying that in her latest novel Miss Thomas shows as marked an advance upon former work as to justify the belief that she is destined, at no distant period, to rank among the foremost living writers of fiction."
—Morning Post.

"Miss Thomas's art as a story-teller is unmistakable, and her grasp of character deeper and more complete than we find in many novels of more ambitious pretensions."
—Full Mail Gazette.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.

FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret MAJENDIE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

"We meet in this romance a great deal that is pretty, fresh, credible, and worthy of admiration."
—Athenæum.

Also, immediately,

LIZZIE OF THE MILL. From the Original by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender.' 3 vols. crown 8vo.

At all Booksellers', the

NOVELS OF RHODA BROUGHTON.

Each volume in crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.

RED as a ROSE is SHE. JOAN.
CUMBERT as a FLOWER. NANCY.
NOT WISELY but TOO WELL. GOOD-WE, SWEETHEART.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

ILLUSTRATED BY MISS MORTIMER.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1787-1874) by his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"We cannot but feel grateful for the picture that Madame de Witt has given us of her father in his home."
—Edinburgh.

Madame de Witt has accomplished her task with tact and judgment."
—St. James's Gazette.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 2 vols. 12s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it embodies with coarse, it is a widespread popularity. Many of the pages possess an engaging and popular interest, while all of them may be read with pleasure and profit."
—Edinburgh.

"There are few who will not bear testimony to the fascination of these highly popular. Nearly fifty stories of English, Scottish and Irish families are narrated in these interesting volumes."
—Daily Telegraph.

The VILLAGE OF PALACES; or,

CHRONICLES OF CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ENTRANCE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

"Mr. L'Entrance tells us much that is interesting about Chelsea. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."
—Edinburgh.

THE NEW NOVELS.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia

R. EDWARDS. Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c. 3 vols. [2nd week.]

The TENTH EARL. By John Ber-

WICK HARWOOD. Author of 'Lady Favia,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl' is very amusing reading."
—J. A. Bull.

"A fascinating novel. The plot is deeply interesting, the characters are true to nature, while the language is remarkable for graphic power and observation."
—Daily Telegraph.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirkin.

3 vols.

"Now—the tailor makes the dearest of changeable fashions, for they are a very opal."
—North's Night.

FORESTALLED. By M.

BETHAM EDWARDS. Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridget,' 'Maidens in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols. 12s.

"This tale is effectively told, and contains passages, now of rare interest, now of description, which, apart from all question of dramatic interest, are for their own sake well worth reading."
—St. James's Gazette.

"Forestalled' is a very remarkable novel. Miss Betham-Edwards has presented tale of powerful interest, which successfully rivets the attention from the beginning to the end."
—Daily Telegraph.

WOOLERS AND WINNERS. By Mrs.

O. LINNÆUS BAKER. Author of 'The Manchester Man,' &c. 3 vols.

"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome novel. The story is interesting and well told."
—John Bull.

"Woolers and Winners' will add to Mrs. Baker's literary fame. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are amusing and deeply interesting."
—Daily Telegraph.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

"A very attractive and clever story which, if it be a first effort in fiction, is unusually successful. It is the work of a refined mind, and is carried out with considerable skill."
—Athenæum.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl

OF DUNSTON. Author of 'Kilvarde,' &c. 3 vols.

"A bright, lively story, full of interest."
—Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.

MOLLENWORTH. Author of 'Manselton Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.

"One of the greatest stories which has appeared for years."
—Post.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 4s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by

MR. J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, FORTNER, POSTER, TOWNSEND, SANDY, R. HUGHES, SANDHURST, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

From Miss's History and Romance. 1 vol. 12s. 6d.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF MARK TWAIN'S NEW WORK.

Complete in 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth extra, with 24 illustrations, &c. 6d.

A TRAMP ABROAD. By Mark Twain.

"The fun and tenderness of the conception, of which no living man but Mark Twain is capable for grace and humor and dynamism, the wonderful feeling for animal that is manifest in every line, make of all this episode of the tramping and his joys a piece of work that is not only delightful as mere reading, but also of a high degree of merit as literature."
—Athenæum.

QUIDA'S NEW VOLUMES OF COLLECTED STORIES.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d. and at every Library.

PIPISTRELLO, and other Stories. By Ouida.

"Written with all the power and beauty of which the gifted authoress is capable."
—Graphic.

CHARLES GIBSON'S NEW NOVEL.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d. and at every Library.

In PASTURES GREEN, and other Stories.

By CHARLES GIBSON.

"Mr. Gibson's descriptive ability is of a high order, and he has a keen sense of the truly humorous and the truly pathetic. His descriptions of scenery are absolutely perfect."
—Morning Post.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. the Second Volume of

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS,

Arranged and Edited by the Author. Containing 'The Luck of Bumping Camp, and other Stories,' 'Spanish and American Legends,' 'Tales of the Argonauts,' &c.

CHEAP EDITION OF THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOESS OF

'READY-MONEY MORTIMER.'—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

The SEAMY SIDE. By the Authors of

'Ready-Money Mortimer,' 'The Golden Butterfly,' &c.

"One of the best, if not the best, of the authors' novels."
—Saturday Review.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. a New and Cheaper Edition of

MOTHS. By Ouida.

"Not only is the author's finest work, but one which marks a new epoch in fiction."
—Morning Post.

First 8vo. Illustrated Boards, 2s. 6d.

QUIDA'S NOVELS. CHEAP EDITION.

HELEN IN BONDAGE. BY MARY HARRIS.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. BY MARY HARRIS.

CECIL CASTLEMAINE. BY MARY HARRIS.

YUCK. BY MARY HARRIS.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PICCADILLY NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d. each.

UNDER WHICH LORD? By E. Lynn

LINTON. With 12 illustrations by Arthur Hopkins.

DONNA QUIXOTE. By Justin McCarthy,

M.P. With 12 illustrations by Arthur Hopkins.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE MAYFAIR LIBRARY.

First 8vo. cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

CHARLES DICKENS'S SPEECHES. With

Chapters on Dickens as an Essayist, Letter-Writer, &c.

LITERARY FRIVOLITIES, FANCIES,

FOLLIES, and PROLOGUES. By WILLIAM DOBSON.

CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR NOVELS.

First 8vo. Illustrated Boards, 2s. 6d.

MAID WIFE, or WIDOW? By Mrs. Alexander.

SHIRAZI MERRY MIRTH. By Mrs. Alexander.

WITH MARK AND CROW. By W. Somerset & J. R. R.

MY LITTLE GIRL. By W. Somerset & J. R. R.

THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY. By W. Somerset & J. R. R.

BY CELIA'S AMBROS. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

THE MONKS OF THRELEMA. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

TWAS IN TRAPALGAR'S DAY. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

AN HERBIBER OF RED DOG. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

DARWIN CONROY. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

THE LUCK OF ROARING CAMP. By Walter Besant and James Rice.

WOMAN IN WHITE. By Wilkie Collins.

THE MOONSTONE. By Wilkie Collins.

MAR AND WIFE. By Wilkie Collins.

POOR MISS FINCH. By Wilkie Collins.

MISERABLE. By Wilkie Collins.

NEW MADONNA. By Wilkie Collins.

THE FROZEN DEEP. By Wilkie Collins.

LAW AND THE LADY. By Wilkie Collins.

THE TWO DESTINIES. By Wilkie Collins.

HUNTED HOTEL. By Wilkie Collins.

ROXY. By Edward Rieu.

UNDER THE OAKENWOOD TREE. By Thomas Hardy.

YATTO TO BE FREE. By John Galsworthy.

PATRICIA KEMBALL. By E. Lynn Linton.

THE ATONEMENT OF LEAN DUNDON. By E. Lynn Linton.

WORLD WELL LOST. By E. Lynn Linton.

DEAR LADY DINDIN. By E. Lynn Linton.

A PAIR RALPH. By E. Lynn Linton.

LIVELY ROCHFORD. By E. Lynn Linton.

MISS MIRIAMORE. By E. Lynn Linton.

WHITEHEADS. By E. Lynn Linton.

WALTER & WORD. By E. Lynn Linton.

HALVEY. By E. Lynn Linton.

LEAGUE BLACK WITH WHITE PAINTED. By E. Lynn Linton.

BY PROXY. By E. Lynn Linton.

THE WAY WE LIVE NOW. By Anthony Trollope.

AMERICAN RENAISSANCE. By Anthony Trollope.

A PLEASANT TRIP ON THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE. By Mark Twain.

TOM SAWYER. By Mark Twain.

AN IDEAL EDUCATION. By Mark Twain.

"Full Lists of the Series by post upon application."

CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1880.

CONTENTS.

LE MEASUREUR'S DESCRIPTION OF KANDAHAR ...	198
A JUVENILE WORK OF LEOPARDI ...	200
CURTIS ON THE GREEK VASE ...	201
ROUND ABOUT A GREAT STATE, BY JEFFERSON ...	202
MAX MÜLLER'S TRANSLATION OF THE UPANISHADS ...	203
VAN LAUW'S MEMOIRS OF MOTTEUR ...	204
NOVELS OF THE WEEK ...	206
THE LITERATURE OF PALÆOGRAPHY ...	207
SCHOOL-BOOKS ...	208
LITERARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS ...	209
THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING ROOM; "THE MERRIAM-CHOLY JACQUES"; LITTÉRATURE NOUVELE; MR. W. H. O. KINGTON ...	209-211
LITERARY Gossip ...	212
SCIENCE—HEATH'S SWISS SPRINGS; THE ROYAL SOCIETY; AN ASTRONOMICAL INSTRUMENT; GOSSEP ...	212-214
THE ARTS—HAYARD'S L'ART ET LES ARTISTES HOLLANDAIS; LITERARY TABLE; THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND; GOSSEP ...	215-218
MUSIC—NEW SHEET MUSIC; GOSSEP ...	219-220
DRAMA—GOSSEP ...	220

LITERATURE

Kandahar in 1879: being the Diary of Major Le Mesurier, Brigade Major R.E., with the Quetta Column. Reprinted, with Corrections and Additions, from the Royal Engineers' Journal. (Allen & Co.)

THIS lively record of recent campaigning experiences can hardly fail to interest members of the military profession, owing to the detailed information which it supplies on matters affecting the well-being and efficiency of a Field Force. Equally strong should be its attraction for all Englishmen who follow the course of events in Afghanistan, because of the light which it throws on the daily camp life of our gallant countrymen suddenly transferred from Indian cantonments to a position west of the Sulaiman Mountains. The writer may be safely accepted as the type of a class of officers, not necessarily confined to the scientific branches of the service, active and manly in professional work, warm-hearted in domestic relations, genial and popular in social intercourse. Yet with all this in its favour the narrative has more weight as a contribution to the journal in which it first appeared than as an addition to general literature. Considered as a book it is somewhat wanting in arrangement and solidity; while to the critical eye the personal items are superabundant, to say nothing of the palpable drawbacks to popularity presented by the adoption of the diary form.

In November, 1879, Major Le Mesurier was appointed Brigade Major, Royal Engineers, to the Field Force moving on towards Kandahar under Major-General (now Sir) Donald Stewart. Hurrying down from Simla to Ambala in the plain country, he passed through Lahore and Multan to Sakhar, thence proceeding through Shikarpur and Jacobabad to the dreary desert which separates Sind from the Bolan Pass. The time of the year and particular route chosen enabled him to avoid the deadly risks incurred by so many of his predecessors in traversing this tract; and he reached Dadar, vid Bashori and Bāgh, six days after leaving the chief station of the Sind frontier. Here arose one of those contingents of which so little is remembered in after years, but the recurrence of which should be prevented by all available means, on the score of policy if the claims of philanthropy be found insufficient. It appears that some one on our side—individual or department—committed a breach of faith towards the camel-men engaged to forward the objects of the expedition. The story is significant, and it is sympathetically told by Major Le Mesurier:—

"Whether wittingly or not, every man with his camels was given to understand that when he left Sukkur he was to go to Dadar, and no further, and that at that point the transport would be taken up with hill camels; but, although I believe the Politicks had promised hill camels at Dadar, none were forthcoming. All sorts of manoeuvres, persuasions, and promises had to be resorted to to get the camel-men to agree to go on with their camels into a pass and up to lands of which they daily received adverse accounts from the hiflas (caravans) on their way down to the Indus with their yearly produce for sale. Now we all know that a native will stand by the Sikhar (Government) because he believes its word, but here at the outset was a distinct breach of faith. Perished with the cold and no clothing to be had, a certainty that many of their beasts would die, and a great doubt as to compensation ever being paid, and, above all, the men themselves going into a country they knew nothing of beyond the fact that it was peopled by out-throats and robbers," &c.

The state of things exemplified in this painful disclosure can only be appreciated by those to whom the people concerned and their surroundings are in some sort familiar. Tyranny in the abstract is hateful to an Englishman; and resort to compulsion in emergencies such as these, however defensible in a patriotic sense, would be pronounced by many judges, arguing on broad principles, to be nothing less than tyrannical. We are not told of the sequel to this misadventure, though it may be inferred that it was far from satisfactory to the camel-drivers or their hirers. Major Le Mesurier managed to thread the Bolan in safety, and reached Quetta on the 18th of December. On Christmas Day he joined his general's head-quarters at Kala Abdulla, about fifty miles further, a locality well known to our troops more than forty years ago, when Nott was in Kandahar and we were in frequent communication with that city from Upper Sind. Beyond Chaman, which has become quite recently a name of special interest, some portions of the advancing force fell in with parties of Afghan horse, and particulars are given of an encounter in which cavalry, artillery, and eventually infantry were engaged, ending with a loss to the enemy of about one hundred killed and wounded. Singularly enough, on this occasion similarity of dress and equipment caused our men to mistake their fellow soldiers for Afghans; while the latter, in their turn, set down the 15th Hussars and Panjab cavalry for their own men. It is said that, under the strange delusion that foes were friends, "one man of the 15th was out as a scout, and eventually, for a time, did left flanker to a party of the enemy." On the 8th of January the newly arrived troops entered Kandahar by the Shikarpur Gate on the south. Moving through the streets or "covered-in cross roads" to the citadel square, they passed thence out by the Kabul gate to take up a position on ground to the north-east of the city. "The whole place was shut up, no shops open, and there was little to impress one in any way."

It may be inferred that the description of the fortifications, as found in January last, cannot apply to the present state of the Kandahar defences. A six months' occupation by British troops of all arms should have sufficed to prepare a more formidable and substantial barrier to assailants from any quarter. Leaving, therefore, the discouraging sketch of the city and citadel drawn by Major Le Mesurier as of something bygone and obsolete, we turn with satisfaction to his notes on the basar and its inhabitants. His account of a bakery and cookshop is brief but vivid, and the reader will revert with pleasure to these delineations of Afghan life after wading through the hundred and more pages which separate them from the companion pictures of "the blacksmiths and the coppermiths, the post-makers and the shoe-shops." Let us see what is said of the second in order:—

"The coppermiths are just as busy, and rather more noisy; the open shops are crowded with men, some knocking the pots into shape, others engraving, some eating, others idling, while the front of the shop is choked with vessels for sale; and outside, on the ground, one or two men are occupied in cutting out different patterns from copper sheets. Huge open cooking-pots piled one upon the other, salvers of all sizes, portly samovars or tea-urns with curved spouts, brass handle and charcoal-burner complete. Long-necked water bottles with spouts a foot long, washing basins with top-strainers, hookah stands shaped like our Indian water-serais, and tall light-burners, arranged both for candle and oil. These candlesticks are curious, and at first you cannot quite make out what they are intended for; the pedestal stands on a dish and takes to pieces, one part being joined by a screw, which works the wrong way as a matter of course. The stem rises from the centre of the dish and carries a fair-sized bowl; reversed on this bowl rests a large open vase, and the top of the stem is made to carry a candle; but if oil is to be burnt, the stem is prolonged to carry a smaller bowl reversed, from which the open oil-dish springs. Another was on quite the same principle, except that the vase was omitted and the bowls were fashioned like palm-leaves, bending over. The object of the bowls being reversed is to reflect the light. The whole of these utensils, with the exception of the cooking-pots, are engraved in different flower patterns, with texts from the Koran interspersed, and the whole is tinned over."

A minute description of the manufacture of felts will well repay attentive perusal. How difficult it is for an English traveller in Persia to procure the better class products of the country at a reasonable charge is a fact long established, and can be certified by many. But it would appear that the dealers go to greater lengths in Afghanistan, and sometimes decline to sell at any profit. Major Le Mesurier was told that the price of a "very pretty prayer-carpet" was seven rupees; but when he stated his willingness to purchase, he was informed that the figure would be ten rupees. He agreed, and brought out the money; still, however, the carpet was withheld, on the plea that he was not a Mussulman!

The news of the murder of the British envoy at Kabul reached Kandahar on the 5th of September, at which period the troops were preparing for a general start on the 8th of the month; while Major St. John, the Political Officer, was on the point of leaving for Persia. The whole programme was necessarily changed, and orders issued to stand fast; but about four weeks later the writer of the volume under notice was summoned to India to take up a special appointment. At Simla, "7,954 ft. above the sea," he tells us, he closed the entries of his journal. Whether or no there be attraction for everybody in its pages, his readers cannot but acknowledge that the Major of Engineers has observed much, during his nine months' experiences at or in the neighbourhood of Kandahar, which he has done wisely to put in print.

Apprendimento della Morte. Cantica inedita di Giacomo Leopardi, pubblicata dall'Avvocato Zanino Volta. (Milan, Hoepli.)

LEOPARDI'S ardent desire for fame, which made him utter in many different notes the cry,

Ahi mio nome morrà,

would be satisfied, and perchance more than satisfied, could he return to earth. He has obtained fame in every form, desirable and undesirable; nor has he escaped the doubtful kindness shown by over-zealous admirers, and every scrap of his writing that he left unpublished, every memorial of him, however trifling, has found its way into print. We have before us to-day a youthful poem by the great poet, a poem he had himself suppressed as unworthy of publication, and of which only a brief and much revised fragment has been embodied in his collected works (No. xxxix.). It was known among Leopardi students that before he was eighteen the young poet had submitted to Giordani the MS. of a poem on Death, which this true friend advised him not to print because, though it contained many signs of power and even genius, it was yet too verbose, too crude, too obscure. This poem it has long been the desire of Leopardi's admirers to recover, Leopardi's brother Carlo in particular having spoken of it from memory as a work worthy to rank beside the well-known 'Canti.' Signor Volta has been among those who have sought for the MS. most assiduously. After a vain quest of many years, he unearthed it in 1862 at Como, in the lumber room of the house of his illustrious grandfather, Alessandro Volta. From that time to this he has given to the precious autograph the most searching attention, and has endeavoured to trace its history. He proves its genuineness beyond dispute in a preface prefixed to the poem, a preface written with the verbosity of his countrymen, and elaborated with a minuteness and diffuseness pardonable only from the conscientiousness and enthusiasm it reveals. The matter as explained by Signor Volta really lies in a nutshell. The poem was never returned to Leopardi either by Giordani or the publisher Stella, to whom it was shown, and since Leopardi had abandoned all idea of publication, he probably did not demand its return, and attached no value to it. Alessandro Volta may have acquired it with a number of MSS. and books which he bought when Stella's stock was sold by auction after his death, or he may have been one of those friends to whom Giordani showed it, and have forgotten to return it. This matter is of trifling importance, seeing that Signor Volta has firmly established the genuineness of the document. The poem itself consists of five cantos, written in terza rima, and, like the early attempts of most young poets, is of an imitative character, resembling the 'Divina Commedia,' as well as Petrarch's 'Trionfi,' which themselves had been suggested by Dante's poem. It is an allegorical vision in which the poet sees a phantasmagoria of life pass before him, wherein reality, mythology, and religion are strangely commingled. The first canto embodies that portion of which we already possessed the fragment. It differs not only in wording, but in the circumstance that the longer poem is throughout written in the first person, while in the fragment the poet speaks in the third person feminine. In the opening lines the poet, plunged in thought, is looking across a moonlit landscape. The serenity of the night becomes overcast, and with it his thoughts. Doubts are borne in upon him. Terrified at his own reflections, he seeks to escape, when there appears to him his guardian angel and announces to him his approaching death. He endeavours to submit to God's will, yet finds it hard. But the angel comforts him and bids him not regret this sad world, where all is struggle, dolour, and vanity. He will reveal to him, he says, a marvellous vision:—

Perchè gir di qua lunge non t'incressa.

E poi soggiunse: Mira, ed i' mirai.

With these words ends the first canto. The second appears to adumbrate a vengeance against love, whose works and triumphs it vilifies by holding up to view this feeling in its basest or most pernicious manifestations. There pass before the poet's eyes the figures of Appius Claudius; of Lucretia; of Paris, who caused the sack of Ilium; of Turnus, whom it brought to ruin; of Samson, who could not resist Delilah; of Henry VIII. of England, whom love, according to Leopardi, made an apostate and a tyrant; of vestals faithless to their vows; and, above all, of King Solomon, who found

Che sapienza contr' Amor non basta.

To this vision the angel supplies a commentary, reasoning upon love, styling it cruel, and yet difficult to evade. Then follows an amorous episode, which faintly recalls the sublime story of Francesca da Rimini, the melancholy tale of Ugo, his mother-in-law, and his father's jealousy. Then, by a sudden transition, the poet recalls the sufferings of his countrymen and his fatherland, and breaks out into a strain that foreshadows the grander lines of his poem to Italy:—

O Italia mia dolente, o patria lassa

Che quant'alta a' bei giorni tanto cruda
Poeti a' più neri, e tanto ora co' banni,

Ben sei di luce muta e d'onor nuda,

Che tigre fosti quando era tua posa,

E or se' pietosa ch' uom per te non suda!

The third canto is the longest and most poetical as regards language. Allegorical and historical personages pass in review; the poet sees Avarice, War, Tyranny, and Error assuming actual shape. He is also present at a meeting of the great philosophers of old, a scene that recalls the Limbo of Dante and the third portion of Petrarch's 'Trionfo della Fama.' The fourth canto continues the imitation of the 'Divina Commedia.' It is a brief vision of Paradise, into which the angel introduces the poet after passing in review this sort of Hell, for Leopardi paints no intermediate Purgatory. There intervenes between the two only the figure of Oblivion, and the angel points out how this personage trails behind him the melancholy legion of those who hoped to win fame, but who, by reason of this malignant genius, have not attained it. Here is a touch reflected from Leopardi's inmost soul, ceaselessly tormented as a youth with the thought that he should never acquire glory:—

O sventurata gente, e che ti muove
A ricercar quel che da Oblio si fura,
Sì che giace tua fama entro tue fove?

Oh vita trista, oh miseranda cura!
Passa la vita e vien la cura manco,
E l'frutto inanim con lor passa e non dura.

Misera gente, ah non vivesti assai
Per trionfar d'Oblio che tutto doma:
Invan per te vivesti e non vivrai.

Then steals in as comfort the thought of a future life, and he invokes

Colui che tutto move, whereupon the angel reveals to him the beauty of Heaven. Seeing him confounded with awe and delight, his guardian once more announces that he has but a brief space to remain upon earth, and asks if he still fears death. Having thus spoken, he vanishes, and the vision is ended. Not so the poem; the fifth canto, though the briefest, is intended to be the philosophical conclusion of the work. The poet feels an increasing physical languor, together with

Del pensiero l'immense pondo, thus revealing his own marked characteristics of bodily weakness and intellectual strength. He mourns over his brief and sad life, and utters a plaint that years after he condensed into the bitter cry, bitterer and sadder in its very brevity,

Mai non veder la luce

Era, credo, il miglior (Sopra un basso rilievo).

And yet he feels, had longer life been granted him, he could have deserved fame; he feels within his breast a spark of Apollo's sacred fire:—

Ahi mio nome morrà.

* * * * *

Sarò com' an de la volgare schiera,

E morrò come mai non fossi nato,

Nè saprò il mondo che nel mondo io m'era.

O durissima legge, oh crude fato!

Meanwhile Death approaches, and he calls upon God to receive his soul and forgive his sins. The poem ends with these fine lines:—

O Padre, o Redentor, se tuo perdono

Vestirà l'anima, sì ch'io mora e poi

Venga timido spirito anzi a tuo trono,

E se il mondo caglierà co' premi tuoi

Deggio morendo e con tua santa schiera,

Giunga l'aspir di morte, e poi che l'vuol,

Mi copra us samo, e mia memoria pera.

Here, as in his 'Essay on the Popular Errors of the Ancients,' written about the same time, Leopardi ends with an appeal to orthodox faith, showing that he was not yet wholly estranged from traditional belief, though doubt had entered his soul. The poem reflects the troubled state of his thoughts, and shows the painful struggle between faith and scepticism that rent his being in those days. The end, which gives the triumph to faith, has not, however, the full ring of deep conviction; it attests rather the desire to be convinced; it is an effort of traditional precepts to overcome the logic of the intellect. And this fluctuation between two extremes pervades the whole poem and enhances its immaturity. As a psychological revelation of Leopardi's mental state the work is of extreme interest and value; it helps towards the comprehension of this sensitive suffering soul. But we still ask ourselves, Is it kind to the author's memory to have published a poem he had himself suppressed? It has many beauties, it is true; it contains lines that remind us of later productions in which they have been elaborated and embellished; but for all its beauties it is full of youthful crudities, and Giordani's verdict remains just. Leopardi's poetic legacy to the world is slender in bulk, but all is perfect, all is carefully finished; each poem is a gem, exquisitely polished, delicately wrought and chiselled. It may be interesting to the student to look into the workshop of such a mind; the lover of poetry, the true admirer of the poet, should remain content with that which has received the master's finishing touch and has by him been pronounced to be good.

Since, however, Signor Volta has thought fit to publish this poem in lieu of depositing it as a precious relic in some public library, we can but admire his rare zeal, energy, and critical perseverance.

Das Verbum der Griechischen Sprache seinem Baue nach dargestellt. By Georg Curtius. Vol. I., Second Edition, Leipzig, 1877; Vol. II., 1878. Translated by A. S. Wilkins, M.A., and E. B. England, M.A. (Murray.)

THE first glance at this volume is calculated to impress the aspiring student of comparative philology with a profound sense of his individual insignificance and the shortness of life. He notices with dismay that Prof. Curtius, who is for a German very methodical and not conspicuously prolix, devotes 550 pages, large octavo, to a treatise on one corner of one special field in the Aryan department of his science. A moment's reflection and the perusal of just a few pages show him that the subject is really the structure of the Aryan verb with special reference to the Greek dialects, and involves excursions into the corresponding corners of the fields of Sanscrit, Latin, Gothic, and other European languages. Further consolation is yielded by the important fact that the work is made easily available as a book of reference by excellent indexes and a full table of contents. Prof. Curtius may be said, with slight reservation, to have treated his subject exhaustively, notwithstanding his modest consciousness of incompleteness, and upon examination the size of the work proves to be a matter for thankfulness rather than reproach. It is astonishing what a large amount of order Prof. Curtius succeeds in eliciting from the seeming chaos of the Greek verb. The introduction contains a masterly "sketch of the gradual genesis of Greek verbal forms," in which the following account is given of "the germ of the verb":—

"When once a root like da was united to a pronominal stem like ta in such a way that this combination da-ta meant that man gives or he gives, and nothing else, a verbal form had been made, and when presently corresponding forms were made for the other persons too, . . . there existed a set of forms, a little paradigm, with the consciousness of their interconnection as a necessary consequence."

Prof. Curtius's views on the "stratification" of the verbal system of the Aryan languages are already well known from his earlier work, 'Zur Chronologie der indogermanischen Sprachforschung' (second ed., Leipzig, 1873), but his clear restatement of the theory of "agglutination," and his defence of it against the attacks of Westphal and Merguet, will give the coup de grâce to the ingenious fallacies according to which the primitive independence of most of the elements of inflectional speech is denied. The Westphali de grege porci cannot fail to forswear their fanciful tenets unless they be beyond the influence of rational argument. Prof. Curtius makes a few good-humoured hits at what we may call the priggishness of sundry junior philologists to whom the opinions of veterans are foolishness, but he is never needlessly controversial, and expresses dissent in the quietest and most cautious manner, being clearly more ready to dwell on points of agreement than on differences.

In regard to details we generally find ourselves able to admit Prof. Curtius's conclusions, and when we cannot do so we must still be grateful for the abundant materials which he has collected for the elucidation of the multitudinous questions which arise. Thus in attacking Schleicher's assumption that the third singular indicative active termination -ei is from -esi, from -eti, from -iti (while Curtius proposes -ei from -ei, from -eti, from -iti by epenthesis), he asks (p. 142), "How are we to think that the same stems which produced φα-τε, ἰσταν, and the like were faithless to their τ here?" The Doric retention of τ where Ionic altered it to a stable σ does not prove that both Doric and Ionic did not at an earlier stage change the τ of other forms to a σ, which at a later period got lost. The Æolic forms τιθῶ, ἰσταν, δίδω, even if they preserved the consonant of the personal termination as τ until it disappeared, prove no more than the Doric forms in -σι. By the way, "since the consonant σ is not in the habit of disappearing" is too loose a rendering for "Das schliessendes σ dem Abfall weniger oft unterliegt," and Curtius goes on to say these forms are gewiss (surely, probably, not "undoubtedly") to be referred to τιθῆν*, ἰσταν*, δίδω*. The Argive σοί for σοῖ and the Lesbian γίλας are very properly noticed, but they do not materially help the argument. We think the apparent loss of τ in the inflection of κίπας, κρίας, &c., should be taken into account. We would ask whether Greek offers a single safe instance of epenthesis over any momentary (explosive) consonant. Nearly all the cases proposed by Curtius in his 'Grundzüge der griechischen Etymologie,' § 608, can be easily disposed of. As to the best examples, e.g. γυναικ-, ἱερίφνης, αἰφνίδιος, κρείσσω, μειζω, by-forms without the σ are found, which fact suggests that at any rate the process was a comparatively late one. The -ει of the second person early follows on the analogy -εις : -ει : -σι : -ει. We have not space to discuss the hard sayings as to the σθ of personal terminations, including the alleged transformation of τα-τα-τες into σθ and

Sct. dhre; we may, however, call attention to the -sta- of iste, the demonstrative of the second person, as possibly akin to -σθα, and -σθ of vidisti, vidistis. We quite agree that the problems offered by the personal terminations of the middle, dual, and plural are not yet finally solved, and we suspect that the dual and plural terminations involving θ may be found to be a reflexive pronoun identical with the -θα of the infinitive middle. The second aorist passive stems are not satisfactorily explained. They are said (p. 496) to be nothing but stems expanded by the addition of a and inflected in the Æolian fashion (Curtius has given up the root ja theory which he used to hold), i.e., like primitive forms in -μυ. This theory involves the assumption that "at a time when the process of creating these σ-stems was at its height, the Æolic method of inflexion, characterized by the long ε, prevailed in Greece." Now the scarcity of these forms in Homer argues that the time of their formation was comparatively recent, so that it would be strange if no independent traces of such a prevalent method of inflexion could be found in Ionic dialects. Indeed, we should not expect to find any uncontracted forms at all any more than we do in Latin. On p. 247 we find "there is no way of getting from φιλέωμεν to the Æol. φίλημεν, or from φιλάμενος to φίλημενος." Perfectly true, and fatal to the hypothesis of the early prevalence of φίλημεν. May not this passive aorist have been formed by altering the active terminations on the analogy of those of the so-called first aorist? Prof. Curtius never leaves a stone unturned to avoid the assumption of an analogical formation—a caution which ceases to be wise when it leads to overboldness in other directions. Another trait to which we venture to take exception is the tendency to lavish multiplication of primitive forms in preference to assuming phonetic changes, e.g., proposing an original stem γγων- as well as the admirably established γγων-, and taking the ι of vidimus to be original. A third failing is too implicit a faith in the genuine character of epic forms, involving a too uncompromising disbelief in the modifying influence of metrical exigences. Prof. Curtius assumes, for instance, that none of the Homeric conjunctives with short stem vowels was based on false analogy, fortifying himself in his position by taking sundry futures to be conjunctive aorists (p. 446). In so extensive a work we are not surprised to find a few inconsistencies, e.g., γλίχεται, εἰχεται inserted (p. 143), though ἔρχεται and others are omitted because their χ has apparently arisen from the σκ of the inchoative class (cf. p. 198).

What is said (p. 146) on the weakening of the root vowel of presents like φίρω, λίγω, πέτωμαι, stands in need of some reconciliation with the qualified admission (p. 550) to the doctrine that the Greek alpha is not everywhere the same sound, seeing that the "weak" alpha of the root is found in connexion with this ε. The double character of the Greek short alpha and the analogy αρ (αλ, πα, λα) : ερ (ελ, πε, λε) : Sct. ρ : Sct. αρ, were pointed out, about eight years ago, in a paper read before the Cambridge Philological Society—a fact of which Prof. Curtius does not seem to have been aware. We are disposed to demur to the view that the thematic a belongs especially to the present stem (p. 10), and we do not regard it as certain that it is a suffix. The true way of describing primitive Indo-Germanic roots is to say that they were monosyllabic and dissyllabic, the second syllable always terminating with the vowel.

The signs of ἀέψω is in one place (p. 144) classed as a root extension, in another (p. 445) regarded as a primarium of the compound sigmatic aorist. Clemm's theory of primaria for past tenses, i.e., that there was originally a present indicative corresponding to each tense, is ingenious and interesting, but open to grave objections. The notion that conjunctive and optative forms cannot come from, or spring up simultaneously with, past tenses arises from a misconception of the original function of those moods, and from ignoring the strong probability that, when those moods were first developed, the essential use of the aorist was to denote momentary action, no more necessity being as yet felt that the verb should distinguish past tense from present than is now felt as to near past being formally distinguished from remote past. Ἐ-λαβόν, then, is the direct descendant of a primarium "labhāmi" with a prefixed movable augment.

It is scarcely going too far to say that such a momentary present as I snore is a mere grammatical figment, as the statement cannot be made at the time of the action. And so in many cases. We may say generally that labhāmi, for instance, was past or future, not present, and that in the indicative it got gradually relegated to the past by the use of another form to express the future, while the specific sign of past time, the augment, became adherent. The participle followed the fortunes of the indicative, while the other moods remained truly aorist as to time. A few omissions and errors are to be found, e.g., the omission of the pres. οἶσιν, Pyth. iv. 102, from the section on οἶν, &c. (p. 461). On p. 351 the penultimate syllable of middle infinitives in -οῦν is explained as the nominal suffix -as without any mention of Max Müller, who proposed this solution in his fourth volume of 'Chips.' On p. 224 βρίψω, ἀποβρίψω are said to have guttural stems; on p. 454 this view is given up in the heat of argument. On p. 239, in disputing the connexion of δωρόψω with the stem δωρεσ-, it is said, "There is not a single one of the innumerable r-suffixes which has a derived verb in -ω corresponding to it." An opponent might surely cite χαίρ-, χαρίζομαι; ἐννύπν-, ἐννύπνω; κρίτ-, κρίνω. Prof. Curtius is very eager to defend forms of verbs in -ω from the imputation of being constructed on analogy, but his adversaries seem to have the best of the argument as to aorist forms in -α, and we do not think that it is absolutely safe to account for all epic forms in -οῦν, -οῖν, -οῖν by construction, without considering such a form as νεμέσσομαι. We much question the idea that the Thucydidean Argive form ἐσσεύεσθαι, epic ἐσσεύεσθαι, Latin esse, &c., contains the sibilant of the root as twice. On p. 513 ἡγάθη is said to be related to ἀγαθός, as δαδάλαος to δαίδαλος; but ἡγάθη is proved by its usage to be for ἀγαθός. Lastly, κίρπαχθε is regarded as an aorist on p. 290, as a perfect with present force on p. 376. Considering the nature and extent of the subject there is remarkably little to find actual fault with. It is gratifying to find that Curtius has changed his views for the better on several subsidiary points. For instance, he now admits that such forms as θεῖω contain the suffix ω, and has advanced some way towards the settlement of the terminations of the infinitive. His doctrine of the perfect is certainly "stated here in a manner which in many respects is new." When so keen a critic of the theories advanced by others shows himself able and ready to bring his own published views under the microscope, he merits a very high degree of confidence, and does much to ensure the permanent establishment of the fundamental principles on which his science is based. To do justice to such a work or even to one's own appreciation of the handling of a single point is impossible within the limits of a review. Fortunately students of comparative philology will need no recommendation from us to induce them to study so important a work by the highest authority on Greek etymology and morphology.

We wish rather to draw the attention of ordinary students in "pure" classics, even of such as affect to despise scientific etymology, to Prof. Curtius's full, well-classified collections of verbal forms, including many rare and newly discovered dialectal specimens, which make this work of his a most valuable supplement to grammar and lexicon. For instance, he recognizes έόλε (Pind., Pyth. iv. 233) as a pluperfect form. He throws welcome light on the Dor. subj. ἐπαρε, on the forms ἐτίγνυλος, δωρεῖμυλος, ἐκφρε, and countless others. To this monument of erudition, industry, and judgment Prof. Curtius's own closing words apply with conspicuous propriety: "Wherever the realm of caprice and chance in language is limited, we have to regard this as a gain."

The translators deserve a word of praise for their creditable performance of a laborious task.

Round About a Great Estate. By Richard Jefferies. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

MR. JEFFERIES'S new book is of a piece with his old ones. It may be regarded as an appendix to 'Wild Life' and the 'Game-keeper,' as an additional chapter in 'Greene Ferne Farm' or the 'Poacher'—as one of a series of documents, that is to say, illustrative of the open-air history of pastoral and rural England, and of the sociology of her Flora, wild and tame, and her Fauna, human and animal. Its title is fairly descriptive. Mr. Jefferies introduces his readers briefly to Okebourne Chase, and the introduction is pretext enough for going on to tell what he knows of the tenants and hamlet folk abiding in its shadow, and what he saw in his walks among its meadows and copests. His English is the picturesque and homely tongue we know; his style is the plain, useful style of the books that won him his reputation; as before, his talk is all of birds and beasts, of hedgerows and brook-sides, of yokels and keepers and farmers, of alehouse and dairy and barnyard. And though his matter has not now the novelty it had for his admirers a year or two ago, their interest in what he has to say is well-nigh as fresh and keen as ever. He has elected to report the proceedings of Nature; and as Nature's proceedings are interminable and infinitely varied, his reports are always worth reading.

The people of Okebourne village—where the cobbler has been known to sole and heel his customers with hard, high-dried, Adamantine bacon—are tolerably unsophisticated still. Steam has ruined the miller and the millwright; turnips have spoiled the look of the land; foreign wheat has brought down the pride of the British farmer; and the schoolmaster and the agitator have roused the bumpkin considerably. But in Okebourne the old order has not yet given place to the new. Here the ploughboys kill their warts with juice ofcelandine, sharpen their knives on crabs, make apple-banks in hayricks, call the arum berries "snakes' victuals," cover their eyes from the moon with their counterpanes, and hear distinctly in the yellowhammer's song the mournful plaint, "A little bit of bread and no cheese." At the Sun the labourers play "chuckboard," call for "tangle-legs," and toast cheese at the candle. When in drink they pick out a nice heap of hints to lie upon; there they can sleep their fill, nor dread rheumatics, the fall diseases against whose approaches they are wont to fence themselves with the charm occult in canker-roses plucked and carried in the pocket. They use bushes for clocks, make wine of poppies, and dye their ribbons with furze blossoms. Their talk is still of "crazy Betties" and "moon daisies," of "latter-math" and "turvin"; they are as adept as ever at learning new words, and can get no nearer to "reservoir" than "tensieroy," no nearer than "meojick" to "menagerie"; they "uck" they "ted," they "caddle"; they are "contrary as the wind," and you may hear among them of motion "like shot from a showl," and lumpishness so near ideal perfection that its incarnation is only to be described as "gurt hummocking noon-naw." They see good luck in a single magpie, and ill luck in a pair. In the farm-houses you taste black-currant gin, home made, and drink strong ale out of brown jugs adorned with sportmen in relief—with sportmen complete down to the buttons on their coats, the birds to be brought down, the dogs and guns that are to perfect the act! To hear Mr. Jefferies talking of this delightful pottery is to catch conflicting echoes from the land of song—echoes of Keats and his "still unravished bride of quietness," and of the immortal author of "Dear Tom, this brown jug."

"To me," says Mr. Jefferies, with feeling, "these old jugs and mugs and bowls have a deep and human interest, for you can seem to see and know the men who drank from them in the olden days. Now a tall Worcester vase, with all its elegance and gilding, though it may be valued at 5,000*l.*, lacks that sympathy, and may please the eye, but does not touch the heart. For it has never shared in the jovial feast nor comforted the weary; the soul of man has never communicated to it some of its own subtle essence. But this hollow howl whispers back the genial songs that were shouted over it a hundred years ago. On the ancient Grecian pottery, too, the hunter with his spear chases the boar or urges his hounds after the flying deer; the woman is dancing, and you can almost hear the notes of the flute. These things were part of their daily life; these are no imaginary pictures of imaginary and impossible scenes: they are simply scenes in which every one then took part. So I think that the old English jugs and mugs and bowls are true art, with something of the antique classical spirit in them, for truly you can read the hearts of the folk for whom they were made. They have rendered the interpretation easy by writing their minds upon them. The motto, 'Prosperity to the Flock,' for instance, is a good one still; and 'Drunk fair; don't swear,' is yet a very pleasant and suitable admonition."

Much of Mr. Jefferies's information, it appears, came to him from Hilary Luckett, called "Old Hilary," the lord of the manor's pet tenant. Old Hilary is worth knowing. He is an incarnate Farmers' Guide, a very mine of saws, a walking pariah register; he has eighty or ninety years of 'Old Moore' in his oaken cabinet, and can "tell you the very day cow 'Beauty' calved twenty years ago." Once he could lift a sack of wheat in his teeth, and write his name on the brewhouse ceiling with a fifty-six pound weight along to his little finger. He remembers "Old Jonathan" of the Idovers, a venerable churl who always went to market in top boots, and had his hair, which were "so hard and stout that he could sit on them," made specially for him. Old Jonathan could recall the time when wheat was selling at 11s. a quarter, and the farmers, in pure joy of heart, would shutter themselves in and drink strong beer and gin for days and days on end. Of Hilary himself we are told that he has the right to shoot over Okebourne Chase, but

"with all that great estate to sport over, he cannot at times refrain from stepping across the boundary. His landlord once, it is whispered, was out with Hilary shooting, and they became so absent-minded while discussing some interesting subject as to wander several fields beyond the property before they discovered their mistake."

This humour notwithstanding, Hilary hates poachers, and is more hated of them than the gamekeeper himself. It is an axiom of his that "God made nothing tidy." Whether, in addition to his other talents, he has the woodman's craft as well, is not told of him. Mr. Jefferies himself is an ardent axeman; he confesses the taste with an enthusiasm which to the landscape painters who read his book will seem vicious even to devilishness:—

"Much as I admired the timber about the Chase, I could not help sometimes wishing to have a chop at it. The pleasure of felling trees is never lost. In youth, in manhood—so long as the arm can wield the axe—the enjoyment is equally keen. As the heavy tool passes over the shoulder the impetus of the swinging motion lightens the weight, and something like a thrill passes through the sinews. Why is it so pleasant to strike!.....Then, as the sharp edge of the axe cuts deep through the bark into the wood, there is a second moment of gratification. The next blow sends a chip spinning aside; and by-the-bye never stand at the side of a woodman, for a chip may score your cheek like a slash with a knife. But the shortness of man's days will not allow him to cut down many trees. In imagination I sometimes seem to hear the sounds of the axes that have been ringing in the forests of America for a hundred years, and envy the joy of the lumbermen as the tall pines toppled to the fall."

With this extract we must take our leave of Mr. Jefferies and this pleasant book. We should have liked to tell, after Mr. Jefferies, of the pack of stoats he met, and of old Aaron's bevy of fourteen weasels, of the wasps that carry away oaken fences to build their nests with, of Locketta's Place, and Uncle Bennett, and the water-mill—the last especially. But our space is exhausted, and our readers must seek out these things for themselves.

The Sacred Books of the East. Vol. I.—The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Müller. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

About three years since Prof. Max Müller announced his intention to provide for the use of students literal translations of the principal Sacred Books of the East. We have now before us the first volume of the series, of which some others have also been published, translated by himself. From some remarks in the preface we gather that several unforeseen difficulties have occurred in the execution of his plan, but it is pleasant to find that they are not of so grave a character as to interfere with its completion. Indeed, such difficulties will always arise in undertakings of this sort. No one can foresee, when he sets about translating a new text, what difficulties he will have to encounter; misprints, lacunae, crabbed passages, occur in the most favoured of Oriental books, and where there is no possibility of comparing texts, these have to be carefully considered and adjusted as well as may be. And then, again, there are the accidents common to human life, of which the editor speaks; death, sickness, family afflictions, all these may occur and put an end to the work in hand, or, at any rate, put a stop to it. It is, therefore, agreeable to find that, notwithstanding some few failures, the editor is sanguine in the hope of carrying out his purpose, and that "the limit of time which had been originally assigned to the publication of twenty-four volumes" will not be much exceeded.

Prof. Müller begins his preface with three cautions—first, lest we should suppose these sacred texts to be in themselves profoundly wise and full of sound moral teaching. We do not know exactly to what books he refers when he says that "such a belief has been raised" by their publication, but undoubtedly many persons do expect to find simplicity and plain teaching in these ancient works. Perhaps this hope is due partly to the simplicity of the Christian Scriptures, and partly to the opinion that the infant races of mankind, being free from the subtleties of "religious systems," would speak right out from the heart what the heart felt. This is a natural opinion, but a delusive one. For, in truth, the very first religious utterance of the human race of which we know anything, the cry after God, has ever been involved in mystery, and the examination of it occupies considerable space in the Upanishads first translated in the present volume. We refer to the adgittha, the mystic syllable "Om." If this first religious utterance is so obscure we cannot expect the rest to be simple. The editor reminds his readers, however, that these Scriptures are not in themselves embodiments of religious thought first written down and then perpetuated without interpolations, but that they are of a mixed character, containing real treasures of thought commingled with passages and whole chapters that have come down to us without any meaning or any life at all; much as if the Talmud had become mixed up with the New Testament Scriptures. It cannot, therefore, be deemed surprising that obscure or even unintelligible passages are scattered through the books now brought to notice, nor must such a circumstance shake our belief in the antiquity of the books themselves.

The second caution is lest we should examine these translations with haste, and suppose we can find out their meaning without study. This, of course, holds good in all cases, but the danger is especially to be feared in the case of religious books. There is nothing so tempting to a dogmatic person as this indulgence of a hasty judgment. What others fear to think persons of this class are sure of. Hence the mistakes which, having first of all arisen from careless or hasty study, have been perpetuated, and are now so widespread as to defy contradiction. As the editor says, it is a common belief amongst us that none but Brahmins are allowed to read the Vedas, that the Parsees are fire-worshippers, and, we may add, that Buddhists are Nihilists, all which opinions are simply erroneous, and are due to our imperfect examination of documents (very often faulty ones) bearing on these questions, but chiefly to that inherent fault of our nature, an unbridled caprice of judgment in matters called religious.

Another and a third caution is this. "Let it not be supposed," the editor says, "that a text three thousand years old, or even if of a more modern date still widely distant from our own sphere of thought, can be translated in the same manner as a book written a few years ago in French or German." It requires the utmost care, first of all on the translator's part, to detect the meaning of many expressions used in these old books, and then to put it in a modern dress; whilst, on his part, the reader also must consider and ponder well the translator's words and study his language. For instance, the word divan constantly occurs in Vedic literature, and the dictionaries are profuse in their explanations of it, but yet neither our word "mind," nor "soul," nor "spirit" is adequate to express the idea which lies under the original word, and so the editor tells us that in his own translations he has adopted the only intelligible method of conveying to us the sense of the original, by using "self" and "Self"—that is, "our own self" and the "supreme Self"—as a translation of the word in question. Indeed, nothing can be more correct than the statement made elsewhere by the editor of the present volume: "Words without definite meaning are at the bottom of nearly all our religious and philosophical controversies."

Prof. Max Müller, in selecting the Upanishads as his share in the promised translations, tells us that he has but returned to his first love in the way of Sanscrit literature: "My real love for Sanscrit literature was first kindled by the Upanishads"; and this so long ago as 1844. "Having put aside the Upanishads, convinced that for a true appreciation of them it was necessary to study first of all the earlier periods of Vedic literature, as represented by the hymns and Brāhmanas of the Vedas," the editor, after more than thirty years' earnest work, returns now to these same Upanishads as to the fountainhead of all "Hindu theology," and places before us his translation of them. We have, therefore, every assurance that this part of his work will be as perfect as it can be.

The first version of these treatises made into any European language was by the famous traveller Anquetil Duperron, from the Persian; he seems to have made both a French and a Latin translation, the latter alone having been published (A.D. 1801-1802). It was written in a style utterly unintelligible except to the most lynx-eyed of philosophers. Amongst these the celebrated Schopenhauer distinguished himself by his open avowal: "In the whole world there is no study, except that of the originals, so beneficial and so elevating as that of the 'Oupnekhat.' It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death." It is difficult to understand how the translation of Duperron could provide this double solace. The opening words of his translation are these: "Oum hoc verbum (esse) adkit ut sciveris, sic rō maschghouli fac (de eo meditare) quod ipsum hoc verbum adkit est; propter illud quod hoc (verbum) oum, in Sam Bed, cum voce altā, cum harmoniā pronuntiatur fiat." This abstruse sentence does not appear to promise well for the whole treatise; yet doubtless Schopenhauer studied and mastered the subject to his own satisfaction, and found solace in the study. He placed the pantheism taught in these "products of the highest wisdom" above the pantheism of Bruno and even of Spinoza; this alone, as the editor remarks, "may secure a more considerate reception for these relics of ancient wisdom" than anything else that could be said in their favour. Our attention, however, is more likely to be drawn to the importance of the Upanishads as religious treatises by the opinion of the enlightened Rammohun Roy, who laid his finger on these as containing "the true kernel of the whole Veda." He tells us that "the adoration of the invisible Supreme Being is exclusively prescribed by the Upanishads or the principal parts of the Vedas, and also by the Vedant," and this adoration he regarded as a proper foundation for a new religious life in India. This new life was illustrated in himself, for "he would tolerate nothing idolatrous, not even in his mother, poor woman, who, after joining his most bitter opponents, confessed to her son, before she set out on her last pilgrimage to Juggernaut, where she died, that 'he was right, but that she was a weak woman, and grown too old to give up the observances which were a comfort to her,'" and therefore we can understand why his influence, indicated by the existing widespread theistic movement in India, has been so marked and lasting; it springs from his bold assertion of this eternal principle, "that God alone is worthy of our worship," and he seems to have found the seeds of this eternal truth in the Upanishads. He translated them into Bengali, Hindi, and English.

The first germs of Upanishad doctrine go back at least as far as the Mantra period, generally fixed between 1000 and 800 B.C., whilst those that occupy a place in the Samhitās, Brāhmanas, and Aranyakas must be older than the rise of Buddhism. As for the rest, they are some of them quite modern. Their number is very large; fifty were translated into Persian by Dārī Shukoh; Weber thinks their number may be placed at 235; the editor himself makes the number 170, although he purposes "to add a more complete list in a later volume." With respect to the meaning of the word "upanishad," the editor concludes "that besides being the recognized title of certain philosophical treatises, it occurs also in the sense of doctrine and of secret doctrine, and that it seems to have assumed this meaning from having been used originally in the sense of 'session' (upa-sad) or assembly, in which one or more pupils receive instruction from a teacher." "To sit at the feet" of a teacher is a recognized expression in most languages.

The editor before entering on his own work (he gives us translations of five Upanishads) alludes to the labours of others in the same field. These references are welcome to the student, for they enable him to enter on an intelligent investigation of the subject. We observe amongst other works cited that of Weber, 'Die Vagrasūci des Asvaghosha.' This is the well-known essay against "caste" composed by Asvaghosha, and answered by Śubagee Bapoo, pandit, in 1839. Why should this work be included amongst the Upanishads? We can hardly doubt, notwithstanding Burnouf's dissent, that the author named was the celebrated Buddhist patriarch Asvaghosha, and if this is so the 'Vagrasūci' is a Buddhist work and not a Upanishad. Our reason for this opinion is first drawn from the title 'Vagrasūci,' which is eminently Buddhistic. The Vagrasūci was Buddha's "imperishable throne," the sūci were the needles (pillars) surrounding the throne, as General Cunningham has fully shown in his 'Report on the Stūpas of Bharhut' (Simla, 1877, p. 14); the 'Vagrasūci,' therefore, represents the environments of Buddha's doctrine, figured under the emblem of one of the pillars surrounding his throne or stūpa; and as the abolition of caste was the keystone of his doctrine, a treatise composed with this purpose in view might well be styled, as this is, "a pillar or needle of diamond." Then the refutation of it by Śubagee Bapoo, called 'Tanka' or "hammer," is just the title we might expect for a work intended to destroy a "stone pillar." Moreover, the character of this work is entirely in agreement with what we know of Asvaghosha, the Buddhist patriarch, and his other writings, and it may, therefore, in the absence of any disproof, be justly referred to him. The Upanishad written by Sankarācharya, bearing the same title ('Vagrasūci'), as noted by Weber, can hardly be the one he has translated.

The 'Kāndogya-Upanishad,' which is the first translated by the editor, is occupied by a consideration of the meaning of the syllable "Om," on which a man is bidden to meditate. There is much that is inexplicable in this mystical symbol, but it would seem, after all, that the secret of the word "Om" is that it is an equivalent of one's apprehension of the "upper world." It used to be written with the long s and from the chandra-vinda above it, as is plain from the inscription at Keu-yung Kwan (J.B.A.S., vol. v. pt. i.). Now if the chandra-vinda represents the crescent of the moon and the star above it, as would appear from its name, we have probably in the expression "Om" a symbol for the sun, moon, and stars, or "the upper world." It would seem, therefore, that this mysterious utterance was intended to be expressive of homage paid to the Supreme under the resemblance of the upper world. This is again exhibited in the Buddhist symbol of a circle surmounted by the same crescent and star, which was afterwards called mani-padma when the lotus was substituted for the sun. So that we may even now venture to penetrate into the "arcana" of this remote period, and suppose that the Upanishad in question is simply an exegesis of this idea, "Reverence to the Supreme."

The other Upanishads translated by the editor are the 'Talavakāra-Upanishad,' otherwise known as the 'Kena-Upanishad' (from its first word), the 'Aitareya-Aranyaka,' the 'Kaushitaki-Upanishad,' and the 'Vāgasaneyi-Saṁhitā-Upanishad.' We do not intend to enter on a consideration of these treatises; the translations are to be studied; and as we are satisfied respecting their complete faithfulness, they offer to students of comparative religions a rare opportunity for making an exact inquiry into the genius of the early philosophical or religious systems of India which have made its literature ever valuable.

A Short History of the late Mr. Peter Anthony Motteux. By Henri Van Laun. (Privately printed.)

MR. VAN LAUN, the industrious compiler of this short history, informs his readers that it is "reprinted by the permission of Messrs. J. C. Nimmo & Bain, for whom it was written as an introduction to their new edition of Motteux's translation of 'Don Quixote,' illustrated by sixteen beautiful etchings, made purposely for this work by the celebrated Spanish artist R. de los Rios." The subject is full of interest on account of its peculiar character, but more especially because it is connected with the name of another edition of the "Ingenious Hidalgo," to be illustrated by a Spanish artist whose name is well and favourably known among painters and lovers of art.

The singular gentleman whose name is at the top of this article was born at Rouen, February 18th, 1660, and, at the age of twenty-five, came to England "on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes"; lived at first with a relative, one Paul Dominique, a merchant of considerable standing in Leadenhall; mastered the English tongue so well as to be able to write in it comedies, operas, epilogues, prologues, poems, and works of even a graver kind; was also a merchant, tea-dealer, clerk in the Post Office—like other men of letters of a later time; was editor and proprietor of a monthly magazine, possibly a bookseller, certainly a publisher, and some say an auctioneer, but this is doubtful—a man who was, like Mr. Barnum, for ever advertising himself; was also, like the great American showman, a teetotaler, but unlike him made no pretence to a life of piety. In some of the poems of the day—1703—Motteux is alluded to as "famed Motteux" and even the "divine Motteux," just as D'Urfey was called by the same writers "tuneful Dufrey"; and if this be a proof of excellence Peter Motteux may be said to have achieved it, at least in the estimation of the wits of his own circle and the public who were pleased with their wares. It would seem that Motteux could touch nothing—and he touched much—without doing it damage. He was a prolific and rapid writer, and there is little doubt that he did more harm in his day than falls to the ordinary lot of men. During the first ten years of his life in London he wrote many plays, squibs, poems, prologues, and prefaces, and in 1694 published his edition of Sir Thomas Urquhart's Rabelais, writing a preface and adding some verses in praise of the Pantagruelian philosophy by Nahum Tate, Pittis, Oldys, Drake, and himself, which are not now fit to print. The damage Motteux did by that evil work was sufficiently great, nor has it as yet been repaired. The work cannot at present be reproduced except with risk to the bookseller who might dare to offer it for sale. In 1701 he published the translation of the 'Don Quixote,' and it is owing to these two works that the name of Peter Motteux is known at this day.

It will be well to let M. Motteux speak for himself, for he will not fail to give an example of his powers that shall also reveal to us the quality of his mind. He writes in the Spectator, January 30th, 1711, No. 288, as follows:—

"Since so many dealers turn authors, and write quaint advertisements in praise of their wares, one, who from an author turned dealer, may be allowed, for the advancement of trade, to turn author again. I will not, however, set up, like some of them, for selling cheaper than the most able honest tradesman can; nor do I send thus to be better known for choice and cheapness of China and Japan wares, tea, fans, muslins, pictures, arrack, and other Indian goods. Placed as I am in Leadenhall Street, near the India Company, and the centre of that trade, thanks to my fair customers, my warehouse is graced as well as the benefit days of my plays and operas, and the foreign goods I sell are no less acceptable than the foreign books I translated—'Rabelais' and 'Don Quixote.' This the critics allow me, and while they like my wares they may dispraise my writing."

This is the true spirit of that trade which Motteux adorned: let the book sell, its quality is matter of little moment; better be a rich seller of wares which excite the scorn of critics than a poor author whom the critics can praise. And this may be said to be the great offence of Motteux: he made believe to sell Rabelais while he sold an abominable mixture compounded chiefly of himself and of another of like stuff; to offer for sale at a fair price a production which he called 'Don Quixote,' and which is no more 'Don Quixote' than sloe leaves are tea, although they can be made to look like tea by one versed in the mysteries of the trade. It was regarded by melancholy moralists of Motteux's time as a greater crime to steal dead men's labour than their clothes; perhaps it is a sign of progress on our part to regard the man who defiles the labour of another as worse than he who steals it; and it was the singular infamy of Motteux to have been an adept in both crimes. It is this which calls him into notice at the present time, making good the saying that "the evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones." It is of no importance to any one that Mr. Peter Motteux published the Gentleman's Journal, parodied Boileau, wrote a number of plays and some acceptable verses in praise of William III.; it does not even concern us to know that Dryden wrote of him as being

So great a poet and so good a friend.

But we are very much concerned in this man's translation of the 'Don Quixote' being revived and brought out under the recommendation of such names as those of Lord Woodhouselee, Prescott, and Ticknor. Mr. Van Laun thinks that the praise of these favourite authors is sufficient guarantee for the quality of the work, and adds:—

"Unless proofs to the contrary be brought forward, we must ascribe chiefly to M. Motteux the merit of having written the easy, idiomatic, and spirited translation of a work which is perhaps more difficult than any other to render in a foreign tongue."

Mr. Van Laun proceeds:—

"J. Ozell, a great friend of Motteux's, and who was considered to be well acquainted with the language and literature of Spain, brought out in 1719, one year after Motteux's death, a revised edition of this translation, but only states in the preface that he has compared it with the original Madrid edition, printed from the author's own manuscript, whereby many misrepresentations have been rectified, and not a few omissions supplied."

We feel sure that Mr. Van Laun is quite unconscious of the error into which he has here fallen, and that it is an error that he will correct at the earliest opportunity. It is true that about Ozell's time a society was formed with the object of searching for the original MS. of Cervantes, and learned men went from France to conduct the quest. They spent pains and time and money in their pursuit, but they never found the hidden treasure, nor has it been discovered to this day. But Mr. Van Laun has evidently misunderstood Ozell's words. Ozell is speaking, not of the MS. of 'Don Quixote,' but of the manuscript of the 'Life of Cervantes,' written by Don Gregorio Mayans y Siscar, which Ozell translated and Toneson published.

That to which Motteux's translation has been most indebted is not the praise of Prescott or Ticknor or Lord Woodhouselee, but its republication by Lockhart in 1823, which, as we have before remarked, remains one of the grossest of literary impostures that the booksellers of this century have committed. Lockhart's name in that day was a tower of strength to the trade; his work was looked upon at the time as a triumph of learning, literary skill, and taste; and Motteux's translation became the standard English 'Don Quixote,' without which "no gentleman's library could be complete." It is a great disgrace to Lockhart that he revived the imposture of Motteux, and published as his own two or three hundred "notes" taken from various Spanish authors, and which he himself did not translate. The two or three notes which Lockhart did write are full of unpardonable errors, which no one acquainted with the language of Cervantes could possibly have made. The 'Spanish Ballads,' unquestionably the work of Lockhart, greatly added to the success of this edition. They are full of spirit, are justly admired, and held in esteem by all who are unacquainted with the originals. But they are not Spanish ballads; they are simply metrical versions of certain traditions which abound in the various cancioneros published between 1500 and 1605. It is no pleasure to say these things, but they must be said in the interest of literature and those who find much profit in its pursuit. We cannot guard against adulterated wines, sanded sugars, and alkis weighted with soluble alkalis, but we can guard against spurious books, which are now conscious, and now unconscious, impostures of diverse kinds of men. But for Lockhart, Motteux's 'Don Quixote' would never have received any attention from the publishing trade: it is not only gross in spirit, it is ludicrously incomplete, more than a dozen pieces of important prefatory matter in the form of imitation sonnets, full of Cervantine humour, being omitted. "Of all the translations of 'Don Quixote,'" exclaims Richard Ford, in his too brief essay on the "Ingenioso Hidalgo," "that of Motteux is the worst." This can be explained in a few brief words. Cervantes divided the treasure of his mind between the two great creations of his brain, Don Quixote and Sancho Panza: upon the knight he lavished his own courage, his vast reading, his purity of heart, and his passionate love of truth and freedom; upon the squire he bestowed his singular and most excellent humour, which till then had no existence, and which can no more be imitated than the rarest scent can be described. Motteux had no courage, little or no learning, no love of truth or honour—probably he cared little for purity of heart—little common sense, and therefore no fine humour; and what Motteux was himself such is the translation that goes by his name. But Peter Motteux did not make that translation; it was filched chiefly from Shelton and Philips, aided by Ozell, who wrote for Motteux; in brief, in the words of the title-page, it was "done by several hands." These are some of the hands that did it, the proof of which is very easy to give, and when it is called for shall be forthcoming. What remains to be told of Motteux is very brief. One night, February 18th, 1718,

"a gentleman in a scarlet cloak with a sword, in company with another person, was carried to White's Chocolate House, St. James's, and here the coach waited from between 9 o'clock to near 11, and then carried him and the other person and let them down at Star Court, in the Butcher Row, behind St. Clement Dane's Church, and the gentleman being found dead there the next morning, it was violently suspected that he was murdered."

This is the statement of Mrs. Motteux, of the Two Fans. The journals of the day tell us that "five persons were tried for the murder of M. Motteux. It appeared that M. Motteux on his way to White's picked up Mary Roberts, and carried her thither, and staid two hours, leaving her in the coach, and she sending for him he went in the same coach with her to Star Court, where it appeared he went in, and was seen to kiss the said Roberts in the kitchen, and then was lighted with her up the stairs, the others being present. At one of the clock a surgeon was sent for, who was told that a gentleman was.....dead in a fit, &c. The jury brought them in 'Not guilty.'"

Such was the end of Peter Motteux—China man, poet, dramatist, and publisher—who had the singular audacity to disfigure the works of two of the world's greatest writers, and the fortune to become famous by his infamous deed; who died a shameful death in a shameful house, and was buried in a church at the corner of Cornhill and St. Mary Axe, called St. Andrew Undershaft. For further unimportant particulars see the Weekly Journal, April 26th, May 13th, 1718; Saturday's Post, March 8th, 1719; the Original Weekly Journal, April 26th, 1718; the Gentleman's Magazine, 1741-1753; the Biographia Dramatica, Chalmers's Biographical Dictionary, Cibber's Lives, &c., to all of which Mr. Van Loan is indebted for his 'Short History.'

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Forestalled; or, the Life-Quest. By M. Betham-Edwards. 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Hartleigh Towers. By Mrs. Milne Rae. 3 vols. (Isbister & Co.)

Winged Words. By Henry Spicer. 2 vols. (Tinsley Brothers.)

A Female Nihilist. By Ernest Lavigne. Translated from the French by G. Sutherland Edwards. (Allen & Co.)

THE eminent sevent whose life-quest, whatever be the meaning of that rather barbarous term, is so much disturbed by the claims of his secretary, seems to the lay and grovelling mind but a selfish and disagreeable person. Not all the appropriate language expended by the author on the glories of abstract truth, the philanthropy of men of science, the effiteness of existing superstitions, can reconcile the uninitiated to the gloomy "scientist" who accepts without emotion the tender services of a loving young wife, and in a passion of injured self-love drives her from his home, the scapegoat of his suspicions. Could the author have contrived to invest the character of this machine-like calculator with more manly qualities, it must be admitted that, so far as the plot goes, the story is both ingenious and novel. When Norland has perfected the mysterious discovery which he hopes will render his name immortal, he finds on going to his secretary's room not only the same conclusions embodied in that gentleman's MSS., but several of his own calculations in possession of the plagiarist. As his wife alone beside himself had access to his papers, he believes her to be in league with the treacherous Felix, a golden-haired youth of her own age, to whose society Norland's neglect had practically confined her. But Nella is, in fact, absolutely true to the husband to whom she looks up as to a father, and in spite of his cruelty retains her affection for him. Norland at last discovers the innocence of both his friends, and though the process by which he attains certainty in the matter seems more elaborate than would be required by ordinary mortals, it has the merit of proving his thorough sincerity. Norland's death is more noble than his life, and the study of his character is instructive, though the moral we should draw differs somewhat from that suggested by the author.

Mrs. Milne Rae's book is difficult to criticise. Except one or two errors in spelling, which are probably the fault of the printer, there is nothing exceptional in the style of this evenly-flowing narrative. The story would have been the better for compression, but holiday-makers may find it convenient to have a rather lengthy book of which the interest is not so engrossing as to prevent its being frequently laid aside. There are a multitude of personages, but not many characters, those in humble life—old Betty, the Scotch servant, Caleb, the converted miner, and Farmer Warren—being the most lifelike. Mrs. Hartleigh seems to us unnatural. It is almost impossible to believe that a mother would resign her child even for the sake of separation from a mad husband, and quite impossible that, having done so, she would stick to her bargain. Still more unusual, we hope, is the character of Frank Carew. Of course, many a youth has played fast and loose with the ceremony of engagement, but few, we should think, are brought to a sense of their misconduct in so remarkable a manner. Frank being engaged to Muriel, and flirting with Louise, is insulted in a tavern by a fellow who brings both ladies' names into his aggressive speech, and this in the broadest way. Instead of knocking down the offensive Mr. Johnson, the hero requests the party assembled to forgive him, and "walks slowly towards the door, bent like an old feeble man." His repentance is too late as far as Muriel is concerned, for she dies from his neglect, though they are reconciled, and Frank lives a bachelor for her sake. The philanthropic Hugh Hartleigh and Margaret Carew are a happier couple, and there is much subordinate matrimony among their friends of all sorts and sizes, compensating the sympathetic reader for the amount of tearfulness, "quivering lips," and the like, which has mildly racked his feelings.

Neither at the beginning nor at the end of Mr. Spicer's two volumes of stories is there a word to show whether any or all of them have been printed before. This is a point on which it imports the general public to be informed, in view of the disappointment occasionally caused by meeting an old acquaintance under a new name, in circumstances when only new acquaintances are desired. From the critic's point of view it of course matters little whether his opinion is challenged by entirely fresh creations, or whether the collected efforts of several years are brought for the first time under his notice. Our impression is that we have seen two or three of Mr. Spicer's sketches in another form; but they are equally welcome in any case. Another doubt is raised by the title which is given to this collection. It may be that these twenty studies of character and description are brought together under the common label of 'Winged Words' for the very reason that they were originally fugitive contributions to the pages of a weekly or monthly periodical. There is, indeed, some internal evidence of this; but, if it be so, neither critic nor casual reader can be expected as a matter of course to recognise the fact at a glance and without special information. If the title is to be thus explained, it cannot be deemed particularly felicitous, now that the stories have ceased to be fugitive in the original meaning of the phrase, and have secured such immortality as may be given to them by a niche on a library shelf and a notice in the newspapers. Mr. Spicer would scarcely claim that his stories are "winged words" in any other sense; but they are certainly bright, clever, and entertaining words, charged with an overflowing humour, considerable shrewdness, and a good deal of practical wisdom. Of the numerous school which Dickens left behind him to carry on his genial and humanizing work, Mr. Spicer is one of the most successful. There are few of these brief sketches which did not deserve to be included; and several of them, like 'Sent to Gran Morfew,' 'My Innings,' and 'It,' are specially attractive and satisfactory. In spite of some looseness of style, and a chronic tendency to force the fun and strain the satire, these stories are admirably calculated to please an appreciative reader.

M. Ernest Lavigne's 'Roman d'une Nihiliste' contains much that will interest readers who know nothing about Russia, and still more that will amuse those who are acquainted with that country. The story is rich in sensational incident, one of its heroes being murdered, and one of its heroines being driven to commit suicide. Its tone is pure throughout, and its purpose is distinctly moral. These are merits which will recommend it to the majority; but it is only by the small class of persons who have lived in Russia, and who have studied the Nihilist question, that its particular vein of humour will be appreciated. It forms a valuable addition to the store of books about Russia written by foreigners, which can always be relied upon as being capable of making the saddest Russian smile.

It is unnecessary to give more than a very brief outline of the story. Vladimir, a half-hearted Nihilist, marries the rich and noble enthusiast for all that is excellent, the Countess Stasia. He afterwards avoids his revolutionary friends, who retaliate by putting him to death. A trial ensues, and most of the persons of the drama are sent into exile. Eventually they return and devote themselves to good works. All this appears to be sufficiently sensible. The author has borrowed his incidents and many of his characters from the published reports of the Nihilist trials in Russia. But it is evident that he has only the faintest idea of what that country is like, and that he knows scarcely anything of the Nihilists whom he professes to describe. The following is one of the best specimens of his really amusing ignorance. After the marriage has been arranged between Vladimir and Stasia, the leading "female Nihilist" of his revolutionary circle, Pavlovna, comes to him one day, and says, "You must marry me." He is obliged to obey, and there takes place what the author is pleased to call "le mariage réel et légal," performed by Nihilists in a private house. The only reason which the author gives for this extraordinary proceeding is that Pavlovna "insisted on it in order to bind Vladimir more surely to the cause and to herself." The real truth about such Nihilist marriages is this. A revolutionary young lady often wishes to subscribe money to the funds of the secret society of which she is a member, but she has no available cash. She is, however, entitled to a dowry when she marries. To obtain it she marries some bachelor Nihilist, the marriage being solemnized legally and in a church. At the church door, when the service is over, the newly married couple separate, and perhaps never see each other again. The dowry is paid into the society's treasury. The practice is not to be commended; but it is perfectly reasonable from the Nihilist point of view, whereas the wedding described by M. Lavigne is utterly unreasonable.

So little attention has M. Lavigne paid to the details of the Nihilist trials which he has introduced into his book, that he has represented the jury (p. 419) as not only giving their verdict, but as altering the sentence passed by the court: "Le jury consent à commuer la présente condamnation en une prison perpétuelle." How little he knows about Russia in general may be learned from his description (p. 256) of the Gulf of Finland in the middle of the winter, as seen from the islands at the mouth of the Neva: "Flocks of birds flew through the clouds, and at the horizon might be seen sails scudding before the wind, ships like halcyons skimming the water with their wings." At p. 5 we find a dying man holding in his hand "un tricycle." The author meant to say "un triptique." Littré defines a triptique as a "voiture qui roule sur trois roues." The Russians may be imperfectly civilized, but they are not in the habit of holding three-wheeled carriages in their hands when dying. At p. 19 we find the waiters at a restaurant spoken of as "Tartar princes," and their titles are accounted for by the fact that, "since the conquest of the Caucasus and the wars in Asia, a good many dispossessed princelets who came to St. Petersburg for justice were soon reduced to misery, and forced to serve, in black coats of course, their hated conquerors, even of the lowest rank"; the truth being that the waiters in question are highly respectable, but by no means princely, Tartars from Kazan. It is considered a joke among Russians to apply to a Tartar the title of Knyaz or prince; whence arises, in all probability, M. Lavigne's unintentional jest. He has not often attempted to introduce a Russian word into his pages. But on one occasion he represents a hall porter as saying, in allusion to the lady's-maid of the house, "Frantsoudza"! meaning that she was a Frenchwoman. M. Lavigne probably knew that Frantsoudza might be taken as Russian for a Frenchman, so he coined a feminine form of the word, "Frantsoudza." Unfortunately, the right form is Frantsoujenska, probably pronounced by the porter as "Frantsouzenka."

The pagination to which we have referred is that of the translation. But the translator must not be held accountable for the mistakes which render the book so amusing. Mr. Gilbert Edwards seems to judge from the passages in which we have compared his version with the original, to have done his work remarkably well, translating faithfully and with spirit.

THE LITERATURE OF PALEOGRAPHY.

THE twenty-five beautiful photographic reproductions which form the ninth part of the Fac-similes of the Palæographical Society may be truly said to forward the proposed work of the Society in many important particulars. Nine plates show Greek writing of various dates from the second or first century B.C. to the beginning of the fifteenth century A.D. The remainder are devoted to Latin manuscripts of various styles, countries, and dates.

Of these the first (plate 126) is derived from the Harris papyrus of the Oration of Hyperides in defence of Lycophron, which was obtained at Alexandria in 1847, another portion of the roll having been fortunately purchased in the same year by Mr. J. Arden from Arabs, who alleged they had found it in a tomb at Gournou (not "Gournou"), near Thebes. The writing is of the fine, elegant, but small uncials so well known to Greek palæographers through the labours of the Society and such laborious writers as Gardthausen and Wattenbach. It is curious to note even here, at a date antecedent to the Christian era, the oldest of all literary contractions—a fine horizontal line, waved slightly, in use to mark the omission of v at the end of the line. In this plate we have probably the oldest specimen of a Greek classical text, pure uncial Greek characters and peculiarities of forms in use at the classical period.

Plate 127 is from the Pauline Epistles in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, written in double column: the first has the Latin text, with Carolingian minuscules of the ninth century; the second the Greek text in uncials of a bizarre character, with a middle point used as a stop after each word. This MS. was written in the monastery of Augia Major, or Reichenau, an island in Lake Constance, and hence derives the title of Codex Augiensis. The text was edited by Dr. Scrivener in 1859, and, apart from its value as a Biblical manuscript, is of great interest as showing the peculiarly limited knowledge of the Greek language possessed by the learned of the Western world in the ninth century. The library of St. Nicholas of Cusa contributes a Greco-Latin MS. of the Psalms, arranged in three columns, the first of which has the Greek text in Roman letters, the second the Latin text, the third the Greek text in a hand which is a rough imitation of uncial characters by an unpractised writer, formed upon the formation of the Roman alphabet. The interest of the plate lies not only in the expression of Greek letters in Latin characters, but also in the fact that the then current pronunciation of the Greek language is plainly manifested by the transmutation in the Latin alphabet. The gradual progress of Greek minuscules is exhibited in the five following plates (129, 130, 132-134). Plate 131 is a good specimen of the Greek illuminative art of the eleventh century, and curious as showing how photography translates a picture bright with blue, green, red, violet, and brown in large masses, upon a gilded background, into what looks at first sight like a mezzotint engraving.

The Latin MSS. begin with a page from the celebrated "Terentius Bombinus." It is written in rustic capitals, and is one of the manuscripts so frequently referred to by writers and critics in the controversy which arose respecting the age of the Utrecht Psalter. St. Hilary's work on the Trinity, a MS. of the year 509-10, in the archives of St. Peter's, Rome, shows the earliest minuscule hand; the Ambrose, of the Ambrosian Library, the half uncial or early minuscule of the Irish type, about the seventh century; the same richly endowed library contributes a page from Josephus in Latin, of about the same date and much the same characters. Both these manuscripts belonged to the monastery of Bobbio, and were, perhaps, produced there by Hiberno-Scottic inmates.

The works of Bede give two plates from the University Library, Cambridge, and one from the well-known copy in the Cottonian Library. Though both MSS. are of the eighth century, and valuable for the light they shed upon, and receive from, Anglo-Saxon charter hands, the former is written in the old Hiberno-Saxon minuscules, the latter in Poinsett Saxon minuscules, except in the opening passages of each book, where round minuscules are used. The Duke of Devonshire's "Benedictionale," written by Godemann, Abbot of Thorney, 983-984, so beautifully illustrated in the Archæologia, vol. xxiv., contributes a page of set minuscules of the foreign type, and a page of rustic capitals of a late time for this style—the end of the tenth century. Saxon drawing in tinted outline of green and red, a favourite vehicle of illustrative art with this nation, is shown in a page from a Cottonian MS. of Paschal tables; and, finally, two plates from the late fourteenth century Italian treatise on the Vices give photographs of the paintings of objects of natural history, of great variety and very accurately delineated. These works show all the characteristics attributed to the Genoese miniaturist of the family of Cybo known as the monk of Hyères, and, indeed, the connexion of the treatise with the city of Genoa favours the probability of their being by the hand of that artist. These plates are the production of the Autotype Company, who work by a process which has been unhappily in some quarters rejected in favour of photo-zincographic and other manipulatory processes.

The tenth part of the Fac-similes issued by the Palæographical Society may, without hyperbole, be declared to be of transcendent merit. Two specimens of Greek uncial writing of the first century of the Christian era, upon papyrus, show the character of the script in use at the time of our Saviour. That these tattered and mouldering fragments of a once mighty literature have survived for eighteen centuries is alone sufficient to render fac-similes of them attractive. The Homer papyrus of the second century is one of the most elegant objects of its kind known to students of Greek palæography. This classic treasure was probably written at no great distance from the site of its purchase by Mr. Bankes, whose name is associated with it, the island of Elephantine in Mid-Egypt. A break of nine hundred years separates us from the next plate, a fine copy of the Gospels in large uncial Greek, dated A.D. 980, written for a bishop of Caisarea, a see of Cappadocia. The narrow upright forms of these letters contrast badly with the pure uncial forms of the preceding examples. The Vatican Library contributes a delicate illustration from the works of Johannes Climacus, of the eleventh century, where the panel, with its golden background and the richly coloured vestments of the somewhat stiff, conventional figures of Greek art, is translated by the sun into a vignette shaded in various depths of grey and brown. The quadripartite Psalter of Tournay, now in the Bibliothèque Nationale, is, like the Codex Augiensis, of value for the light it sheds upon the question of critical knowledge of the Greek language in the West during the Middle Ages. Those who have maintained that Greek was practically unknown in Western Europe, and the ability to read or write the language correctly extremely rare, will find in this manuscript, written in the abbey of St. Martin of Tournay in 1105, a strong proof of their case, for we must acknowledge that the scribe who writes "rise tin phcin mu" as the Greek equivalent of "eripe animam meam," in place of ῥῖσα τὴν ψυχὴν μου, cannot claim a very extensive acquaintance with the language he is committing to his page. The Gallican, Roman, and Hebrew versions of the Psalter in this MS. are of considerable importance to the Biblical antiquary, and would repay collation with the Utrecht, Harley, and Cambridge Bede Psalters. Other Greek hands, dated 1261 and 1431, complete the set of Greek given in this part.

Of Latin styles we have to begin with the mixed uncial and minuscule characters upon the waxen tablets from Pompeii, a form of record answering to our memorandum books. The method of making these is as follows. Three small tablets of wood are fastened together in form of a book, by means of two holes pierced in the margin; one side of each tablet is countersunk within a marginal frame, and the sunken part covered with a thin film of wax. The tablets are so arranged that of their six sides, 1, 4, and 6 show a wooden, 2, 3, and 5 a waxen surface. When the entries were completed seals were affixed within a groove chased down the centre of side 4, the side reserved for names of the witnesses to the document. The palimpsest Cicero (Bibl. Vatic. 5757) is a splendid example of large uncial of the fourth century, which reminds us of some of the magnificent MSS. in Lord Ashburnham's collection. Saxon handwriting is represented by MS. Harl. 2965, a splendid volume of the eighth century, the Durham Cassiodorus of the same age, and the Cottonian Bede, 811-814, this last MS. affording two plates of Caroline minuscule of the middle of the ninth century, which may be instructively compared with the plate from the Rabanus Maurus from Munich of a few years later date.

The Canterbury deed relating to the supremacy of that province over York professes a date of 1072, and is fortified with apparent signatures or subscriptions of attesting parties, but there is much internal evidence in this document, both historical and diplomatic, as well as external paleographical evidence, that throws considerable suspicion upon it. The style of the writing looks more like that in use at the middle of the twelfth century than during the reign of William the Conqueror. Like the manifestly forged charters of this monarch in Westminster Abbey, this deed probably owes its existence to a well-meaning fabricator of a later age, perhaps a Canterbury monk of the twelfth century. The splendid pages of fifteenth century illuminated service-books, shown in several plates in this fasciculus, demonstrate how curiously the brilliant colouring of gold, bright reds, blues, and secondary tints is translated by the agency of the sun into sober greys and shades which at first sight seem to belong to a finely executed engraving. But the experienced eye soon learns to comprehend the general appearance which the original picture possesses, and can point out with little difficulty the colouring which belongs to the various tones and depths of the monochrome photograph.

The fourth part of the 'Fac-similes of Ancient Charters,' only issued late last year, although printed in 1878, completes the British Museum series of English charters—that is, of charters relating to English history and written in the Latin or Anglo-Saxon language, the dates of which precede the Norman invasion—and includes four Latin documents of early date connected with foreign countries. Of these four, one, of a very rare class, is a deed of sale of land in the territory of Rimini, dated A.D. 572, in Roman cursive characters, on papyrus; another, of somewhat similar purport, dates between A.D. 616 and 619, and is from the archives of Ravenna; the third is a decree of Louis le Débonnaire, dated May 12th, 840, on vellum, in cursive characters; the last, a charter of Odo or Eudes, king of the French, dated June 18th, 889, formerly in the possession of the cathedral Chapter of Chartres. The entire number of documents contained in this series of fac-similes amounts to a hundred and forty; and although they consist for the most part of grants of territories or privileges, yet wills and other documents connected with legal rights and property are to be found among them. The original or primary possession of nearly all these has been traced to religious corporations; for example, no less than sixty-three belong to Christ Church, Canterbury, and the charters in possession of the Dean and Chapter and of the Earl of Ashburnham would raise this total of Canterbury charters to about a hundred and fifty.

A considerable number of charters of the Saxon period are still in the possession of various capitular libraries, the earliest, viz., those of the seventh and eighth centuries, being written in uncial characters of large or small calibre, such as are seen in the best manuscripts of the period; some, of the earliest part of the eighth century, are in fine semi-uncial characters of the type called Irish. Then follow early cursive forms, varieties of minuscules, with or without ligatures or arbitrary combinations, and, finally, the set minuscules of the concluding century of the Saxon dynasties. "If there could be a doubt," says Mr. Bond, "of their being variable writings of the times, this would be removed by the consideration that, though coming from the archives of different religious houses, those of the same date agree in their forms with each other, and with others still preserved in their original repositories. The charters of a particular sovereign granted to Canterbury agree with those of the same prince granted to the churches of Winchester, or Worcester, or Rochester, as well [as] with the writing of other manuscripts of the time. The peculiar and beautiful minuscule writing of many of the documents of the eighth and ninth centuries is found in extant copies of the 'Historia' of Bede believed to be written shortly after his death; and other forms can be similarly authenticated. But though we cannot doubt the genuineness of the great majority of these documents, as writings of the time at which they are dated, it is certain that in some of them the character of writing is at variance with their dates." Mr. Bond in explanation gives a list of thirty-three of these doubtful documents included in his four volumes, and a classified table, divided into seven sections, of different characters of handwriting. His paragraph respecting the forms of minuscule writing found in these relics, though too long for reproduction in these columns, should be attentively read by the paleographical student. The copious indexes are a boon to the historian of early England, and supply a deficiency which severely taxes the readers of Kemble's 'Codex.'

The fac-simile of the Codex Alexandrinus was undertaken, Mr. E. M. Thompson says, from a desire to place the text of this venerable Biblical manuscript within the reach of scholars in a form absolutely free from errors of the printing press, and untouched by the hand of the 'improver.' The work of reproducing the Old Testament portion contained in the three preceding volumes of the Codex is going on now, and will be completed before long. Until the issue of that part the general description of the manuscript has been reserved. This New Testament text consists of 143 leaves of fine vellum, about 12½ inches by 10½ inches. The first twenty-five, containing Matthew i.-xii., are missing, and there are other considerable lacunae in the volume, which has received injury in the back, involving portions of the text, and some of the margins have been too deeply cut away by the bookbinder's plough. Gall stains may be seen here and there, where attempts have been made in old days to revive the already faded writing. These, which disfigure many of the leaves at the end of the volume, are rendered more opaque in the photograph than in the original. "But the same agency," Mr. Thompson writes, "which exaggerates such blemishes also renders more distinct the faded writing of the text." In this manuscript, which presents so many points of importance, it is interesting to notice that the handwriting from the beginning of the text of the Gospel of St. Luke to 1 Corinthians x. 8 (i.e., folios 44 to 121) differs from that of the rest of the volume. This is shown by the variation in the forms of the Δ and Π, and by the use of crosses affixed to the κεφάλαια, to the beginnings of books, and occasionally to the last line of a column. This fac-simile is a triumph of photography. The auto-type printing is so arranged as to give on each plate a recto and verso fac-simile, so that each leaf represents faithfully the leaf of the original manuscript.

The beautiful volume prepared by order of M. de Marcère, when Minister of the Interior, from documents preserved among the municipal archives of France, far exceeds anything before achieved by the French. The work was designed as a fitting companion to the series of 131 volumes of 'Inventaires Sommaires,' which have been printed from municipal archives of France anterior to 1790. To the great excellence of the heliographic process perfected by M. Dujardin the Athenæum has frequently borne witness. There are one hundred and seventy separate documents contained in the large double folio volume, and in a smaller folio are the transcriptions of the texts, with descriptive notices and an introduction. The contents are, as may be readily supposed, very various. The first is a small label, in the curiously beautiful current handwriting of the seventh or eighth century, appended to the relics of St. Monulfus, among the departmental archives of Eure-et-Loir; then follow charters of Charlemagne, Louis le Débonnaire, Charles the Bald, Carloman, Eudes, and other potentates in a continuous succession; charters of Suger and St. Bernard, which would delight Mr. J. O. Morison, the biographer of the saint; a document relating to the foundation of the Norman abbey of Lismay, in which William the Conqueror and his queen were considerably interested, as is shown by their crosses and signatures; and a great variety of instruments, letters, and miscellaneous pieces connected with notable personages of France from the earliest years of the seventh century down to modern days.

The monograph of Herr Gardthausen upon Greek palaeography is probably the best and most exhaustive work upon the special subject to which he has devoted himself. Commencing with a chapter devoted to the bibliography, history, and literature, subsequent chapters treat of the materials employed in the art of writing, the forms of manuscripts, tints and colours, ornaments, the development of the uncial and other alphabets, tachygraphy, cryptography, accents and diacritical marks, lists of dated MSS. and known scribes, a chapter on the localities of writers, and another upon the various methods which are in use for the reproduction of manuscripts in fac-simile. A chronological table of dates, cycles, and Greek styles of calculating eras and years concludes this comprehensive work. Its low price (18 marks 40) ensures it a place on the library shelf wherever the Greek language is properly studied.

ANABASIS OF XENOPHON. Book VI. By Alfred Pretor, M.A. (Cambridge, Pitt Press.)

MR. PRETOR has accomplished in his usual scholarly style what he himself describes as an ungrateful task. He has taken a low estimate both of the character of Xenophon and of the literary merits of the 'Anabasis.' "I have," he says, in an introduction disproportionate in merit to his subject, "but little admiration either for Xenophon or his writings. . . . To me the author of the history appears singularly tame and unappreciative—a very wearisome exponent of a most soul-stirring episode, while even the purity of his diction is by no means unassailable." This feeling has, however, in no way detracted from the thoroughness with which Mr. Pretor has done the work. A clear analysis of the chapters of the whole history is prefixed, as well as a valuable essay on the peculiarities of Xenophon's style and a useful map. The notes are admirable.

VIRGIL: GEORGICS. Book IV. By C. G. Gepp. (Rivingtons.)

If this book is intended for young boys, there seems no object in an introduction which tells them that "Virgil avowedly took Hesiod for his model, but was doubtless indebted to the 'Phænomena' of Aratus and the 'Georgica' of Nicander." If it is intended for scholars, the vocabulary and most of the notes are superfluous. Of the notes themselves some are good, some bad. Of the former class is that on "purpuream" (p. 46); of the latter are the numerous translations of passages which present no peculiar difficulty.

Gai Jeli Cæsar De Bello Gallico. Comm. I. II. By A. G. Peckett. (Cambridge, Pitt Press.)

THIS book is illustrated with two fairly drawn maps, by the aid of which, together with the clear geographical notes, there should be no difficulty in following the operations of the two campaigns treated of in the text.

Homer's Iliad. Book XXII. By A. Sidgwick. (Rivingtons.)

NOTHING but praise is due to Mr. Sidgwick's last issue. The introduction is entirely suitable both to the subject and to the class of readers for whom it is intended, and is not too long by a word, and the notes give nothing but legitimate aid of the best kind.

Second Greek Reader—Prose. By A. J. M. Bell. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THIS 'Reader' is compiled from carefully selected passages of Herodotus (rewritten in Attic Greek) and of Xenophon, those from the former being illustrative of the events preceding the struggle against Persia and of the struggle itself, those from the latter describing the constitution of Sparta and the almost ideal character of her great king Agesilaus. Mr. Bell intimates that his object has been to satisfy the wants of "the number of boys in all public schools who never rise higher than the fourth form." Whether the intellectual digestion of such a dienst is capable of assimilating the admirable syntax which is prefixed (with the first sentence alone of which we have any quarrel) may well be doubted. The notes are interesting and judicious, and the vocabulary would be improved only by a slight pruning. To tell boys in a note that οὐκ ἐστὶν is the second sorist of οὐκ ἔστιν, or that μία is the feminine of εἷς, is little short of an educational crime.

Molière: Le Malade Imaginaire. By F. Tarver. (Macmillan & Co.)

THERE is an interesting though slovenly preface to this book, and the notes are in many cases necessary. The discovery that the famous third scene of the third act was intended by Molière to express compunction for the ridicule with which he had always treated the "faculty" does more credit to Mr. Tarver's originality than to his sense of humour.

Scribe: La Vierge d'Éau. By C. Colbeck, M.A. (Cambridge, Pitt Press.)

IF this somewhat dull play was to be edited at all for school use, it could not, perhaps, have fallen into better hands. It has given Mr. Colbeck an opportunity for prefixing a well-written and useful historical introduction, and the notes at the end of the book are good, though too numerous.

Hachette's French Primer. By Henri Bud. (Hachette.)

A GREAT many pictures and a very little French arranged on no particular plan. Of the pictures all may be forgiven except the dog on p. 32.

Blackie's Comprehensive School Series—Outlines of the History of England. Part III. By G. Girling. (Blackie & Son.)

Standard Home Lesson Books—Fifth Standard. (Same publishers.)

MR. GIRLING'S 'Outlines' is a very creditable performance, well adapted to its special purpose, and supplying, in a convenient form for general use, a considerable amount of accurate information, which is rendered of more value by the addition of maps, diagrams, and questions for examination.

We cannot see the advantage of 'Home Lesson Books' consisting of scraps of history, geography, grammar, arithmetic, and recitation, which "require some explanation on the part of the teacher," and yet are "intended to lighten the work of the teacher."

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Journals and Journalism, by "John Oldcastle" (Field & Tuer), is a sensible, well-written book, showing a real knowledge of the subject, and containing many hints likely to be serviceable to beginners in literature. The writer is too wise to ignore the drawbacks attending journalism as a career, and if in the chapter headed "Pounds, Shillings, and Pence," he underrates the scale of payment usual in the better class of papers, this is undoubtedly a fault on the right side, for amateurs are apt to imagine that writing for the press is highly lucrative. A good list of the leading London papers is appended to this useful little volume.

We have received from M. Calmann Lévy a volume containing a number of letters from Sainte-Beuve, now first printed. They do not add much to our knowledge of his character and opinions derived from the two earlier volumes.

We have on our table Memorials of Francis Radley Haverghal, by M. V. G. Haverghal (Nisbet),—The Centenary Commemoration of the Birth of Dr. William Ellery Channing (British and Foreign Unitarian Association),—Round the World in 124 Days, by R. W. Layland (Hamilton),—Egypt for the Egyptians (Cecil Brooks & Co.),—Health, by W. H. Corfield (Kegan Paul),—Royal (les Bains) in Auvergne: its Mineral Waters and Climate, by G. H. Brandt (Lewis),—Romeo and Juliet, edited by the Rev. C. E. Moberly (Rivingtons),—Clubs of the World, 1880, by Lieut.-Col. G. J. Ivey (Harrison),—Herbert's Parliamentary Handbook, General Elections 1874-1880 (Herbert & Co.),—Infeld's Political Record, February, 1880 (Infeld),—Mathematical Examination Papers, by W. F. Austin (Stanford),—Professional Papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers, 1879 (Chatham, Royal Engineer Institute),—Life in a Debtors' Prison (Ward & Lock),—Doom: a Tragedy in Five Acts, by A. Smythe (Dublin, Porteous & Gibbs),—The Religious Mission of the Irish People, by J. L. Spalding (New York, The Catholic Publication Society Co.),—School Manual of the Law of Moses, by J. Purse, M.A. (Stanford),—The Foundations of Faith: Bampton Lectures, 1879, by H. Wace (Pickering),—Zur Politischen Geschichte Islands, by K. Maurer (Leipzig, B. Schöck),—Kort Fremstilling af de Norske Kursteder, by A. Lund (Christiania, A. Cammermeyer),—The Songs of Mirza Schaffy, by E. d'Esterre (Hamburg, K. Gräbner),—Étude sur la Prononciation de l'É Muet à Paris, by Ad. Mendes (Tribner),—and Essai sur la Vie et le Règne de Septime Sévère, by A. de Geuleneur (Brussels, F. Hayez). Among new Editions we have Red and Black, by T. Edwards-Trevor (S. Tinsley),—Library Notes, by A. P. Russell (Tribner),—Shakespeare's Knowledge and Use of the Bible, by C. Wordsworth (Smith & Elder),—Epidemiology, Part II., by J. Parkin (Bogue),—and Real Property Handbook and Law of Landlord and Tenant, by G. H. Larnuth (Heywood). Also the following Pamphlets: A Study for Englishmen, by Quidam (Planta),—Florida, U.S.A.: What it Offers to the Capitalist and Settler, by R. W. Wilson (Bailey, Wilson & Co.),—New Latin Method, by W. A. Hulbert (Stewart & Co.),—The Expulsion of the Brethren from Parliament, by Clericus (Kempster & Co.),—and Civilisation without Delusion (Melbourne, F. F. Baillière).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Knapp's (C.) Out of the Deep, Words for the Sorrowful, 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Begonia (Rev. C.) Family Devotion, Prayers for the Household, 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Stacey's (W. J.) Short Sermons on the Psalms, Vol. 2, 4/6

Law.

Davie's Manual of the Law of Registration, Supplement to the Second Edition, cr. 8vo. 2/6 swd.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Ferguson (J.) and Burgess (J.) Cave Temples of India, Imp. 8vo. 4/6 bds.
Flaxman's (J.) Compositions, being Designs in Illustration of the Odyssey of Homer, oblong. 8vo. 3/6 swd.
Leland's (C. G.) The Minor Arts, 2/6 cl. (Art at Home Series.)

Poetry and the Drama.

Graves's (A. F.) Irish Songs and Ballads, cr. 8vo. 1/6 cl.
Riquet of the Tuft, a Love Drama, em. 4/6 cl.

History and Biography.

Bradlaugh (C.) The Biography of, by A. S. Headingley, 1/6 cl.
English Men of Letters, edited by J. Morley: Byron, by J. Nichol, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.

Geography and Travel.

Daring Voyage across the Atlantic by Two Americans, the Brothers Andrews (in the Nautilus), with Log of the Voyage, by Capt. W. A. Andrews, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
De Fonblanque's (C. A.) Five Weeks in Iceland, 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Flaxman's (M.) A Trip to Manitoba, 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Tobacco (The) and his Victim, Sketches Illustrative of the Moral, Social, and Political Aspects of Life in Constantinople, by a Resident of the Last Three Years, cr. 8vo. 1/6

Science.

Briggs's (T. R. A.) Flora of Plymouth, cr. 8vo. 12/6 cl.
Wolman's (J.) Key to the Male Pupils' Examination Questions in Euclid, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.

General Literature.

Brown's (Mrs.) Standfast unto Death, a Tale of the Irish Famine of To-day, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.
Black's (W.) White Wings, a Yachting Romance, 3 vols. 31/6 cl.
Boyce's (Rev. J. C.) High unto the End, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Braddon's (Mrs.) Story of Barbara, 12mo. 1/6 bds.
Clemens's (S. L.) (Mark Twain) Tramp Abroad, cheap edition, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.
Concise Sparrow of Knowledge, a Concessit in Four Fights of Fancy, by A. F. T. 12mo. 3/6 cl.
Constitutional Liberty, in Three Parts, Part I., Social Rights and Principles, 8vo. 4/6 cl.
Jeffries's (R.) Round About a Great Estate, cr. 8vo. 8/6 cl.
Manly's (J. J.) Notes on Game and Game Shooting, 7/6 cl.
Marshall's (W.) Monstrous Digby, a Novel, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.
Perkin's (C. L.) A Very Opal, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.
Prodigal Daughter, The, by M. Hope, 12mo. 2/6 bds. (Railway Library)
Boat (Rev. R. F.) A Day of Fate, Book 1, Vol. 1, cr. 8vo. 5/6 cl.
Smart's (H.) Belles and Ringers, a Novella, cr. 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Tyler's (H.) Oliver Constantine, Miller and Baker, 3 vols. 31/6 cl.
Wines's (H. C.) State of Prisons and of Child-Saving Institutions in the Civilized World, roy. 8vo. 24/6 cl.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Overbeck (D. Fr.) Der Kirchliche des Kessens, zwei Abhandlungen, 10m.
Seymour (E.) Jésus Christ d'après Mahomet, 1m. 10.
Wolm (H.) David u. seine Zeit, 4m.

Law.

Becker (R. L.) Das Recht d. Deutsche bei den Römern, 12m.

History and Biography.

Le Premier Texte de Madame de Sévigné, l'impression de l'Édition de 1735, 7fr.
Naake (L. v.) Sammliche Werke, Vol. 47, 4m. 80.
Rie (J. G.) Lebenserinnerungen, ed. G. Foul, Part 2, 2m.
Schramm-Mandemald (H.) Monieur des Dates, Part 4, 2m. 67.

Geography and Travel.

Hennebert: Atlas de l'Histoire d'Annibal, Part 1, 36fr.
Laveleye (Emile de): Lettres d'Italie, 1875-1879, 2fr. 60.

Philology.

Aristophanes Lystrata, editio Fr. E. M. Baynes, 8m.
Decke (W.) Etymologische Forschungen, Part 4, 5m.
Knepper (K.) Englische Synonymik, large edition, Part 2, 2m.
Meyer (G.) Griechische Grammatik, 8m. 80.

Science.

Bismarck (A. Graf v.): Lebens-Geschichte, 12m.

General Literature.

Contes de la Chansons, Préface par Paul Leconte, Époques par Ad. Lemaire, 6fr.
Discours de l'Antagonisme du Chien et du Lièvre de Jehan du Sen, Reprint from the Original Edition, 6fr.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING ROOM.

It would probably be found impracticable to exclude, unless in very exceptional cases, those who have already obtained the right of admission; and no appreciable relief of overcrowding is likely to be gained in this way. Until considerably increased accommodation is provided, the only effective remedy will be, it seems to me, to restrict to some extent the issue of new tickets. Instead of immediate admission being granted, the names of applicants should be placed on a reserved list, and tickets issued in rotation, as the average attendance may allow. If a personal interview with a responsible officer of the Museum were required from every applicant, some applications would probably be at once negated; and exceptional immediate admission might be granted in cases of urgency. The very full attendance at the present season makes it probable that during the coming winter—if new tickets are issued as freely as heretofore—there will be a pressure far greater than has yet occurred.

THOMAS TYLER.

P.S. I am informed, on inquiry at the Museum, that the number of new readers' tickets issued yearly has reached about 3,500.

"THE MELANCHOLY JAIQUES."

Athenæum Club, August, 1880.

I THANK YOUR Correspondent, Mr. Grant Allen, for his reply to my query, and I shall hereafter hear the word "Jaques" pronounced on the stage "Jaiques" with my previous conviction, that Shakespeare never meant it to be so pronounced, strengthened and confirmed by Mr. Allen's learning. I should like, however, to have extracted from so good an authority what the unfortunate player is to do when he has to say,

Jaques of Chastillon, Admiral of France,

OR

What said the melancholy Jaques?

May he not make a monosyllable and still be tolerated by the learned? I am afraid the stern stage manager would not agree that when the word is terminal it may be pronounced anyhow, or that a player may sometimes be "hyper-metrical." Shakespeare's verse is too musical for such liberties.

The modern controversialist seems to me sometimes to fail of wholly grasping the main point of his opponent's argument, and sometimes he reads into it more than his opponent has put, a habit which may easily prolong a controversy to all time. Now, the main point in my question was a practical one, and referred wholly to the pronunciation of "Jaques" on the stage. I did not inquire as to whether the final s was to be pronounced or not. I asked, first, whether the a should be sounded full, as in the French proper name, and, secondly, whether Shakespeare did not design that the player should sometimes sound, and sometimes not sound, the s. I was, and still am, willing to let the final s take care of itself. Perhaps in Shakespeare's time the final s in France itself was sounded, as Mr. Grant Allen suggests. It is a matter as to which—not being a verbal Shakespearean scholar—I am ashamed to feel a most profound indifference. I do not, therefore, join issue with your correspondent on the point.

But, to quote Mr. Grant Allen's own phrase, what can he mean by saying, "Surely Mr. Crawford must know that in all French poetry every s mute, without exception, is invariably scanned as a separate syllable"? I know nothing of the sort, and never, I think, was more surprised than to read such a statement in print. Let Mr. Grant Allen apply his rule to the reading of any ten lines of any French poet, and I am quite sure that before he has done so he will find by the verdict of his own ear that he has been guilty of at least a dozen most deplorable errors in prosody.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

I SYMPATHIZE with Mr. Oswald Crawford so heartily in his repugnance to the traditional "Jaiques"—as he spells it, but I would rather write Jaiques, as more closely resembling the usual stage pronunciation of the word—that I am sorry the evidence is so strong against the possibility of the word being a monosyllable. In answer to Mr. Grant Allen's and Dr. Nicholson's cogent arguments and more cogent facts I have not a word to say. "Jaques" must be a disyllable, but need it assume the horrible form of "Jai-ques" or "Jaiques"? Why not preserve the essentially French character of the name, and pronounce it "Jahk-es"? I put ah to represent the French a. The open a—ai is essentially in that form an English vowel; and unless we suppose the word to be divided "Ja-ques" (which it would not be in French), it would not be in accordance with the rules of English pronunciation to give the a the ei sound. Nobody would think of sounding it as equal to our short a, as in "Jack"; for there never could be any association of the peevish, sneering "Jaques" with the jovial, hearty "Jack," a name which always has, and always will have, a wholesome smack of sea-air in it. "Jaques" is not a name which has been adopted, unchanged in form, into our English nomenclature, as "Albert" has, for instance; and therefore I hold, whether it be made a monosyllable or disyllable, it should be pronounced according to the rules of the language to which it properly belongs.

I do not know why there should be something so particularly irritating to the sensitive ear in the word "Jai-ques," but there is. I once had the honour of reading the part of Jaques in one of those delightful family readings of Shakespeare's plays which Mr. Furnivall organized. Every time I was alluded to as "Jai-ques" by one of the other characters I felt the most evil passions aroused within me. It would be less irritating, perhaps, if the final s did not become s in the mouth of ninety-nine per cent. of English people; but anyhow the barbarous name jarred on my ears. I began to reflect, How and why "Jai-ques"? Supposing that one could for a moment associate any trait of such an amiable character as Toots with the sour Jaques, and the latter were to take to writing letters to himself, it occurred to me he would address himself as "J. Quess, Esqre." This train of thought led me to imagine "Jaques" passing by easy stages to a reformed state of mind and name, and being known as "J. Quiss"; then, when he had reached the "fair round capon-lined bally" stage of life, my fancy pictured him as "Jack Quiss," "honest Jack Quiss," a capital companion over a cup of burnt sack at "The Devil."

I doubt if Jaques were ever capable of developing into anything so wholesome and good-fellowish. The character is one of the very few important ones drawn by Shakespeare which inspire almost unmitigated contempt. His misanthropy never seems to me to come from a deeper source than a disordered liver, the result of his obstinate habit of peevishly lolling about in the forest instead of joining heartily in the healthy sports of his companions. He is the personification of "heartburn," the result of the doctrine of "evolution" applied to acidity of the stomach—a creature whose ancestors must have lived on nothing but pastry and sickly syrups; yet he is worthy of Shakespeare as a wonderfully true portrait of that kind of human animal, peculiar to no country, which lounges idly on the banks by the roadside of life, sneering at and finding fault with everybody and everything, but never lifting a little finger to destroy an abuse or to relieve a sufferer. If any one deserves the indignity of being called by the cacophonous name of "Jai-ques," it is this kind of creature.

But if we are to have Mr. J. Quess, why, may I ask Mr. Hermann Vezin, does he pronounce "sans" as in French, and not as if it were an English word and rhymed to "pans"? I always understood sans had been adopted in the early childhood of Anglo-Norman-French, and had forfeited all right to its native sound. Jaques, to do him justice, is above the paltry affectation of introducing a French word into an English sentence unnecessarily. I know the metre will not admit of the disyllable "without," but I cannot believe Shakespeare would have used a French word which was not completely angloised in order to escape from a metrical difficulty. Mr. Vezin's elocution and pronunciation are so elegant and correct that he must have some valid reason for such an apparent inconsistency.

FRANK A. MARSHALL.

HITTITE NOTES.

At the present time, when the Hittite empire is being restored to its place in the history of Western Asia, and evidences of a cultured and civilized people as rulers of ancient Syria are to be found in the monuments and inscriptions recovered from the sites of Carchemish and other cities, the following notes, made during a visit to some sites of interest, may be of use to those who, like myself, are attempting the solution of the Hittite problem. The decipherment and study of the ancient records of Egypt and Assyria have long rendered us cognizant of the fact that the whole region of North and West Syria was occupied by a powerful confederation of tribes, who by their warlike and unyielding nature played no mean part in the politics of Western Asia. This powerful people, known as the Khita by the Egyptians, and the Khattai or Hittites by the Assyrians, though regarded by both parties as no mean enemy, do not appear to have been credited as possessing any great degree of civilization other than in the art of war. The discoveries which have recently been made in the regions of North Syria show, however, that these people were no rude herd of aboriginal tribes, uncultured and barbarous, but, on the contrary, they were a city-building and literature-making people, a nation skilled in the arts of war and peace, and not conservative of their knowledge, but transmitting it to others.

The discovery of inscriptions, the records of these Hittite tribes, shows a considerable degree of civilization and independent thought; for the "vile Khita" had worked out for himself a system of writing which appears to be independent of the systems in vogue either in Egypt or Assyria, and to have developed that writing through more than one stage of simplification and rendered it suitable to the wants of others. The same with their arts; the monuments which have come down to us, while showing much indebtedness to the schools of Egypt and Assyria, still exhibit certain undoubted local and home-developed features.

The discovery of the site of Carchemish, with the arrival of sculptures and inscriptions, the result of the excavations made there by the British Museum, has once more revived the interest in the early people inhabiting Syria, which was excited by the discovery of the inscriptions at Hamath.

Having copied all the known Hittite inscriptions, with the exception of those in Asia Minor, I would venture to point out a few peculiarities regarding these inscriptions, which may be of some use to those who are engaged in the study of them.

We have now hieroglyphic inscriptions of the Hittite class from 1. Hamath; 2. Aleppo; 3. Jerablús (Carchemish); 4. Bulgar Madden; 5. Boghas-kem (Pleria); 6. Eyrak; 7. Karabel, on the Pseudo-Sacrosia. The above places range over a vast extent of country, and would spread Hittite influence very wide, but there are certainly many points which seem to indicate that the system was not in use by all at the same time. The inscriptions from Hamath when compared with those from Jerablús or Carchemish are at once seen to be different in many respects; there are many signs common to both, but either system has local ideographs. In an article published in the Times during my absence, I find the statement made that "the forms found on the stones from Hamath are later modifications, having somewhat the same relation to the older and more perfect forms of Carchemish that running hand has to printed type." With this statement I cannot agree. There seem to me to be many points which indicate that the inscriptions as yet found at Carchemish are of later date than the stones from Hamath; and, secondly, these latter do not seem to me to have been borrowed or developed from the Carchemish system. Hamath does not appear to have been of any great historical importance until the period subsequent to the fall of Kadesh, the Lower Hittite or Rutennu capital; still, that it existed and was a city in the district is shown by its enumeration in the geographical lists of Ruten cities in Egyptian records; it there occurs as Hemthoo (Brugach Bey, 'Hist'), and was at one time in the hands of the Arradites. Neither Hamath nor Carchemish came into power until the fall of the primitive Hittite or Ruten city of Kadesh, and it is most probable that when that city is explored* we shall find the common parent of the systems of writing in vogue at Hamath and Carchemish. It must be remembered that a system of writing has its development from the rude pictorial to hieroglyphic or perfected, as well as its further simplification from the hieroglyphic to the cursive and hieratic. I should, therefore, be inclined to assign the Hamath texts to the former and not the latter stage. The Hittite empire, like the Assyrian and other empires of the Mesopotamian regions, exhibits in its annals an historico-geographical arrangement; its periods each centre round some city. The earliest, when at war with Egypt during the eighteenth and nineteenth dynasties, is identified with Kadesh. This period extends from about the seventeenth century until the rise of the early Assyrian empire, when we find the era of Carchemish, which in its turn is followed by that of Hamath. But the Hamathite kingdom of this period, from the reign of Shalmaneser II. to the time of the Sargonides, is different from the primitive Hittite kingdom, and the Phœnician and Semitic influence was at work and dominant, as shown by the Semitic names of the rulers at that period.

After the war with the kings of Egypt the Hittite empire enjoyed a long period of comparative peace, and profited largely by its treaty relations with Egypt; and it is due to this contact with Egypt that we find Egyptian influences so strong in the works at Carchemish, and, indeed, this influence seems to have made itself felt on the syllabary in use there. The existence of Hittite sculptures bearing on them also Hittite inscriptions is of very great importance, as it enables us to form some idea of the period to which the palæography may be assigned. The work at Jerablûs certainly exhibits the style of a period when the Hittite people were subject to the influences both of Egypt and Assyria, and, with regard to the latter, at a period when Assyrian art was not clear of Babylonian influences. The figure of a priest sculptured on a black basalt monument most certainly is largely influenced by Assyrian art, and exhibits fewest local or Egyptian peculiarities, and on this stone the inscription is the most pictorial. The figure of an archer in the British Museum is, again, more free from Egyptian influence, and in the fifth line occurs a pictorial representation of two men fraternizing, which seems to be undoubtedly copied from Assyrian examples. The next monument exhibiting sculpture and inscription is a broken slab with a pair of figures—a priestess and a figure of the Syrian Venus, Astarte. Here the art work exhibits Egyptian and Babylonian influences, and not the work of Assyria. The Venus here represented corresponds to a figure found by Sir A. H. Layard at Babylon, and resembles the numerous figures of Venus found in Cyprus—nude, with hands supporting the breasts, and with two long curls or braids pendent over the shoulders. The Assyrians, unlike the Babylonians, never represented the Venus as nude, or in a form similar to that found at Carchemish. It is, therefore, certain that this work is undoubtedly earlier than the black stone, and yet in it the inscription has a closer resemblance to the Hamath text in its work and in the characters employed.

Until the excavations at Jerablûs are conducted on a systematic and more archaeological system it will be impossible to obtain a true idea of the date of objects discovered. To pass now to the other texts, the inscription at Aleppo on the wall of the "Jamî Kaikan." This text is given in Burton's 'Unexplored Syria,' but the copyist does not appear to have noticed that the stone is placed in the wall upside down, and so the characters are inverted. The principal feature of the text, of which I have obtained an accurate copy, is a group in the second line consisting of a human figure and some other signs. Upon examination of the inscription it is clear that the art and writing as exhibited in the cutting of figures and signs are older than the work at Carchemish, and exhibit a much closer resemblance to the Hamathite texts. The figure represented in this group is a man with turned-up shoes, and much resembling the figure on the rocks at Karabel, the archer in the British Museum, and some figures at Jerablûs, but more archaic, more primitive, than any of these. The figure is probably that of the god mentioned in the treaty of peace as the "Sutech of Khirabu or Khilabu (Helbon)." Close adjacent to this stone at Aleppo is a second stone, which once contained some two lines of inscription, and there are about the city several fragments of black granite which exhibit portions of workmanship akin to the work found at Carchemish.

About six hours almost due north of Aleppo, and on the road between that city and the town of Killis, is a village called Tel-el-Rifad, or the "Mound of the Shiyai," by the Turks; but this name appears to be a mistaken form of the Arab local name, Tel-Erfad or Tel-Erfat, a name by which only it is known to the people of the plain. The village is a large one, and near it on the west side is a large mound, evidently covering some ancient ruins. The mound is from 300 to 400 feet long and about 100 feet broad, the height being from 60 to 70 feet. This large mound is composed of earth mixed with large fragments of black stone and pottery. It has evidently never been explored, and there seems every possibility that remains are buried beneath it. The greater portion of the village is built of mud houses, with here and there courts enclosed by mud and stone walls, and in these latter there are to be seen in many cases large blocks of black granite, squared, and in some cases carved with rude ornaments as at Carchemish. Some hasty explorations which were made there by Dr. Buschhoff, of Aleppo, who directed my attention to the site, have brought to light several pieces of stone with the cord moulding, and also two very large amphoræ similar to those found in Cyprus. The people in the village said that some years ago there were written stones found in the mound, but they were broken. I hope that explorations may be made on this site, as there seems to be very little doubt that we have here the site of the ancient Hittite or Patannian city of Arpad. Its situation in relation to the line of the ancient Assyrio-Egyptian road and its size, as well as the similarity of name, all tend to confirm this identification. A couple of hours to the north-west of this village is the town or village of Azaz, the ancient Khasaz of the Assyrian inscriptions, a city which is figured on the bronze gates from Balawat. This was an important city from the earliest times, and was in the hands of Hittite, Assyrian, Greek, Roman, and Saracen. It stands to this day, as it did in ancient days, on a lofty mound, and commands the pass through the limestone hills into the plain of El Amk. In the tenth century before the Christian era this was the capital city of Dibarna, the king of the Patana.

In the village of Kulluleh-keui, between Akhtereen and the Sadjur on the Bereduk road, there is to be seen a curious black granite or basalt altar, 22 in. by 26½ in. by 24 in., on two sides of which were carved within square panels the representations of a camel. The work was very good, and exhibited the same truth to animal life as exhibited in the gazelle and other figures from Carchemish. Several other stones in the small village showed indications of having been worked, but I could hear of no inscriptions. From Azaz old Arpad (Tel-Erfat) the roadway can be traced by mounds breaking the monotony of the plain as far as Akhtereen. Here there is a large mound, with traces of an ancient wall of cyclopean construction; from here the road passes to Kulluleh-keui, and from a mound about half an hour north of Zambur there is a direct line of mounds at regular intervals until Jerablûs or Carchemish.

The ruins at Jerablûs will require a longer notice than can be permitted here, but it must be said that they exhibit features quite distinct from all other Hittite ruins or mounds I have visited, and only seem to me to show that Hittite civilization had its earliest settlement in the basin of the Orontes, and spread eastward to the Euphrates and westward to the Egean Sea. In a future communication I hope to be able to trace a connexion between the ruins at Boghas-keui and those of Carchemish at Jerablûs. W. ST. C. BECCAWAN.

P.S.—The existence of a stone age in Syria is proved by some fine stone axes and knives which I saw in private collections, and one of which I was able to obtain. It is of green stone, 6½ inches long, and excellently finished.

MR. WILLIAM H. G. KINGSTON.

ENGLISH-SPEAKING boys throughout the world will learn with sorrow that W. H. G. Kingston is no more. For nearly thirty years he enjoyed a remarkable popularity as a writer for boys, and he achieved this popularity without having recourse to any of the pernicious methods which unfortunately characterize so much of the literature that is widely read by them. There is not a page in any of his books which the most scrupulous parent would wish to take out, or a sentiment inculcated that is not thoroughly honest, upright, manly, and true.

William Henry Giles Kingston, the eldest son of the late Mr. Lucy Henry Kingston, and grandson of the late Hon. Mr. Justice Rooke (Sir Giles Rooke), was born in London on the 28th of February, 1814. For many years he lived with his family at Oporto, where his father was in business, and thence he made many voyages to and from England. A strong love of the sea would appear to have been born with him, and it was his earnest wish to enter the navy. But this wish could not be gratified, and for some time his energies were absorbed by mercantile life, which he entered under his father's auspices. Encouraged by the success of his first work, 'The Circassian Chief,' published in 1844, he produced, while residing in Portugal, 'The Prime Minister: a Story of the Days of the Great Marquis of Pombal,' and shortly afterwards appeared his 'Lusitanian Sketches,' which were descriptive of his own travels and adventures in Portugal. In 1850 was issued from the house at the corner of St. Paul's Churchyard, which has for so many years been identified with juvenile literature, his first book for boys, 'Peter the Whaler.' This met with great success, and it still enjoys considerable popularity. A few years after this he gave up business entirely, in order to devote his whole time to literature, and during the quarter of a century which has elapsed since then he has been constantly occupied in the production of books, chiefly for boys, of which he has written about one hundred and thirty volumes. They are full of descriptions of other lands, and of hairbreadth escapes and perilous adventures by food and field, written with a vividness which is wonderful when it is remembered that he had travelled comparatively little, and could not have seen one-tenth of the wonders of nature which he describes. His powerful imagination enabled him to realize with peculiar force the scenes described by travellers in their writings, and he used their descriptions as material, which he transmuted into matter possessing all the freshness of originality. The most popular of his books with boys were undoubtedly his sea stories, which have gained for him the title of "the modern Marryat," and the most prominent among them were 'The Three Midshipmen,' 'The Three Lieutenants,' 'The Three Commanders,' and 'The Three Admirals.' Although he had never been in the service, he had many opportunities for qualifying himself to write of naval matters. As a young man he went for a short cruise in a sloop of war, and he never lost an opportunity of making a voyage or mixing with naval men. He cherished throughout his life a warm affection for, and interest in, the navy, and was the promoter of the Mission to Seamen. He also took considerable interest in the other branch of the service, and has written books for the benefit of soldiers and sailors alike. He took an active part in originating the volunteer movement, and his pen was vigorously engaged in the cause. He had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him by the Queen of Portugal, and received a grant from the Queen of England in acknowledgment of the utility of his literary labours. About twelve months ago he projected a periodical for boys called the Union Jack, and for the first four months of the present year he conducted it with characteristic energy and vigour; but in April last, the task proving too heavy for him in connexion with his other duties, he was obliged to transfer the editorship to Mr. G. A. Henty, the well-known war correspondent of the Standard. The hand that had so long been busy for the young people of England did but little more for them after this: a painful disease had already manifested itself, and after a careful consultation last June with eminent medical advisers it was clear that the end could not be far off. He awaited it with Christian calmness and fortitude, and when it came, on the 5th of the present month, it found him resigned and happy, and, like the hero he was so fond of portraying, strong in the consciousness of having done his duty.

* I returned on the eve of my departure from Syria some news as to inscriptions near Antioch and the Orontes which may point to the site of Kadesh.

Literary Gossip.

It is reported that Sir Evelyn Wood during his recent visit to Zululand collected some additional materials for a work on the Zulu war, which he is now engaged in writing. It is supposed that he will defend the strategy of Lord Chelmsford.

A new work by the Duke of Argyll, entitled 'The Unity of Nature,' will be published in successive articles in the Contemporary Review, beginning with the September number. The chapters are as follows:—I. The Unity of Nature: What it is and what it is not; II. Man's Place in the Unity of Nature; III. Animal Instinct in its Relation to the Mind of Man; IV. The Limits of Human Knowledge, considered with Reference to the Unity of Nature; V. The Truthfulness of Human Knowledge, considered in the Light of the Unity of Nature; VI. and VII. The Moral Character of Man, considered in the Light of the Unity of Nature; VIII. and IX. The Origin of Religion, considered in the Light of the Unity of Nature. In a prefatory note the Duke refers to the fact mentioned in the preface to the first edition of the 'Reign of Law,' that he had intended to conclude with a chapter on Law in Christian Theology, and, after quoting a few lines of the preface, he adds:—

"The great subject spoken of in this passage has ever since been present with me. Time, indeed, has only increased my sense of its importance; but the years have also added, perhaps in more than equal proportion, to my sense of its depth and of its difficulty. What has to be done, in the first place, is to establish some method of inquiry, and to find some secure avenue of approach. Modern doubt has called in question not only the whole subject of inquiry, but the whole faculties by which it can be pursued. Until these have been tested and examined by some standard which is elementary and acknowledged, we cannot even begin the work. It has appeared to me that not a few of the problems which lie deepest in that inquiry, and which perplex us most, are soluble in the light of the unity of nature. Or if these problems are not entirely soluble in this light, at least they are broken up by it, and are reduced to fewer and simpler elements. The following chapters are an attempt to follow this conception along a few of the innumerable paths which it opens up. . . . The publication of these chapters in the first place as a series of articles in the Contemporary Review will afford me, I hope, the advantage of hearing and of seeing what may be said and written of their errors or of their deficiencies before their final appearance as a volume. Perhaps, also, it may afford me an opportunity, before the whole of these articles have appeared, of writing at least one more chapter on an important subject, for which leisure fails me now."

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL have made arrangements with Dr. George Birdwood, C.S.I., for the publication of a work on the 'Ancient Commerce and Historical Arts of India.' It will be based on his 'Handbook to the British Indian Section of the Paris Exhibition of 1878,' and his work on the 'Industrial Arts of India,' recently published by the Committee of Council on Education as one of their series of handbooks on art. In addition to the wood engravings in the latter book by Mr. Andrew Reid, the new work will contain many more by the same gentleman, chiefly of Indian textile fabrics and jewellery; about thirty illustrations of native artificers, reproduced in photolithography from original drawings in line prepared expressly for the work by Mr. J. L. Kipling, of Lahore; and fourteen more of village officers, reproduced in chromo-photography from paintings by the same accomplished artist.

